The Act of Navigation, as the stat. of 12 Car. 2 c. 18, is usually stiled, is looked on as the origin and great charter of our Navigation system, upon which all subsequent laws may be considered as comments. It seems most natural therefore to class our proposed rules according to the course directed by that act, and under the heads into which that is divided. These are,

I. The Plantation Trade. And herein,

(A) Of the general trade with the [illegible] dominions; and

(B) Of the trade with the United States of America, and the Colonies [illegible]

II. The Trade [illegible]

III. The European Trade.

IV. The Coasting Trade.

V. The Fisheries; and lastly,

VI. British Ships and their registry.

I. (A) RULE 1. No goods or commodities, may be imported into, or exported out of, any colony or plantation to his Majesty in Asia, Africa, or America, belonging, or in his possession, but in British built ships owned by British subjects, and navigated by a master and three-fourths at least of the mariners, British subjects; or in prize ships, legally condemned and navigated in like manner. [illegible] Rule 21.) Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 22. [illegible]

[Except [illegible] such goods and commodities as may be imported into, and exported from, the free ports in the islands of Jamaica, Granada, Dominica, and New Providence, by foreign ships owned and navigated by the subjects of some foreign European Sovereign, or State, or by persons inhabiting any country under the dominion of some foreign European Sovereign or State, on the continent of America; and except salt, which may be [illegible] in ships belonging to [illegible]

These exceptions [illegible] 27 Geo. 3. c. 27, for establishing free ports, [illegible] by stat. 30 Geo. 3. c. 29 [illegible] stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 6. § 9, respecting [illegible] 355, 373.

The [illegible] c. 27, is made perpetual by [illegible] and amended by stat. [illegible]

[illegible] sugar, tobacco, cotton, wool, indigo, ginger, [illegible] other dying woods, (stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 18. [illegible] § 18.) rice, molasses (stat. 3 & 4 Ann. [illegible]) copper ore, (stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 18. § 22,) coffee, pimento, cocoa nuts, whale fins, raw silk, hides, or skins, pot or pearl ashes, iron or lumber, of the growth, production, or manufacture, of any British plantation in Asia, Africa, or America, (stat. 4 Geo. 3. c. 15. § 27, 28.) may be transported [illegible] place whatsoever, other than to some British plantation, or to Great Britain; or (by stat. 20 Geo. 3. c. 10; and stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 63,) to Ireland.

[Except sugar, which may be carried from the sugar colonies to any port in Europe, in a ship clearing out from Great Britain, and having a licence from the commissioners of the customs for that purpose; and lumber, which may be carried from any British colony or plantation to the Madeiras, or the Western Islands called Azores, or to any part of Europe to the southward of Cape Finisterre.]

This depends on stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 30; [illegible] by stat. 15 Geo. 2. c. [illegible]) and [illegible]. See [illegible] 103.—By stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. [illegible] [illegible] certain price, in [illegible] stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. [illegible] 10, 11. [illegible] the importation of foreign sugar and coffee into certain of the West India islands; and the re-exportation of them from thence without payment of duty.

RULE 3. All other goods and commodities, not so enumerated, being the growth, production, or manufacture of any British colony or plantation in Asia, Africa, or America, may be transported to any place whatsoever.

Because what is not prohibited or restricted by any statute, is open and free: And by stat. 30 Geo. 3. c. 29. § 2, goods the growth of the countries bordering on Quebec, and imported into that province, may be imported into Great Britain from thence.

[Except hops to Ireland, stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 9; rum and other spirits, to the Isle of Man, stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 39; rum to Guernsey and Jersey, stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 28. § 1, 2, 3; and East-India goods, which must be brought to the port of London; stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 21. § 9.]

RULE 4. No goods or commodities of the growth, production, or manufacture of Europe, may be imported into any land, island, plantation, colony, territory, or place to his Majesty belonging, or in his possession, in Asia, Africa, or America, but such as shall be shipped in Great Britain. stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 7. § 6; or Ireland: stat. 20 Geo. 3. cc. 6, 7, 10; and stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 63.

[Except salt for the fisheries of Newfoundland, and wines from the Madeiras, and from the Western Islands or Azores; (stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 7. § 7;) craft, clothing, or other goods, the growth, production, or manufacture of Great Britain, Guernsey, or Jersey; or food or victuals, the growth, production, or manufacture of Great Britain, Ireland, Guernsey, or Jersey, from Guernsey or Jersey to Newfoundland, or any other British colony where the fishery is carried on, for the use of the fishery. Stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 28.]

RULE 5. Lands, islands, territories, or places to his Majesty belonging, in Asia, Africa, or America, not being Colonies, or plantations, are not included in any of the foregoing prohibitions or restrictions, other than the prohibition contained in the fourth rule, and the restriction that all goods and commodities must be imported into, and exported out of, them in British-built ships, or in British ships owned by his Majesty's subjects, and navigated by a master and three-fourths at least of the mariners British subjects.

If the before-mentioned prohibitions and restrictions are confined by the statutes enacting them, to Colonies and Plantations, then all islands, lands, territories, or places, that are judged not to be colonies or plantations, (if there are any such) are not within the meaning of them; and such lands, islands, territories, and places, are only included in the first section of the Act of Navigation, and the fixth section of stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 7, where they are so named; and not in the second section of

of the act of Navigation concerning the enumerated goods, where colonies and plantations are named; nor in stat. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 22. which confines the import and export of the colonies and plantations to British-built ships. See Reeves 134—7.

(B) Rule 6. Sugar, molasses, cocoa-nuts, ginger, and pimento, and all goods and commodities which were not prohibited in the year 1787 to be exported to any foreign country in Europe, may be exported from the West India Islands to the United States. Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 6. § 3.

Rule 7. No goods or commodities may be imported from the United States into the West-India Islands, except tobacco, pitch, tar, turpentine, hemp, flax, masts, yards, bowsprits, staves, heading-boards, timber, shingles, and lumber of any sort; horses, neat-cattle, sheep, hogs, poultry, and live stock of any sort; bread, biscuit, flour, peas, beans, potatoes, wheat, rice, oats, barley, and grain of any sort, being the growth or production of any of the territories of the United States. Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 6. § 1.

Rule 8. No goods or commodities may be imported from the United States by sea or coastwise into the province of Quebec, or the countries or islands within that government, or up the river St. Lawrence, (stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 6. § 14.) nor at all into the province of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, the islands of Cape Breton, St John's, or Newfoundland, or any country or island within their respective governments. Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c 6 § 12.

[Except that the Governors of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, the islands of Cape Breton, and St. John's, may, in cases of public emergency and distress, authorize the importation of scantling, planks, staves, heading-boards, shingles, hoops, or squared timber of any sort, horses, neat-cattle, sheep, hogs, poultry, or live stock of any sort, bread, biscuit, flour, peas, beans, potatoes, wheat, rice, oats, barley, or grain of any sort, for a limited time; and the Governor of Newfoundland, being impowered by order of his Majesty in Council, may authorize, in case of necessity, the importation of bread, flour, Indian-corn, and live stock, for the then ensuing season only. Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 6. § 13.]

And by stat. 30 Geo. 3. c. 8. § 1, the Governor of Quebec may authorize the importation of cattle, grain, or flour, by sea or coastwise, from the United States, by British Subjects in British vessels. By stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 50. § 14, Pitch, tar, and turpentine the produce of the United States may now be imported into Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, by British Subjects in British ships.

By § 10, of the above stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 6, no tobacco, pitch, tar, turpentine, hemp, flax, masts, yards, bowsprits, staves, heading-boards, timber, shingles, or lumber of any sort; bread, biscuit, flour, peas, beans, potatoes, wheat, rice, oats, barley, or grain, shall be imported into the West India islands, including the Bahama and Bermudas islands, from any of the foreign European West-India islands; or (by stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 38. § 11) from any foreign colony or plantation whatsoever, belonging to any foreign European State; on penalty of forfeiture, except by authority of the respective Governors in cases of public emergency, and except timber of certain species under stat. 33 Geo. 3 c. 50. § 14.

Rule 9. Goods and merchandize being the growth or production of any of the territories of the United States of America, may be imported directly from thence in British-built ships, owned by British Subjects, and navigated according to law, or in ships built in the countries belonging to the United States, owned by such Subjects, and navigated by a master and three-fourths of the mariners of those countries, under the following duties; namely, unmanufactured goods and merchandize, (except fish, oil, blubber, whale-fins, and spermaceti,) and also tobacco, pig-iron, bar-iron, pitch, tar, turpentine, rosin, pot-ash, pearl ash, indigo, masts, yards, and bowsprits, upon the same duties as if they came from any British island or plantation in America: secondly, fish, oil, blubber, whale-fins, spermaceti, and all other goods, and merchandize, (except snuff,) upon the lowest of the duties imposed by law upon those articles, if they came from countries not under the British dominion: thirdly, snuff upon the same duties as if it was the product and manufacture of Europe.

This stands upon an annual order of council, made by virtue of stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 39, continued and enforced from time to time by statutes passed every year for that purpose.

The duties to be taken on the second class of goods and merchandize are those contained in the tables and schedules A, D, & F, of the Consolidation-Act, stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, and those enacted by any law passed subsequent touching the duties in those schedules. Snuff is further to be subject to the regulations of stat. 29 Geo 3. c. 68.

The following regulations as to the Plantation-trade ought also to be noticed.

By stat. 30 Geo. 3 c. 26. § 2, exporters of goods to Yucatan are allowed the same drawbacks as to America. By stat. 30 Geo. 3. c. 27, Subjects of the United States settling in the British territories in North America, may import negroes, &c. duty-free. By stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 35, Governors in the West India islands are indemnified for having permitted importation and exportation in foreign bottoms, under certain circumstances.

II. Rule 10. No goods or commodities of the growth, production, or manufacture of Asia, Africa, or America, may be imported into Great Britain, in any other than in British-built ships, or in British ships owned by his Majesty's Subjects, and navigated by a master and three-fourths at least of the mariners British Subjects. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 18. (Navigation Act) § 3.

[Except such goods and commodities of the growth or production of the United States, as are permitted by the before-mentioned order in council to be imported in ships belonging to the United States, as stated in the ninth rule.]

This is the only direct exception; but some of the instances which are given as exceptions to the subsequent rule are exceptions also to this, as far as they relate to ships.

Rule 11. No goods or commodities of the growth, production, or manufacture of Asia, Africa, or America, may be shipped or brought from any other place or country country, but only from those of their growth, production, or manufacture, or from those ports where only they can can be, or are, or usually have been, first shipped for transportation.

This restriction applies as well to the trade with the plantations as the general trade with Asia, Africa, or America; and is founded on the construction of stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 18, (Navigation Act,) § 4.—See Reeves 140—143.

[Except the commodities of the Streights or Levant Seas, from the usual ports for lading them within the Streights or Levant Seas Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 18. § 12. East-India commodities, from the usual ports for lading them to the southward and eastward of the Cape of Good Hope. Id. § 13. The goods of the Spanish or Portuguese plantations or dominions, from the ports of Spain or Portugal, or the Western Isles, commonly called Azores, or the Madeira or Canary Islands. Id. § 14. Bullion and prize goods, from any port in any sort of ships. Id. § 15. Jesuits-bark, sarsaparilla, balsam of Peru and Tolu, and all drugs the produce of America, from the British plantations. Stat. 7 Ann. c. 8. Raw-silks, or other goods of Persia, from any place belonging to the Emperor of Russia, in British-built ships. Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 36. Cochineal, by stat. 13 Geo. 1. c. 15, and indigo, by stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 18, from any port in British ships, or ships of a State in amity. Gum-senega, by stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 32; coarse printed calicoes, cowries, drangoes, and other East India goods, prohibited to be worn here, from any port in Europe, in British ships. Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 30. § 1. Cotton-wool, stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 52. § 20; and goat-skins, raw, or undressed, 15 Geo. 3. c. 35. § 1, 2. (made perpetual by stat. 31 Geo 3. c. 43.) from any place, in British-built ships; and goods, the merchandize of the dominions of the Emperor of Morocco, from Gibraltar, in British ships, by stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 19. § 11, See Reeves 142, 149, 37, 8.]

III. Rule 12. No goods or commodities of the growth, production, or manufacture of Europe, hereinafter enumerated and described, namely, no goods or commodities the growth, production, or manufacture of Muscovy, or of any territories belonging to the Emperor of Russia; nor any sort of masts, timber, or boards; no foreign salt, pitch, tar, rosin, hemp, or flax, raisins, figs, pruens, olive oils; no sort of corn, grain, sugar, pot-ashes, wines, vinegar, or spirits called aqua-vitæ, or brandy-wine, may be imported, but in British built ships, or in ships owned by his Majesty's Subjects, and navigated by a master and three-fourths at least of the mariners British Subjects; nor any currants or commodities of the growth, production, or manufacture of any country belonging to the Turkish empire, may be imported, but in British-built ships owned by British Subjects, and navigated by a master and three-fourths at least of the mariners British Subjects; or, in ships of the built of any country or place in Europe under the dominion of the Sovereign or State in Europe of which such goods are the growth, production, or manufacture; or of the built of such port where only the said goods can be, or most usually are, first shipped for transportation; and navigated by a master and three-fourths at least of the mariners of that country, place, or port.

This rule is founded on stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 18, (Nav. Act,) § 8, amended by stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 19. § 10. See Reeves 197, 382, 383.

Rule 13. No sort of wines, (other than Rhenish,) no sort of spicery, grocery, tobacco, pot-ashes, pitch, tar, salt, rosin, deal-boards, fir, timber, or olive oil, may be imported from the Netherlands, or Germany, upon any pretence, in any sort of ships or vessels whatsoever. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. § 23. See Reeves 202, 205.

[Except timber, fir, planks, masts, and deal-boards, the production of Germany, from any port or place in Germany, by British Subjects in British-built ships; stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 16. § 2; and wines, the growth or production of Hungary, the Austrian dominions, or any part of Germany, from the Austrian Netherlands, or any port or place belonging to the Emperor of Germany, or the House of Austria, in any such ships as are described in the twelfth rule. Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 78. § 2; amended by stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 19. § 10.]

Rule 14. Bullion and prize goods, and all other goods and commodities of the growth, production, or manufacture of Europe, (not prohibited absolutely to be imported,) may be imported from any country, place, or port, in any sort of ships, owned and navigated in any sort of manner.

Because bullion and prize goods are excepted by § 15, out of all the provisions of the Act of Navigation; and because what is not prohibited or restricted by any statutes, is open and free.

IV. Rule 15. No person may lade or carry on board any ship or vessel, other than a British-built ship, or a British ship owned by British Subjects and navigated by a master and three-fourths at least of the mariners British Subjects, (by stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 68, after the then existing war navigated wholly by British Subjects,) any commodities or things of what kind soever from any port or creek of Great Britain or Ireland, or of the islands of Guernsey or Jersey, to another port or creek of the same, or any of them. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 18, (Nav. Act,) § 6.

Rule 16. Every foreign-built ship or vessel, bought and brought into Great Britain to be employed in carrying goods and merchandize from any port to port, is to pay at the port of delivery for every voyage five shillings per ton, over and above all other duties. Stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 18.

V. Rule 17. (See this Dictionary, title Fish.) Fresh fish of every kind caught by the crew of any British-built ship, or vessel owned by British Subjects usually residing in Great Britain, Ireland, Guernsey, Jersey, or Man, and navigated by a master and three-fourths at least of the mariners British Subjects, may be imported in such ships free of duty. Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. § 32.

Rule 18. No sort of fish whatever of foreign fishing, (except eels, stock-fish, anchovies, sturgeon, botargo, or caveare, turbots, lobsters, and oysters,) may be imported into Great Britain.

This depends on stat. 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 24. § 13, 14: stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 18. § 1, 2, 3, enforced by stat.

ftat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 33 : and ftat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 81. § 43, 44. Oyfters are not fpecially excepted in any flatute, but there is a duty on them in the Confolidation-Act (ftat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13,) which not being leviable on Britifh-caught fifh, muft be conftrued as a permiffion to import foreign-caught oyfters.

RULE 19. Perpetual bounties are payable on the export of pilchards, or fhads, cod-fifh, ling, or hake, whether wet or dried, falmon, white-herrings, red-herrings, and dried red-fprats, being of Britifh fifhing and curing. Stats. 5 Geo. 1. c. 18. § 6: 26 Geo. 3. c. 81. § 16.

RULE 20. Temporary bounties are payable on the tonnage of fhips carrying on the Britifh and Greenland Fifheries; on the quantity of fifh taken in the Britifh and Newfoundland Fifheries; on the quantity of oil, head-matter, blubber, and whale-fins, taken in the Southern whale-fifhery, and on the export of pilchards.—Seal-fkins, head-matter, blubber, and whale-fins, taken in the Newfoundland, Greenland, and Southern whale-fifheries, may be imported free of duty, provided Britifh-built fhips are employed, owned by Britifh Subjects, ufually refiding in the King's European dominions, and navigated by a mafter and three-fourths at leaft of the mariners ufually refiding in the King's European dominions. Thefe temporary bounties all depend on the ftatutes 26 Geo. 3. c. 81. (explained by ftat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 10:) 26 Geo. 3. cc. 26, 41, 50, explained by ftats. 28 Geo. 3. c. 20: 29 Geo. 3. c. 53: and fuch ftatutes as are from time to time made for amending or continuing them. See ftats. 31 Geo. 3. c. 45: 32 Geo. 3. c. 22: 33 Geo. 3. cc. 42, 58. And fee ftat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 68. § 4, under which, after the then exifting war, no veffels are to fifh on the coafts, unlefs wholly manned with Britifh Subjects; but foreign mariners are allowed, under certain regulations, to be on board fuch fhips, to inftruct Britifh mariners in fifhing, &c.

VI. RULE 21. A Britifh-built fhip is fuch as has been built in Great Britain, or Ireland, Guernfey, or Jerfey, or the Ifle of Man, or in fome of the colonies, plantations, iflands, or territories, in Afia, Africa, or America, which at the time of building the fhip belonged to, or were in the poffeffion of, his Majefty; or any fhip whatfoever which has been taken and condemned as lawful prize.

[Except fuch Britifh-built fhips as fhall be rebuilt or repaired in any foreign port or place to an amount exceeding fifteen fhillings per ton, unlefs fuch repairs fhall have been proved to be neceffary to enable the fhip to perform her voyage.]

This rule and exception are contained in the firft and fecond fections of ftat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. See Reeves 453, 454.

RULE 22. A Britifh fhip is, firft, fuch as is foreign built, but which before May 1, 1786, belonged wholly to any of the people of Great Britain, or Ireland, Guernfey, or Jerfey, or the Ifle of Man, or of any colony, or plantation, ifland, or territory in Afia, Africa, or America, in poffeffion of his Majefty; fecondly, fuch as has been built or rebuilt on a foreign-made keel or bottom, and regiftered before May 1, 1786, as a Britifh fhip; thirdly, fuch as had begun to be repaired or rebuilt on a foreign-made keel or bottom before May 1, 1786, and has been fince regiftered by order of the commiffioners of the cuftoms of England or in Scotland. See Reeves 452, 538.

RULE 23. Every fhip, or veffel, having a deck or being of the burthen of fifteen tons, and belonging to a fubject in Great Britain or Ireland, Guernfey, Jerfey, or the Ifle of Man, or any colony, plantation, ifland, or territory to his Majefty belonging, muft be regiftered by the perfon claiming property therein; who is to obtain a certificate of fuch regiftry in the port to which the fhip or veffel properly belongs, and the certificate is to diftinguifh the fhip or veffel under one of thefe two claffes; certificates of Britifh plantation regiftry, or, certificates of foreign fhips regiftry for the European trade, Britifh property. Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. § 3, 28.

RULE 24. No fhip is to be permitted to clear out as a Britifh-built fhip, or a Britifh fhip, nor to be entitled to the privileges of a Britifh-built fhip, or a Britifh fhip, unlefs the owner has obtained a certificate of regiftry; and any fhip parting from port without being fo regiftered, and obtaining fuch a certificate, fhall be forfeited. Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. § 32.

RULE 25. All fhips, not entitled to the privileges of a Britifh-built fhip, or a Britifh fhip, and all fhips not regiftered as aforefaid, are deemed, although they may belong to Britifh Subjects, to all intents and purpofes alien or foreign fhips. Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 29. § 13. See Reeves 509—512.

RULE 26. As often as the mafter of a fhip is changed a memorandum thereof is to be indorfed on the certificate by the proper officer of the cuftoms. Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 60.

RULE 27. The owner is to caufe the name by which a fhip is regiftered to be painted in a confpicuous part of the ftern, and fuch name is not to be changed. Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. § 19.

RULE 28. If a certificate of regiftry is loft or miflaid, or if a fhip fhall be altered in form or burthen, or from any denomination of veffel to another, by rigging or fitting, fhe muft be regiftered de novo, and a new certificate granted. Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. § 22, 23, explaining 15 Geo. 2. c. 31.

RULE 29. Mafters of fhips are, on demand, to produce their certificates to the principal officer in any port within the King's dominions, or to the Britifh conful or chief officer in any foreign port, on penalty of 100*l.* Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. § 34: and fee ftat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 68. § 18, &c. Some doubt having arifen whether fhips belonging to the Eaft-India Company could ftrictly be confidered as Britifh fhips, confidering how many foreigners were proprietors of the Company's ftock, this was removed by ftat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 65. § 33.

SINCE the above recapitulation a material ftatute has been paffed, viz. ftat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 68; by which it is enacted, that after fix months from the conclufion of the then exifting war, no goods, &c. fhall be imported into Great Britain, nor any goods exported from thence, in Britifh veffels, unlefs the mafter and three-fourths of the crew are Britifh Subjects. This act contains feveral regulations to enforce thefe provifions; it defines Britifh Seamen; who, it declares, muft be natural-born Subjects, or perfons naturalized by act of parliament, or made denizens by letters of denization, or persons having become Subjects by conquest, or cession of some newly-acquired country, having taken the oath of allegiance, or other oath required on such conquest or cession. Foreign seamen, however, serving three years in the navy in time of war may be employed as British seamen, not having taken the oath of allegiance to a foreign State. Regulations are also contained for the employment of negroes in America, and the East and West Indies: and provisions made for the employment of foreign seamen in case of necessity. This statute also contains further regulations as to the registry of British ships, by enacting that no transfer of property in any vessel shall be valid, unless made according to stat 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. The form of indorsement on change of property is prescribed; and other instructions given as to the transfer of property where the vessels or their owners are not in the country. The mode of registering de novo in case of transfer of property, is further settled; and directions given in case of transfer of the property, in such registered ship, to foreigners.

The above short view of an interesting and important subject, contains much useful information, not merely confined to this head of law, but connected with the general policy of the English Government. The particulars of the laws here detailed, are sometimes fluctuating, and above all, much affected by the circumstances of peace and war. An intimate research into the regulations contained in the statutes above referred to, and others, can only be conducted with safety by a reference to the statutes themselves; and particular caution is necessary to render the Student aware of the number of laws continually claiming the attention, and receiving the sanction, of Parliament on this national subject.

It has been thought expedient in this place to insert articles III, XI, XII, XIII, XIV, and XV, of the TREATY of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation, made between GREAT BRITAIN, and AMERICA in the year 1795. Article III is a permanent article: the duration of Article XII is therein particularly specified. The restraint of the burthen of American ships to 70 tons, was also a subsequent matter of negotiation, not settled at the time of writing this, (August 1795.) The other articles, it was agreed, should remain in force for twelve years from the time of exchanging the ratification. In the preamble of the Treaty it was recited to be for the purpose (among other things) of regulating "the Commerce and Navigation between the respective countries, territories, and people, in such a manner as to render the same reciprocal, beneficial, and satisfactory."

"Art. III. It is agreed, that it shall at all times be free to his Majesty's Subjects, and to the Citizens of the United States, and also to the Indians dwelling on either side of the boundary line, (specified in the treaty,) freely to pass and repass, by land or inland navigation, into the respective territories and countries of the two parties on the Continent of America, (the country within the limits of the Hudson's Bay Company only excepted,) and to navigate all the lakes, rivers, and waters thereof, and freely to carry on trade or commerce with each other. But it is understood that this article does not extend to the admission of vessels of the United States into the sea-ports, harbours, bays, or creeks, of his Majesty's said territories; nor into such parts of the rivers in his Majesty's said territories as are between the mouth thereof and the highest port of entry from the sea, except in small vessels trading bonâ fide between Montreal and Quebec, under such regulations as shall be established to prevent the possibility of any frauds in this respect; nor to the admission of British vessels from the sea into the rivers of the United States, beyond the highest ports of entry for foreign vessels from the sea. The river Mississippi shall, however, according to the treaty of peace, be entirely open to both parties; and it is further agreed, that all the ports and places on its eastern side, to which soever of the parties belonging, may freely be resorted to, and used by both parties, in as ample a manner as any of the Atlantic ports or places of the United States, or any of the ports or places of his Majesty in Great Britain.

"All goods and merchandize whose importation into his Majesty's said territories in America, shall not be entirely prohibited, may freely, for the purposes of commerce, be carried into the same in the manner aforesaid, by the Citizens of the United States, and such goods and merchandise shall be subject to no higher or other duties than would be payable by his Majesty's Subjects on the importation of the same from Europe into the said territories. And in like manner all goods and merchandize whose importation into the United States shall not be wholly prohibited, may freely, for the purpose of commerce, be carried into the same, in the manner aforesaid, by his Majesty's Subjects; and such goods or merchandize shall be subject to no higher or other duties than would be payable by the Citizens of the United States on the importation of the same, in American vessels, into the Atlantic ports of the said States. And all goods not prohibited to be exported into the said territories respectively, may, in like manner, be carried out of the same by the two parties respectively, paying duty as aforesaid.

" No duty of entry shall ever be levied by either party, on peltries brought by land or inland navigation into the said territories respectively; nor shall the Indians passing or repassing with their own proper goods and effects of whatever nature, pay for the same any impost or duty whatever. But goods in bales, or other large packages unusual among Indians, shall not be considered as goods belonging bona fide to Indians.

" No higher or other tolls or rates of ferriage than what are or shall be payable by natives, shall be demanded on either side; and no duties shall be payable on any goods which shall merely be carried over any of the portages or carrying places on either side, for the purpose of being immediately re-embarked and carried to some other place or places. But as by this stipulation it is only meant to secure to each party a free passage across the portages on both sides, it is agreed, that this exemption from duty shall extend only to such goods as are carried in the usual and direct road across the portage, and are not attempted to be in any manner sold or exchanged during their passage across the same; and proper regulations may be established to prevent the possibility of any frauds in this respect.

" Art. XI. It is agreed between his Majesty and the United States of America, that there shall be a reciprocal and entirely perfect liberty of navigation and commerce between their respective people, in the manner, under the limitations, and on the conditions specified in the following articles.

" Art. XII. His Majesty consents, that it shall and may be lawful, during the time hereinafter limited, for the Citizens of the United States to carry to any of his Majesty's islands and ports in the West Indies from the United States, in their own vessels, not being above the burthen of 70 tons, any goods or merchandizes, being of the growth, manufacture, or produce of the said States, which it is or may be lawful to carry to the said islands or ports from the said States in British vessels; and that the said American vessels shall be subject there to no other or higher tonnage duties or charges than shall be payable by British vessels in the ports of the United States; and that the cargoes of the said American vessels shall be subject there to no other or higher duties or charges than shall be payable on the like articles, if imported there from the said States in British vessels.

" And his Majesty also consents that it shall be lawful for the said American Citizens to purchase, lade, and carry away in their said vessels to the United States, from the said islands and ports, all such articles, being of the growth, manufacture, or produce of the said islands, as may now by law be carried from thence to the said States in British vessels, and subject only to the same duties and charges on exportation, to which British vessels and their cargoes are or shall be subject in similar circumstances.

" Provided always, that the said American vessels do carry and land their cargoes in the United States only; it being expresly agreed and declared, that during the continuance of this article, the United States will prohibit and restrain the carrying any molasses, sugar, coffee, cocoa, or cotton, in American vessels, either from his Majesty's islands or from the United States, to any part of the world, except the United States, reasonable sea-stores excepted.

" Provided also, that it shall and may be lawful, during the same period, for British vessels to import from the said islands, into the United States, and to export from the United States to the said islands, all articles whatever, being of the growth, produce or manufacture of the said islands, or of the United States respectively, which now may, by the laws of the said States, be so imported and exported. And that the cargoes of the said British vessels shall be subject to no other or higher duties or charges, than shall be payable on the same articles, if so imported or exported in American vessels.

" It is agreed, that this article, and every matter and thing therein contained, shall continue to be in force during the continuance of the war in which his Majesty is now engaged; and also for two years from and after the day of the signature of the preliminary or other articles of peace by which the same may be terminated.

" And it is further agreed, that at the expiration of the said term, the two contracting parties will endeavour further to regulate their commerce in this respect, according to the situation in which his Majesty may then find himself with respect to the West Indies, and with a view to such arrangement as may best conduce to the mutual advantage and extension of commerce.

" And the said parties will then also renew their discussions, and endeavour to agree, whether in any or what cases neutral vessels shall protect enemy's property; and in what cases, provisions, and other articles, not generally contraband, may become such. But in the meantime, their conduct towards each other in these respects, shall be regulated by the articles hereinafter inserted on those subjects.

" Art. XIII. His Majesty consents that the vessels belonging to the Citizens of the United States of America shall be admitted and hospitably received in all the seaports and harbours of the British territories in the East Indies. And that the Citizens of the said United States may freely carry on a trade between the said territories and the said United States in all articles of which the importation or exportation respectively to or from the said territories shall not be entirely prohibited. Provided only, that it shall not be lawful for them in time of war between the British Government and any other Power or State whatever, to export from the said territories, without the special permission of the British Government there, any military stores or naval stores or rice. The Citizens of the United States shall pay for their vessels, when admitted into the said ports, no other or higher tonnage duty than shall be payable on British vessels when admitted into the ports of the United States. And they shall pay no other or higher duties or charges on the importation or exportation of the cargoes of the said vessels, than shall be payable on the same articles when imported or exported in British vessels. But it is expresly agreed, that the vessels of the United States shall not carry any of the articles exported by them from the said British territories to any port or place except to some port or place in America, where the same shall be unladen; and such regulations shall be adopted by both parties, as shall from time to time be found necessary to enforce the due and faithful observance of this stipulation.

"It is also understood, that the permission granted by this article, is not to extend to allow the vessels of the United States to carry on any part of the coasting trade of the said British territories; but vessels going with their original cargoes, or part thereof, from one port of discharge to another, are not to be considered as carrying on the coasting trade. Neither is this article to be construed to allow the Citizens of the said States to settle or reside within the said territories, or to go into the interior parts thereof, without the permission of the British Government established there; and if any transgression should be attempted against the regulations of the British Government in this respect, the observance of the same shall and may be enforced against the Citizens of America, in the same manner as against British Subjects, or others transgressing the same rule. And the Citizens of the United States, whenever they arrive in any port or harbour in the said territories, or if they should be permitted in manner aforesaid to go to any other place therein, shall always be subject to the laws, government, and jurisdiction of what nature established in such harbour, port or place, according as the same may be: the Citizens of the United States may also touch for refreshment at the Island of St. Helena, but subject in all respects to such regulations as the British Government may from time to time establish there.

"Art. XIV. There shall be between all the dominions of his Majesty in Europe and the territories of the United States a reciprocal and perfect liberty of commerce and navigation. The people and inhabitants of the two countries respectively shall have liberty freely and securely, and without hindrance and molestation, to come with their ships and cargoes to the lands, countries, cities, ports, places, and rivers, within the dominions and territories aforesaid, to enter into the same, to resort there, and to remain and reside there, without any limitation of time: and also to hire and possess houses and warehouses for the purposes of their commerce; and generally the merchants and traders on each side shall enjoy the most complete protection and security for their commerce; but subject always, as to what respects this article, to the laws and statutes of the two countries respectively.

"Art. XV. It is agreed, that no other or higher duties shall be paid by the ships, or merchandize of the one party in the ports of the other, than such as are paid by the like vessels or merchandize of all other nations. Nor shall any other or higher duty be imposed in one country on the importation of any articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the other, than are or shall be payable on the importation of the like articles being of the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country. Nor shall any prohibition be imposed on the exportation or importation of any articles to or from the territories of the two parties respectively, which shall not equally extend to all other nations.

"But the British Government reserves to itself the right of imposing on American vessels entering into the British ports in Europe, a tonnage-duty equal to that which shall be payable by British vessels in the ports of America; and also such duty as may be adequate to countervail the difference of duty now payable on the importation of European and Asiatic goods when imported into the United States in British or in American vessels.

"The two parties agree to treat for the more exact equalization of the duties on the respective navigation of their subjects and people in such manner as may be most beneficial to the two countries. The arrangements for this purpose shall be made at the same time with those mentioned at the conclusion of the 12th article of this treaty, and are to be considered as a part thereof. In the interval it is agreed, that the United States will not impose any new or additional tonnage-duties on British vessels, nor increase the now subsisting difference between the duties payable on the importation of any articles in British or in American vessels."

NAVY.

THE Fleet or Shipping of a Prince or State; or an Armament at sea.

I. Of the Navy of England, and its Jurisdiction in the British Seas.

II. Of raising and paying the Mariners.

III. Of their Discipline, under the Articles of War and Naval Courts Martial.

I. THE NAVY OF ENGLAND, it has been observed, excels all others for three things, viz. beauty, strength, and safety; for beauty our ships of war are so many floating palaces; for their strength so many moving castles; and for safety, they are the most defensive walls of the land; and as our naval power gains us authority in the most distant climates, so the superiority of our fleet above other nations, renders the British Monarch the arbiter of Europe.

The Kings of England in ancient times commanded their fleets in person; and King Arthur vindicated the dominion of the seas, making ships of all nations salute our ships of war by lowering the topsail, and striking the flag, as in like manner they shall do to the forts upon land; by which submission they are put in mind that they are come into a territory, wherein they are to own a sovereign power and jurisdiction, and receive protection from it: and this duty of the flag, which hath been constantly paid to our ancestors, serves to imprint reverence in foreigners, and adds new courage rage to our seamen; and reputation abroad, is the principal support of any government at home.

King Edgar, successor to Arthur, stiled himself Sovereign of the narrow seas; and having fitted out a fleet of four hundred sail of ships, in the year 937, sailing about Britain with his mighty Navy, and arriving at Chester, was there met by eight Kings and Princes of foreign nations, come to do him homage; who, as an acknowledgment of his sovereignty, rowed this monarch in a boat down the river Dee, himself steering the boat; a marine triumph which is not to be paralleled in the histories of Europe.

Canutus (Edgar's successor) laid the ancient tribute called Danegeld, for guarding the seas, and sovereignty of them; with the following emblem expressed, viz. Himself sitting on the shore in his royal chair, while the sea was flowing, speaking, Tu meæ ditionis es, & terra in qua sedeo est, &c.

Egbert, Althred, and Eltbred kept up the dominion and sovereignty of their predecessors; nor did the succeeding princes, of the Norman race, waive this great advantage, but maintained the right to the four adjacent seas surrounding the British shore: the honour of the flag King John challenged, not barely as a civility, but a right to be paid cum debitâ reverentiâ, and the persons refusing he commanded to be taken as enemies: and the same was ordained not only to be paid to whole fleets, bearing the royal standard, but to those ships of privilege that wear the Prince's ensigns or colours of service: this decree was confirmed and bravely asserted by a fleet of five hundred sail, in a royal voyage to Ireland, wherein he made all the vessels which he met with in his way, in the eight circumfluent seas, to pay that duty and acknowledgment, which has been maintained by our Kings to this day, and was never contested by any nation, unless by those who attempted the conquest of the intire empire.

Trade gave occasion to the bringing mighty fleets to sea; and on the increase of trade, ships of war were necessary in all countries for the preservation of it in the hands of the just proprietors.

In ancient times the several counties of England were liable to a particular taxation for building ships of war, and fitting out fleets, every one in proportion to their extent and riches; so that the largest counties were each of them to furnish a first-rate man of war, and the others every one to build one in proportion; but this method has been long disused, and the fitting out our navy for many ages has been always thrown into the public charge.

King Edward III. in his wars with France, had a Fleet of ships before Calais, so numerous, that they amounted to seven hundred sail; but these were only very small vessels.

Notwithstanding that the Fleets of Great Britain have been remarkable for several ages past, for the great and signal victories obtained from time to time over their enemies, and that in the reigns of some of our ancient Kings, there have been greater numbers of ships fitted out at different times, upon certain expeditions, than have been of late years, yet that of a Royal Navy was never properly established, until by Hen. VIII. in the fourth year of his reign, anno 1512; at which time, that King taking umbrage at the mighty naval preparations of France, made an augmentation of twenty-five large ships of war to those already in being; he likewise erected an office for the Navy, and established a certain number of Commissioners, to whom the charge of the Navy was committed, and whose duty it was to inspect into the state and condition of the King's ships, and to make a report thereof to the Lord High Admiral, in order to their being repaired or rebuilt, and supplied with every thing necessary for the public service, according as the case required it; for till that time, the establishment of the naval forces of this kingdom seems to have been upon an auxiliary dependency of the sea-ports and maritime towns, who were under certain conditions of furnishing their respective quotas of ships, for the King's use, upon previous notice given to them in that behalf; after which, they all came to the appointed rendezvous, and were then disposed of by the King's order upon the services intended. Upon this augmentation, the King's fleet at that time consisted of no more than forty five ships, with which that of the French was soon overcome. Of those towns which furnished ships for the public service, the Cinque-Ports were the most noted, and whose privileges still subsist, on account of the services which they obliged themselves in particular to perform to the Crown. See title Cinque-ports.

There are lists of the fleet of Queen Elizabeth, which make it appear there was but one private gentleman a captain, all the rest being Lords and Knights: so high was the esteem for service at sea in those days, when our Princes ruled with the most consummate glory: but the opinion of serving at sea in late times having been very much lessened, it has since been declined by the nobility and gentry.

The Navy of England is at present divided into three squadrons, distinguished by the different colours of the several flags, viz. red, white, and blue; the principal commander whereof bears the title of Admiral, and each has under him a Vice-Admiral, and a Rear-Admiral, who are likewise flag-officers. There are belonging to his Majesty's Navy, six great yards, Chatham, Deptford, Woolwich, Portsmouth, Sheerness, and Plymouth; fitted with several docks, and furnished with store of timber, masts, anchors, cables, &c. And for the management of the Royal Navy, there are several officers of trust and authority, besides the Commissioners of the Admiralty; as the Treasurer, Controller, Surveyor, Commissioners of the Navy, Commissioners of the Victualling office, &c. the principal whereof hold their offices by patent under the Great Seal.

The Maritime State, says Blackstone, though nearly related to the military, is much more agreeable to the principles of our free Constitution. The Royal Navy of England hath ever been its greatest defence and ornament; it is its ancient and natural strength, the floating bulwark of the island: an army from which, however strong and powerful, no danger can ever be apprehended to liberty: and accordingly it has been assiduously cultivated, even from the earliest ages. To so much perfection was our Naval reputation arrived in the twelfth century, that the code of maritime laws, which are called the laws of Oleron, and are received by all nations in Europe as the ground of all their marine constitutions, was confessedly compiled by our King Richard I. at the isle of Oleron, on the coast of France, then then part of the possessions of the Crown of England. 4 Inst. 144. And yet so vastly inferior were our ancestors in this point, to the present age, that even in the maritime reign of Queen Elizabeth, Sir Edward Coke thinks it matter of boast, that the Royal Navy of England then consisted of thirty-three ships. The present condition of our marine is in a great measure owing to the salutary provisions of the statutes, called the Navigation Acts; whereby the constant increase of English shipping and seamen was not only encouraged, but rendered unavoidably necessary. See this Dictionary, title Navigation Acts.

At the same time that the good œconomy of the Royal Navy is displayed, it seems necessary to take some notice of that, which affords it an opportunity of appearing in more magnificent grandeur than can be represented by the ablest writer in the world; namely, the ocean on which it is borne; especially as there is a peculiar sovereignty and property inherent therein, to the Monarchs of Great Britain; the preservation of which, for several ages past, has not a little conduced to increase the glory of the nation, and to gain it such a reputation abroad, as must justly make our fleets seem as formidable to strangers, as they are to us, who know their real strength. This right is so ancient and undeniable, that even the most haughty of our neighbours dare not pretend to controul it by any public act, however they may presume to contradict it by bare words; neither was any thing ever written against it until it was undertaken by Hugo Grotius, in his book called Mare liberum.

The boundaries properly said to encompass what are called the British Seas, are thus accounted, under the distinction of the four cardinal points of the compass; taking it for granted in general, that all the seas which surround Great Britain, Ireland, and the other islands appertaining to the Crown, are called the British Seas: but as to particulars they stand thus: On the South is the British Channel which separates England from France, the boundaries of which extend to the opposite shores of France, and to those of Spain, as far as Cape Finisterre. From that Cape it extends to the west in an imaginary line running in twenty-three degrees of West longitude from London, to the latitude of sixty-three degrees North, which last is called the Western Ocean of Britain. From the aforesaid latitude of sixty-three degrees it extends in another line (supposed to be drawn) in that parallel of latitude, to the middle point of the land, Van Staten, on the coast of Norway, which is the northern boundary, and from that point it extends along the shores of Norway, Denmark, Germany, and the Netherlands, to the channel first mentioned; which last boundary comprehends what is called the Eastern Ocean of Britain.

There being no lands lying on the West and North sides of the British dominions, nearer than the continent of America, the island of Newfoundland, and Greenland, and the King of Great Britain having possessions in the two first places; the boundaries of his maritime empire cannot be said to be strictly limited on that side. Moreover, as to Greenland, it was at first discovered in the reign of Edward the Sixth, by Sir Hugh Willoughby, for the use of the Crown of England; and still again to the Northward there is some foundation for extending this sovereignty a great deal farther, on account of the acquisitions of King Arthur, a record of which is to be found in Hackluyt, p. 245, translated from the Latin original there quoted from Geoffrey of Monmouth's Hist.

According to this ancient right the British dominion on the North Sea is very extensive; and so far from being questioned, or the trade of the British Subjects in those parts obstructed, that on the contrary, (without regard to the above relation concerning King Arthur,) Britain has a prior right even to Denmark and Norway in the Greenland fishery, and Davis's Streights; these places being unknown to them, and the rest of Europe, till John Davis's voyage for discovery of the North-west passage in the year 1585, though it seems that the Danes afterwards demanded toll for our fishing at Greenland, but it was refused to them.

See an incomplete note on this subject, 1 Inst. 107. a. n. 6.

II. Many laws have been made for the supply of the Royal Navy with seamen; for their regulation when on board; and to confer privileges and rewards on them during and after their service.

As to their supply, the power of impressing seamen, though one of the most invidious, has ever been found one of the most certain means. It has been a matter of some dispute, and submitted to not without a national reluctance: it is now however established by the law of the land beyond question, and from the spirit of the Constitution, the exercise of it resides in the Crown. See this Dictionary, title Impressing Seamen.

But besides this method of impressing, (which, after all, is only defensible from absolute public necessity, to which all private considerations must give way,) other ways have from time to time been adopted, and many of them still continue to be, that tend to the increase of seamen and manning the Royal Navy. Among these deserves to be noticed the provision that every foreign seaman, who during a war shall serve two years in any man-of-war, merchant-man, or privateer, is naturalized, ipso facto; stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 3; and serving three years may be employed as a British mariner, stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 68; and by various statutes, sailors having served the King for a limited time, are free to use any trade or profession in any town in the kingdom without exception.

For the furnishing of mariners for the fleet, an act of parliament, stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 21, was passed; by which it was enacted, That all seamen, watermen, &c. above the age of eighteen years, and under fifty, capable of sea-service, who should register themselves voluntarily for the King's service in the Royal Navy, to the number of thirty thousand, should have paid to them the yearly sum or bounty of forty shillings, besides their pay for actual service, and that whether they were in service or not; and none but such mariners, &c. as were registered, should be capable of preferment to any commission, or be warrant officers in the navy; and such registered persons were exempted from serving on Juries, parish offices, &c. also from service abroad after the age of fifty-five years, unless they went voluntarily; and when by age, wounds, or other accidents, they were disabled for future service at sea, they were to be admitted into Greenwich Hospital, and there be provided for, during life: and the widows of such seamen as should should be slain or drowned, not of ability to provide for themselves, should be likewise admitted into the hospitals; and their children educated, &c. But if any registered seaman should withdraw himself from the King's service, in his ships or navy; or if any such mariner relinquished the service, without consent of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, he was for ever to lose the benefit of the act, and be compelled to serve in his Majesty's fleet six months without pay. This registry however, being by experience proved to be ineffectual as well as oppressive, was abolished; and the above statute repealed, by stat. 9 Ann. c. 21. § 64.

By stat. 4 Ann. c. 19. § 18, Watermen plying on the Thames between Gravesend and Windsor, on notice given by the Commissioners of the Admiralty to the company of watermen, are to appear before the said company, to be sent to his Majesty's fleet, or, on refusal, they shall suffer one month's imprisonment, and be disabled working on the Thames for two years.

The stat. 2 Ann. c. 6, provides, That poor boys, whose parents are chargeable to the parish, may by churchwardens and overseers of the poor, with consent of two Justices of Peace, be placed out apprentices to the sea service, until the age of twenty-one years, they being thirteen years old at the time of their placing forth: these apprentices shall be protected from being impressed for the first three years; and if they are impressed afterwards, the master shall be allowed their wages. And all masters and owners of ships, from thirty to fifty tons burthen, are required to take one such apprentice, one more for the next fifty ton, and one more for every hundred ton above the first hundred, under the penalty of ten pounds. Masters of apprentices placed out by the parish may, with the consent of two Justices, turn over such apprentices to masters of ships.

Of more modern statutes, the following deserve particular notice:

By stat. 35 Geo. 3. cc 5, 9, the number of 9769 men was raised for the Navy according to a certain proportion imposed on every County in England. The execution of this act was intrusted to the Justices of Peace and Magistrates of Corporations, and the expence defrayed by rates made upon every parish out of which bounties were paid to volunteers entering;—a mode which met with the greatest success; and by which the men were raised in a space of time inconceivably short. One provision in this act was, that no person enlisting under it should be liable to be taken out of his Majesty's service but by some criminal process, or for some criminal matter.

A similar statute, 35 Geo. 3. c. 9, was also passed for the purpose of raising 18,874 men from the several Ports of the Kingdom; to effectuate which an embargo was imposed on all British vessels: these also were so speedily raised, that the effect of the embargo was scarcely perceived. Every able-bodied seaman raised under this act was estimated as two able-bodied men; a protection was by this act also allowed against all arrests, except for criminal matters.

By c. 29, of the same session, 35 Geo. 3, the number of 1814 men was raised in the counties, stewarties, &c. of Scotland. By this act a penalty of 25*l.* for each man not produced was imposed on the chief resident magistrate of each burgh or town.

To further the urgent demand for sailors, the stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 34, was passed to enable Magistrates to levy for his Majesty's Navy in their several jurisdictions, "all able-bodied, idle, and disorderly persons who could not on examination prove themselves to exercise and industriously follow some lawful trade or employment, or to have some substance sufficient for their maintenance." The execution of this act was, by a clause therein, allowed to be suspended and revived according to necessity, by his Majesty's proclamation or notice from the Admiralty. It is to be feared, however, that it was never enforced to the extent it ought to have been.

By stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 83, private Militia-men who had served in the Navy were allowed to be discharged from the militia in order to re-enter into the Navy, to a certain extent.

To encourage these men in the exercise of their duty, to ensure them their wages, to protect their persons, to provide for their families, and to secure them from impositions, in relation to their prize-money and other advantages; several acts of parliament have from time to time been past. By the first of these now in force, stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 10, encouragement is given to seamen to enter into his Majesty's service voluntarily: volunteers entering their names with any commission officer of the fleet, and forthwith proceeding towards their ships, on certificate thereof shall be entitled to wages from the date of the certificate, and be allowed the usual conduct-money, and also be paid an advance of two months' wages, &c. And if any volunteer is turned over to another ship, he shall receive, over and above his wages due, the like advance of two months' pay, and not serve in a lower degree than he did before. Persons entered on board ships of war, are not to be taken thereout by any process at law, unless it be for a criminal matter; or where the debt amounts to 20*l.* When seamen die on board, the commander of the ship shall, as soon as may be, make out tickets for their pay, which shall be paid to their executors, &c. without tarrying for the ship's return: and seamen's pay shall not be bargained and sold; but tickets may. Governors and consuls in foreign parts are to provide for shipwrecked mariners at 6*d.* (increased by stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 33. to 9*d.*) per diem each, and put them on board the first ships of war, &c. and on sending bills of disbursements with vouchers to the Commissioners of the Navy, they shall be paid.

This statute is enforced and explained by several others, particularly stats. 3 Geo. 3. c. 16: 26 Geo. 3. c. 63: 32 Geo. 3. cc. 33, 34, 67; in the latter of which acts is contained an abstract of all the preceding acts; which abstract is ordered to be hung up in some conspicuous part of every ship; together with the articles of war after mentioned. The stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 67, extends the benefit of that and all other acts to Ireland.

Stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 121, explains and amends stats. 19 Geo. 3. c. 67: 20 Geo. 3. c. 23: 21 Geo. 3. c. 15, as to the distribution of prize-money.

To obviate the natural improvidence of these brave but thoughtless men, stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 28, was passed, to enable petty officers in the Navy, and seamen, non-commissioned officers of marines, and mariners serving in the Navy, to allot part of their pay for the maintenance of their wives and families; and a number of minute regulations are thereby made for this very humane purpose: and by chapter 95 of the same session, that excellent provision was extended to boatswains, gunners, and carpenters in the Navy.

In pursuance of the same plan, for the comfort and relief of the defenders of their country, it is provided by stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 53. §§ 7, 8, that letters to and from non-commissioned officers, seamen, and privates, in any departments of the army, Navy, or militia, be subject only to one penny postage.

By stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 94, a more easy and expeditious method was established for the punctual and frequent wages and pay of officers in the Navy, as also of masters and surgeons in the same service; to whom the benefit of former regulations had not previously extended, or for whom they were not sufficiently adequate.

The pay and wages of one man in a hundred, of every ship of war, and value of his victuals, shall be applied for relieving poor widows of officers of the Navy, stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 25. Able seamen who voluntarily enter on board ships of war, shall receive 5*l.* besides their wages, and ordinary seamen 3*l.* And if any seaman, under a commission or warrant officer, who enters into the service, be killed or drowned, his widow, on certificate to the Commissioners of the Navy that she is such, is to have, by way of bounty, one year's wages, according to the pay for which he served. Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 38.

III. The Commissioners of the Navy, &c. have power to examine and punish all persons who make any disturbance, fighting or quarrelling in the yards, and offices, &c. of the Navy.

The method of ordering seamen in the Royal fleet, and keeping up discipline there, is directed by certain express rules, articles, and orders, first enacted by the authority of Parliament soon after the Restoration, but since new modelled and altered. In the 13th year of King Charles II. an act passed for the regulating the government of the fleet, stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 1. c. 9. which was repealed by stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 33 explained and amended by stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 17. These two latter statutes contain not only the 36 articles of war, in which almost every possible offence is explicitly set down, and the punishment thereof annexed or left to the discretion of a Court Martial; but also sundry clauses of express rules and orders for assembling and holding Courts for the trial of any of the offences specified therein.

The following are the Articles of War above alluded to:

1. Officers are to cause public worship, according to the liturgy of the church of England, to be solemnly performed in their ships, and take care that prayers and preaching by the chaplains be performed diligently, and that the Lord's Day be observed.

2. Persons guilty of profane oaths, cursing, drunkenness, uncleanness, &c. to be punished as a Court Martial shall think fit.

3. If any person shall give or hold intelligence to or with an enemy without leave, he shall suffer death.

4. If any letter or message from an enemy be conveyed to any in the fleet, and he shall not in twelve hours acquaint his superior officer with it, or if the superior officer, being acquainted therewith, shall not reveal it to the commander in chief, the offender shall suffer death; or such punishment as a Court Martial shall impose.

5. Spies and persons endeavouring to corrupt any one in the fleet, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a Court Martial shall impose.

6. No person shall relieve an enemy with money, victuals, or ammunition, on like penalty.

7. All papers taken on board a prize shall be sent to the Court of Admiralty, &c. on penalty of forfeiting the share of the prize, and such punishment as a Court Martial shall impose.

8. No person shall take out of any prize any money or goods, unless for better securing the same, or for the necessary use of any of his Majesty's ships, before the prize shall be condemned; upon penalty of forfeiting his share, and such punishment as shall be imposed by a Court Martial.

9. No person on board a prize shall be stripped of his cloaths, pillaged, beaten, or ill-treated, upon pain of such punishment as a Court Martial shall impose.

10. Every commander who, upon signal or order of fight, or sight of any ship which it may be his duty to engage, or who, upon likelihood of engagement, shall not make necessary preparations for fight, and encourage the inferior officers and men to fight, shall suffer death; or such punishment as a Court Martial shall deem him to deserve. And if any person shall treacherously or cowardly yield or cry for quarter, he shall suffer death.

11. Every person who shall not obey the orders of his superior officer, in time of action, to the best of his power, shall suffer death; or such punishment as a Court Martial shall deem him to deserve.

12. Every person, who, in time of action, shall withdraw or keep back, or not come into the fight, or do his utmost to take or destroy any ship which it shall be his duty to engage, and to assist every ship of his Majesty or his allies, which it shall be his duty to assist, shall suffer death, or other punishment. See post, and stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 17. § 3.

13. Every person, who through cowardice, &c. shall forbear to pursue the chase of any enemy, &c. or shall not assist or relieve a known friend in view, to the utmost of his power, shall suffer death, or other punishment. See post.

14. If any person shall delay or discourage any action or service commanded, upon pretence of arrears of wages, or otherwise, he shall suffer death; or such punishment as a Court Martial shall deem him to deserve.

15. Every person who shall desert to the enemy, or run away with any ship, ordnance, &c. to the weakening of the service, or yield up the same cowardly or treacherously to the enemy, shall suffer death.

16. Every person who shall desert, or entice others so to do, shall suffer death; or such punishment as a Court Martial shall think fit. If any commanding officer shall receive a deserter, after discovering him to be such, and shall not with speed give notice to the captain of the ship to which he belongs, or if the ship is at a considerable distance, to the Secretary of the Admiralty, or Commander in Chief, he shall be cashiered.

17. Officers and seamen of ships appointed for convoy of merchant ships, or of any other, shall diligently attend upon that charge according to their instructions; and whosoever shall not faithfully perform their duty, and defend their ships in their convoy, or refuse to fight in their defence, or run away cowardly and submit the ships in their convoy to hazard, or exact any reward for convoying any ship, or misuse the master or mariners, shall make reparation of damages, as the Court of Admiralty shall adjudge; and be punished criminally by death, or other punishment, as shall be adjudged by a Court Martial. See title Insurance.

18. If any officer shall receive or permit to be received on board any goods or merchandise, other than for the sole use of the ship, except gold, silver, or jewels, and except goods belonging to any ship which may be shipwrecked, or in danger thereof, in order to the preserving them for the owners, and except goods ordered to be received by the Lord High Admiral, &c. he shall be cashiered, and rendered incapable of further service.

19. Any person making or endeavouring to make any mutinous assembly shall suffer death. Any person uttering words of sedition or mutiny shall suffer death; or such punishment as a Court Martial shall deem him to deserve. If any officer, mariner, or soldier, in or belonging to the fleet, shall behave himself with contempt to his superior officer, being in the execution of his office, he shall be punished according to the nature of his offence, by the judgment of a Court Martial.

20. Any person concealing any traiterous or mutinous practice or design, shall suffer death; or such punishment as a Court Martial shall think fit. Any person concealing any traiterous or mutinous words, or any words practice, or design, tending to the hindrance of the service, and not forthwith revealing the same to the commanding officer; or, being present at any mutiny or sedition, shall not use his utmost endeavours to suppress the same, shall be punished as a Court Martial shall think he deserves.

21. Any person finding cause of complaint of the unwholesomeness of victuals, or upon other just ground, he shall quietly make the same known to his superior, who, as far as he is able, shall cause the same to be presently remedied; and no person upon any such or other pretence shall attempt to stir up any disturbance; upon pain of such punishment as a Court Martial shall think fit to inflict.

22. Any person striking any his superior officer, or drawing or offering to draw or lift up any weapon against him, being in the execution of his office, shall suffer death. And any person presuming to quarrel with any his superior officer, being in the execution of his office, or disobeying any lawful command of any his superior officer, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as shall be inflicted upon him by a Court Martial.

23. Any person quarrelling or fighting with any other person in the fleet, or using reproachful or provoking speeches or gestures, shall suffer punishment as a Court Martial shall impose.

24. There shall be no wasteful expence or embezzlement of any powder, shot, &c. upon penalty of such punishment as by a Court Martial shall be found just.

25. Every person burning or setting fire to any magazine, or store of powder, ship, &c. or furniture thereunto belonging, not then appertaining to an enemy, shall suffer death.

26. Care is to be taken that through wilfulness or negligence no ship be stranded, run upon rocks or sands, or split or hazarded; upon pain of death, or such punishment as a Court Martial shall deem the offence to deserve.

27. No person shall sleep upon his watch, or negligently perform his duty, or forsake his station, upon pain of death, or such punishment as, &c.

28. Murder;—And

29. Buggery or sodomy, shall be punished with death.

30. Robbery shall be punished with death, or otherwise as a Court shall find meet.

31. Every person knowingly making or signing, or commanding, counselling, or procuring the making or signing, any false muster, shall be cashiered and rendered incapable of further employment.

32. Provost Martial refusing to apprehend or receive any criminal, or suffering him to escape, shall suffer such punishment as a Court Martial shall deem him to deserve. And all others shall do their endeavours to detect and apprehend all offenders, upon pain of being punished by a Court Martial.

33. If any flag-officer, captain, commander, or lieutenant, shall behave in a scandalous, infamous, cruel, oppressive, or fraudulent manner, unbecoming his character, he shall be dismissed.

34. Every person in actual service and full pay, guilty of mutiny, desertion, or disobedience, in any part of his Majesty's dominions on shore, when in actual service relative to the fleet, shall be liable to be tried by a Court Martial, and suffer the like punishment as if the offence had been committed at sea.

35. Every person in actual service and full pay, committing upon shore, in any place out of his Majesty's dominions, any crime punishable by these articles, shall be liable to be tried and punished as if the crime had been committed at sea.

36. All other crimes not capital, not mentioned in this act, shall be punished according to the laws and customs used at sea. No person to be imprisoned for longer than two years. Court Martial not to try any offence (except under the 5th, 34th, and 35th Articles) not committed upon the main sea, or in great rivers beneath the bridges, or in any haven, &c. within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, or by persons in actual service and full pay, except such persons as mentioned in 5th Article; nor to try a land officer or soldier on board a transport-ship. The Lord High Admiral, &c. may grant commissions to any officer commanding in chief any fleet, &c. to call Courts Martial, consisting of commanders and captains. And if the commander in chief shall die or be removed, the officer next in command may call Courts Martial. No commander in chief of a fleet, &c. of more than five ships, shall preside at any Court Martial in foreign parts, but the officer next in command shall preside. If a commander in chief shall detach any part of his fleet, &c. he may empower the chief commander of the detachment to hold Courts Martial during the separate service. If five or more ships shall meet in foreign parts, the senior officer may hold Courts Martial and preside thereat. Where it is improper for the officer next to the commander in chief to hold or preside at a Court Martial, the third officer in command may be empowered to preside at, or hold, the same. No Court Martial shall consist of more than thirteen, nor less than five persons. Where there shall not be less than three, and yet not so many as five of the degree of a post captain or superior rank, the officer who is to preside may call to his assistance as many commanders under the degree of a post captain, as together with the post captains shall make up the number five, to hold the Court Martial.

Proceedings shall not be delayed, if a sufficient number remain to compose the Court, which shall sit from day to day (except Sunday) till sentence be given.

The Judge Advocate, and all officers constituting a Court Martial, and all witnesses, shall be upon oath. Persons refusing to give evidence may be imprisoned. Sentence of death within the Narrow Seas (except in case of mutiny) shall not be put in execution till a report be made to the Lord High Admiral, &c. Sentence of death beyond the Narrow Seas, shall not be put in execution, but by order of the commander in chief of the fleet, &c. Sentence of death in any squadron detached from the fleet, shall not be put in execution (except in case of mutiny) but by order of the commander of the fleet, or Lord High Admiral, &c. And sentence of death passed in a Court Martial, held by the senior officer of five or more ships met in foreign parts, (except in case of mutiny,) shall not be put in execution but by order of the Lord High Admiral, &c.

The powers given by the said articles shall remain in force with respect to crews of ships wrecked, lost, or destroyed, until they be discharged or removed into another ship, or a Court Martial shall be held to inquire of the causes of the loss of the ship. And if upon inquiry it shall appear, that all or any of the officers and seamen did their utmost to save the ship, and behaved obediently to their superior officers, their pay shall go on: as also shall the pay of officers and seamen taken by the enemy, having done their best to defend the ship, and behaved obediently. If any officer shall receive any goods on board, contrary to the 18th article, he shall further forfeit the value of such goods, or 500*l.* at the election of the informer; half to the informer, and half to Greenwich Hospital. See Seamen; Ships.

By stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 10. § 33, a competent number of printed copies of the above Articles of War are to be delivered to the captain or commander of every ship or vessel; who is to cause them to be hung up and affixed to the most public places of the ship, and to have them constantly kept up and renewed, so that they may be at all times accessible to the inferior officers and seamen on board: and likewise to observe that such abstract be audibly and distinctly read over, once in every month, in the presence of the officers and seamen, immediately after the Articles of War are read.

The offences comprehended and specified in the above Articles of War may be classed under four general heads: 1. Those immediately against God and Religion, contained in the 1st and 2d Articles, viz. neglecting public worship, and being guilty of swearing, drunkenness, &c. the punishment of which is left to the discretion of the Courts Martial.—2. Such as affect the executive power of the State, or concern the criminal neglect of the established rules of discipline; these offences are specified in Articles 3, 4, 5, 15, 16, 19, 20, 22, 24, 25, 27, and 34, viz. holding intelligence with an enemy or rebel; concealing letters or messages from or relieving them; deserting to an enemy; running away with ships, stores, &c. or yielding the same to an enemy; desertion from the service, or entertaining deserters; waste or embezzlements of stores; mutinous assemblies; seditious or mutinous words; concealing any traiterous or mutinous designs, &c. striking, quarrelling, or disobeying the orders of a superior officer; sleeping upon the watch; neglecting duty, or forsaking a station allotted; and knowingly signing false muster-books.—3. Such as violate or transgress the rights and duties which are owing to individuals or fellow-subjects; under which may be classed murder, robbery, &c. See Articles 28, 29, 30.—4. Offences in themselves strictly military, and such as are peculiarly the object of martial law. These are recited in Articles 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 17. The 12th and 13th Articles as they formerly stood, by restraining the power of a Court Martial to the positive inflicting the punishment of death in the cases therein mentioned of cowardice, negligence, or disaffection in time of action, &c. were deemed too severe, and attended with peculiar inconveniences; one instance of which was the case of the unfortunate Admiral Byng. These Articles were therefore explained and amended by § 3 of stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 17, whereby it is now lawful for a Court Martial to pronounce sentence of death, "or to inflict such other punishment as the nature and degree of the offence therein recited shall be found to deserve." See M'Arthur on Naval Courts Martial.

It is already mentioned under title Courts Martial, that desertion from the King's armies in time of war is made felony by stat. 18 H. 6. c. 19. It may here be added that by stat. 5 Eliz. c 5. § 27, this penalty is extended to mariners and gunners serving in the Navy.

The ground of the jurisdiction of Naval Courts Martial depends on nearly the same reasoning as relates to those of the army; as to which see this Dictionary, title Courts Martial. The theory and general principles of Courts of Enquiry and Courts Martial in both services, also rest upon the same basis. Some observations, however, more peculiarly applicable to the latter, are here introduced; chiefly from M'Arthur on Naval Courts Martial; and the authorities referred to by him.

It is to be observed, that though in this as in the ordinary course of the criminal judicature of the kingdom, the King has the prerogative of pardoning or remitting punishment; yet he can no more alter the sentence of a Court Martial, than he can a judgment of any other Court. At the same time it is unquestionable that the Royal prerogative may be exercised on all occasions in dismissing officers from the service; even though acquitted by a Court Martial.

Among many reasons urged against Naval Courts Martial, the most cogent and constitutional, at the first glance, is that of the inferior officers and seamen, not being tried by their peers; for by the statute, no Court Martial shall consist of more than thirteen, or less than five persons; to be composed of such flag-officers, captains, or commanders, then present, as are next in seniority to the officer who presides at the Court Martial. This objection, however, is (we may say completely) obviated by the necessity of subordination, which could not be preserved by admitting those as Jurymen, who certainly would have too great a fellow-feeling in the fate fate of the culprit: besides that it would open a dangerous door to confederacies that might destroy the whole discipline of the Navy.

To institute one inferior or divisional Court Martial, subject to appeal in the Navy, analogous to the regimental Courts in the army, would not be adequate to remedy some other evils complained of; for according to the ancient practice of the sea, and as established by the 4th Article of the general printed Instructions, a captain or commander of any of his Majesty's ships or vessels has the power of inflicting punishment upon a seaman in a summary manner, for any faults or offences committed contrary to the rules of discipline and obedience established in the Navy; such punishment not to exceed twelve lashes for any one fault.

All Courts Martial are to be held, and offences tried, in the forenoon, and in the most public part of the ship, where all who will may be present: and the Captains of all his Majesty's ships in company who take post, have a right to assist thereat Instr. Art. 4.

Under the stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 33, No member of any Court Martial, after the trial commenced, could go on shore, or leave the ship in which the Court Martial should first assemble, until sentence was given; but it having been found that this restraint and confinement might, in many cases, be attended with great inconvenience, and even prejudice to the health of the members, this clause was repealed by §§ 1, 2, of stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 17, under which all the members are now at liberty to retire upon every adjournment.

The jurisdiction of Naval Courts Martial extends to the trial of all offences specified in the Articles of War; which may be committed upon the main sea, or on great rivers, only beneath the bridges of the said rivers nigh to the sea, or in any haven, river, or creek within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty: and which shall be committed by persons then in actual service and full pay in the fleet or ships of war of his Majesty. Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 33. § 4.—Likewise to the trial of all spies, and all persons whatsoever who shall come and be found in the nature of spies, as specified in the 5th of the above Articles of War; as well as to the trial of every person who shall be guilty of mutiny, desertion, or disobedience to any lawful command, in any part of his Majesty's dominions on shore, when in actual service, relative to the fleet: and for crimes committed on shore by such persons, in any places out of his Majesty's dominions, as are more fully specified in the 34th and 35th of the said Articles.

Murders are cognizable by Courts Martial, only in cases where the stroke or poison is given on board ship, and the person dies in consequence thereof on board; but in order to prevent any failure of justice, it is enacted by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 21, that if any person be stricken or poisoned at sea or abroad, and die in England, or being stricken or poisoned in England, die at sea or abroad, the murderer and accessaries are to be given up to the civil power, and may be indicted and tried in the county where the stroke, poison, or death happened. See this Dictionary, title Homicide III. 3: Admiral.

Naval Courts Martial can likewise take cognizance of crimes committed by warrant officers or men belonging to ships in ordinary; that is, stationed for particular purposes in the several dock-yards of the kingdom, and not in active public service. But they cannot take cognizance of offences committed by masters, mates, or seamen belonging to Navy transports, as they are persons not subject to naval discipline. They are entitled to be discharged in time of war or peace, on their own application. The Articles of War are never stuck up or read on board these Navy transports; though the officers and men receive their wages quarterly at the dock-yards, in the same manner as the officers and men of his Majesty's ships in ordinary.

By § 23 of the said stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 33, it is enacted, that no person, not flying from justice, shall be tried or punished by a Court Martial for any offence, unless the complaint of such offence be made in writing, or (and?) unless a Court Martial to try such offender shall be ordered within three years after the offence shall be committed; or within one year after the return of the ship into any of the ports of Great Britain or Ireland.

Pardons, when extended to a criminal tried by a Naval Court Martial, are sent to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, who immediately transmit (as secret) their order of reprieve or pardon to the commander in chief or senior officer of the place for the time being, where the execution would take place; signed by the Lords under the Admiralty Seal, signifying his Majesty's royal clemency, and directing the commander in chief to keep the whole of the order extremely secret, until the offender is, on the day appointed for execution, brought out upon deck, and every thing prepared for his execution, agreeable to the custom of the Navy; and then only to make known to him his Majesty's pleasure, and to release him from his confinement. M'Arthur.

Some doubts having been entertained in the time of Will. III. whether the Commissioners of the Admiralty had the same power to issue commissions to a Court Martial to try a prisoner, as the Lord High Admiral was allowed to have; this and all the other powers of a Lord High Admiral were vested in such Commissioners, by stat. 2 W. & M. stat. 2. c. 2. See this Dictionary, title Admiral.

It is hinted under title Courts Martial, in the former volume of this Dictionary, that Members of Courts Martial are liable to answer, in damages to the party injured, for the consequences of any unjust sentence. A remarkable instance of this occurred in the case of Lieutenant Frye, of the Marines, who in the year 1743 was sentenced to 15 years imprisonment by a Court Martial. He brought an action against the president Sir Chaloner Ogle, and recovered 1000 l. damages; and the Judge informing him that he was at liberty to bring his action against any of the members, he proceeded against Rear-Admiral Mayne and Captain Rentone; who were arrested by a capias from the Court of Common Pleas, at the breaking up of the Court Martial on Admiral Lestock, where the former presided, and the latter sat as member. This was much resented by that Court Martial, who passed some resolutions on the subject, reflecting in intemperate language on the Chief Justice of the Court, (Sir John Willes,) and these were laid by the Lords of the Admiralty before the King: upon this the Chief Justice caused every member of the Court to be taken into custody; and was proceeding in legal measures to assert and maintain the authority of his office, when a stop was put to the process by a public written submission, signed by all the members of the Court, transmitted to the the Lord Chief Justice, received and read in the Court of Common Pleas, registered in the Remembrancer's Office, and inserted in the Gazette of Nov. 15th, 1746. "A memorial (as the Chief Justice observed) to the present and future ages, that whoever set themselves up in opposition to the laws, or think themselves above the law, will in the end find themselves mistaken."

NE ADMITTAS, A writ directed to the bishop for the plaintiff or defendant, where a quare impedit or assise of darrein presentment is depending, when either party fears that the bishop will admit the other's clerk during the suit between them: it ought to be brought within six calendar months after the avoidance, before the bishop may present by lapse; for it is in vain to sue out this writ when the title to present is devolved unto the bishop. Reg. Orig. 31: F. N. B. 37. Writ of Ne admittas doth not lie, if the plea be not depending in the King's Court by quare impedit, or darrein presentment; therefore there is a writ in the register directed to the Chief Justice of C. B. to certify the King in the Chancery, if there be any plea before him and the other Judges between the parties, &c. So that the writ should not be granted until that be done: but yet it may be had out of the Chancery before the King is certified that such plea of quare impedit is depending; and then the party grieved may require the Chief Justice to certify, &c. New Nat. Br. 83, 84. The writ runs, Prohibemus vobis, Ne admittas, &c.

Immediately on the suing out of a quare impedit, if the plaintiff suspects that the bishop will admit the defendant's or any other clerk pending the suit, he [or the defendant vice versâ] may have this prohibitory writ of Ne admittas, which recites the contention begun in the King's Courts, and forbids the bishop to admit any clerk whatsoever till such contention be determined. And if the bishop doth after the receipt of this writ admit any person, even though the patron's right may have been found in a jure patronatûs, then the plaintiff, after he has obtained judgment in the quare impedit, may remove the incumbent, if the clerk of a stranger, by writ of scire facias. 2 Sid. 94: And he shall have a special action against the bishop, called a quare incumbravit, to recover the presentation; and also satisfaction in damages for the injury done him by incumbering the church with a clerk pending the suit, and after the Ne admittas received. F. N. B. 48. But if the bishop has incumbered the church by instituting the clerk, no quare incumbravit lies; for the bishop hath no legal notice till the writ of Ne admittas is served upon him. The patron is therefore left to his quare impedit merely, which, since the stat. Westm. 2, lies as well upon a recent usurpation within six months past, as upon a disturbance without usurpation had. See 3 Comm. c. 16, p. 248, 9.

NEAT, or NET, Is the weight of a pure commodity alone, without the cask, bag, dross, &c. Merch. Dict.

NECESSITY. The Law charges no man with default where the act is compulsory, and not voluntary, and where there is not a consent and election; therefore if there be an impossibility for a man to do otherwise, or so great a perturbation of the judgment and reason as, in presumption of law, he cannot overcome, such Necessity carries a privilege in itself. Bac. Elem. 25.

Necessity is of three sorts; Necessity of conservation of life, Necessity of obedience, and Necessity of the act of God or of a stranger.

And first of conservation of life. If a man steal viands to satisfy his present hunger, it was anciently held to be no felony nor larceny. Britton, c. 10: Mirr. c. 4. § 16. But this now seems to be considered as an unwarranted doctrine, borrowed from the notions of some civilians. But if such Necessity be owing to his unthriftiness, surely it is far from being an excuse. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 20. See title Hunger. So if divers be in danger of drowning by the casting away of some boat or barge, and one of them get to some plank, or on the boat's side to keep himself above water, and another, to save his life, thrusts him from it, whereby he is drowned, this is neither se defendendo, nor by misadventure, but justifiable. 1 Hawk. Pl. C. c. 28. § 26.

So if divers felons be in gaol, and the gaol by casualty is set on fire, whereby the prisoners get forth, this is no escape nor breaking of prison. Bac. Elem. 25.

So upon the statute, that every merchant setting his merchandise on land without satisfying the customer or agreeing for it, (which agreement is construed to be in certainty,) shall forfeit his merchandise; and it is so that by tempest a great quantity of the merchandise is thrown overboard, whereby the merchant agrees with the customer by estimation, which falls out short of the truth, yet the over quantity is not forfeited; where note, that Necessity dispenses with the direct letter of a statute law. Bac. Elem. 25, 6.

So if a man have right to land, and do not make his entry for terror of force, the law allows him a continual claim, which shall be as beneficial unto him as any entry. See title Claim.

The second Necessity is of obedience; therefore where baron and feme commit felony, the feme can neither be principal nor accessory; because the law intends her to have no will, in regard of the subjection and obedience she owes to her husband.

So one reason among others, why ambassadors are excused of practices against the State where they reside (except it be in point of conspiracy, which is against the law of nations and society) is, because non constat whether they have it in mandatis, and then they are excused by Necessity of obedience. Ibid.

The third Necessity is of the act of God, [as inevitable accident by the elements is, rather irreverently, styled in law,] or of a stranger; as, if I be tenant for years of a house, and it be overthrown by tempest or by floods, or invasion of enemies, or if I have belonging to it some cottage which has been infected, whereby I can procure none to inhabit them, nor workmen to repair them, and so they fall down; in these cases I am excused in waste; but of this last learning, when and how the act of God and strangers do excuse, there are other particular rules. Bac. Elem. 26, 27.

Yet Necessity is a privilege only quoad jura privata; for in all cases if the act that should deliver a man out of the Necessity be against the commonwealth, Necessity is no excuse; for privilegium non valet contra rempublicam; and another says, Necessitas publica major est quam privata; for death is the last point of particular Necessity; and the law imposes upon every subject, that he prefer the urgent service of his prince and country, before the safety of his life; as if in danger of tempest those who are in the ship throw over other men's goods, they are not answerable; but if a man be commanded to bring ordnance or munition to relieve any of the King's towns that are distressed, then he cannot for any danger or tempest justify throwing them overboard; for there it holds which was spoken by the Roman, when he alleged the same Necessity of weather to hold him from embarking, necesse est ut eam, non ut vivam. So in the case put before, of husband and wife, if they join in committing treason, the Necessity of obedience, it has been said, does not excuse the offence, as it does in felony; because it is against the commonwealth. Bac. Elem. 27: see titles Treason; Baron and Feme.

So if a fire happen in a street, I may justify pulling down the wall or house of another, to prevent the fire from spreading; but if I be assailed in my house in a city or town, and distressed, and to save my life I set fire to my house, which spreads and takes hold of other houses adjoining, this is not justifiable; but I am subject to their action upon the case, because I cannot rescue my life by doing any thing which is against the commonwealth; but if it had been but a private trespass, as the going over another's ground, or breaking his inclosure, when I am pursued, for the safeguard of my life, it is justifiable. Bac. Elem. 27, 28.

The common case proves this exception; that is, if a madman commit felony, he shall not lose his life, because his infirmity came by the act of God; but if a drunken man commit felony, he shall not be excused, because his imperfection came by his own default; for the reason that loss or deprivation of will, and election by Necessity and by infirmity, is all one, for the lack of arbitrium solutum is the matter; therefore as infirmitas culpabilis excuses not, no more does Necessitas culpabilis. Bac. Elem. 29.

Compulsion and inevitable Necessity are considered, by Blackstone, among those causes from whence arises a defect of will; and under which, therefore, an action is not to be considered as criminal which would otherwise be so.

These, he states to be a constraint upon the will whereby a man is urged to do that which his judgment disapproves; and which, it is to be presumed, his will (if left to itself) would reject. As punishments are therefore only inflicted for the abuse of that free will which God has given to man, it is highly just and equitable that a man should be excused for those acts which are done through unavoidable force and compulsion.

Of this nature, in the first place, is the obligation of civil subjection, whereby the inferior is constrained, by the superior, to act contrary to what his own reason and inclination would suggest; as when a legislature establishes iniquity by a law, and commands the Subject to do an act contrary to religion or sound morality. How far this excuse will be admitted in foro conscientiæ, or whether the inferior in this case is not bound to obey the divine, rather than the human law, is a question not determinable by municipal law, though among the casuists it will hardly bear a doubt. But, however that may be, obedience to the laws in being is undoubtedly a sufficient extenuation of civil guilt before the municipal tribunal. The Sheriff who burnt Latimer and Ridley, in the days of Queen Mary, was not liable to punishment from Elizabeth, for executing so horrid an office: being justified by the commands of the then existing magistracy.

As to persons in private relations; the principal case where constraint of a superior is allowed as an excuse for criminal misconduct, is with regard to the matrimonial subjection of the wife to her husband: for neither a son nor a servant are excused for the commission of any crime, whether capital or otherwise, by the command or coercion of the parent or master; though in some cases the command or authority of the husband, either express or implied, will privilege the wife from punishment even for capital offences; as to which see this Dictionary, title Baron and Feme VII.

Another species of compulsion or Necessity is what our law calls duress per minas; as to which see this Dictionary, title Duress.

There is a third species of Necessity which may be distinguished from the actual compulsion of external force or fear; being the result of reason and reflection, which act upon, and constrain a man's will, and oblige him to an action, which without such obligation would be criminal. And that is, when a man has his choice of two evils set before him, and, being under a Necessity of chusing one, he chuses the least pernicious of the two. Here the will cannot be said freely to exert itself, being rather passive than active: or if active it is rather in rejecting the greater evil than in choosing the less. Of this sort is that Necessity where a man by the commandment of the law is bound to arrest another for any capital offence, or to disperse a riot, and resistance is made to his authority; it is here justifiable, and even necessary, to beat, to wound, or perhaps to kill the offenders, rather than permit the murderer to escape, or the riot to continue; for the preservation of the peace of the kingdom, and the apprehending of notorious malefactors, are of the utmost consequence to the public; and therefore excuse the felony which the killing would otherwise amount to. 1 Hal. P.C. 53: See 4 Comm. 27—31.

As to homicide justifiable by Necessity, see this Dict. title Homicide I.

NE EXEAT REGNO; (or as it is sometimes, ungrammatically as it seems, termed, Ne exeat Regnum.) A writ to restrain a person from going out of the kingdom without the King's licence. F. N. B. 85. It may be directed to the Sheriff to make the party find surety that he will not depart the realm; and on his refusal, to commit him to prison; or it may be directed to the party himself; and if he then goes, he may be fined. 2 Inst. 178.

A Ne exeat Regnum has been granted to stay a defendant from going to Scotland; for though it is not out of the kingdom, yet it is out of the process of the Court, and within the same mischief. 2 Salk. 702; 3 Mod. 127, 169; 4 Mod. 179. If the writ be sued for the King, the party against whom sued may plead licence by letters patent, &c. which shall discharge him; but where any Subject goes beyond sea with the King's licence, and continues longer than his appointed time, it hath hath been held, he loses the benefit of a Subject. 4 Leon. 29. And if a person beyond sea refuses to return to England on the King's letters under his privy seal, commanding him upon his allegiance to return; being certified into the Chancery, a commission may be awarded to seize his lands and goods for the contempt: and so it is if such person's servants hinder a messenger from delivering his message, on affidavit of it, &c. Jenk. Cent. 246: 3 Nelf. Abr. 211: see title King V. 3.

The right which the King has, whenever he sees proper, of confining his Subjects to stay within the realm, (or of recalling them when beyond sea,) is classed by Blackstone among his prerogatives as Generalissimo of the realm. By the common law every man may go out of the realm for whatever cause he pleaseth, without obtaining the King's leave; provided he is under no injunction of staying at home; (which liberty was expressly declared, in King John's Great Charter, though left out in that of Henry III.): but, because that every man ought of right to defend the King and his realm, therefore the King at his pleasure may command him by his writ that he go not beyond the seas, or out of the realm without licence, and if he do the contrary, he shall be punished for disobeying the King's command. F. N. B. 85. Some persons there anciently were, that, by reason of their stations, were under a perpetual prohibition of going abroad without licence obtained: among which were reckoned all Peers, on account of their being counsellors of the Crown; all Knights, who were bound to defend the kingdom from invasions; all Ecclesiastics, who were expresly confined by the fourth chapter of the constitution of Clarendon, on account of their attachment in the times of popery to the see of Rome; all Archers and other Artificers, lest they should instruct foreigners to rival us in their several trades and manufactures. This was law in the times of Britton, who wrote in the reign of Edw. I. And Sir E. Coke gives us many instances to this effect in the time of Edw. III. Britton, c. 123; 3 Inst. 175. In the succeeding reign the affair of travelling wore a very different aspect: an act of parliament being made (5 Ric. 2. c. 2.), forbidding all persons whatever to go abroad without licence; except only the Lords and other great men of the realm; and true and notable merchants; and the King's soldiers. But this act was repealed by stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 1. And at present every body has, or at least assumes, the liberty of going abroad when he pleases. Yet undoubtedly if the King, by writ of Ne exeat Regnum under his great seal or privy seal, thinks proper to prohibit him from so doing, and the Subject disobeys; it is a high contempt of the King's prerogative, for which the offender's lands shall be seised till he return, and then he is liable to fine and imprisonment. 1 Hawk. P. C. 22: 1 Comm. c. 7.

It is said, in Lord Bacon's Ordinances, No. 89, that, "towards the latter end of the reign of King James I. this writ was first thought proper to be granted, not only in respect of attempts prejudicial to the King and State; (in which case the Lord Chancellor granted it on application from any of the principal secretaries, without shewing cause, or upon such information as his Lordship should think of weight;) but also in the case of interlopers in trade; great bankrupts in whose estates many Subjects might be interested; in duels and other cases that did concern multitudes of the King's Subjects."

But in the year 1734, Lord Chancellor Talbot declared, that in his experience he never knew this writ of Ne exeat Regnum granted or taken out without a bill first filed.—It is true, it was originally a state-writ, but for some time, though not very long, it has been made use of in aid of the Subjects for the helping of them to justice; but it ought not to be made use of where the demand is entirely at law, for there the plaintiff has bail, and he ought not to have double bail both in law and equity. 3 P. Wms. 312.

The use and object of this writ is, in fact, at present exactly the same as an arrest at law in the commencement of an action, viz. to prevent the party from withdrawing his person and property beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, before a judgment could be obtained and carried into execution: so where there is a suit in equity for a demand, for which the defendant cannot be arrested in an action at law, upon an affidavit made that there is reason to apprehend that he will leave the kingdom before the conclusion of the suit, the Chancellor by this writ will stop him, and will commit him to prison, unless he produces sufficient sureties that he will abide the event of the suit. 1 Comm. c. 7. p. 266. n. And see 2 Com. Dig.: F. N. B. 85, &c.: 2 C. C. 245: La. 29: 7 Mod. 9: Pre. Ch. 171: 1 P. Wms. 263; and Mr. Cox's note there: 15 Vin. 537, 9.

NEGATIVE, Is a proposition by which something is denied; also a particle of denial; as, not. An affirmative includes a Negative; for every statute limiting any thing to be done in one form, although it be spoke in the affirmative, includes a Negative; as the statute of Westm. . 4, of a quod ei deforceat is, that the demandant shall vouch ac si tenens esset in priori brevi, includes a Negative, viz. and not otherwise. Plowd 206. b. 207. a.

A Negative cannot be proved or testified by witnesses, only an affirmative. 2 Inst. 662. Though a Negative is incapable of being proved directly, yet indirectly it is otherwise: for in case one accuses B. to have been at York, and there to have committed a certain fact, in proof of which he produces several witnesses; here B. cannot prove that he was not at York, against positive evidence that he was; but shall be allowed to make out the Negative by collateral testimony, that at that very time he was at Exeter, &c. in such a house and in such company. Fortescue 37.

Negative may be implied by an affirmative, but not necessarily è contra. As the saying, that a papist, unless he conforms, shall not take by devise, does not necessarily imply, that if he does conform he shall take by devise, &c. 2 P. Wms. 9.

Where a ..ult of a term for raising portions for daughters directs a particular method for raising them, it implies a Negative, that they shall not be raised any other way. 2 P. Wms. 19.

An affirmative oath is made to ground an attachment upon; if the person against whom the motion is, denies the charge by oath positively and fully, the Negative oath shall be preferred; and this is the only case in which it shall be so. 8 Mod. 81.

NEGATIVE PREGNANT, negativa pregnans,] Is a Negative, implying also an affirmative; as if a man being impleaded to have done a thing on such a day, or in such a place, denieth that he did it modo & forma declarata, declarata, which implieth, neverthelefs, that in fome fort he did it; or if a man be faid to have alienated land in fee, and he faith he hath not aliened in fee, that is a Negative pregnant; for though he hath not aliened in fee, yet it may be, he hath made an eftate in tail. Dyer 17. num. 95: Brook hoc titulo: Kitchen 232: Terms of the Law.

A Negative pregnant is a fault in pleading; and there muft be a fpecial demurrer to a Negative pregnant plea, &c. for the Court will intend every pleading to be good, till the contrary doth appear. See 2 Leon. 248: Bro. Iffue join. pl. 81: Heath's Max. 53: 2 Leo. 199: Cro. Jac. 559, 560: 15 Vin. Abr. title Negative pregnant: and this Dictionary, title Pleading.

NEGLIGENCE, Is where a perfon neglects or omits to do a thing which he is by law obliged to. And where one has goods of another to keep till fuch a time, and hath a certain recompence or reward for the keeping, he fhall ftand charged for injury by Negligence, &c. But if he hath nothing for keeping them, he is not bound to anfwer. Doct. & Stud. 269. See title Bailment. A man who finds another's goods, if they are after hurt by wilful Negligence, it is held he is chargeable to the owner; though it is otherwife when they are loft by cafualty, as in cafe they are laid in a houfe that is accidentally burnt, or if he deliver them to another to keep, who runs away with them, &c. Ibid. It is held if an accountant be robbed, and it is without his default and Negligence, he fhall not be anfwerable for the money. 1 Inft. 89. A right may be loft by Negligence, as where an action is not brought in the time appointed by the ftatutes of limitations, &c. See 2 P. Wms. 665: Tot. 76: Chanc. Rep. 10: *Chanc. NEIF, Fr. neif, Lat. naturalis, nativa.] A bondwoman, or the villein, born in one's houfe, mentioned in ftat. 9 R. 2. c. 2. If a bondwoman married a free man, fhe was thereby made free; and being once made free, and difcharged of bondage, fhe could not be Neif after, without fome fpecial act done by her, as by divorce, confeffion in Court, &c. And a free woman taking a villein to her hufband, was not thereby bond; but their iffue were villeins as their father was; though this is contrary to the civil law, which fays, *partus fequitur ventrem. NE INJUSTE VEXES, A writ founded on Magna Charta, c. 10, that lies for a tenant diftrained by his lord, for more fervices than he ought to perform; and is a prohibition to the lord not unjuftly to diftrain or vex his tenant: in a fpecial ufe, it is where the tenant hath prejudiced himfelf, by doing greater fervices, or paying more rent, without conftraint, than he needed; for in this cafe, by reafon of the lord's feifin, the tenant cannot avoid it by avowry, but is driven to his writ for remedy. Reg. Orig. 4: F. N. B. 10. And if the lord diftrains to do other fervices, or to pay other rent than due, after the prohibition delivered unto him, then the tenant fhall have an attachment againft the lord, &c. and when the lord cometh thereon, the tenant fhall count againft him, and put himfelf upon the grand affife, &c. whereupon judgment fhall be given. New Nat. Br. 22.

This writ is one of the remedies which the ancient law provided to remedy the oppreffion of lords: though it is of the prohibitory kind, yet it is in the nature of a writ of right. Booth 126. It lies where tenant in fee fimple, and his anceftors, have held of the lord by certain fervices, and the lord hath obtained feifin of more or greater fervice, by the inadvertent payment or performance of them by the tenant himfelf; there the tenant cannot in an avowry avoid the lord's poffeffory right, becaufe of the feifin given by his own hands; but is driven to this writ to diveft the lord's poffeffion, and eftablifh the mere right of property, by afcertaining the fervices and reducing them to their proper ftandard. 3 Comm. c. 15. p. 234.

This writ is always anceftral, where the tenant and his anceftors have holden of the lord and his anceftors; and the lord hath encroached any rent, &c. A feoffee fhall not avoid feifin of rent had by encroachment of his feoffor, nor have the writ Ne injufte vexes; alfo a man fhall not have a writ of Ne injufte vexes againft the grantee of the feigniory. Mich. 18 Ed. 2: 10 Ed. 3. Tenant in tail may not have this writ; but fhall plead and fhew the matter, and not be eftopped by the payment of his anceftors, &c. Trin. 20 Ed. 3.; for he may avoid fuch feifin of the lord obtained from the payment of his anceftors, by plea to an avowry in replevin. F. N. B. 11: 2 Inft. 21. But it feems that almoft every queftion that can now arife, where this writ was formerly in ufe, may be determined in an action of trefpafs.

NIDERLING, NIDERING, or NITHING, A vile, base person, a sluggard. Will. of Malmsb. p. 121: Mat. Par. Ann. 1088. Chicken-hearted; See Spelman in voc.

NIENT COMPRISE, Is an exception taken to a petition, because the thing desired is not contained in that deed or proceeding whereon the petition is founded; for example, one desires of the Court wherein a recovery is had of lands, &c. to be put in possession of a house, formerly among the lands adjudged unto him; to which the adverse party pleads, that this is not to be granted by reason this house is not comprised amongst the lands and houses for which he had judgment. New Book Entries.

NIENT DEDIRE, Signifies to suffer judgment to be had against one, by not denying or opposing it, i. e. by default. 29 Car. 2.

NIGER LIBER. The Black Book or Register in the Exchequer is called by this name.

NIGHT, Is when it is so dark that the countenance of a man cannot be discerned; and by some opinions, burglary in the Night may be committed at any time after sun-set, and before rising. H. P. C. 79: 3 Inst. 63: 1 Hawk. P. C. See Noctanter; Burglary.

NIGHTWALKERS, Are such persons as sleep by day and walk by night, being oftentimes pilferers, or disturbers of the peace. Stat. 5 Ed. 3. c. 14. Constables are authorized by the common law to arrest Nightwalkers and suspicious persons, &c. Watchmen may also arrest Nightwalkers, and hold them until the morning: and it is said, that a private person may arrest any suspicious Nightwalker, and detain him till he give a good account of himself. 2 Hawk. P. C. Watchmen, either those appointed by the statute of Winchester, 13 E. 1. c. 4, to keep watch and ward in all towns from sun-setting till sun-rising, or such as are mere assistants to the constable, may virtute officii arrest all offenders, and particularly Night-walkers, and commit them to custody till morning. 4 Comm. c. 21. p. 292, cites 2 Hal. P. C. 88—96. One may be bound to the good behaviour for being a Nightwalker; and common Nightwalkers and haunters of bawdy-houses are to be indicted before justices of peace, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C.: 2 Hawk. P. C.: Latch. 173: Poph. 280. But it is held not lawful for a constable, &c. to take up any woman, as a Nightwalker, on bare suspicion only, of being of ill fame; unless she be guilty of a breach of the peace, or some unlawful act, and found misdoing. Holt's MS. See 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 89; and this Dictionary, titles Constable; Watch.

NIHIL CAPIAT PER BREVE, or per Billam. Is the judgment given against the plaintiff in an action, either in bar of his action, or in abatement of his writ or bill, &c. Co. Litt. 363.

NIHIL, or NIL DEBET, Is a common plea to an action of debt, when the money is paid; but it is no plea in covenant, on breach assigned for non-payment of rent; &c. 3 Lev. 170. If an action of debt be brought against a Sheriff or gaoler, for the escape of one in execution, the plaintiff must declare upon the judgment, and yet Nil debet per patriam is a good plea. 1 Saund. 38; See titles Issue; Pleading.

NIHIL, or NIL DICIT, Is a failing by the defendant to put in an answer to the plaintiff by the day assigned; which being omitted, judgment is had against him of course, as saying nothing why it should not. See title Judgment

NIHIL, or NIL HABUIT IN TENEMENTIS, A plea to be pleaded in an action of debt only, brought by a lessor against lessee for years, or at will, without deed. 2 Lil. Abr. 214. In debt for rent upon an indenture indenture of lease, Nil habuit in tenementis may not be pleaded; because it is an estoppel, and a general demurrer will serve. 3 Lev. 146. But if debt is brought for rent upon a deed poll, the defendant may plead this plea: and where a defendant pleaded Nil habuit in tenementis tempore dimissionis; the plaintiff replied, Quod habuit in tenementis, &c. and verdict and judgment was had for the plaintiff; whereupon writ of error being brought, it was assigned for error, that the replication was not good, for he ought to have shewn what estate he then had; and of that opinion was the Court; and it had been bad upon demurrer, but being after a verdict, it is good. Cro. Jac. 312. If a less estate is found than the plaintiff pleads in his reply to a Nil habuit, &c. so as it be sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to make a lease, it is good enough. 10 W. 3. Nil habuit in tenementis cannot be given in evidence where the plaintiff hath been in possession. Ld. Raym. 746. See title Pleading.

NIHILS, or NICHILS, Are issues which the Sheriff that is apposed in the Exchequer says, are nothing worth, and illeviable, for the insufficiency of the parties from whom due. Accounts of Nihil shall be put out of the Exchequer, Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 13.

NISI PRIUS, The Commission to Justices of assise; so called from a judicial writ of distringas, whereby the Sheriff is commanded to distrain the impanelled jury to appear at Westminster before the justices at a certain day in the following term, to try some cause; Nisi prius justic. domini regis ad assisas capiend. venerint, viz. Unless the justices come before that day to such a place, &c. 2 Inst. 424: 4 Inst. 159.

A writ of Nisi prius is where an issue is joined, then there goes a venire to summon the jury to appear at a day in court; and upon the return of the venire, with the panel of the jurors names, the record of Nisi prius is made up and sealed, and there goes forth the writ of distringas to have the jurors in Court, Nisi prius justic. venerint, &c. such a day in such a county, to try the issue joined between the parties. 2 Lil. 215.

A record of Nisi prius ought to contain a transcript of the whole issue roll. All civil causes at issue in the Courts at Westminster, are brought down in the two issuable vacations before the day of appearance appointed for the jury above, into the county where the action was laid to be tried there; viz. at the assises; and then upon the return of the verdict given by the jury to the Court above, the next term, the judges there give judgment for the party for whom the verdict is found; and these trials by Nisi prius are for the ease of the county, the parties, jurors, and witnesses, by saving them the charge and trouble of coming to Westminster; but in matters of great weight and difficulty, the judges above, upon motion, will retain causes to be tried there; though laid in the country, and then the juries and witnesses in such causes must come up to the courts at Westminster for trial at bar: and the King hath his election to try his suits at the bar, or in the county, &c. Wood's Inst. 479.

The statute of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. st. 1. c. 30, having ordained, "that all pleas in either bench, which require only an easy examination, shall be determined in the country before justices of assise, by virtue of the writ appointed by that statute, commonly called the writ of Nisi prius;" it has been held, that an issue joined in the King's Bench upon an indictment or appeal, whether for treason or felony, or a crime of an inferior nature, committed in a different county from that wherein the Court sits, may be tried in the proper county by writ of Nisi prius: but as the King is not expresly named in this statute, and it is a general rule, that he shall not be bound except named, it is said, where the King is party, a Nisi prius ought not to be granted, without his special warrant, or the assent of his attorney; though the Court may grant it in appeals in the same manner as any other actions. 2 Inst. 424: 4 Inst. 160: Dyer 46: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 42. §§ 2, 3.

Justices of Nisi prius have power to record nonsuits and defaults in the country at the days assigned; and are to report them at the bench, &c. And are to hear and determine conspiracy, confederacy, champerty, &c. Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 11: Nisi prius shall be granted in attaints; but that which cannot be determined before the justices upon the Nisi prius, shall be adjourned to the bench where they are justices: and the justices before whom inquisitions, inquests, and juries, shall be taken by the King's writ of Nisi prius, are empowered to give judgment in felony and treason, &c. and to award execution by force of their judgment. Stats. 5 Ed. 3. c. 11: 14 Hen. 6. c. 1.

It was held by Hale, that the justices of Nisi prius have not any original power of determining felony, without special commission for that purpose; and by virtue of stats. 27 Ed. 1. st. 1. c. 3: 14 H. 6. c. 1, they have authority to determine such felonies only as are sent down to be tried before them; in which case, on removal of the indictments, they may proceed to trial and judgment as if Justices of gaol-delivery. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 41.

By stat. 18 Eliz. c. 12, the Chief Justice of the King's Bench, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and in their absence two other of the Judges, &c. as Justices of Nisi prius for the county of Middlesex, shall try causes upon writs of Nisi prius on issues joined in B. R. and C. B. and the Exchequer, which were formerly only triable at bar, in the term time or four days after each term. And by stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 31, the time is enlarged to eight days (and by stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 18, to fourteen days) after the end of any term; also any one judge or baron may try such issues, in the absence of the chiefs; and all Sheriffs, officers, parties, and witnesses are required to give attendance, &c. The authority of justices of Nisi prius in the country, is annexed to the justices of assise; and the Court above will take judicial notice of what is done at Nisi prius; being entered on record. See this Dictionary, titles Assise; Justices of Assise; Circuits; Trial; Jury, &c.

NIVICOLINI BRITONES, Welshmen; because in Caermarthenshire and other Northern counties of Wales, they lived near high mountains covered with snow. Du Cange: Cowel.

NOBILITY, nobilitas.] Compriseth all degrees of dignity above a Knight; under which latter term is included a Baronet; so that a baron is the lowest order of nobility: it is derived from the King, and may by him be granted by patent in fee, for life, &c. See title Peers of the Realm.

NOBLE, An ancient kind of English money in use in England in the time of Edward III. Knighton says, the Rose Noble

Noble was a gold coin current in England about the year 1344. A Noble is now valued at 6*s.* 8*d.* but we have no peculiar coin of that name. From the treaty of peace between John, King of France, and Edward III. A. D. 1360, the Noble was valued as equal to two French gold crowns.

NOCTANTER, By night; In the Night-time.] The name of a writ issuing out of the Chancery and returnable in the King's Bench, given by stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 46. By virtue of which statute, in case any one having right to approve waste ground, &c. doth raise and levy a ditch or hedge, and it is thrown down in the night time, and it cannot be known by a verdict of the assise or a jury by whom; or if the neighbouring towns will not indict such as are guilty, they shall be distrained to make again the hedge or ditch at their own costs, and to answer damages. 2 Inst. 476. And the Noctanter writ thereupon is directed to the Sheriff of the county to make inquisition relative thereto. On the return of this writ by the Sheriff, that the same is found by inquisition, and that the jury are ignorant who did it, the return being filed in the Crown-office, there goes out a writ of inquiry of damages, and a distringas to the Sheriff to distrain the circumadjacent vills, to repair the hedges and fences so destroyed at their own charge, and also to restore the damages, &c.

The circumadjacent vills intended by the statute are the contiguous vills round the place; and if they are not contiguous, they are not guilty, and may plead so; and when other vills near, of as great value, by favour or negligence of the Sheriff, are not summoned, &c. they may plead as tenants do, where all are not summoned. As to the pleadings to this writ; where more damages are found than there ought to be, the defendant may by protestation deny the fact, or confess, and aver that the damages were but small; and traverse that the party sustained damages to the sum found, or any other sum beyond what they admit; or may plead Not guilty, and give in evidence any matter which will be a bar to the prosecutor, but satisfaction. 2 Lil. Abr. 227.

Here if the vills repair, damages ought not to be given to the value of the repairs; and if the vills which are liable thereto have repaired, it ought so far to help them in the trial of the quantum damnificatus, that the other damages ought only to be considered. Ibid.

The charges for the defence of the several vills must be raised by agreement: and if they cannot agree, each vill is to bear their own charges, as in case of a suit against a hundred, till execution; and then the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13, hath provided a remedy.

The writ of Noctanter, by the better opinion, lies for the prostration as well of all inclosures as those improved out of Commons; but if it be not in the night, this writ will not lie; and there ought to be a convenient time (which the Court is to judge of) before the writ is brought for the country to inquire of, and indict the offenders; which Coke says should be a year and a day. 2 Inst. 476. See Cro. Car. 440: 1 Keb. 845. And if any one of the offenders be indicted, the defendants must plead it, &c.

The words, in the night-time, are so necessary in an indictment of burglary, that it hath been adjudged insufficient without it. Cro. Eliz. 483. See title Burglary.

NOCTES ET NOCTEM DE FIRMA. In the book of Domesday we often meet with Tot noctes de firma, or firma tot noctium; which is understood of entertainment of meat and drink for so many nights; for in the time of the English Saxons, time was computed not by days, but nights; and so it continued till the reign of King Hen. I. as appears by his laws, c. 66, 76. And hence it is still usual to say a sevennight, i. e. septem Noctes, for a week; and a fortnight for two weeks, i. e. quatuordecim Noctes.

NODFYRS, or NEDFRI, Sax.] Spelman says this word is derived from the old Saxon neod, obsequium, and fry, ignis, and signified fires made in honour of the heathen deities. But by others it is said to come from the Saxon neb, that is necessary; and was used for the necessary fire.

NOLLE PROSEQUI, Is used in the law, where a plaintiff in any action will not proceed any further; and may be before or after verdict, though it is usually before; and it is then stronger against the plaintiff than a nonsuit, which is only a default in appearance; but this is a voluntary acknowledgment, that he hath no cause of action. 2 Lil. 218.

A Nolle prosequi is an acknowledgment or agreement by the plaintiff, that he will not further prosecute his suit as to the whole or a part of the cause of action; or where there are several defendants against some or one of them; and it is in nature of a retraxit operating as a release or perpetual bar. Tidd. Pract. K. B. cites Cro. Car. 239, 243: 2 Rol. Ab. 100: Hard. 153: 8 Co. 58: Cro. Jac. 211.

On a plea of coverture, &c. if the plaintiff cannot answer it, he may enter a Nolle prosequi as to the whole cause of action, but the defendant in such case is entitled to costs, under stat. 8 Eliz. c. 2. § 2: 3 T. R. 511.—So if the defendant demur to one of several counts of a declaration, the plaintiff may enter a Nolle prosequi as to that count which is demurred to, and proceed to trial upon the other counts. 2 Salk. 456. Or if judgment be given for him on demurrer, he may enter a Nolle prosequi as to the issue, and proceed to a writ of inquiry on the demurrer. 1 Salk. 219: 2 Salk. 456: 1 Str. 532, 574. But after a demurrer for misjoinder, the plaintiff cannot cure it by entering a Nolle prosequi. 1 H. Bl. 108. And after demurrer to a declaration, consisting of two counts against two defendants, because one of them was not named in the last count, the plaintiff cannot enter a Nolle prosequi on that count, and proceed on the other. 4 T. R. 360.

If there be a demurrer to part, and an issue upon other part, and the plaintiff prevails upon the demurrer, it was in one case holden, that without a Nolle prosequi as to the issue, he cannot have a writ of inquiry on the demurrer; because on the trial of the issue, the same jury will ascertain the damages for that part which is demurred to. 1 Salk. 219: 12 Mod. 558. But in a subsequent case, where the declaration consisted of four counts, to three of which there was a plea of non assumpsit, and a demurrer to the fourth; and after judgment on the demurrer, the plaintiff took out a writ of inquiry and executed it; this was moved to be set aside, there being no Nolle prosequi on the roll; and it was insisted, that the plaintiff ought to take out a venire, as well to try the issue, as to inquire of the damages damages upon the demurrer; sed per Curiam, that is, indeed, the course where the issues are carried down to trial, before the demurrer is determined, and in that case the jury give contingent damages; but here the demurrer being determined, and the plaintiff being able to recover all he goes for, upon that count, there is no reason why we should force him to carry down the record to nisi prius, and as to the want of a Nolle prosequi upon the roll, he may supply that when he comes to enter the final judgment; if not, you will have the advantage of it upon a writ of error. The judgment upon the inquiry must stand. 1 Stra 532: 8 Mod. 108.

In trespass or other action for a wrong, against several defendants, the plaintiff may, at any time before final judgment enter a Nolle prosequi as to one defendant, and proceed against the others: Hob. 70: Cro. Car. 239: 243: 2 Rol. Abr. 100: 2 Salk. 55, 6, 7: 3 Salk. 244, 5: 1 Wils. 306: so in assumpsit, or other action upon contract, against several defendants, one of whom pleads bankruptcy, or other matter in his personal discharge, the plaintiff may enter a Nolle prosequi as to him, and proceed against the other defendants. 1 Wils. 89. But a Nolle prosequi cannot be entered as to one defendant, after final judgment against the others. 2 Salk. 455. And it seems that in assumpsit, or other action upon contract, against several defendants, the plaintiff cannot enter a Nolle prosequi as to one, unless it be for some matter operating in his personal discharge, without releasing the others. 1 Wils. 89. See Tidd's Pract. K. B.

A plaintiff comes by his attorney hic in curiam & fatetur se ulterius Nolle prosequi; whereupon judgment was given, that the defendant eat sine die, and no amercement upon the plaintiff; this was held erroneous; for the plaintiff ought also to be amerced. 8 Rep. 58. But later determinations have settled that in entering a Nolle prosequi the plaintiff need not be amerced pro falso clamore, but it is sufficient that the defendant be put without day. 1 Stra. 574.

Where there are two defendants, and one pleads not guilty, and the other another plea; if on demurrer there is judgment for the plaintiff against one on the demurrer, and a Nolle prosequi for the other, there it ought to be eat sine die, or it is ill, and the entry of quod eat sine die is a discharge to the defendant. Cro. Jac. 439: Hob. 180.

In trespass against two, one pleaded not guilty, the other justified; and both issues being found for the plaintiff, and several damages and joint costs assessed; the plaintiff then entered a Nolle prosequi against one, and took judgment against the other for damages found against him, and the costs; upon which it was insisted on for error, that the entry of a Nolle prosequi before judgment as to one, is a release to him, and quasi a release to both; per Cur. it is not an absolute release, but as it were an agreement that the plaintiff will not proceed against the one; and as to him it is a bar, but he may proceed against the other; and where they sever by pleas, there may be proceedings against one, and a Nolle prosequi against the other. Cro. Car. 239, 243; 2 Lil. 220. It has been held, in trespass against three defendants; if a Nolle prosequi were entered against two, before judgment against any of them, it had not amounted to a release to them all; only to a waiver of suit: and the three defendants cannot join in a writ of error; for those against whom the Nolle prosequi is entered are not damnified. Jenk. Cent 309.

A Nolle prosequi does not amount to a retraxit or release, where there are more defendants. Ld. Raym. 599.

The King may, by his attorney general, enter a Nolle prosequi on an information; but it shall not stop the proceedings of the informer. 1 Leon. 119. But the clerk of the Crown cannot enter a Nolle prosequi on an indictment, without leave of the attorney general. Ld Raym. 721. And if an informer cause a Nolle prosequi to be entered, the defendant shall have costs, &c. by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. See title Costs. Keble mentions a Nolle prosequi on retraxit by attorney. 3 Keb. 332.

Where in an action against several defendants the jury by mistake have assessed several damages, the plaintiff may cure it by entering a Nolle prosequi as to one of the defendants, and taking judgment against the others. 11 Co. 5: Cro. Car. 239, 243: Carth. 19.

Where there are several defendants, and they sever in plea, whereupon issue is joined, the plaintiff may enter a Nolle prosequi as to one defendant at any time before the record is sent down to be tried at nisi prius. 2 Rol. Ab. 100: Salk. 457.—See title Nonsuit.

NOMENCLATOR, One who opens the etymologies of names, interpreted Thesaurarius. Spelman: Cowell.

NOMINATION, nominatio.] Is the power (by virtue of some manor or otherwise) of appointing a clerk to a patron of a benefice, by him to be presented to the Ordinary. The right of Nomination a man may have by deed; and in such case, if the patron refuse to present the nominee, or presents another, he may bring a quare impedit; for he who is to present, is only an instrument to him who nominates; and the person who hath the Nomination is in effect the patron of the church. Plowd. 529: Moor 47. A nominator must appoint his clerk within six months after avoidance; if he doth not, and the patron presents his clerk before the bishop hath taken any benefit of the lapse, he is obliged to admit that clerk. But where one hath the Nomination, and another the presentation, if the right of presentation should afterwards come to the King, it is said he who hath the Nomination will be entitled to the presentation also; because the King who should present cannot be subservient to the nominator, being contrary to his dignity. Hughes's Pars. Law 76, 77. Right of Nomination may be forfeited to the Crown as well as presentation; where the nominator corruptly agrees to nominate, within the statute of Simony, &c. See title Advowson.

NOMINA VILLARUM. Edw. II. in the 9th of his reign, sent his letters to every Sheriff in England, requiring an exact account and return into the Exchequer of the names of all the villages, and possessors thereof in every county, which being done accordingly, the returns of the Sheriffs all joined together are called Nomina villarum, still remaining in the Exchequer, Anno 9 Ed. 2.

NOMINE PŒNÆ, A penalty incurred for not paying rent, &c. at the day appointed by the lease or agreement for payment thereof. 2 Lil. 221. If rent is reserved, and there is a Nomine pœnæ on the non-payment of it, and the rent be behind and unpaid, there must be an actual demand thereof made, before the grantee of the rent can distrain for it; the Nomine pœnæ being of of the same nature as the rent, and issuing out of the land out of which the rent doth issue. Hob. 82, 133. And where a rent-charge was granted for years, with a Nomine pœnæ and clause of distress, if it was not paid on the day; on the rent's being behind, and the term expired, the Court was moved that the grantee might distrain for the Nomine pœnæ; but it was held that he could not, because the Nomine pœnæ depended on the rent, and the distress was gone for that, and by consequence for the other. 2 Nels. Abr. 1182. See stat. 8 Ann. c. 14.

When any sum Nomine pœnæ is to be forfeited for non-payment of the rent at the time, &c. the demand of the rent ought to be precisely at the day, in respect of the penalty; and debt will not lie on a Nomine pœnæ, without a demand. 7 Rep. 28: Cro. Eliz. 383: Style 4. If there is a Nomine pœnæ of such a sum for every day after rent becomes due, it has been a question whether there must be a demand for every day's Nomine pœnæ, or one demand for many days. And by the better opinion it hath been holden, that for every day there ought to be a demand; and that one will not be sufficient for the whole; but where a Nomine pœnæ of forty shillings was limited quolibet die proximo the feast-day on which the rent ought to be paid, it was adjudged, that there was but one forty shillings forfeited, because the word proximo must relate to the very next day following the rent day; so likewise when the rent became due and unpaid at the next rent day after that, and so on. Palm. 207: 2 Nels. 1182. An assignee is chargeable with a Nomine pœnæ incurred after the assignment, but not before. Moor 357: 2 Lil. Abr. 221. Though forfeiture is mentioned to be Nomine pœnæ, or not paying of a collateral sum, it is no Nomine pœnæ, if it be not of a rent. Lutw. 1156. See this Dictionary, title Distress III.

NON-ABILITY, Is an exception taken against the plaintiff in a cause, upon some just ground, why he cannot commence any suit in law; as præmunire, outlawry, excommunication, &c. F. N. B. 35, 65. See titles Disability; Abatement.

NONÆ ET DECIMÆ, Payments made to the church by those who were tenants of church farms; where Nonæ was a rent or duty for things belonging to husbandry, and Decimæ were claimed in right of the church. Formerly a ninth part of moveable goods was paid to the clergy on the death of persons in their parish, which was called Nonagium, and claimed on pretence of being distributed to pious uses. Blount.

NON-AGE, In general understanding, is all the time of a person's being under the age of 21: and in a special sense, where one is under 14 as to marriage, &c. See titles Age; Infant.

NON ASSUMPSIT. The general issue in an action of Assumpsit, whereby a man denies that he made any promise. See titles Issue; Pleading.

NON ASSUMPSIT INFRA SEX ANNOS. Where a defendant by virtue of the statute of limitations, stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, pleads that he did not undertake or promise within 6 years before the commencement of the action; as a plea of actio non accrevit infra sex annos is pleaded by virtue of the same statute. This last plea is proper where the cause of action does not accrue, at the time of the promise made, as in the case of a note, payable at some time specified, but subsequent to the date. See title Limitation of Actions.

NON-CLAIM, Is an omission or neglect of one that claims not within the time limited by law, as within a year and a day where a continual claim ought to be made, or in 5 years after a fine levied, &c. by which a man may be barred of his right of entry. See stats. 4 H. 7. c. 24: 32 H. 8. c. 33; and this Dictionary, titles Claim; Entry.

NON COMPOS MENTIS, One not of sound mind, memory, and understanding: See this Dictionary, title Idiots and Lunaticks.

NON-CONFORMISTS, Persons not conforming to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England as by law established. The stats. 1 Eliz. c. 2: 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4, were made for the uniformity of Common Prayer and service in the church; but see stat. 10 Ann. c. 2, under title Dissenters. Non-conformists to be punished by imprisonment, and to submit in three months, or to abjure the realm; and keeping a Non-conformist in the house after notice, subjected the offender to the penalty of 10*l.* a month. Stat. 35 Eliz. c. 1. Penalties on being at conventicles. Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 1. See further this Dictionary, title Dissenters. In addition to what is said there, the following deserves the notice of the Student:

Toleration of the Episcopal communion in Scotland, stat. 10 Ann. c. 7. Episcopal meeting-houses in Scotland to be registered; and a penalty imposed on unqualified ministers officiating in Scotland. Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 38. Episcopal ministers in Scotland to be ordained by a bishop of England or Ireland. Ib. & stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 34. Peers and others present at unlawful meeting-houses in Scotland disqualified from voting. Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 38. A form of affirmation to be taken instead of an oath by the members of the Unitas fratrum; and privileges granted to the members thereof who should settle in America. Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 30.

This seems the properest place to notice those statutes which are usually known by the name of the Corporation Act and Test Act; as to the true policy or propriety of which any discussion is not here by any means called for.

By the CORPORATION ACT, stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 1, No person can be legally elected to any office relating to the government of any city or corporation, unless, within one year before, he has received the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, according to the rites of the church of England; and he is also enjoined to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy at the same time that he takes the oath of office, or, in default of either of these requisites, such election shall be void. By stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 6, however, no person shall be removed from a corporate office to which he has been duly elected, or otherwise prosecuted for his omission to take the sacrament, nor incur any incapacity or penalty, unless such person be so removed, or the prosecution commenced within six months after his being elected into the office. See title Nonjurors.

By the TEST ACT, stat. 25 Ch. 2. c. 2, all officers civil and military, and persons having places of trust under his Majesty in England, Wales, Berwick, Jersey, or Guernsey, or in the navy, are directed to take the oath, and make the declaration against transubstantiation in the Court of King's Bench or Chancery, the next term, or at the next quarter sessions; or by substitutes within six months after their admission; and also within the same time time to receive the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, according to the usage of the Church of England, in some public church immediately after divine service and sermon; and to deliver into Court a certificate thereof signed by the minister and churchwarden; and also to prove the same by two credible witnesses; upon forfeiture of 500*l.* and disability to hold the office.

It is to be observed, that the Toleration Act, stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 18. (see title Dissenters), though it exempts Dissenters and others from certain penalties, does not dispense either with the Test or Corporation Acts as far as they impose the obligation of receiving the sacrament on persons serving in offices or corporations. See further as connected with this subject, title Papists.

NON-DAMNIFICATUS, A plea to an action of debt upon bond, with condition to save the plaintiff harmless. 2 Lil. Abr. 224. If the condition of a bond be to save harmless only, Non damnificatus generally is a good plea; but if it be to discharge the plaintiff, &c. then the manner of the discharge is to be shewn. 1 Leon. 72. When one pleads a discharge, and that he saved another harmless, he ought to shew how he did it, that the Court may judge thereof; though a defendant may plead Non damnificatus, without shewing it; because he pleads in the negative, and then the other party shall shew damnification. Cro. Jac. 363: 2 Rep. 3, 4: March 121. It has been adjudged, where a condition of a bond is to save harmless from all suits in general, Non damnificatus may be pleaded; and if it is in a particular suit or thing, there the defendant must set forth how he hath saved harmless and discharged; but where a suit is upon a counter-bond, the plea of Non damnificatus is good. 17 Mod. 243. See title Pleading.

NON DECIMANDO, A custom or prescription, De Non Decimando is to be discharged of all tithes, &c. See Modus Decimandi; Tithes.

NON DISTRINGENDO, A writ not to distrain, used in divers cases. Table of Reg. of Writs.

NONES, nonæ.] So called from their beginning the ninth day before the Ides. The seventh day of March, May, July, and October; and the fifth day of all the other months. By the Roman account the Nones in the aforementioned months are the six days next following the first day, or the calends; and of others the four days next after the first, according to these verses,

Sex Nonas, Maius, October, Julius, & Mars,
Quatuor at reliqui, &c.

Though the last of these days is properly called Nones; for the others are reckoned backwards as distant from them, and accounted the third, fourth, or fifth Nones. See Ides.

NON CULPABILIS; See Not guilty.

NON EST FACTUM, The general issue, in an action on bond or other deed, whereby the defendant denies that to be his deed whereon he is impleaded. Broke. In every case where a bond is void, the defendant may plead Non est factum. But when a bond is voidable only, he must shew the special matter, and conclude judgment, Si actio, &c. 2 Lil. 226.

This plea is good in all cases where the bond or specialty was not executed, or varies from the declaration. Com. Dig. title Pleader: 2 W. 18.

Under this plea the defendant may give in evidence that the deed was void ab initio; being obtained by fraud or made by a married woman, lunatick, &c. or that it became void after it was made, and before the commencement of the action, by erasure, alteration, cancelling, &c. or that it was delivered as an escrow to a third person. But he cannot give in evidence that the deed was voidable by infancy, duress per minas, &c.; or that it was void by statute, as by stat. 23 H 6. c. 9, relating to Sheriffs' bonds, or by the statutes against usury, gaming, &c. In these cases, therefore, the defendant must plead specially. So he must plead payment at or after the day, performance or any other matter in excuse of performance, as non damnificatus to a bond of indemnity, no award to an arbitration bond; or to a bail-bond no process to arrest a defendant, &c. See Tidd's Pract. K B. and the authorities there cited.

It ought to conclude to the country; but if the plaintiff pleads over to the special matter, it will be well. 1 Salk. 274.

A special Non est factum puts the proof upon the defendants, which, upon Non est factum generally, will be upon the plaintiff. Mod. Cas. 218.

If a deed is rased in a material part, by which it becomes void, the person bound by it may plead Non est factum, and give the matter in evidence, because it was not his deed at the time of the plea. 11 Rep. 27.

A bond was dated November the 10th, and so set forth in the plaintiff's declaration; the defendant pleaded Non est factum, and though it was found that it was not delivered till the 18th, the issue being upon a Non est factum, it appeared to be his deed: but it is said the defendant might have helped himself by pleading specially. Cro. Jac. 126.

The defendant pleads quod factum prædict. was made and delivered without a date, and that the plaintiff put a date to it, and so Non est factum; this was held naught upon a demurrer, for the defendant confesses the deed by saying factum prædict. and afterwards denies it; though he might have said generally, Non est factum. Cro. Eliz. 800. Where two are jointly bound in a bond, and an action is brought on it against one only, he cannot plead Non est factum, or demur in that case; but may have his plea in abatement of the writ. 5 Rep. 119. None but the party, his heirs, executors, &c. can plead Non est factum. Lutw. 662. For a stranger to the deed cannot plead a special Non est factum; but must say, nothing passed by the deed. 1 Rol. 188. See Com. Dig. title Pleading; and this Dictionary, titles Bond; Deed; Pleading.

NON EST INVENTUS, The Sheriff's return to a writ, when the defendant is not to be found in his bailiwick. And there is a return that the plaintiff non invenit plegium, on original writs. Shep. Epit. 1129.

NONFEASANCE, An offence of omission of what ought to be done; as in not coming to church, &c. which need not be alleged in any certain place; for generally speaking it is not committed any where. But Nonfeasance will not make a man a trespasser, &c. Hob. 251; 8 Rep. 146.

NON IMPLACITANDO ALIQUEM DE LIBERO TENEMENTO SINE BREVI, A writ to prohibit bailiffs, &c. from distraining or impleading any man touching his freehold, without the King's writ. Reg. Orig. 171.

NON

NON INTROMITTENDO, QUANDO BREVE PRÆCIPE IN CAPITE SUBDOLE IMPETRATUR: Was a writ directed to the justices of the Bench, or in Eyre, commanding them not to give one, who had under colour of entitling the King to land, &c. as holding of him in capite, deceitfully obtained the writ called Præcipe in capite, any benefit thereof, but to put him to his writ of right. Reg. Orig. 4. This writ having dependence on the court of Wards, since taken away, is now disused.

NONJURORS, Persons who refuse to take the oaths to Government, who are liable to certain penalties; and those who deny that oaths are unlawful are for a third offence to abjure the realm, by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 1.—Parsons, vicars, &c. are to take the oaths, and give their assent to the declaration, stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4, or they shall not preach, under the penalty of forty pounds, &c. Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 2.—Ecclesiastical persons not taking the oaths on the Revolution, were rendered incapable to hold their livings: but the King was empowered to grant such of the nonjuring clergy as he thought fit, not above twelve, an allowance out of their ecclesiastical benefices for their subsistence, not exceeding a third part. Stat. 1 W. & M. sess 1. c. 8. Persons refusing the oaths, shall incur, forfeit, and suffer the penalties inflicted on Popish recusants, and the Court of Exchequer may issue out process against their lands, &c. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 27. See title Non-conformists; Oaths; Dissenters; Papists, &c.

Blackstone enumerates among the contempts to the King's title, the refusing or neglecting to take the oaths appointed by the statutes for the better securing the Government, and yet acting in a public office, place of trust, or other capacity for which the said oaths are required to be taken, viz. those of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, which must be taken within six calendar months after admission. The penalties for this contempt, inflicted by stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13, are very little if any thing short of those of a præmunire; being an incapacity to hold the said offices, or any other; to prosecute any suit; to be guardian or executor; to take any legacy or deed of gift; and to vote at any election for members of parliament; and after conviction the offender shall also forfeit 500*l.* to him or them that will sue for the same. Members on the foundation in any college of the two Universities, who by this statute are bound to take the oaths, must also register a certificate thereof in the college register within one month after: otherwise if the electors do not remove him and elect another within 12 months, or after, the King may nominate a person to succeed him, by his great seal or sign manual. Besides thus taking the oaths for offices, any two justices of the peace may by the same statute summon and tender the oaths to any person whom they shall suspect to be disaffected; and every person refusing the same, who is properly called a Nonjuror, shall be adjudged a Popish recusant convict, and subjected to the same penalties as such recusants; which in the end may amount to the alternative of abjuring the realm, or suffering death as a felon. 4 Comm. c. 9. p. 123, 4. But by stat. 31 Geo 3 c. 32. § 18, no person shall be summoned to take the oath of supremacy, or be prosecuted for not obeying such summons. This act was made expressly for the relief of the Roman Catholics, but does not appear to extend to repeal the provisions of stat. 1 Geo 1. c. 13: as to the oaths of allegiance and abjuration, as suggested by Mr. Christian in his note on 4 Comm. c. 8. p. 116.

NON MERCHANDIZANDO VICTUALIA, An ancient writ to justices of assise, to inquire whether the magistrates of such a town do sell victuals in gross, or by retail, during the time of their being in office, which is contrary to an obsolete statute; and to punish them if they do. Reg. Orig. 184.

NON MOLESTANDO, A writ that lies for a person who is molested contrary to the King's protection granted him. Reg. of Writs 184.

NON OBSTANTE, Notwithstanding.] Was a clause heretofore frequent in statutes and letters patent, and was a licence from the King to do a thing which at the common law might be lawfully done; but which being restrained by act of parliament, could not be done without such licence. Vaugh. 347: Plowd. 501. But this doctrine of Non obstante's, which sets the prerogative above the laws, was effectually demolished by the Bill of Rights at the Revolution, and abdicated at Westminster-Hall when King James abdicated the kingdom. 1 Comm. 342. See this Dictionary, titles King, V. 3; Grant of the King; Pardon; Mortmain.

The stat. 18 Eliz. c. 2, confirmed all grants of the Queen by letters patent, of any honours, castles, manors, lands, tenements, &c. and that they should stand and be good in law against the Queen, her heirs and successors, Non obstante any misnaming, misrecital, want of certainty, finding offices or inquisitions, livery of seisin, &c.

NON OMITTAS, A writ directed to the Sheriff, where the bailiff of a liberty or franchise who hath the return of writs refuses or neglects to serve a process, for the Sheriff to enter into the franchise and execute the King's process himself, or by his officer. Before this writ is granted, the Sheriff ought to return, that he hath sent to the bailiff, and that he hath not served the writ; but for dispatch, the usual practice is to send a Non omittas with a capias or latitat. F. N. B. 68, 74: 2 Inst. 453. If a Sheriff return that he sent the process to the bailiff of a liberty, who hath given him no answer; a Non omittas shall be awarded to the Sheriff. And if he returns that he sent the process to such bailiff, who hath returned a cepi corpus, or such like matter; and the bailiff bring not in the body, or money, &c. at the day, the bailiff shall be amerced, and a writ issue to the Sheriff to distrain the bailiff to bring in the body. 2 Hawk. P. C.

Writs of capias utlagatum, and of quo minus out of the Exchequer, and it is said all writs whatsoever at the King's suit, are of the same effect as a Non omittas; and the Sheriff may by virtue of them enter into a liberty and execute them. 2 Lil. Abr. 229. The Reg. of Writs mentions three sorts of this writ, given to prevent liberties being privileged to hinder or delay the general execution of justice; and the clause of the Non omittas is, quod non omittas, propter aliquam libertatem (viz. such liberty to which the Sheriff hath made a mandavi ballivo, qui nullum dedit responsum) quin in eam ingrediaris & capias A. B. &c.

NON PLEVIN, non plevina.] Is defined to be defalta post defaltam; and in Hengham Magna, cap. 8, it is said, that the defendant is to replevy his lands seised by the King within fifteen days; and if he neglects, then, at the instance of the plaintiff at the next court-day, he shall lose his seisin, sicut per defaltam post defaltam. But by statute it was enacted, that none should lose his land, because of non plevin, i. e. where the land was not replevied in due time. Stat. 9 Ed. 3. c. 2.

NON PONENDIS IN ASSISIS ET JURATIS. A writ granted for freeing and discharging persons from serving on assises and juries; and when one hath a charter of exemption, he may sue the Sheriff for returning him. This writ is founded on the stats. West. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 38: and Articuli super Chartas, 28 E. 1. st. 3. c. 9. See F. N B. 165: 2 Inst. 127, 447.

NON PROCEDENDO AD ASSISAM REGE INCONSULTO. A writ to stop the trial of a cause appertaining to one who is in the King's service, &c. until the King's pleasure be farther known. Reg. Orig. 220.

NON PROS. or NON PROSEQUITUR; See titles Nolle Prosequi; Nonsuit.

NON-RESIDENCE, The absence of spiritual persons from their benefices. See Residence.

NON RESIDENTIA PRO CLERICIS REGIS, A writ directed to the bishop, charging him not to molest a clerk, employed in the King's service, by reason of his Non-residence; in which case he is to be discharged. Reg. Orig. 58.

NON SANE MEMORY, Non sanæ Memoriæ.] Is used in law for an exception to an act, declared to be done by another, whereon the plaintiff in any action grounds his plaint; and the effect of it is, that the party who did that act was not well in his senses when he did it, or when he made his last will and testament. New Book of Entries. And sane Memory for the making of a will is not always where the testator can answer Yes or No, or in some things with sense; but he ought to have judgment to discern, and be of perfect Memory, or the will shall be void. Moor, c. 1051. See title Idiots and Lunaticks.

NONSENSE. Where a matter set forth is grammatically right, but absurd in the sense and unintelligible, some words cannot be rejected to make sense of the rest, but must be taken as they are; for there is nothing so absurd but what by rejecting may be made sense; but where the matter is nonsense by being contradictory and repugnant to somewhat precedent, there the precedent matter which is sense shall not be defeated by the repugnancy which follows, but that which is contradictory shall be rejected. As in ejectment where the declaration is of a demise the 2d of January, and that the defendant postea, to wit, on the 1st of January, ejected him; here the scilicet may be rejected, as being expresly contrary to the postea and the precedent matter; per Holt, Ch. J. 1 Salk. 324. But per Powel, J. Words unnecessary might in construction be omitted or rejected, though they are not repugnant or contradictory; but in cæteris omnibus agreed with the Ch. J. See titles Mistake; Amendment.

NON SOLVENDO PECUNIAM, AD QUAM CLERICUS MULCTATUR PRO NON RESIDENTIA. A writ prohibiting an Ordinary to take a pecuniary mulct, imposed on a clerk of the King's for non residence. Reg. of Writs, fol. 59.

NONSUIT.

NON EST PROSECUTUS.] A Renunciation of a suit by the plaintiff or demandant, most commonly upon the discovery of some error or defect, when the matter is so far proceeded in that the Jury is ready at the bar to deliver their verdict. The civilians term it Litis renunciationem. Cowell.

If the plaintiff in an action neglects to deliver a declaration for two terms after the defendant appears, or is guilty of other delays or defaults against the rules of law, in any subsequent stage of the action, he is adjudged not to follow or pursue his remedy as he ought to do; and thereupon a Nonsuit or Non prosequitur is entered, and he is said to be non-prossed. And for thus deserting his complaint, after making a false claim (pro falso clamore suo), he shall not only pay costs to the defendant, but is liable to be amerced to the King. A Nonsuit differs from a Retraxit, in that the former is negative, and the latter positive. The Nonsuit is a mere default and neglect of the plaintiff, and therefore he is allowed to begin his suit again upon payment of costs: but a Retraxit is an open and voluntary renunciation of his suit in Court, and by this he for ever loses his action. 3 Comm. c. 20. p. 295, 6.

Before the Jury gave their verdict on a trial, it was formerly usual to call or demand the plaintiff, in order to answer the amercement, to which by the old law he was liable, in case he failed in his suit. 3 Comm. 376. And it is now usual to call him, whenever he is unable to make out his case, either by reason of his not adducing any evidence in support of it, or any evidence arising in the proper county. The cases in which it is necessary that the evidence should arise in a particular county, are either where the action is in itself local, or made so by act of parliament, as in actions upon penal statutes, &c. or where upon a motion to change or retain the venue, the plaintiff undertakes to give material evidence in the county where the action was brought. 2 Black Rep. 1039. See titles Action; Venue. And there is this advantage attending a Nonsuit; that, as is already hinted, the plaintiff, though he pays costs, may afterwards bring another action for the same cause; which he cannot do, after a verdict against him. Tidd's Pract. K. B.

Further information on this subject may be thus arranged:

I. Who may be Nonsuit; in what action, and at what time, there may be a Nonsuit.

II. How far the Nonsuit of one shall be the Nonsuit of another; and how far a Nonsuit for part of the thing in demand shall be a Nonsuit for the whole.

III. Of the effect of a Nonsuit; and of its being a temporary bar.

IV. Of judgments as in case of a Nonsuit.

I. IT is agreed, that the King, being in supposition of law always present in Court, cannot be Nonsuit in any information or action wherein he is sole plaintiff; but it is held, that any informer qui tam, or plaintiff in a popular action, may be Nonsuit, as well in respect of the King as of himself. Bro. Nonsuit, 68: Co. Lit. 139, b: 2 Roll. Abr. 131.

If an infant bring an assise by guardian, although the infant disavow the suit in proper person, yet no Nonsuit shall be awarded. 39 Ass. pl. 1: 2 Roll. Abr. 130.

Where an executor need not name himself executor, he shall pay costs upon a Nonsuit, and the naming himself executor shall not exempt him from it. 6 Mod. 181. See title Executor. VI. 2.

If an attorney of the Common Pleas sues an action there, he shall not be demanded, because he is supposed always present aiding the Court. 2 H. 6. 44. b: 1 Roll. Abr. 581. Sed qu. as to this doctrine? In many cases it is the interest of the plaintiff to be Nonsuit, instead of having a verdict against him, as he may bring a new action, wherein, if properly advised and pursued, he may recover. J. M.

A person may be Nonsuit in a writ of error. 2 Roll. Abr. 130: 1 Sid. 255. So in a writ of false judgment. 20 H. 6. 18. b: 2 Roll. Abr. 130. S. C.

One cannot be Nonsuit in an action in which he is not an actor or demandant; and though he afterwards becomes an actor, yet not being originally so, he cannot be Nonsuit; as an avowant: so of garnishees who become actors, but were not so originally. 22 Ed 4. 10.

So if a person outlawed hath a charter of pardon, and sues a scire facias against the party, though hereby he is an actor, yet he cannot be Nonsuit. 2 Roll. Abr. 130.

So if a man traverse an office he cannot be Nonsuit, though he is an actor, for he hath no original pending against the King. 2 Roll. Abr. 130: Dyer 141. pl. 47. where it is made a quære.

But in a petition of right against the King, the plaintiff may be Nonsuit. 11 H. 4. 52: 2 Roll. Abr. 130.

So in an auditâ querelâ, to avoid a statute, the plaintiff may be Nonsuit, for he is plaintiff in this action. 47 Ed. 3. 5. b.

If to two nihils returned to a scire facias on a charter of pardon, the plaintiff does not appear, he shall be Nonsuit; for the statute ordains, that upon his appearing he ought to count against the defendant. 45 Ed. 3. 16.

At the common law, upon every continuance, or day given over before judgment, the plaintiff was demandable, and upon his non-appearance might have been Nonsuit. Co. Lit. 139. b. That if at common law he did not like the damages given by the jury, he might be Nonsuit, See 5 Mod. 208.

By now by stat. 2 Hen. 4. cap. 7, it is enacted in the words following: "Whereas, upon verdict found before any Justice in assise of novel disseisin, mort d'ancestor, or any other action whatsoever, the parties before this time have been adjourned upon difficulty in law, upon the matter so found; it is ordained and established, that if the verdict pass against the plaintiff, the same plaintiff shall not be nonsuited."

Notwithstanding this statute, it hath been held, that the plaintiff may be nonsuited after a special verdict, or after a demurrer and argument thereon. Co. Litt. 139: 2 Jon. 1: 2 Roll. Abr. 131-2: 3 Leon. 28: and see 2 Hawk. P C. c. 23. § 95.

If there be a judgment to account, and auditors assigned, and thereupon a capias ad computandum, the plaintiff cannot be nonsuited on the original, because the original is determined, by the judgment to account. 2 Roll. Abr. 131. See Co. Lit. 139. b.

A Nonsuit can only be at the instance of the defendant; and therefore where the cause, at nisi prius was called on, and jury sworn, but no counsel, attornies, parties, or witnesses appeared on either side, the judge held, that the only way was to discharge the jury; for nobody has a right to demand the plaintiff, but the defendant, and the defendant not demanding him, the Judge could not order him to be called. 1 Stra. 267: see also 2 Stra. 1117.

The plaintiff in no case is compellable to be nonsuited; and therefore, if he insist upon the matter being left to a jury, they must give in their verdict, which is general or special. If it be for the plaintiff, or for the defendant in replevin, the jury should regularly assess the damages; but when the plaintiff is nonsuited on the trial of an issue, he cannot have contingent damages assessed for him on a demurrer. 1 Stra. 507. Though when the plaintiff in replevin is nonsuited, the jury may assess damages for the defendant. Comb. 11: 5 Mod. 76: and see Tidd's Pract. K. B.

II. In real or mixt actions, the Nonsuit of one demandant is not the Nonsuit of both; but he who makes default shall be summoned and severed; but regularly, in personal actions, the Nonsuit of one is the Nonsuit of both. Co. Lit. 139: 2 Inst. 563: and vide 2 Roll. Abr. 132, several cases to this purpose.

But in personal actions brought by executors, there shall be summons and severance, because the best measure shall be taken for the benefit of the dead; and so it is in action of trespass, as executors for goods taken out of their own possession. Like law in account, as executors by the receipt of their own hands. Co. Lit. 139. a. See title Executors. VI. 2.

In an auditâ querelâ concerning the personalty, the Nonsuit of the one is not the Nonsuit of the other; because it goeth by way of discharge, and freeing themselves, therefore the default of the one shall not hurt the other. Co. Lit. 139. In an auditâ querelâ, scire facias, attaint, the Nonsuit of one shall not prejudice the other. 6 Co. 26.

In a quid juris clamat, the Nonsuit of the one is the Nonsuit of both; because the tenant cannot attorn according to the grant. Co. Lit. 139. a.

An appeal against divers, whether they plead the same or several issues, it hath been adjudged, that a Nonsuit against one, at the trial of any one of the issues, is a Nonsuit as to all, because a Nonsuit operates as a release of the whole. Cro. Eliz. 460. pl. 6: Dyer 120: 2 Roll. Abr. 133: 1 Sid. 378.

A latitat was sued out against four defendants in trespass, the plaintiff was Nonsuit for want of a declaration, and the defendant's attorney entered four Nonsuits against him; and it was held to be irregular, because the trespass is joint; and though the plaintiff may count severally against the defendants, yet it remains joint till severed by the count. 2 Salk. 455. There is a Nonsuit before appearance at the return of the writ, or after appearance at some day of continuance. Co. Lit. 138. b.

In an action against several defendants, the plaintiff must be nonsuited as to all, or to none of them: and therefore, if one of two defendants suffer judgment by default, and the other go to trial, the plaintiff cannot be nonsuited as to him; but such defendant must have a verdict, if the plaintiff fail to make out his case. 3 Term Rep. 662.

It is laid down as a general rule, that a Nonsuit for part is a Nonsuit for the whole: but it hath been held, that if a defendant plead to one part, and thereupon issue is joined, and demur to the other, the plaintiff may be Nonsuit as to one part, and proceed for the other. 2 Leon. 177: Hob. 180.

If in debt the defendant acknowledges the action as to part, and joins issue as to the residue, and the plaintiff hath judgment for that which is confessed; but there is a cessat executio, by reason of the damages to be assessed by the jury; if the plaintiff be nonsuited in this issue, this shall be a Nonsuit, for the damages to be given, because that he had judgment. 2 Roll. Abr. 134.

If in trover the defendant pleads, that as to some of the goods they were fixed to his freehold, as to others that he had them of the gift of the plaintiff, and as to the rest not guilty: and as to the first, the plaintiff enters non vult ulterius prosequi; this amounts only to a retraxit, and is no Nonsuit, so as to bar the plaintiff from proceeding on the other parts of the plea, on the rule, that a Nonsuit for part is a Nonsuit for the whole. 2 Leon. 177.

III. A Nonsuit, as hath been observed, is regularly no peremptory bar; but the plaintiff may, notwithstanding, commence any new action of the same or like nature: but this general rule hath the following exceptions:

1. It is peremptory in a quare impedit; and in that action a discontinuance is also peremptory; and the reason is, for that the defendant had, by judgment of the Court, a writ to the bishop; and the incumbent, that cometh in by that writ, shall never be removed; which is a flat bar to that presentation.

2. Nonsuit in an appeal of murder, rape, robbery, &c. after appearance, is peremptory, and this in favorem vitæ; but the Nonsuit of the plaintiff in an appeal is not such an acquittal, on which the defendant shall recover damages against the abettors, by stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 12; unless after the Nonsuit, he were arraigned at the King's suit, and acquitted.

3. So if the plaintiff, in an appeal of maihem, be Nonsuit after appearance, it is peremptory; for the words therein are felonicè maihemavit.

4. A Nonsuit after appearance is also peremptory in a writ of nativo habendo, and the Nonsuit of one plaintiff in that action nonsuits both, in favorem libertatis; for in a libertate probandâ such Nonsuit is not peremptory, neither is the Nonsuit of one plaintiff the Nonsuit of both. Co. Lit. 139. a: Cro. Eliz. 881.

5. Such Nonsuit is also peremptory in an attaint, but a discontinuance in an attaint is not; because there is a judgment given upon the Nonsuit, but not upon the discontinuance. Co. Lit. 139. a.

IV. The delay and expence attending the trial by proviso, (see this Dictionary, title Trial,) gave rise to the statute, 14 Geo. 2. c. 17, by which it is enacted, "That where any issue is joined in an action in the Courts of Record at Westminster, and the plaintiff hath neglected to bring such issue on to be tried, according to the course and practice of the said Courts, the Judges of the said Courts respectively may, at any time after such neglect, upon motion in open Court (due notice having been given thereof), give the like judgment for the defendant as in cases of Nonsuit; unless the said Court shall, upon just cause and reasonable terms, allow any further time for the trial of such issue; and if the plaintiff shall neglect to try such issue within the time so allowed, then and in every such case the said Court shall proceed to give such judgment as aforesaid. Provided, that all judgments given by virtue of this act shall be of the like force and effect as judgments upon Nonsuit, and of no other force or effect. Provided also, that the defendants shall, upon such judgment, be awarded their costs, in any action or suit, where they would upon Nonsuit be entitled to the same."

This statute has been held to extend to qui tam actions, as well as others. Barnes 315. And also to a traverse of the return of a mandamus. Say. Rep. 110: Say. Costs 166: 4 T. R. 689. But it does not extend, any more than the trial by proviso, to actions of replevin, &c. in which the defendant is considered as an actor, and may therefore enter the issue, and carry down the cause to trial himself. 1 Black. Rep. 375: Say. Costs 168: 3 T. R. 661: 5 T. R. 400: but see Barnes 317. And where there are two defendants, one of whom lets judgment go by default, the other cannot have judgment as in case of a Nonsuit. Say. Rep. 22, 103: Say. Costs 163, 4, 8: 1 Wils. 325: 1 Burr. 358. Also where the cause has been once carried down to trial, the defendant cannot have such judgment for not carrying it down again. 1 T. R. 492: 3 T. R. 1: 1 H. Black. 101.

The course and practice of the Court, referred to by the statute, is that which before regulated the trial by proviso (see this Dictionary, title Trial); and as the defendant could not have such trial until the plaintiff had been guilty of laches, nor until after the issue was entered on record, so neither till then is he entitled to judgment as in case of a Nonsuit. If the action be laid in London or Middlesex, the defendant ought not to give a rule for the plaintiff to enter his issue the same term in which it is joined, unless notice of trial hath been given; and accordingly it is held, that in a town cause, unless notice of trial has been given, the defendant cannot move for judgment as in case of a Nonsuit, the next term after that in which issue was joined, although it was joined early enough to enable the plaintiff to give notice of trial for the sittings after that term; the plaintiff in such case having the whole of the next term to enter the issue, and no laches can be imputed to him till the term after. 4 T. R. 557: 1 H. Black 65, contra: and see 1 H. Black. 123, 282. But if notice of trial has been given, in a town cause, for a sitting in term, the plaintiff may move for judgment as in case of a Nonsuit the next term, being the term after that in which the issue ought to be entered. To support a rule for judgment as in case of a Nonsuit in the next term after that in which issue was joined, the affidavit must state that notice of trial was given for a sitting in the preceding term; but, in the third or other subsequent term, a general affidavit, stating the term when the issue was joined, is deemed sufficient. 1 H. Black. 282. In a country cause, where notice of trial is given for the assises, the defendant may move for judgment as in case of a Nonsuit the next term; but the plaintiff is not bound to give notice of trial, till the term succeeding that in which issue was joined. And if he do not, the plaintiff cannot move for judgment as in case of a Nonsuit till after the next assises. 2 Term. Rep. 734.

The rule for judgment as in case of a Nonsuit is a rule to shew cause, founded on an affidavit of the state of the proceedings, and of the plaintiff's default in not proceeding to trial; which rule has been held sufficient notice of motion within the act. Lofft. 265: 1 H. Black. 517, contra. And the roll must be in Court at the time the motion is made. This rule is made absolute of course, on an affidavit of service, unless the plaintiff shew some cause to the contrary; as the absence of a material witness, &c. But a slight cause in general is deemed sufficient, if the plaintiff will undertake peremptorily to try at the next sittings or assises. The insolvency of the defendant, after the action brought, is good cause against judgment as in case of a Nonsuit. Doug. 671. But unless the plaintiff will consent to stay all further proceedings, and enter a cesset processus, the Court will bind him down to a peremptory undertaking. Where the rule to shew cause was discharged, on an affidavit which contained an answer false in itself, the Court would not afterwards open the matter, on an affidavit which disproved the contents of the former one. 3 T. R. 405. See Tidd's Pract. K. B.

NON SUM INFORMATUS. A formal answer made of course by an attorney, that he is not instructed or informed to say any thing material in defence of his client; by which he is deemed to leave it undefended, and so judgment passeth against his client. See title Judgments acknowledged for Debts.

NON-TENURE. A plea in bar to a real action, by saying, that he (the defendant) holdeth not the land mentioned in the plaintiff's count or declaration, or at least some part thereof. See stat. 25 E. 3. c. 16: 1 Mod. Rep 250. And our books mention Non-tenure general and special: general, where one denies ever to have been tenant of the land in question; and special is an exception, alleging that he was not tenant on the day whereon the writ was purchased. West. Symb. par. 2. When the tenant or defendant pleads Non-tenure of the whole, he need not say who is tenant; but if he pleads Non-tenure as to part, he must set forth who is the tenant. 1 Mod. 181. Non-tenure in part, or in the whole, is not pleadable after imparlance. 3 Lev. 55. See title Pleading.

NON-TERM, non terminus.] The vacation between term and term; formerly called the time or days of the King's peace. Lamb. Archa. 126.

NON-USER, Of offices concerning the publick, is cause of forfeiture. 9 Rep. 50. And if one have a franchise, and do not use it, he shall forfeit the same; which likewise may be lost by default, as well as Non-user. See titles Office; Condition I. 1.

NOOK OF LAND, nocata terræ.] In an old deed of Sir Walter de Pedwardyn, twelve acres and a half of land were called a Nook of Land; but the quantity is generally uncertain. Dugd. Warwick. p. 665.

If one hath cause of justification in trespass, and plead Not Guilty, he cannot give the special matter in evidence, but must confess the fact, and plead the special matter, &c. 5 Rep. 119. Unless in some cases, provided for by statute; as in the case of justices of the peace, peace officers, churchwardens, and overseers of the poor, &c. See title Pleading.

NOTICE,

NOTICE, The making something known, that a man was or might be ignorant of before. And it produces divers effects; for by it the party who gives the same shall have some benefit, which otherwise he should not have had: by this means, the party to whom the Notice is given, is made subject to some action or charge, that otherwise he had not been liable to; and his estate in danger of prejudice. Co. Litt. 309.

Notice is required to be given in many cases by law, to justify proceedings where any thing is to be done or demanded, &c. But none is bound by law to give Notice to another person of that which such other may otherwise inform himself, except such Notice is directed by act of parliament.

If one be bound by an assumpsit generally to do a thing to another, he to whom the promise is made must give Notice when he will have him do it; but if he promise that another person shall do it, there he to whom the thing is to be done is not obliged to give Notice to that third person when he will have it done, but the party must procure it at his peril; for he may not know that other person, and there is no privity of contract between those two, as there is betwixt the other two. 2 Lill. Abr. 239. And in case of a promise, it has been adjudged, that where a penalty is to be recovered, Notice is requisite; but it is not so where damages are to be recovered; in which case the party hath sufficient Notice by the action brought. 1 Bulst. 12. If a person promise to pay so much to another at his day of marriage, the party at his peril is to take Notice of the marriage. Cro. Car. 34, 35. And it is a necessary intendment, that when after the marriage the plaintiff requested payment of the money, that Notice was given of the marriage. Cro. Jac. 228.

It was held, that if a collateral thing is to be done at or after marriage, there Notice is to be given of it; though when money is to be paid, it is a debt due to the party by the marriage, and may be recovered without any Notice given. 2 Bulst. 254. Notice must be given to an heir at law of a condition annexed to his estate; or he is not bound to take Notice of the condition. 1 Lutw. 809: 4 Rep. 82: 3 Mod. 28. Yet it is said, that the heir is bound to take Notice of a proviso in a feoffment; and this difference has been taken, that where Notice is required to be given by the original deed or agreement, it is hereditary, and descends to the heir; but if it is collateral to the father, it shall not bind his heir, without express Notice. Winch. 108: 2 Nelf. Abr. 1186. See title Condition.

A man who is a stranger to a deed, that hath an estate by way of remainder, &c. shall not forfeit or determine his estate by virtue of any proviso in such deed, unless he hath Notice of it. 8 Rep. 92. The feoffee of land, or bargainee of a reversion, shall not take advantage of a condition, for non-payment of rent reserved upon a lease, on demand made by them, without Notice thereof given to the lessee. 9 Rep. 31. See title Condition. If a manor be conveyed or granted away, by deed of bargain and sale, &c. to another, the present lord must give Notice of it to the copyholder; otherwise, if he deny to pay his rent, it will be no forfeiture. 5 Rep. 13. And copyholders shall not forfeit their estates for not appearing at the lord's court, if they have no Notice of the Court, &c. 1 Leon. 104.

In a covenant to make assurance generally, Notice must be given to the party to know what estate he would have made to him. Style 61. Where one is bound to another to make such an assurance as A. B. shall advise, the obligor is bound to make the assurance, without Notice that A. B. had advised it: but if he had been bound to make such assurance as the counsel of the obligee should advise, Notice ought to be given to the obligor, that the counsel of the obligee had advised it. 1 Leon. 105.

If I am bound to enfeoff such persons as the obligee should name, he is to give Notice of those which he names, or I am not bound to enfeoff them. 2 Danv. Abr. 105. And if the condition of an obligation be to account before such auditors as the obligee shall assign, and the obligee assigns auditors; he is to give Notice thereof to the obligor, or he will not be bound to account. Ibid. Notice is not to be given so strictly upon a covenant as upon a bond, which is on the point of forfeiture. Cro. Jac. 391. If the agreement be, that a person shall pay so much as A. B. hath paid, the defendant is to inquire of him, and the plaintiff is not bound to give Notice: but if the person or thing is altogether uncertain, the plaintiff, to entitle himself to an action, must give Notice. Cro. Jac. 432, 433.

If an act is to be done by a stranger, and not by the plaintiff, the cognizance thereof lies as well in the Notice of the defendant as of the plaintiff: therefore the plaintiff need not lay a Notice. Cro. Jac 492: Cro. Car. 132. If a thing lies in the knowledge of the plaintiff, there ought to be Notice given to the defendant, March 156: 4 Mod. 230. And when one may take Notice, and not the other; Notice is necessary. Latch. 15. It has been holden, that a defendant having undertaken to do a thing, undertakes to do all circumstances incident to the doing it, and that without Notice; but if he had been ignorant of the thing to be done, then Notice must be given. 2 Bulst. 143.

If one make a lease for years, with covenant that if the lessee, his executors and assigns, do not repair within six months after Notice given, the lease to be void; and the lessee makes a lease for part of his term to another, and then the house is decayed; in this case the Notice is to be given to the first lessee in person, and not to the under-tenant. 2 Cro. 9, 10. But see titles Covenant; Lease.

A Notice may not be pleaded to be given to executors, without averring the death of the testator. Hob. 93. In all writs of inquiry of damages, as well in real as personal actions, Notice must be given to the other party to the suit. March Rep. 82.

Notice is to be given of trials and motions; of a robbery committed, to recover against the hundred; of a prior mortgage, on making a second; of an assignment of a lease, to charge the assignee, only on acceptance of rent; in cases of distress for rent, according to the statute; and of avoidances of churches, by resignation, deprivation, &c. to the patron that he may present, &c. A month's Notice is also, by stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, to be given to a justice of peace, before commencement of an action against him for any thing done in the execution of his office. See this Dictionary, under titles Action; Award; Judgment; Motion; Trial; and other appropriate titles.

NOVALE, Land newly ploughed or converted into tillage, that had not been tilled within time of memory; and sometimes it is taken for ground which hath been ploughed for two years, and afterwards lies fallow for one year; or that which lies fallow every other year: it is called Novale, because the earth novâ culturâ proscinditur. *Cartular Abbat. de Furnesse in Com. NOVELLÆ. Those constitutions of the civil law, which were made after the publication of the Theodosian code, were called Novellæ by the Emperors who ordained them; but some writers call the Julian edition only by that name. See title Civil Law.

NOYLES. By stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 18, no persons shall put any flocks, Noyles, thrums, &c. or other deceivable thing, into any broad woollen cloth.

NUCES COLLIGERE, To gather hazle-nuts; this was formerly one of the works, or services, imposed by lords upon their inferior tenants. Paroch. Antiq. 495.

NUDE CONTRACT, nudum pactum.] Is a bare naked contract, without a consideration. If a man bargains or sells goods, &c. and there is no recompence made or given for the doing thereof: as if one say to another, I sell you all my lands or goods, but nothing is agreed upon what the other shall give or pay for the same, so that there is not a quid pro quo of one thing for another; this is a Nude Contract, and void in law, and for the non-performance thereof, no action will lie; for the maxim of law is ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. Terms de Ley. The law, in fact, supposes error in making these contracts; they being as it were of one side only. See titles Assumpsit III.; Consideration.

NUDE MATTER, A bare allegation of a thing done, &c. See Matter.

NUL DISSEISIN, Plea of. A plea in real actions, that there was no disseisin, and is one species of the general issue. See titles Issue; Pleading.

NUL TIEL RECORD, The plea of a plaintiff that there is no such record, on the defendant's alleging matter of record, in bar of the plaintiff's action. See title Failure of Record. It is sometimes the plea of a defendant, as in action on a judgment, &c.

NUL TORT, Plea of. A plea in a real action, i. e. that no wrong was done, and is a species of the general issue. See title Pleading.

NULLUM ARBITRIUM, The usual plea of the defendant prosecuted on an arbitration bond, for not abiding by an award; that there was no award made. See title Award.

NULLITY, Is where a thing is null and void, or of no force. Litt. Dict. And there is a Nullity of marriage, where persons marry within the prohibited degrees, &c. See title Marriage.

NUMERUM, Civitas Cant Reddit 24*l. ad Numerum*, i. e. by number or tale, as we call it. Domesday.

NUMMATA, The price of any thing, generally by money; as denariata denoteth the price of a thing by computation of pence, and librata by computation of pounds.

NUMMATA TERRÆ, Is the same with denariatus terræ, and thought to contain an acre. Spelman.

NUMMUS, A piece of money or coin among the Romans; and it is a penny according to Matth. Westm. sub anno 1095.

NUN, nunna.] A consecrated virgin or woman who by vow hath bound herself to a single and chaste life, in some place or company of other women, separated from the world, and devoted to the service of God by prayer, fasting, and such like holy exercises; it is an Egyptian word, St. Jerome says.

NUNCIUS, A nuncio, or messenger, servant, &c. The Pope's nuncio was termed legatus pontificis; a Legate.

NUNCUPATIVE WILL; See Will.

NUPER OBIIT, Is a writ that lies for a sister and coheir, deforced by her coparcener of lands or tenements, whereof their father, brother, or any other common ancestor died seised of an estate in fee-simple; for if one sister deforce another of land held in fee-tail, her sister and coheir shall have a formedon against her, &c. and not a Nuper obiit; and where the ancestor, being once seised, died seised, not of the possession, but the reversion, in such a case a writ of rationabili parte lies. Reg. Orig. 226: F. N. B. 197: Terms de Ley: Finch. L. See title Assise of Mort d'Ancestor.

NURTURE, Guardian for, This is, of course, the father or mother, until the infant attains the age of fourteen years; and in default of father or mother, the Ordinary usually assigns some proper person. Co. Lit. 88: Moor 738: 3 Rep. 38: 2 Jones 90: 2 Lev. 163. See title Guardian.

NUSANCE.

NOCUMENTUM, from the Fr. nuire, i. e. nocere.] Annoyance; any thing that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage.

Nusances are of two kinds; public or common, which affect the public, and are an annoyance to all the King's Subjects; and private Nusances, which may be defined, to be any thing done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another. Finch. L. 188.

I. Common or Public Nusances; what shall be considered as such.

II. What are Private Nusances.

III. Of the Remedy for both.

I. COMMON NUSANCES are a species of offences against the public order and œconomical regimen of the State; being either the doing of a thing to the annoyance of all the King's Subjects, or the neglecting to do a thing which the common good requires. 1 Hawk P. C. c. 75. § 1.

Of this nature are, 1. Annoyances in highways, bridges, and the public rivers, by rendering the same inconvenient or dangerous to pass, either positively by actual obstructions, or negatively by want of reparations. For both of these, the person so obstructing, or such individuals as are bound to repair and cleanse them, or (in default of these last) the parish at large may be indicted, distrained to repair and amend them, and in some cases fined. And a presentment thereof by a judge of assise, &c. or a justice of the peace, shall be in all respects equivalent to an indictment. Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 42. Where there is an house erected, or an inclosure made on any part of the King's demesnes, or of an highway, or common street, or public river, or such like public things, it is called a purpresture, from the French pourpris, an inclosure. 1 Inst. 277: and see Highway.

2. All those kinds of Nusances (such as offensive trades and manufactures) which, when injurious to a private man, are actionable, are, when detrimental to the public, punishable by public prosecution, and subject to fine according to the quantity of the misdemeanor; and particularly the keeping of any hogs in any city or market-town is indictable as a public Nusance. Salk. 460.

3. All disorderly inns or ale houses, bawdy-houses, gaming-houses, stage-plays unlicensed, booths and stages for rope-dancers, mountebanks, and the like, are public Nusances, and may upon indictment be suppressed and fined. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. § 6. Inns in particular, being intended for the lodging and receipt of travellers, may be indicted, suppressed, and the inn-keepers fined, if they refuse to entertain a traveller, without a very sufficient cause; for thus to frustrate the end of their institution is held to be disorderly behaviour. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 78. § 2.

4. By stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 17, all Lotteries are declared to be public Nusances; and all grants, patents, or licences for the same to be contrary to law. But as State Lotteries have for many years past been found a ready mode for raising the Supplies, several acts have from time to time been made to license and regulate the keepers of such lottery-offices. See title Lottery. And by stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18. § 19, all projects by public subscription, for adventuring in commerce, to the common grievance, or acting as a body corporate without a charter, are considered as common Nusances, and punishable accordingly, and also subject to the pains of premunire.

5. The making and selling of fire works and squibs, or throwing them about in any street, is, on account of the danger that may ensue to any thatched or timber buildings, declared to be a common Nusance, by stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 7, and therefore is punishable by fine. See title Fire-works. To this head also may be referred (though not declared a common Nusance) the making, keeping, or carriage of too large a quantity of gun powder at one time, or in one place, or vehicle, which is prohibited by stat. 12 Geo 3. c. 61, under heavy penalties and forfeiture. See title Gunpowder.

6. Eaves-droppers, or such as listen under walls or windows, or the eaves of a house, to hearken after discourse, and thereupon to frame slanderous and mischievous tales, are a common Nusance, and presentable at the Court-leet. Kitch of Courts 20. Or are indictable at the sessions, and punishable by fine, and finding sureties for their good behaviour. Ibid: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 61. § 4.

Lastly, a Common Scold, is a public Nusance to her neighbourhood. For which offence she may be indicted. 6 Mod. 213. And, if convicted, shall be sentenced to be placed in a certain engine of correction, called the trebucket, castigatory, or cucking-stool. 3 Inst. 219. See titles Castigatory; Scold.

If a ship be sunk in a port or haven, and it is not removed by the owner, he may be indicted for it as a common Nusance, because it is prejudicial to the commonwealth in hindering navigation and trade. 2 Lil. 244.

Indictment lies for laying logs, &c. in the stream of a public navigable river; it is a common Nusance to divert part of a public navigable river whereby the current is weakened, and made unable to carry vessels of the same burden it could before; and if a river be stopped to the Nusance of the country, and none appear bound by prescription to cleanse it; those who have the piscary, and the neighbouring towns that have a common passage and easement therein, may be compelled to do the same. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. §§ 11, 13.

It is a common Nusance indictable, to divide a house in a town for poor people to inhabit in, by reason whereof it will be more dangerous in the time of sickness and infection of the plague. 2 Roll. Abr. 139. A common playhouse, if it draws together such number of coaches and people as incommode and disturb the neighbourhood, may be a Nusance; but these places are not naturally Nusances, but become so by accident. 1 Roll. Rep. 109: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. § 7.

A prohibitory writ was issued out of B. R. against Betterton and other actors, for erecting a new playhouse in Little Lincoln's Inn Fields, reciting that it was a Nusance to the neighbourhood; and they not obeying the writ, an attachment was granted against them; but it was objected that an attachment could not be issued, and that the most proper method was to proceed by indictment, and then the Jury would consider whether it were a Nusance or not; and this was the better opinion. 5 Mod. 142: 2 Nels. Abr. 1192.

One Hall having begun to build a booth near Charing-Cross, for rope-dancing, which drew together many idle people, was ordered by the Lord Chief Justice not to proceed: he proceeded, notwithstanding, affirming, that he had the King's warrant and promise to bear him harmless; but being required to give a recognizance of three hundred pounds that he would not go on with the building, and he refusing, he was committed, and a record was made of this Nusance, as upon the Judge's own view, and a writ issued to the Sheriff of Middlesex to prostrate it. 1 Vent. 169: 1 Mod. 96.

Erecting a dove-cote is not a common Nusance; though action on the case will lie at the suit of the lord of the manor for erecting it without his licence. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. § 8. It was anciently held, that if a man erected a dove-cote he was punishable at the Leet; but it has been since adjudged not to be punishable in the Leet as a common Nusance, but that the lord for this particular Nusance should have an action on the case, or an assise of Nusance; as he may for building an house to the Nusance of his mill. 5 Rep. 104: 3 Salk. 248. Neither the King, nor lord of a manor, may licence any man to make or commit a Nusance. 1 Roll. Abr. 138.

A brew-house erected in such an inconvenient place, wherein the business cannot be carried on without incommoding the neighbourhood, may be indicted as a common Nusance; and so in the like case may a glass-house, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. § 10. Where there hath been an ancient brew-house time out of mind, although in a most public street of a city, this is not any Nusance, because it shall be supposed to be erected when there were no buildings near; though if a brewhouse should be now built in any of the high streets of London, or trading places, it will be a Nusance, and action on the case lies for whomsoever receives any damage thereby. 2 Lil. Abr. 246: Palm. 536.

It hath been holden to be a common Nusance to make great noises in the night with a speaking trumpet. Stra. 704. Or to permit a house near the highway to continue in a ruinous condition. Salk. 357. Or to lay timber in a public river, although the soil on which it is laid belong to the party; provided it obstructs the necessary intercourse. 3 Bac. Abr.: Stra. 1247. Or to place a floating dock in the river, although beneficial in repairing ships. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. § 11, in n. Or to travel with a cart on a common pack-way or horse-way, and by thus ploughing it up to render the use of it inconvenient. 6 Mod. 145. Or to put a ship of three hundred tons into Billingsgate dock; for although it is a common dock, it is only for the reception of small vessels freighted with provisions for the London market. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. § 11. Or to manufacture acid spirit, of sulphur, vitriol, or aqua fortis in the vicinity of dwelling-houses. 1 Burr. 333. See also stats. 13 E. 1. c. 24: 12 R. 2. c. 13: 2 W. & M. st. 2. c. 8: 30 Geo. 2. c. 22: 31 Geo. 2. c. 17, respecting Nusances in the cities of London and Westminster.

But the fears of mankind, however reasonable, will not create a Nusance; therefore it is no Nusance to erect a building for the purposes of inoculation. 3 Atk. 21, 726, 750. Nor to lay bricks in the river Thames in the party's own fishery. 3 Burr. 1770. Nor to violate a public law. Black. Rep. 570 [if it provides a specific punishment]. Whether coney burrrows are a Nusance, see 1 Burr. 259: 6 Mod. 453: 11 Mod. 7, 8.

II. Private Nusances are such as affect either the corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments of an individual.

First, As to corporeal hereditaments. If a man builds a house so close to mine that his roof overhangs my roof, and throws the water off his roof upon mine, this is a Nusance, for which an action will lie. F. N. B. 184. Likewise to erect a house or other building so near to mine, that it obstructs my antient lights and windows, is a Nusance of a similar nature. 9 Rep. 58. But in this latter case it is necessary that the windows be antient; that is, have subsisted a long time without interruption, otherwise there is no injury done. [This time, by modern practice, is now settled at an uninterrupted enjoyment of twenty years.] For he hath as much right to build a new edifice upon his ground as I have upon mine, since every man may erect what he pleases upon the upright or perpendicular of his own soil, so as not to prejudice what has long been enjoyed by another; and it was my folly to build so near another's ground. Cro. Eliz. 118: Salk. 459. Also if a person keeps his hogs, or other noisome animals, so near the house of another that the stench of them incommodes him, and makes the air unwholesome [or renders the enjoyment of life or property uncomfortable], this is an injurious Nusance, as it tends to deprive him of the use and benefit of his house. 9 Rep. 58: 1 Burr. 337. A like injury is, if one's neighbour sets up and exercises any offensive trade; as a tanner's, a tallow-chandler's, or the like; for though these are lawful and necessary trades, yet they should be exercised in remote places; for the rule is, sic utere tuo, ut alienum non lædas; this therefore is an actionable Nusance. Cro. Car. 510. So that the Nusances which affect a man's dwelling may be reduced to these three: 1. Overhanging it, which is also a species of trespass, for, cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cœlum. 2. Stopping ancient lights; and, 3. Corrupting the air with noisome smells; for light and air are two indispensable requisites to every dwelling. But depriving one of a mere matter of pleasure, as of a fine prospect, by building a wall, or the like; this, as it abridges nothing really convenient or necessary, is no injury to the sufferer, and is therefore not an actionable Nusance. 9 Rep. 58: 3 Salk. 247, 459: Cro. Eliz. 118.

As to Nusance to one's lands; if one erects a smelting-house for lead so near the land of another that the vapour and smoke kills his corn and grass, and damages his cattle therein, this is held to be a Nusance. 1 Roll. Abr. 89. And by consequence it follows, that if one does any other act, in itself lawful, which yet being done in that place necessarily tends to the damage of another's property, it is a Nusance; for it is incumbent on him to find some other place to do that act where it will be less offensive. So also if my neighbour ought to scour a ditch, and does not, whereby my land is overflowed, this is an actionable Nusance. Hale on F. N. B. 427.

With regard to other corporeal hereditaments; it is a Nusance to stop or divert water that uses to run to another's meadow or mill. F. N. B. 184. To corrupt or poison a water-course, by erecting a dye-house, or a lime pit, for the use of trade, in the upper part of the stream. 9 Rep. 59: 2 Roll. Abr. 141. Or, in short, to do any act therein, that in its consequences must necessarily tend to the prejudice of one's neighbour. 3 Comm. c. 13.

Secondly, As to incorporeal hereditaments. If I have a way annexed to my estate, across another's lands, and he obstructs me in the use of it either by totally stopping it or putting logs across it, or ploughing over it, is a Nusance; for in the first case I cannot enjoy my right at all, and in the latter I cannot enjoy it so commodiously as I ought. F. N. B. 183: 2 Roll. Abr. 140. Also if I am entitled to hold a fair or market, and another person sets up a fair or market so near mine that he does me a prejudice, it is a Nusance to the freehold which I have in my market or fair. F. N. B. 148: 2 Roll. Abr. 140. See this Dictionary, title Market.

If a ferry is erected on a river so near another antient ferry as to draw away its custom, it is a Nusance to the owner of the old one. For where there is a ferry by prescription, the owner is bound to keep it always in repair and readiness, for the ease of all the King's Subjects; otherwise he may be grievously amerced: it would therefore be extremely hard if a new ferry were suffered to share his profits, which does not also share his burden. 2 Roll. Abr. 140. But where the reason ceases, the law also ceases with it; therefore it is no Nusance to erect a mill so near mine as to draw away the custom, unless the miller also intercepts the water. Neither is it a Nusance to set up any trade, or a school, in a neighbourhood or rivalship with another; for by such emulation the public are like to be gainers; and if the new mill or school occasion a damage to the old one, it is damnum absque injuriâ. Hale on F. N. B. 184.

The stopping up a way leading from houses to lands, suffering the next house to decay to the damage of my house; and setting up or making a house of office, lime-pit, dye-house, tan house, or butcher's shop, &c. and using them so near my house that the smell annoys me, or is infectious; or if they hurt my lands or trees, or the corruption of the water of lime pits spoils my water or destroys fish in a river, &c.: these, and the other evils already enumerated, are in general private Nusances. 3 Inst. 231: 5 Rep. 101: 9 Rep. 54: 1 Roll. Abr. 88: 2 Roll. 140: 1 Danv. Abr. 173.

A plaintiff was possessed of an house wherein he dwelled, and the defendant built a brew-house, &c. in which he burnt coal so near the house, that by the stink and smoke he could not dwell there without danger of his health; and it was adjudged, that the action lay, though a brew-house is necessary, and so is burning coal in it. Hutton 135. If a person melt lead so near the close of another that it injures his grass there, whereby cattle are lost; notwithstanding this is a lawful trade, and for the benefit of the nation, action lies against him; for he ought to use his trade in waste places, so as no damage may happen to the proprietors of the land adjoining. 2 Roll. Abr. 140.

Building a smith's forge near a man's house, and making a noise with hammers, so that he could not sleep, was held a Nusance, for which action lies; although the smith pleaded that he and his servants worked at seasonable times; that he had been a blacksmith, and used the trade above twenty years in that place, and set up his forge in an old room, &c. For though a smith is a necessary trade, and so is a lime burner, and a hog-merchant; yet these trades must be used, so as not to be injurious to the neighbours. 1 Lutw. 69.

But if a schoolmaster keeps a school so near the study of a lawyer by profession, that it is a disturbance to him; this is not a Nusance for which action may be brought. Wood's Inst. 538. An inn-keeper brought an action on the case against a person for erecting a tallow furnace, and melting stinking tallow so near his house that it annoyed his guests, and his family became unhealthy; and adjudged that the action lay. Cro Car. 367. So where a person kept a hogsty near a man's parlour, whereby he lost the benefit of it. 2 Roll. Abr. 140.

Yet it is said to be no Nusance to a neighbourhood for a butcher or chandler to set up their trades in houses amongst them; but it may be by such tradesmen laying stinking heaps at their doors: in other cases the necessity of the thing shall dispense with the noisomeness of it. Pasch. 5 Jac. 1. B. R. If a man have a spout falling down from his house, and another person erect any thing above it, that the water cannot fall as it did, but is forced into the house of the plaintiff, and rots the timber; it is a Nusance actionable. 18 E. 3: 2 Roll Abr. 140. And in trespass for a Nusance, in causing stinking water in the defendant's yard to run to the walls of the plaintiff's house, and piercing them so that it ran into his cellar, &c. judgment was given for the plaintiff. Hard. 60.

III. As common or public Nusances are such inconvenient or troublesome offences which annoy the whole community in general, and not merely some particular person, they are therefore indictable only, and not actionable; as it would be unreasonable to multiply suits by giving every man a separate right of action for what damnifies him in common only with the rest of his fellow-subjects. 4 Comm. c. 13. p. 167: 5 Rep. 73: 1 Inst. 56: 1 Vent. 208. And as the law gives no private remedy for any thing but a private wrong, therefore no action lies for a public or common Nusance, but an indictment only; because the damage being common to all the King's Subjects, no one can assign his particular proportion of it. 3 Comm. c. 13. p. 219. For this reason no person natural or corporate can have an action for a public Nusance, or punish it; but only the King in his public capacity of supreme governor and pater familias of the kingdom. Vaugh. 341, 2. Yet this rule admits of one exception; where a private person suffers some extraordinary damage beyond the rest of the King's Subjects by a public Nusance, in which case he shall have a private satisfaction by action. As if by means of a ditch dug across a public way, which is a common Nusance, a man or his horse suffer an injury by falling therein; there, for this particular damage, which is not common to others, the party shall have his action. 1 Inst. 56: 5 Rep. 73. So if by reason of a pit dug in a highway, a man for whose life I held lands is drowned; or my servant falling into it receives injury, whereby I lose his service, &c.; for this special damage, which is not common to other persons, action lies. 4 Rep. 18: 5 Rep. 73: Cro. Car. 446: Vaugh. 341: 4 Bulst. 344. But a modern authority says, the injury must be direct; and not consequential, as by being delayed in a journey of importance. Bull. N. P. c. 5. p. 26. But see c. 7. p. 78. And where the inhabitants of a town had by custom a watering place for their cattle, which was stopped by another, it has been held, that any inhabitant might have an action against him, otherwise they would be without remedy; because such a Nusance is not common to all the King's Subjects, and presentable in the leet, or to be redressed by presentment or indictment in the quarter sessions. 5 Rep. 73: 9 Rep. 103.

Also if a man hath abated or removed a Nusance which offended him; in this case he is entitled to no action, for he had choice of two remedies: either without suit by abating it himself by his own mere act and authority, or by suit in which he may both recover damages, and remove it by the aid of the law; but having made his election of one remedy, he is totally precluded from the other. 3 Comm. c 13. p. 220, cites 9 Rep. 55. See also F. N. B. 185: 2 Roll. Abr. 7,5. But this apparently admits of some qualification; for the party's right of action might attach before the removal: and in another case it is said, There is a difference between an assise for a Nusance, and an action on the case (see post.); for the first is to abate the Nusance, but the last is not to abate it, but to recover damages; therefore, if the Nusance be removed, the plaintiff is entitled to his damages which accrued before; and though it is laid with a continuando for a longer time than the plaintiff can prove, he shall have damages for what he can prove, before the Nusance was removed. 2 Mod. 253.

This abatement or removal of Nusances is classed by Blackstone among the species of remedy, allowed by law, through through the mere act of the party injured. 3 Comm. c. 1. This abatement, removing, or taking away, may be performed by the party aggrieved by the Nusance, so as he commits no riot in the doing it. 5 Rep. 101: 9 Rep. 55. If a house or wall is erected so near to mine that it stops my ancient lights, which is a private Nusance, I may enter my neighbour's lands, and peaceably pull it down. Salk. 459. Or if a new gate be erected across the public highway, which is a common Nusance, any of the King's Subjects passing that way may cut it down, and destroy it. Cro. Car. 184. And the reason why the law allows this private and summary method of doing one's self justice, is because injuries of this kind, which obstruct or annoy such things as are of daily convenience and use, require an immediate remedy; and cannot wait for the slow progress of the ordinary forms of justice. 3 Comm. 6.

With respect to the redressing of Private Nusances by due course of law; the remedies by suit are;

1. By action on the case for damages; in which the party injured shall only recover a satisfaction for the injury sustained, but cannot thereby remove the Nusance. Indeed every continuance of a Nusance is held to be a fresh one, and therefore a fresh action will lie, and very exemplary damages will probably be given, if, after one verdict against him, the defendant has the hardiness to continue it. 2 Leon. pl. 129: Cro. Eliz. 402. Yet the founders of the law of England did not rely upon probabilities merely in order to give relief to the injured; they have therefore provided two other actions, the assise of Nusance, and the writ of quod permittat prosternere; which not only give the plaintiff satisfaction for his injury past, but also strike at the root, and remove the cause itself, the Nusance that occasioned the injury. These two actions, however, can only be brought by the tenant of the freehold, so that a lessee for years is confined to his action upon the case. Finch L. 289.

2. An assise of Nusance is a writ wherein it is stated, that the party injured complains of some particular fact done ad nocumentum liberi tenementi sui; and therefore commanding the Sheriff to summon an assise, that is a jury, and view the premises, and have them at the next commission of assises, that justice may be done therein. F. N. B. 183. And if the assise is found for the plaintiff, he shall have judgment of two things: 1st, To have the Nusance abated; and 2d, To recover damages. 9 Rep. 55. Formerly, an assise of Nusance lay against the very wrong-doer himself who levied or did the Nusance, and did not lie against any person to whom he had aliened the tenements whereon the Nusance was situated. This was the immediate reason for making that equitable provision in stat. West. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 24, for granting a similar writ, in casu consimili, where no former precedent was to be found. The statute gives the form of a new writ in this case, which only differs from the old one in stating that the wrong-doer and the alienee both raised the Nusance. For every continuation, as was before said, is a fresh Nusance.

3. Before this statute the party injured, upon any alienation of the land wherein the Nusance was set up, was driven to his quod permittat prosternere, which is in the nature of a writ of right, and therefore subject to greater delays. 2 Inst. 405. This is a writ commanding the defendant to permit the plaintiff to abate the Nusance complained of, and unless he so permits, to summon him to appear in Court, and shew cause why he will not. F. N. B. 124. And this writ lies as well for the alienee of the party first injured, as against the alienee of the party first injuring, as hath been determined by all the Judges. 5 Rep. 100, 1. And the plaintiff shall have judgment therein to abate the Nusance, and to recover damages against the defendant.

Both these actions of assise of Nusance and of quod permittat prosternere are now out of use, and have given way to the action on the case; in which, as was before observed, no judgment can be had to abate the Nusance, but only to recover damages. Yet as therein it is not necessary that the freehold should be in the plaintiff and defendant respectively, as it must be in these real actions, but it is maintainable, by one who hath possession only against another that hath like possession, the process is therefore easier, and the effect will be much the same, unless a man has a very obstinate as well as an ill-natured neighbour, who had rather continue to pay damages than remove his Nusance; for in such a case, recourse must at last be had to the old and sure remedies, which will effectually conquer the defendant's perverseness, by sending the Sheriff with his posse comitatûs, or power of the county, to level it. 3 Comm. c. 13. p. 220—222.

It is said both of a common and private Nusance, that they may be abated or removed by those who are prejudiced by them; and they need not stay to prosecute for their removal. 2 Lil. Abr. 244: Wood's Inst. 443. Also if a house be on the highway, or a house hang over the ground of another, they may be pulled down; but no man can justify the doing more damage than is necessary, or removing the materials farther than requisite. 1 Hawk. P.C. c. 75, 76: Stra. 680.

Where two houses, one whereof is a Nusance to the other, come both into one and the same hand, the wrong is purged. See Hob. 131.

An action lies for hindering the wholesome air, and also for corrupting the air. 9 Rep. 58. And by an old stat. 12 R. 2. c. 13, which if not actually obsolete, is now entirely disregarded, none shall cast any garbage, dung, or filth into ditches, waters, or other places within or near any city or town; on pain of punishment by the Lord Chancellor at discretion, as a Nusance.

On the principle that the continuation of a Nusance is, as it were, a new Nusance; where a Nusance is erected in the time of the devisor, and continued afterwards by the devisee, action may be maintained against the latter. 2 Leon. 129: Cro. Car. 231. But a plaintiff may declare both ways, one for erecting and continuing, the other for continuing only, though the latter method is sufficient in any case. J. M.

If one hath freehold land adjoining to the highway, and he encroach part of the way, and lay lands to it, and then dying, it comes to his heir; if he continues it, though he do nothing else, he may be indicted for the continuance of the Nusance. Roll. Abr. 137. A man erects a Nusance, and then lets it; the continuance by the lessee has been held a Nusance, and that action lies against him. Cro. Jac. 373: Moor 353. But it is said in another case of this nature, that admitting the plaintiff might have an assise of Nusance against the builder, the lessor, he cannot have an action against his lessee, because it would be waste in him to pull it down; but the plaintiff may abate the Nusance standing on his own ground; yet where the thing done is a Nusance per intervalla, as a pipe or gutter, action lies against the lessee, because every running is a fresh Nusance; and if a man have a way over the ground of another, and such other stops that way, and then demises the ground, an action lies against the lessee for continuing this Nusance. 1 Mod. 54: 3 Salk. 248.

If a person assigns his lease with a Nusance, action lies against him for continuing it, because the lease was transferred with the original wrong, and his assignment confirms the continuance; besides he hath a rent as consideration for the continuance, therefore he ought to answer the damages occasioned by it. 2 Salk. 460: 2 Cro. 272, 555.

A Nusance in a church-yard is, properly, of ecclesiastical cognisance. Carthew 152. If a man straiten a way only, and do not stop it up, action on the case lieth; not assise of Nusance. 33 H. 6. c. 26. But for stopping such way, belonging to a freehold tenement, an assise will lie; and where one may have assise of Nusance for an injury to his way, there he shall not have action of trespass. 19 H. 6. c. 29: 2 Shep. Abr. 468. This means trespass vi et armis, but an action upon the case will undoubtedly lie. J. M.

Writs of Nusance, called vicontiel, are to be made at the election of the plaintiff, determinable before the justices of either bench, or the justices of assise of the county, being in nature of assises, &c. 6 R. 2. c. 3.

NUTMEGS, Nuces muscatæ.] A spice well known, mentioned, among spices that are to be garbled, in the statutes imposing a duty on their importation.

NUTRIMENTUM, Nourishment, particularly applied to breed of cattle. Paroch. Antiq. 401.

O.

O. The ſeven Antiphones, or alternate hymn of ſeven verſes, &c. ſung by the choir in the time of Advent, was called O, from beginning with ſuch exclamation. In the ſtatutes of St. Paul's church in London, there is one chapter, De faciendo O. Liber Statut. MS. f. 86.

OATH, Sax. Eoth, Lat. Juramentum.] An affirmation or denial of any thing, before one or more perſons who have authority to adminiſter the ſame, for the diſcovery and advancement of truth and right, calling God to witneſs that the teſtimony is true: therefore it is termed Sacramentum, a holy band or tie: it is called a corporal Oath, becauſe the witneſs when he ſwears lays his right hand on the Holy Evangeliſts, or New Teſtament. 3 Inſt. 165.

There are ſeveral ſorts of Oaths in our law, viz. Juramentum promiſſionis, where Oath is made either to do, or not to do, ſuch a thing: Juramentum purgationis, when a perſon is charged with any matter by bill in Chancery, &c. Juramentum probationis, where any one is produced as a witneſs, to prove or diſprove a thing: and Juramentum triationis, when any perſons are ſworn to try an iſſue, &c. 2 Nelſ. 1181.

All Oaths muſt be lawful, allowed by the Common Law, or ſome ſtatute; if they are adminiſtered by perſons in a private capacity, or not duly authorized, they are coram non judice, and void; and thoſe adminiſtering them are guilty of a high contempt, for doing it without warrant of law, and puniſhable by fine and impriſonment. 3 Inſt. 165: 4 Inſt. 278: 2 Roll. Abr. 257.

One who was to teſtify on behalf of a felon, or perſon indicted of treaſon, or other capital offence, upon an indictment at the King's ſuit, could not formerly be examined on his Oath for the priſoner againſt the King; though he might be examined without Oath: but by ſtat. 1 Ann. ſt. 2. c. 9, witneſſes on behalf of the priſoner upon indictments are to be ſworn to depoſe the truth, in ſuch manner as witneſſes for the King; and if convicted of wilful perjury, ſhall ſuffer the puniſhment inflicted for ſuch offences. The evidence for the defendant in an appeal, whether capital or not, or on indictment or information for a miſdemeanor, was to be on Oath before this ſtatute. 2 Hawk. P. C.

A perſon who is to be a witneſs in a cauſe may have two Oaths given him, one to ſpeak the truth to ſuch things as the Court ſhall aſk him concerning himſelf, or other things which are not evidence in the cauſe; the other to give teſtimony in the cauſe in which he is produced as a witneſs: the former is called the Oath upon a voyer (vrai) dire.

If Oath be made againſt Oath in a cauſe, it is a non liquet to the Court which Oath is true; and in ſuch caſe the Court will take that Oath to be true, which is to affirm a verdict, judgment, &c. as it tends to the expediting of juſtice. 2 Lil. Abr. 247.

A voluntary Oath, by conſent and agreement of the parties, is lawful as well as a compulſory Oath; and in ſuch caſe, if it is to do a ſpiritual thing, and the party fail, he is ſuable in the Eccleſiaſtical Court, pro læſione fidei; if to do a temporal thing, and he fail therein, he may be puniſhed in B. R. Adjudged on aſſumpſit, where if the defendant would make Oath before ſuch a perſon, the plaintiff promiſed, &c. Cro. Car. 486: 3 Salk. 248.

By the Common Law, officers of juſtice are bound to take an Oath for the due execution of juſtice. Trin. 22 Car. 1. B. R. Though if promiſſory Oaths of officers are broken, they are not puniſhed as perjuries, like unto the breach of aſſertory Oaths; but their offences ought to be puniſhed with a ſevere fine, &c. Wood's Inſt. 412. Anciently, at the end of a legal Oath, was added, So help me God at his holy dome, i. e. judgment; and our anceſtors did believe, that a man could not be ſo wicked to call God to witneſs any thing which was not true; but that if any one ſhould be perjured, he muſt continually expect that God would be the revenger: and thence probably purgations of criminals, by their own Oaths, and for great offences by the Oaths of others, were allowed. Malmſb. lib. 2. c. 6: Leg. Hen. 1. c. 64.

OATHS TO THE GOVERNMENT. By Magna Charta, the Oaths of the King, the Biſhops, the King's Counſellors, Sheriffs, Mayors, Bailiffs, &c. were appointed. The Oaths of the Judges of both benches; and of the Clerks in Chancery, and the Curſitors, were ordained by ſtat. 18 Ed. 3. ſt. 4: and ſee ſtat. 14 E. 3. ſt. 1. c. 5.

Eccleſiaſtical perſons are required to take the Oaths of Supremacy, &c. And clergymen not taking the Oaths, on their refuſal being certified into B. R. &c. do for a ſecond offence, incur the penalties of præmunire: See ſtat. 1 Eliz. c. 1: and this Dictionary, title Parſon. Officers and eccleſiaſtical perſons, Members of parliament, lawyers, &c. are to take the Oath of Allegiance, or be liable to penalties and diſabilities. Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 6.

By ſtat. 1 W. & M. ſt. 1. c. 6, the Coronation Oath was altered and regulated; ſee title King: the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy were abrogated, and others appointed to be taken and enforced, on pain of diſability, &c. by ſtats. 1 W. & M. c. 8: 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 27.

By ſtat. 13 W. 3. c. 6, all that bear offices in the government, peers and members of the Houſe of Commons, eccleſiaſtical perſons, members of colleges, ſchoolmaſters, preachers, ſerjeants at law, counſellors, attornies, ſolicitors, advocates, proctors, &c. are enjoined to take the Oaths of Allegiance; and perſons neglecting or refuſing are declared incapable to execute their offices and and employments, disabled to sue in law or equity, to be guardian, executor, &c. or to receive any legacy or deed of gift, to be in any office, &c. and to forfeit five hundred pounds.

This extends not to constables, and other parish officers, nor to bailiffs of manors, &c.

The stat. 1 Ann. c. 22, obliges the receiving the abjuration Oath, with alterations.

The Oath of Allegiance, as administered for upwards of six hundred years, contained a promise "to be true and faithful to the King and his heirs, and truth and faith to bear of life and limb and terrene honour, and not to know or hear of any ill or damage intended him without defending him therefrom." See Mirr. c. 3. § 35: Fleta iii. 16: Britt. c. 29: 7 Rep. Calvin's Ca. 6. Upon which Sir M. Hale makes this remark; that it was short and plain, not intangled with long and intricate clauses or declarations, and yet is comprehensive of the whole duty from the Subject to his Sovereign. 1 Hal. P. C. 63. But at the Revolution, the terms of this Oath being thought perhaps to favour too much the notion of non-resistance, the present form was introduced by the Convention-Parliament, which is more general and indeterminate than the former; the Subject only promising "that he will be faithful, and bear true allegiance to the King," without mentioning "his heirs," or specifying the least wherein that allegiance consists. The Oath of Supremacy is principally calculated as a renunciation of the Pope's pretended authority; and the Oath of Abjuration, as introduced by stat. 13 Will. 3. c. 6, and regulated by stat. 6 Geo. 3. c 53, very amply supplies the loose and general texture of the Oath of Allegiance; it recognizing the right of his Majesty, derived under the Act of Settlement; engaging to support him to the utmost of the juror's power; promising to disclose all traiterous conspiracies against him, and expresly renouncing any claim of the descendants of the late Pretender, in as clear and explicit terms as the English language can furnish. This Oath must be taken by all persons in any office, trust, or employment; and may be tendered by two Justices of the Peace to any person whom they shall suspect of disaffection. Stats. 1 Geo. 1. c. 13: 6 Geo. 3. c. 53: See this Dictionary, title Nonjurors. And the Oath of Allegiance may be tendered to all persons above the age of twelve years, whether natives, denizens, or aliens, either in the Court-leet of the manor, or in the Sheriff's tourn, which is the Court-leet of the county. 2 Inst. 121: 1 Hal. P. C. 64: and see 1 Comm. 367, 8.

By stat. 1 W. & M. c. 8, persons of eighteen years of age refusing to take the new Oaths of Allegiance on tender by the proper magistrate, are subject to the penalties of a præmunire. And by stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 24, serjeants, counsellors, proctors, attornies, and all officers of Courts practising without having taken the Oaths of Allegiance, [and Supremacy, and subscribing the Declaration against Popery, repealed by stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 32. § 18. see title Nonjurors,] are guilty of a præmunire, whether the Oaths be tendered or not. See 4 Comm. 116, 117.

In almost every session of Parliament, acts are made for indemnifying persons who have omitted to qualify themselves for offices and promotions within the time limited by law, and for allowing further time for that purpose.

Oaths must be taken in the very words expressed in the acts, and cannot be qualified; yet the equivocation of using the words in conscience, instead of my conscience, or Sea of Rome, instead of See of Rome, shall not, it has been said, invalidate the Oath. 1 Bulst. 197.

See further on the subject of Oaths, this Dictionary, titles Nonconformist; Nonjuror; and, particularly, Papist.

OATMEAL. Selling corrupt Oatmeal, is punishable by statute: it shall be forfeited for the second offence, &c. See stat. 31 Ed. 1: Pult. Kalend. Stat. 323.

OBEDIENTIA, In the Canon law, is used for an office, or the administration of it: whereupon the word obedientiales, in the provincial constitutions, is taken for officers under their superiors. Can. Law, c. 1. And as some of these offices consisted in the collection of rents or pensions, rents were called Obedientiæ: quia colligebantur ab obedientialibus. But though Obedientia was a rent, as appears by Hovedcn, in a general acceptation of this word, it extended to whatever was enjoined the monks by the abbot; and in a more restrained sense, to the cells or farms which belonged to the abbey to which the monks were sent, vi ejusdem Obedientiæ, either to look after the farms, or to collect the rents, &c. See Mat. Paris, Ann. 1213.

OBIT, Lat.] Signifies a funeral solemnity or office for the dead, most commonly performed when the corpse lies in the church uninterred; also the anniversary office. 2 Cro. 51: Dyer 313. The anniversary of any person's death was called the Obit; and to observe such day with prayers and alms, or other commemoration, was the keeping of the Obit: in religious houses they had a register, wherein they entered the Obits or Obitual days of their founders or benefactors, which was thence termed the Obituary. The tenure of Obit, or Obituary, or chantry lands, is taken away and extinct, by stat. 1 Ed 6. c. 14.

OBJURGATRICES, Scolds, or unquiet women, punished with the cucking-stool. MS LL. Lib. Burg. Villæ de Montgomery temp. Hen. 2. See Castigatory.

OBLATA, Gifts or offerings made to the King by any of his Subjects, which in the reigns of King John and King Hen. III. were so carefully heeded, that they were entered into the Fine Rolls under the title of Oblata; and if not paid, esteemed a duty, and put in charge to the Sheriff. Philips of Purveyance. In the Exchequer it signifies old debts, brought as it were together from precedent years, and put on the present Sheriff's charge. Pract. Excheq. 78.

OBLATIONS, oblationes.] Offerings to God and the Church. See Spelm. de Concil. tom. 1. p. 393. The word is often mentioned in our law books; and formerly there were several sorts of Oblations, viz. Oblationes altaris, which the priest had for saying mass; Oblationes defunctorum, which were given by the last wills and testaments of persons dying to the church; Oblationes mortuorum, or funerales, given at burials; Oblationes pœnitentium, which were given by persons penitent; and Oblationes pentecostales, &c.

The chief or principal feasts for the Oblations of the altar were All Saints, Christmas, Candlemas, and Easter, which were called Oblationes quatuor principales; and of the customary offerings from the parishioners to the parish rish priest, solemnly laid on the altar, the mass or sacrament offerings were usually three-pence at Christmas, two-pence at Easter, and a penny at the two other principal feasts. Under this title of Oblations were comprehended all the accustomed dues for sacramentalia or christian offices; and also the little sums paid for saying masses and prayers for the deceased. Kennet's Gloss. See Offerings.

Oblationes funerales were often the best horse of the defunct, delivered at the church gate or grave to the priest of the parish; to which old custom we owe the origin of mortuaries, &c. And at the burial of the dead, it was usual for the surviving friends to offer liberally at the altar for the pious use of the priest, and the good estate of the soul deceased, being called the Soul-sceat. In North Wales this usage still prevails, where, at the rails of the communion table in churches, is a tablet conveniently fixed, to receive the money offered at funerals according to the quality of the deceased; which has been observed to be a providential augmentation to some of those poor churches. Kennet's Gloss. At first the church had no other revenues beside these Oblations, till in the fourth century it was enriched with lands and other possessions. Blount. See title Mortuary.

Oblations, &c. are in the nature of tithes, and may be sued for in the Ecclesiastical Courts, and it is said are included in the act 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 6, for recovery of small tithes under 40*s.* by the determination of Justices of Peace, &c. See title Tithes.

OBLIGATION, obligatio.] A bond, containing a penalty, with a condition annexed for payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like; it differs from a bill, which is generally without a penalty or condition, though a bill may be obligatory. Co. Lit. 172. Obligations may also be by matter of record; as statutes and recognizances, to which there are sometimes added defeasances, like the condition of an Obligation; but when the Obligation is simple, or single, without any defeasance or condition, it is most properly called so. Shep. Abr. 475. See title Bond.

OBLIGOR, He who enters into an obligation; as Obligee is the person to whom it is entered into.

Before the coming in of the Normans, writings obligatory were made firm with golden crosses, or other small signs or marks. But the Normans began the making such bills and obligations with a print or seal in wax, impressed with every one's special signet, attested by three or four witnesses. In former time many houses and lands thereto passed by grant and bargain, without script, charter, or deed, only with the landlord's sword or helmet, with his horn or cup; and many tenements were demised with a spur or currycomb, with a bow or with an arrow. Cowell. See Wang; Bond; Deed, II. 6.

OBOLATA TERRÆ, According to some accounts, half an acre of land; but others hold it to be only half a perch. Spelm. Gloss.

OBVENTIONS, Obventiones.] Offerings or tithes; and Oblations, Obventions, and Offerings are generally the same thing, though Obvention has been esteemed the most comprehensive. See Oblations; Tithes.

OCCASIO, Is taken for a tribute which the lord imposed on his vassals or tenants; propter occasiones bellorum vel aliarum necessitatum. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 24. Rather the cause or pretext of such imposition.

OCCASIONARI, To be charged or loaded with payments, or occasional penalties. Stat. Ed. 2. anno 21. So in Fleta, Ita quod ipsi vigilatores non occasionentur. Lib. 1. cap. 24. par. 7.

OCCASIONES, Assarts, whereof Manwood speaks at large; the word is derived ab occando, i. e. harrowing or breaking clods. See Spelman's Glossary, v. Essartum. Lib. Niger Scac. par. 1. cap. 27, and this Dictionary, Assart.

OCCUPANT, occupans.] He who first gets possession of a thing. An island in the sea, precious stones on the sea-shore, and treasure discovered in a ground that has no particular owner, by the Law of Nations belong to him who finds them and gets the first occupation of them. Treat. Laws 342.

THE LAW OF OCCUPANCY is founded upon the law of nature, viz. Quod terra manens vacua occupanti conceditur. So as, upon the first coming of the inhabitants to a new country, he who first enters upon such part of it, and manures it, gains the property; (as is now used in Cornwall, &c. by the laws of the Stannaries, under certain regulations, for which see the Stannary laws;) so that it is the actual possession and manurance of the land which was the first cause of occupancy, and consequently is to be gained by actual entry. Sid. 347.

Where a man finds a piece of land which no other possesses or hath title unto, and enters upon the same, this gains a property, and a title by occupancy; but this manner of gaining property of lands has long since been of no use in England; for lands now possessed without any title are in the Crown, and not in him who first enters. Sid. 218. Though an estate for another's life, by our ancient laws, might be gotten by occupancy: as for example; suppose A. had lands granted to him for the life of B. and died without making any estate of it; in such case, whoever first entered into the land after the death of A. got the property for the remainder of the estate granted to A. for the life of B. For to the heir of A. it could not go, not being an estate of inheritance, but only an estate for another man's life; which was not descendible to the heir, unless he were specially named in the grant: and the executors of A. could not have it, as it was not an estate testamentary, that it should go to the executor as goods and chattels; so that in truth no man could entitle himself unto those lands: therefore the law preferred him who first entered, and he was called Occupans, and should hold the land during the life of B. paying the rent, and performing the covenants, &c. Bac. Elem. 1. And not only if tenant pur terme d'autre vie died, living cestui que vie; but if tenant for his own life granted over his estate to another, and the grantee died before him, there should be an Occupant. Co. Lit. 41, 388.

A man could not, however, be an Occupant but of a void possession; and it was not every possession of a person entering that could make an occupancy, for it must be such as would maintain trespass without farther entry. Vaugh. 191, 192: Carter 65: 2 Keb. 250. It was also held, that there could be no occupancy by any person of what another had a present right to possess: occupancy by law must be of things which have natural existence, as of land, &c. and not of rents, advowsons, fairs, markets, tithes, &c. which lie in grant, and are incorporeal rights and estates; and there could not be an Occupant of a copyhold eſtate. Vaugh. 190: Mod. Ca. 66: 1 Inſt. title by general occupancy is now univerſally prevented by ſtats. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 12: 14 Geo. 2. c. 20. § 9. The firſt ſtatute enacts, that eſtates pur autre vie ſhall be deviſable; and if not deviſed, chargeable in the hands of the heir as aſſets by deſcent where the eſtate falls on him as ſpecial Occupant; and if he is not entitled as ſuch, ſhall go to the grantee's executors or adminiſtrators, and be aſſets. On this ſtatute a doubt aroſe whether it operated further than by making ſuch eſtates deviſable, and aſſets for debts; and in one caſe it was adjudged, that the adminiſtrator took the ſurplus of ſuch eſtates after payment of debts, if not deviſed, for his own benefit, as in the place of a general Occupant. See 12 Mod. 103. This gave occaſion to the ſecond ſtatute, which expreſsly makes the ſurplus, in caſe of inteſtacy, diſtributable as perſonal eſtate. See further as to Occupancy, 2 Comm. 258: Vaugh. 187: Vin. title Occupancy and Eſtates, R. 2, 3: Com. Dig. Eſtates, F.

By the old law no right of occupancy was allowed where the King had the reverſion of the lands; for the reverſioner hath an equal right with any other man to enter upon the vacant poſſeſſion; and where the King's title and a Subject's concur, the King's ſhall be always preferred: againſt the King, therefore, there could be no prior Occupant, for nullum tempus occurrit regi. 1 Inſt. 41. And even in the caſe of a Subject, had the eſtate pur autre vie been granted to a man and his heirs during the life of ceſtui qui vie, there the heir might and ſtill may enter and hold poſſeſſion, and is called in law a ſpecial Occupant; as having a ſpecial excluſive right, by the terms of the original grant, to enter upon and occupy this hæreditas jacens during the reſidue of the eſtate granted; though ſome have thought him ſo called with no very great propriety, and that ſuch eſtate is rather a deſcendible freehold. Vaugh. 201. See 2 Comm. c. 16. p 259.

By the ſtatutes above mentioned, though the title of common or general occupancy is utterly extinct and aboliſhed, yet that of ſpecial occupancy by the heir at law continues to this day; ſuch heir being held to ſucceed to the anceſtor's eſtate, not by deſcent, for then he muſt take an eſtate of inheritance; but as an Occupant ſpecially marked out and appointed by the original grant. And it ſeems (notwithſtanding the opinion of Blackſtone to the contrary) that theſe ſtatutes extend to caſes of incorporeal hereditaments; although, as has been already noticed, before the ſtatute, no common occupancy could be had of ſuch incorporeal hereditaments. See 2 Comm. c. 16. p. 260; and Chriſtian's note there; and 3 P. Wms. 264—6, with Cox's notes.

The true ground of occupancy is, that anciently all trials of titles were by real actions, therefore he who had the freehold was one to whom the law had a ſpecial regard. The ancient law, for many reaſons, did not allow leaſes for above forty years, till the ſtat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 15. Beſides, there was reaſon too, that not only he who had right paramount, might know how to try his action, but that the lord might know how to avow for his ſervices (which were conſiderable things formerly); he ought to know who was his tenant, therefore the law provided there ſhould be a perſon on whom he ſhould avow. See Cart. 57: 1 Sid. 346: 1 Lev. 202. Gray v. Bearcroſt.

The ſubject and object of the Occupant are only ſuch things as are capable of occupancy, and not the freehold at all; into which he neither doth, nor can enter; but the law caſts the freehold immediately upon him who hath made himſelf Occupant of the land, or other real thing whereof he is Occupant, that there may be a tenant to the præcipe; per Vaughan Ch. J. Hil. 19 & 20 Car. 2. in the caſe of Holden v. Smallbrooke.

See farther, 27 Aſſ. 31: 2 Roll. Abr. 151: Cro. Eliz. 158: 6 Mod. 63, 68. Smartle v. Penhallow.

In ſome caſes where the laws of other nations give a right by occupancy, as in lands newly created, by the riſing of an iſland in the ſea or in a river, or by the Alluvion or Dereliction of the waters; in theſe inſtances the law of England aſſigns them an immediate owner. For Bracton ſays, that if an iſland ariſe in the middle of a river, it belongs in common to thoſe who have lands on each ſide thereof; but if it be nearer to one bank than another, it belongs only to him who is proprietor of the neareſt ſhore. Bract. l. 2. c. 2. Yet this ſeems only to be reaſonable, where the ſoil of the river is equally divided between the owners of the oppoſite ſhores; for if the whole ſoil is the freehold of any one man, as it uſually is whenever a ſeveral fiſhery is claimed, there it ſeems juſt (and ſo is the conſtant practice) that the eyotts or little iſlands, ariſing in any part of the river, ſhall be the property of him who owneth the piſcary and ſoil. Salk. 637. However, in caſe a new iſland riſe in the ſea, though the civil law gave it to the Occupant, yet ours gives it to the King. Bract. l. 2. c. 2: Callis of ſewers 22. And as to lands gained from the ſea, either by alluvion, by the waſhing up of ſand and earth, ſo as in time to make terra firma; or by dereliction, as when the ſea ſhrinks back below the uſual water-mark; in theſe caſes the law is held to be, that if this gain be by little and little, by ſmall and imperceptible degrees, it ſhall go to the owner of the land adjoining, 2 Roll. Abr. 170: Dyer 326: For de minimis non curat lex; and, beſides, theſe owners, being often loſers by the breaking in of the ſea, or at charges to keep it out, this poſſible gain is therefore a reciprocal conſideration for ſuch poſſible charge or loſs. But if the alluvion or dereliction be ſudden and conſiderable, in this caſe it belongs to the King; for as the King is lord of the ſea, and ſo owner of the ſoil while it is covered with water, it is but reaſonable he ſhould have the ſoil when the water has left it dry. Callis 24, 28. So that the quantity of ground gained, and the time during which it is being gained, are what make it either the King's or the Subject's property. In the ſame manner if a river running between two lordſhips by degrees gains upon the one, and thereby leaves the other dry, the owner who loſes his ground thus imperceptibly has no remedy; but if the courſe of the river be changed by a ſudden and violent flood, or other haſty means, and thereby a man loſes his ground, it is ſaid that he ſhall have what the river has left in any other place as a recompence for this ſudden loſs. Callis 28.

Of Things Perſonal, to which a title may be obtained by Occupancy.--Among theſe Blackſtone enumerates, 1. The goods of alien enemies: reſtrained, however, to captors authorized by public authority, and to goods brought into the country by an alien enemy after a declaration of war, without a safe-conduct. See title Alien, and also title Insurance, II. 2. The persons of prisoners till their ransom is paid; and perhaps in some cases negro slaves. See this Dictionary, title Slaves. 2. Any thing found which does not come under the description of waifs, estrays, wreck, or treasure-trove. See those titles. 3. The benefit of the elements of light, air, and water, as far as they are previously unoccupied, or as they may be occupied without injury to another. See title Nusance. 4. Animals feræ naturæ, under the restrictions of the Game-laws. See that title. 5. A special personal property in corn growing on the ground, or other emblements; though the title to these, as Mr. Christian observes, is rather the continuation of an inchoate, than the acquisition of an original, right. See title Emblements.—6, 7. Property arising by accession and confusion of goods; as to the former of which a little shall be said presently. As to the latter, see title Confusion, property by. 8. Literary Property; as to which see this Dictionary under that title.

As to property arising from accession. By the Roman laws, if any given corporeal substance received afterwards an accession by natural or by artificial means, as by the growth of vegetables, the pregnancy of animals, the embroidering of cloth, or the conversion of wood or metal into vessels and utensils, the original owner of the thing was entitled by his right of possession to the property of it under such its state of improvement. This has also long been the law of England; for it is laid down in the Year-books, that whatever alteration of form any property has undergone, the owner may seize it in its new shape if he can prove the identity of the original materials; as if leather be made into gloves, cloth into a coat; or if a tree be squared into timber, or silver melted or beat into a different figure. 5 H. 7. 15: 12 H. 8. 10. But if the thing itself by such operation were changed into a different species, as by making wine, oil, or bread, from another's grapes, olives, or wheat, the civil law held, that it belonged to the new operator, who was only to make a satisfaction to the former proprietor for the materials which he had so converted. These doctrines are implicitly copied and adopted by Bracton, and hav. since been confirmed by many resolutions of the Courts. Bract l. 2. cc. 2, 3: Bro. Ab. title Property 23: Moor 20: Poph. 38. It hath even been held, that if one takes away and clothes another's wife or son, and afterwards they return home, the garments shall cease to be his property who provided them, being annexed to the person of the child or woman. Moor 214. See 2 Comm. c. 26, and the notes there.

OCCUPATION, occupatio.] Use or tenure: as we say, such land is in the tenure, or Occupation, of such a man, that is, in his possession or management; also it is used for a trade or mystery. Stat. 12 Car. 2 c. 18. Occupations at large are taken for purprestures, intrusions and usurpations; and particularly for usurpation upon the King, by the stat. de Bigamis, c. 4: 2 Inst. 272.

OCCUPAVIT, A writ that lay for him who was ejected out of his freehold in time of war; as the writ of novel disseisin lay for one disseised in time of peace. Ingham.

OCTAVE, The eighth day after any feast, inclusive. See Utas.

ODHAL RIGHT; See Tenure, I. 1.

ODIO ET ATIA, Was a writ anciently called breve de bono & malo, directed to the Sheriff to inquire whether a man, committed to prison upon suspicion of murder, were committed on just cause of suspicion, or only upon malice and ill-will; and if upon the inquisition it were found that he was not guilty, then there issued another writ to the Sheriff to bail him. See Reg. Orig. 133: Bract. lib. 3. cap. 20: Stats. West. 1. cap. 11; 28 Ed. 3. cap. 9: S. P. C. 77: 2 Inst. 42: 9 Rep. 506.

The party committed, if entitled to be bailed, may now have the cause of his commitment inquired into, and be discharged on bail, by suing out an habeas corpus. See this Dictionary, title Habeas Corpus.

Blackstone remarks, that according to Bracton, l. 3. tr. 2. c. 8, this writ ought not to be denied to any man; it being expressly ordered to be made out gratis, without any denial, by Magna Charta, c. 26: and stat. West. 2. 13 E. 1. c 29 But the statute of Gloucester, 6 Ed. 1. c. 9, restrained it in the case of killing by misadventure or self-defence; and the stat. 28 Ed. 3. c. 9, abolished it in all cases whatsoever: but as the stat. 42 Ed 3. c. 1, repealed all the statutes then in being, contrary to the Great Charter, Sir Edward Coke is of opinion, that the writ de Odio et Atia was thereby revived. 2 Inst. 43, 55, 315. ŒCONOMUS, Is sometimes taken for an advocate or defender; as, summus secularium Œconomus & protector Ecclesiæ. Matt. Par. anno 1245.

ŒCONOMICUS, A word used for the executor of a last will and testament, as the person who had the œconomy or fiduciary disposal of the goods of the deceased. Hist. Dunelm. apud Whartoni Angl. Sacr. par. 1. pag. 784.

OFFENCE, delictum.] An act committed against a law, or omitted where the law requires it, and punishable by it. West. Symb. Offences are capital or not: capital, those for which the offender shall lose his life: not capital, where an offender may forfeit his lands and goods, be fined, or suffer corporal punishment, or both; but not loss of life. H. P. C. 2, 126, 134. Under capital Offences are comprehended high treason, petit treason, and felony. Offences not capital include the remaining part of the Pleas of the Crown, and come under the title of Misdemeanors. An Offence may be greater or less, according to the place wherein it is done. Finch 25. But the Offence will be in equal degree in them, who are equally tainted with it; and those who act and consent thereto, are alike offenders. 5 Rep. 80. See this Dictionary, title Misdemeanor.

OFFERINGS, Are reckoned among personal tithes, payable by custom to the parson or vicar of the parish, either occasionally, as at sacraments, marriages, christenings, churching of women, burials, &c. or at constant times, as at Easter, Christmas. See Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cc. 13, 20, 21. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 7. § 2, enforces the payment of Offerings according to the custom and place where they grow due. Vide Oblations.

By stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 13. § 10, all persons who ought to pay Offerings, shall yearly pay to the parson, vicar, proprietary, or their deputies, or farmers of the parishes where they dwell, at such four Offering-days as heretofore, within the space of four last years past, hath been accuftomed, and in default thereof fhall pay for their faid Offerings at Eafter following.

The four Offering-days are Chriftmas, Eafter, Whitfuntide, and the Feaft of the dedication of the parifh-church. Gibf. 739.

OFFERINGS OF THE KING. All Offerings made at the Holy Altar by the King and Queen are diftributed amongft the poor by the dean of the chapel: there are twelve days in the year called Offering Days, as to thefe Offerings, viz. Chriftmas, Eafter, Whitfunday, All Saints, New Year's Day, Twelfth Day, Candlemas, Annunciation, Afcenfion, Trinity Sunday, St. John Baptift, and Michaelmas Day: all which are high feftivals. Lex Conftitutionis, 184.

The Offering commonly made by James I. was a piece of gold, having on one fide the portrait of the King kneeling before the altar, with four crowns before him; and circumfcribed with this motto, Quid retribuam Domino pro omnibus quæ tribuit mihi? and on the other fide, a lamb lying near a lion, with this infcription, Cor contritum & humiliatum non defpiciet Deus. Ibid.

OFFERTORIUM, A piece of filk or fine linen, ufed to receive and wrap up the offerings or occafional oblations in the church. Statut. Eccl. S. Pauli, London, MS. fol. 39. Sometimes this word fignifies the offerings of the faithful; or the place where they are made or kept; fometimes the fervice at the time of facrament, the Offertory, &c. See Common Prayer in the Communion fervice.

OFFICE.

Officium.] That function by virtue whereof a man hath fome employment in the affairs of another, as of the King, or of another perfon. Cowell.

Offices are claffed, by Blackftone, among incorporeal hereditaments; and an Office is defined to be, a right to exercife a public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging; whether public as thofe of magiftrates, or private as of bailiffs, receivers, or the like. 2 Comm. c. 3. p. 36.

It is faid, that the word officium principally implies a duty, and in the next place the charge of fuch duty; and that it is a rule, that where one man hath to do with another's affairs againft his will, and without his leave, that this is an Office, and he who is in it is an officer. Carth. 478.

There is a difference between an Office and an employment, every Office being an employment; but there are employments which do not come under the denomination of Offices; fuch as an agreement to make hay, plough land, herd a flock, &c. which differ widely from that of fteward of a manor, &c. 2 Sid. 142.

By the ancient common law, officers ought to be honeft men, legal and fage, & qui melius fciant & poffint officio illi intendere; and this, fays Lord Coke, was the policy of prudent antiquity, that officers did ever give grace to the place, and not the place grace the officer. 2 Inft. 32, 456.

Officers are diftinguifhed into civil and military, according to the nature of their feveral trufts. Carth. 479.

Officers are public, or private; and it is faid, that every man is a public officer who hath any duty concerning the public; and he is not the lefs a public officer where his authority is confined to narrow limits; becaufe it is the duty of his Office, and the nature of that duty, which makes him a public officer, and not the extent of his authority. Carth. 479.

Alfo offices are diftinguifhed into ancient Offices, and thofe which are of a new creation; and herein it is obfervable, that conftant ufage hath not only fanctioned the firft eftablifhment of fuch ancient Offices as have exifted time out of mind, but alfo hath prefcribed and fettled the manner in which they have exifted and are to continue to exift; in what manner to be exercifed, how to be difpofed, &c. 9 Co. 97: Cro. Eliz. 636: 2 Roll. Abr. 182: Cro. Car. 513: 1 Show. 436.

There is alfo another diftinction of Offices into judicial and minifterial; the firft, relating to the adminiftration of juftice, or the actual exercife thereof, muft be executed by perfons of fufficient capacity, and by the perfons themfelves to whom they are granted; and herein alfo ancient ufage and cuftom muft govern. 1 Jon. 109: Dav. 35: 9 Co. 97.

I. Who hath a Right to create and grant, or affign an Office; and how and to whom; and of one Office being incident to, or compatible with, another.

II. Of the Offence of buying and felling an Office, and what Offices are prohibited to be thus difpofed of.

III. What Remedies a Perfon, having a Right to an Office, muft purfue, to be let into the Enjoyment of it, and how a Difturbance is punifhable.

IV. Of the Forfeiture of an Office; and where, for Corruption, Bribery, Extortion, and oppreffive Proceedings, Officers are punifhable.

I. The King is the univerfal Officer and difpofer of juftice within this realm, from whom all others are faid to be derived; yet he cannot create a new Office inconfiftent with our conftitution, or prejudicial to the Subject. 12 Co. 116: 1 Roll. Rep. 206: Carth. 478. See title King.

A man may have an eftate in Offices either to him and his heirs, or for life, or for a term of years, or during pleafure only; fave only that Offices of public truft cannot be granted for a term of years, efpecially if they concern the adminiftration of juftice, for then they might perhaps veft in executors or adminiftrators. 9 Rep. 97. Neither can any judicial Office be granted in reverfion, becaufe though the grantee may be able to perform it at the time of the grant, yet before the Office falls he may become unable and infufficient; but minifterial Offices may be fo granted, for thefe may be executed by deputy. 11 Rep. 4.

There are three things, fays Lord Coke, which have fair pretences, yet are mifchievous; 1ft, new Courts; 2d, new Offices; 3d, new Corporations for trade: and as to new Offices, either in Courts or out of them, thefe cannot be erected without act of parliament; for that, under the pretence of common good, they are exercifed to the intolerable grievance of the Subject. 2 Inft. 540.

An Office granted by letters patent for the fole making of all bills, informations, and letters miffive in the Council of York, was held unreafonable and void. 1 Jon. 231.

One Chute petitioned the King to erect a new Office for regiftering all ftrangers within the realm, except merchant merchant-strangers, and to grant the Office to the petitioner with or without a fee; and it was resolved by all the Judges, that the erection of such new Office for the benefit of a private person was against all law, of what nature soever. 1 Co. 116: and several cases there cited to this purpose.

The King cannot grant to any person to hold a Court of Equity, though he may grant tenere placita; for the dispensation of equity is a special trust committed to the King, and not by him to be intrusted with any other, except his Chancellor. Hob. 63.

The grant of an Office, generally, may be made to any person whom the King pleases, for the King has an interest in his Subject, and a right to his service; and therefore an information lies against him who refuses an Office being duly elected; and he shall not be excused for his neglect to qualify himself according to law. 1 Salk. 168. But see titles Dissenter; Papist.

A woman may be an officer. Thus the grant of any Office of government which may be exercised by deputy is good, as Regent of the kingdom; so of the Keeper of a castle, Forester, Gaoler, Commissioner of sewers, Sexton, and Overseer of the poor. See Com. Dig. title Officer (B). So an Office of inheritance may descend or be granted to a woman, as the Office of Earl-Marshal; Com. Dig.—or Lord Great Chamberlain of England. Bro. P. C.

Wherever one Office is incident to another, such incident Office is regularly grantable by him who hath the principal Office; and on this foundation it hath been held, that the King's grant of the Office of County-clerk was void, it being inseparably incident to the Office of Sheriff, and could not by any law or contrivance be taken away from him. 4 Co. 32. Mitton's case.

So the Office of chamberlain of the King's Bench prison is inseparably incident to the Office of marshal; therefore a grant of the Office of marshal, with a reservation of the Office of chamberlain, is void. 1 Salk. 439: 1 Leon. 320, 321.

So it hath been resolved, that the Office of Exigenter of London and other counties in England, is incident to the Office of Chief Justice of C. B. and therefore a grant thereof by the King, though in the vacancy of a Chief Justice, is null and void. Dyer 175. a. pl. 25: 1 And. 152: and see Show. Par. Ca. Sir Rowland Holt's case.

Lord Coke says, that the Justices of Courts did ever appoint their clerks, some of which after, by prescription, grew to be Officers in their Courts; and this right which they had of constituting their own officers, is further confirmed to them by stat. West. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 30. The reasons are; 1st, For that the law ever appoints those who have the greatest knowledge and skill to perform that which is to be done. 2dly, The officers and clerks are but to enter, inrol, or effect that which the Justices adjudge, award, or order; the insufficient doing whereof maketh the proceeding of the Justices erroneous; than which nothing can be more dishonourable and grievous to the Justices and prejudicial to the party. 2 Inst. 425: 4 Mod. 173.

If two offices are incompatible, by the acceptance of the latter, the first is relinquished and vacant; even though it should be a superior Office. 2 Term Rep. 81. The subsequent acceptance of an incompatible Office vacates that which was previously held, whether superior or inferior. See 2 Term Rep. 8: and Doug. in n. R. v. Godwin.

II. The taking or giving of a reward for Offices of a public nature is said to be bribery; and nothing can be more prejudicial to the good of the public, than to have places of the highest concern, (on the due execution whereof the happiness of both King and People depends,) disposed of, not to those who are most able to execute, but to those who are most able to pay for them; nor can any thing be a greater discouragement to industry and virtue, than to see those places of trust and honour, which ought to be the rewards of those who by their industry have qualified themselves for them, conferred on such who have no other recommendation but that of being highest bidders; neither can any thing be a greater temptation to officers to abuse their power by bribery and extortion, and other acts of injustice, than the consideration of the great expences they were at in gaining their places, and the necessity of sometimes straining a point, to make their bargain answer their expectations. 2 Inst. 148: 1 Hawk. P. C. It is said to be malum in se, and indictable at common law. Noy 102: Moor 781.

For which reasons, among many others, it is expresly enacted by stat. 12 R. 2. c. 2, that the chancellor, treasurer, keeper of the Privy seal, steward of the King's house, the King's chamberlain, clerk of the rolls of the justices of the one Bench and of the other, barons of the Exchequer, and all others who shall be called to ordain, name, or make justices of the peace, sheriffs, escheators, customers, comptrollers, or any other officer or minister of the King, shall be firmly sworn that they shall not ordain, name, or make any of the above-mentioned officers for any gift or brokage, favour or affection; nor that none who sueth by himself, or by others, privily or openly, to be in any manner of Office, shall be put in the same Office, or in any other; but that they make all such officers and ministers of the best and most lawful men, and sufficient, to their estimation and knowledge.

And by stat. 4 H. 4. c. 5, it is enacted, that no Sheriff shall let his bailiwick to farm to any man for the time he occupieth such Office.

But the principal statute relating to this matter is stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 16; whereby it is enacted, "That if any person bargain or sell any Office, or deputation of any Office, or any part of any of them, or receive any money, fee, &c. directly or indirectly, or take any promise, &c. to receive any money, &c. directly or indirectly, for any Office, or for the deputation of any office, or any part of any of them; or to the intent that any person should have, exercise, or enjoy any office, or the deputation of any Office, or any part of any of them, which shall in anywise concern the administration or execution of justice, or the receipt, &c. of any of the King's treasure, &c. or the keeping of any of the King's towns, &c. being for a place of strength and defence; or which shall concern or touch any clerkship to be occupied in any manner of Court of record wherein justice is to be ministered; that then every person that shall so offend shall not only lose and forfeit all his and their right, interest, and estate, in or to any of the said Office or Offices, &c. but also persons who shall give give or pay any sum of money, &c. or shall make any promise, &c. shall immediately be adjudged a disabled person in the law to all intents and purposes to have, &c. the said Office, &c.

" It is further enacted, That bargains, sales, promises, bonds, agreements, covenants, and assurances shall be void to and against him and them by whom any such bargain, &c. shall be made.

" Provided always, That this act shall not extend to any Office whereof any person is seised of any estate of inheritance, nor to any Office of parkership, or of the keeping of any park house, manor, garden, chase, or forest, or to any of them.

" It is also provided, That this act shall not be prejudicial to the Chief Justices of the King's Bench or Common Pleas, or the Justices of assise; but that they may do in every behalf, concerning any Office to be given or granted by them, as they might have done before the making this act."

In the construction of this last mentioned statute, the following opinions have been holden:

The Office of Chancellor, Registrar, and Commissary in Ecclesiastical Courts are within the meaning of the statute; inasmuch as these Courts do not only determine matters which are brought before them pro salute animæ, but also have the decision of disputes concerning the lawfulness of matrimony, and legitimation of children, which touch the inheritance of the Subject; and also hold plea of legacies and tithes, &c. in which respects they are Courts of justice. Cro. Jac. 269: 3 Inst 148: 12 Co. 78: Salk. 468: 3 Lev. 237: 2 Vent. 1?7, 267.

Offices in fee are out of the statute; for if the King be seised in fee of a bailiwick, and he demise the same to A. who demises to B. rendering, &c. the demise to B. is not within the statute; for Offices in fee being excepted out of the statute, under leases of such Offices are also excepted inclusively. 2 Lev. 151.

The place of cofferer is within this statute, and a person having once purchased this place is for ever disabled to enjoy the same; and the King is bound by this statute, and could not dispense with it by any non obstante. 3 Bulst. 91: Co Lit. 234: Cro. Jac. 385.

The sale of a bailiwick of a hundred is not within the statute, for such an offence doth not concern the administration of justice, nor is it an Office of trust. 4 Leon. 33: 4 Mod. 223.

A seat in the Six-clerks' Office is not within the statute, being a ministerial Office only; and they are but under clerks, who have so much a sheet for copying, &c. but one Judge held it not saleable at common law for the following reasons: 1st, Discouragement of merit and industry. 2dly, It occasions extortion and exaction of excessive fees. 3dly, From its being a great charge to suitors. 4thly, It exempts the persons, who enter, by these means, in a great measure, from the due regulations under which they ought to be; for they are not so easily removed, as if they were at the will of him who hath the disposal of them. Pasch. 26 Car. 2. in C. B. Sparrow v. Reynolds.

This statute doth not extend to military officers; and stat. 7 W. & M. which requires, that every commission officer, before his commission is registered, should take the oath there mentioned, that he had not directly or indirectly given any thing for procuring the commission but the usual fees, extended only to horse, foot, and dragoons, but not to the marines. Preced. Chanc. 199.

The sale of the deputation of the Office of Provost-Marshal of Jamaica is not within this statute, because this statute does not extend to the plantations. 4 Mod. 222: Salk. 411: 2 Mod. 45. S. P. undetermined; and there said arguendo, that so good a law should have as extensive a construction as possible.

In a writ on a judgment in Ireland, it was held clearly that the Office of clerk of the Crown, and clerk of the peace, was within the statute; but that this law did not extend to Ireland, not being enacted there. Trin. 9 Geo. 2. in B. R. Maccarty v. Wickford.

One who makes a contract for an Office, contrary to the purport of this statute, is so far disabled to hold the same that he cannot at any time during life be restored to a capacity of holding it by any grant or dispensation whatsoever. Hob. 75: Co. Lit. 234: Cro. Car. 361: Cro. Jac. 386.

Where an Office is within the statute, and the salary is certain, if the principal make a deputation, reserving a lesser sum out of the salary, it is good; so if the profits be uncertain arising from fees, if the principal make a deputation, reserving a certain sum out of the fees and profits of the Office, it is good: for in these cases the deputy by his constitution is in place of his principal, yet he has no right to his fees, they still continue to be the principal's; so that as to him it is only reserving a part of his own, and giving away the rest to another; but where the reservation or agreement is not to pay out of the profits, but to pay generally a certain sum, it must be paid at all events; and a bond for performance of such agreement is void by the statute. Salk. 468: 6 Mod. 234: Comb. 356.

This being a public law, the judges ex officio are to take notice of it, but yet it seems the more regular and safe way to plead it: but it hath been resolved, that a person in pleading this statute need not alledge that the party against whom it is pleaded is not within any of the provisoes or exceptions in the statute; but that if he be, it must come on his side to shew it. Trin. 9 Geo. 2. in B. R. Maccarty v. Wickford. Sed quære? Also vide 2 And. 55, 107: Ld. Raym. 1245.

III. It is held clearly, that an assise lay at common law for an Office, and that therefore though the statute of West. 2. 13 Ed. 1. st. 1. c. 25, speaks only of Offices in fee, yet an assise lies for an Office in tail, or for life; but this is to be understood of Offices of profit, for of an Office of charge and no profit an assise doth not lie. 8 Co. 47. a: 2 Inst. 412.

But a man shall not have an assise of the whole Office, unless he be disseised of the whole; yet if a man be disseised of parcel of the profits of an Office, he may have an assise for that parcel only. 8 Co. 49. b: 2 Inst. 412.

In an assise for an Office newly erected and constituted, the demandant in his plaint must shew what fee or profit is granted for the exercise thereof; for this Office cannot have a fee or profit appurtenant to it, as an ancient Office may, and for an Office without fee or profit no assise lies. 8 Co. 49.

But in assise for an ancient Office, the demandant in his plaint need not shew what fee or profit is belonging to to it, for it shall be intended there is some fee or profit. 8 Co. 49.

In an assise for an Office, the demandant must shew a seisin; but it hath been held, that taking 3*d.* for a capias against B. is sufficient seisin of the office of Filazer de banco. 1 Roll. Abr. 270.

Also in an assise for an Office, the demandant in his patent must set forth a title. 3 Mod. 273.

An assise lies for the Office of Registrar of the Admiralty; for though their proceedings are according to the civil law, yet the right of their Office is determinable at the common law: so of the mastership of an hospital, being a lay fee. 8 Co. 47: 2 Inst. 412: 11 Co. 99. b: Dyer 152.

A man may bring an action on the case for the profits of an Office, though he never had seisin. 1 Mod. 122. And, in general, an action by a person claiming an Office against the person in actual possession, and receiving the fees, is now perhaps the most eligible method that can be pursued to try the question of right.

If the King grant the Office of Comptroller of the customs to A. and B. durante beneplacito, and A. dies, and afterwards the King grants the said Office to C. and yet B. under pretence of survivorship, exercises the said Office, and receives the profits thereof; C. may have an indebitatus assumpsit for so much money had and received to his use. 2 Mod. 260. See 2 Lev. 108: 1 Mod. 122: and further, title Mandamus.

IV. It is laid down in general, that if an officer acts contrary to the nature and duty of his Office, or if he refuses to act at all, that in these cases the Office is forfeited. 11 Ed. 4. 1. b: 2 Roll. Abr. 155.

But herein it will be necessary to consider more minutely what shall be said to be such acts as are contrary to the duty of his Office; and how far the same (whether they are acts of omission or commission) amount to a forfeiture; wherein it hath been clearly agreed, that a gaoler by suffering voluntary escapes, by abusing his prisoners, by extorting unreasonable fees from them, or by detaining them in gaol after having been legally discharged and paid their just fees, forfeits his Office; for that in the grant of every Office it is implied, that the grantee execute it faithfully and diligently. Co. Litt. 233: 9 Co. 50: 3 Mod. 143.

If a gaoler leave his prison door unlocked, and the prisoners escape, it is not only a negligent but a voluntary escape. Cro. Car. 492.

But it is held, that one negligent escape is not a forfeiture, though a voluntary one is, but that two negligent escapes amount to a forfeiture. 39 Hen. 6. 33: 2 Roll. Abr. 195: 2 Vern. 173: and see stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 27; this Dictionary, title Gaoler.

There are, says Lord Coke, three causes of forfeiture or seizure of Offices by matter in deed. 1st, By abuser. 2dly, Non-user. 3dly, Refusal.

1st, Abuser; as by a marshal or other gaoler's permitting escapes.

2dly, By Non-user; in which there is this difference, when the Office concerns the administration of justice or the commonwealth, the officer ex officio ought to attend without request, there by non-user or non-attendance the Office is forfeited; but where an officer is not obliged to attend, but upon demand or request made by him whose officer he is, there without such demand or request there can be no forfeiture; and herein also Lord Coke in another place takes the following diversity, viz. that non-user, of itself, without some special damage, is no forfeiture of private Offices, but that it is otherwise of a public one, which concerns the administration of justice.

3dly, As to refusal, he says, that in all cases where an officer is bound upon request to exercise his Office, if he does not do it upon request, he forfeits it; as if the steward of a manor be requested by the lord to hold a Court, if he does not do it, it is a forfeiture. 6 Co. 50: Co. Litt. 233. b.

If conditions in law, which are annexed to Offices, be not observed and fulfilled, the Office is lost for ever, for these conditions are as strong and binding as express conditions; therefore if the Office of forester, &c. descend to an infant or feme covert, (where by law they may so descend,) and these are not exercised by sufficient deputies, they become forfeited. Co. Litt. 233. b: 8 Co. 44: Cro. Car. 556: Hard. 11.

Insufficiency is an original incapacity which creates the forfeiture of an Office; so if a superior puts in a deputy into an Office, which may be exercised by deputy, who is ignorant and unskilful, this is a forfeiture of the Office. 4 Mod. 29. arguendo.

If the King grants an Office in any of the Courts at Westminster, the judges may remove an officer for insufficiency, and they are the proper judges of his abilities. 4 Mod. 30. arguendo. Where an officer may be removed, but not abridged of his fee, see 1 Roll. Rep. 82-3.

A Filazer of C. B. being absent two years, and having farmed out his Office from year to year, without licence of the Court, was discharged by the Chief Justice, ex assensu sociorum suorum, by word, spoken openly in Court; and though there was no record made of the discharge, nor no legal summons for him to answer to any accusation, yet the discharge was held good. Dyer 114. b. pl. 64: 1 Roll. Abr. 155.

An officer was turned out, because that he spoliavit quaedam recorda contra officii sui debitum; and it was objected, 1st, That it was not certain enough, because not shewn what records; to which the Court answered, that it would be prolix, and then he having spoiled the records, they are not perhaps to be had. 2dly, That it may be he did it by chance, and not wilfully; to which the Court said, that the conclusion contra officii sui debitum includes that. 1 Keb. 597.

But if the King grants an Office which concerns trust and diligence to two, and one is attainted, the entire Office is forfeited to the King; for he cannot make one occupy in common with another. Plow. 180.

Wherever an officer, who holds his Office by patent, commits a forfeiture, he cannot regularly be turned out without a scire facias, nor can he be said to be completely ousted or discharged without a writ of discharge; for his right appearing of record, the same must be defeated by matter of as high a nature. But for this see Dyer 155, 198, 211: 9 Co. 98: Co. Litt. 233: Cro. Car. 60, 61: 1 Sid. 81, 134: 8 Co. 44. b: 1 Roll. Abr. 580: 3 Mod. 325: 3 Lev. 288.

All officers are punishable for corruption and oppressive proceedings, according to the nature of the offence, either by indictment, attachment, action at the suit of the party injured, loss of their Office, &c. 6 Mod. 96.

But

But besides the punishment by indictment, &c. all Courts of record have a discretionary power over their officers, and are to see that no abuses are committed by them, which may bring disgrace on the Courts themselves: the Court of King's Bench, by the plenitude of its power, exercises a superintendency over all inferior Courts; and may grant an attachment against the judges of such Courts for oppressive, unjust, or irregular practice, contrary to the obvious rules of natural justice. Dyer 218: Palm. 564: 1 Salk. 210.

As to extortion by officers, it is so odious, (being more heinous, as Lord Coke says, than robbery, as it is usually attended with the aggravating sin of perjury,) that it is punishable at common law by fine and imprisonment, and also by removal from the Office in the execution whereof it was committed; and is defined to be, the taking of money, by any officer, by colour of his Office, either where none is due, or not so much is due, or where it is not yet due. Co. Litt. 368. b: 2 Inst. 209: 10 Co. 102: 2 Roll. Abr. 32, 57: Cro. Car. 438, 448: Raym. 315.

But the stated and known fees allowed by the Courts of justice to their respective officers, for their labour and trouble, are not restrained by the Common Law, or by the statute of Westm. 1. Therefore such fees may be legally demanded, without danger of extortion. 21 Hen 7. 17: Co. Litt. 368. See further this Dictionary, titles Extortion; Fees; Bribery.

In general, all wilful breaches of the duty of an Office are forfeitures of it, and punishable by fine, &c. for since every Office is instituted, not for the sake of the officer, but for the good of some other, nothing can be more just than that he, who either neglects or refuses to answer the end for which his Office was ordained, should give way to others who are both able and willing to take care of it, and that he should be punished for his neglect or oppressive execution; but the particular instances wherein a man may be said to act contrary to the duty of his Office, though various, are yet so generally obvious, that it is needless to enumerate them. Co. Litt. 233, 234.

OFFICE FOUND, Is where an inquisition is made to the King's use, of any thing by virtue of his Office who inquireth, and it is found by the inquisition. In this signification it is used in stat. 33 H. 8. c. 20. Staundford's Prærog. pag. 60; where to traverse an Office, is to traverse an inquisition taken of Office; and to return an Office, is to return that which is found by virtue of the Office. Kitch. 177.

There are two kinds of Offices issuing out of the Exchequer by commission, viz. an Office to entitle the King in the thing inquired of, and an Office of instruction. 6 Rep. 52. The Office of entitling doth vest the estate and possession of the land, &c. in the King, who had therein before only a right or title; as where an alien purchases lands, a person is attaint of felony, or the like; and the other Office is where land is vested and settled before in the King, but the particulars thereof do not appear upon record. 4 Rep. 58: Plowd. 484. The effect of this Office is, that the King, from the time of finding, shall be answered the profits without entry, &c. 5 Rep. 32: 10 Rep. 115. If any Office be wrongfully found, those who are grieved may be relieved by a traverse, or monstrans de droit, by pleading or petition; for every Office is in nature of a declaration, to which any man may plead, and either deny or confess, &c. Plowd. 448: Bro. 506. Where Offices are found before the escheators, they must be delivered by indenture under the hands and seals of the jurors. Dyer 170. See title Inquest of Office.

OFFICIAL, officialis] In the ancient civil law, signifies him who is the minister of, or attendant upon, a magistrate. In the canon law, it is he to whom any bishop generally commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction; and in this sense there is one in every diocese called Officialis Principalis, whom the law styles Chancellor; and the rest, if there are more, are by the canonists termed Officiales foranei, but by us Commissaries. In our statutes, this word signified properly him whom the archdeacon substitutes for the executing his jurisdiction. The archdeacon hath an Official or church-lawyer to assist him, who is judge of the archdeacon's Court. Wood's Inst. 30, 505.

OFFICIARIS NON FACIENDIS VEL AMOVENDIS, A writ directed to the magistrates of a corporation, requiring them not to make such a man an officer, or to put one out of the Office he hath, until inquiry is made of his manners, &c. Reg. Orig. 126.

OFFICIUM CURTAGII PANNORUM, Granted to William Osborne, anno 2 Ed. 2. Extract. Fin. Cancell.

OIL. The lord mayor of London, and the master and wardens of the tallow-chandlers' company, are to search all Oils brought to London; and if any is deceitfully mixed, they may throw it away, and punish the offenders: and head officers in corporations have like power. Stat. 3 Hen. 8. cap. 14.

OLD JURY, Vetus Judaismus.] The place or street where the Jews lived in London. See Jews.

OLD STILE; See Year.

OLERON LAWS, Uliarenses Leges.] The laws of King Rich. I. relating to maritime affairs, so called, because made by him when he was at Oleron; which is an island lying in the bay of Acquitain, at the mouth of the river Charent, and now belongs to the French King. Co. Litt. 260. These laws are recorded in the Black Book of the Admiralty, and are accounted the most excellent composition of Sea Laws in the world. See Selden's Mare Clausum, 222, 254: 1 Comm. 418: 4 Comm. 423: and this Dictionary, title Navy.

OLYMPIAD, Olympias.] An account of time among the Greeks, consisting of four complete years, having its name from the Olympic games, which were kept every fourth year, in honour of Jupiter Olympius, near the city city of Olympia; when they entered the names of the conquerors on public records. The first Olympiad began in the year 3938 of the Julian period, 505 years after the taking of Troy, 776 before the birth of Christ, and 24 years before the founding of Rome. Æthelred, King of the English Saxons, computed his reign by Olympiads. Spelm.

OMISSIONS, Are placed among crimes and offences; and Omission to hold a Court-leet, or not swearing officers therein, &c. is a cause of forfeiture. Omissions in law proceedings render them vicious and defective; vide title Amendment; Office.

ONCUNNE, Sax. On cunnen.] Accusatus. Leg. Alfred, c. 29.

ONERANDO PRO RATA PORTIONIS, A writ that lies for a joint-tenant, or tenant-in-common, who is distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land comes to. Reg. Orig. 182. See title Joint-tenants.

O. NI. It is the course of the Exchequer, as soon as the Sheriff enters into and makes up his account for issues, amerciaments, and mean profits, to mark upon each head O. Ni; which denotes Oneratur Nisi habeat sufficientem exonerationem, and presently he becomes the King's debtor, and a debet is set upon his head; whereupon the parties paravaile become debtors to the Sheriff, and are discharged against the King, &c. 4 Inst. 116. See title Sheriff.

ONUS EPISCOPALE, Ancient customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, of synodals, pentecostals, &c. See Episcopalia.

ONUS IMPORTANDI, The charge or burden of importing merchandise, mentioned in the stat. 13 Car. 2.

ONUS PROBANDI, The burden of proving: upon whom it shall be imposed, see title Evidence.

OPEN LAW, Lex Manifesta.] The making or waging of law; which bailiffs may not put men to, upon the bare assertion, except they have witnesses to prove the truth of it. Magna Charta, c. 21.

OPEN THEFT, Sax. Opentheof.] A theft that is manifest. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 13.

OPEN TIDE, The time after corn is carried out of the common fields. Brit.

OPERARII, Such tenants, under feodal tenures, who had some little portions of land by the duty of performing many bodily labours and servile works for their lord, being no other than the servi and bondmen: they are mentioned in several ancient surveys of manors.

OPERATIO, One day's work performed by a tenant for his lord. Paroch. Antiq. 320.

OPPOSER, An officer belonging to the Green Wax in the Exchequer. See Exchequer.

OPPRESSION, In a private sense, is the trampling upon or bearing down one, on pretence of law, which is unjust: but where the law is known and clear, though it appear hard or unequitable, the judges must determine according to that. Vaugh. 37. As to the remedy for the Oppression of the Crown, see title King, V. 2.

OPTION, When a new suffragan bishop is consecrated by the Archbishop of the province, by a customary prerogative the Archbishop claims the collation of the first vacant dignity or benefice in that see, at his own choice; which is called his Option. Cowell. See title Bishops.

OPTIONAL WRIT. A præcipe is an Optional writ, i. e. it is in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or shew the reason wherefore he hath not done it. There is another species of original writs called Peremptory, or a Si fecerit te securum, from the words of the writ, which directs the Sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in Court, without any Option given him, provided the plaintiff gives the Sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. 3 Comm. 274. See titles Original; Writ.

ORA, A Saxon money or coin, valued at sixteen pence, and sometimes, according to variation of the standard, at twenty pence. The word often occurs in Domesday, and the laws of King Canutus.

ORANDO PRO REGE ET REGNO, An ancient writ. Before the Reformation, while there was no standing collect for a sitting parliament, when the Houses of Parliament were met, they petitioned the King that he would require the bishops and clergy to pray for the peace and good government of the realm, and for a continuance of the good understanding between his Majesty and the Estates of the kingdom; and accordingly the writ De Orando pro Rege & Regno was issued, which was common in the time of King Edw. III. Nichols. Engl. Hist. par. 3. p. 66.

ORARIUM, The hem or border of a garment. Cowell.

ORBIS, A bonney, a swelling or knot in the flesh, caused by a blow. Bract. lib. 3. title De Corona, cap. 23. num. 2.

ORCHARDS AND GARDENS. Robbing them, or destroying trees in them, how punished, see stat. 43 Eliz. c. 7: 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. The Hundred answerable for the damages. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. § 7. See Gardens.

ORCHEL, or ORCHAL, mentioned in stats. 1 Ric. 3. c. 8: 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 2. Seems to be a kind of stone like allum, which dyers use in their colours. It is among the articles liable to a duty on importation.

ORDEAL, or ORDAL, Saxon, compounded of or, magnum, and deal, or dele, judicium; or as others, from or, privative, and del, part, that is, expers criminis, or Not guilty.] An ancient manner of trial in criminal cases; for when an offender being arraigned pleaded Not guilty, he might choose whether he would put himself for trial upon God and the country, by twelve men, as at this day, or upon God only; and then it was called The Judgment of God, presuming that he would deliver the innocent. Terms de Ley: 9 Rep. 32.

This trial, according to Blackstone, arose from the superstition of our Saxon ancestors, who, like other northern nations, were extremely addicted to divination; they therefore invented this among the methods of purgation or trial to preserve innocence from the danger of false witnesses, and in consequence of a notion that God would always interpose miraculously to vindicate the guiltless. 4 Comm. 342.

There were of this, two sorts, one by fire, another by water. Of these see Lambard, in his Explication of Saxon Words, verbo ordalium: Holingshed, fol. 98, and Hotoman especially, Disput. de Feud. p. 41. See Skene de verbor. Significat. verbo Machainum.

This seems to have been in use in the time of Henry the Second, as appeareth by Glanville, lib. 14. cap. 1, 2.

See also Verstegan, c. 3. pag. 63, &c. and Hoveden 556. This Ordalian law was condemned by Pope Stephen the Second, and afterwards totally abolished here by Parliament, as appears by Rot. Paten. de anno 2 Hen. 3. membr. 5: Cowell. Vide Leg Edw. Confess. cap. 9. Blackstone says, Ordeal was abolished in our Courts of justice, by an act of parliament in 3 H. 3. according to Coke; or rather by an order of the King in council. See 4 Comm. 344, 5: and 9 Rep. 32: 1 Rym Fœd. 228: Spelm. Gloss. 326: 2 Pryn Rec. Ap. 20: Seld. Eadm. fol 48. According to the record in Spelman, it appears that the order of council alluded to the trial by Ordeal, as condemned by the Church of Rome; and substituted the punishment of imprisonment, abjuration of the realm, and security for good behaviour in the case of suspicion of certain crimes specified.

The water Ordeal was performed either in hot or cold: in cold water, the parties suspected were adjudged innocent, if their bodies were not borne up by the water contrary to the course of nature; in hot water, they were to put their bare arms or legs into scalding water, which if they brought out without hurt, they were taken to be innocent of the crime.

Those that were tried by the fire ordeal, passed barefooted and blindfold over nine hot glowing plowshares; or were to carry burning irons in their hands, usually of one pound weight, which was called Simple Ordeal; or of two pounds, which was duplex; or of three pounds weight, which was triplex ordalium; and accordingly as they escaped, they were judged innocent or guilty, acquitted or condemned; this fire Ordeal was for freemen, and persons of better condition; and the water Ordeal for bondmen and rustics. Glanv. lib. 4. c. 1.

And the horrible trial by fire Ordeal, in the first degree, Queen Emma, mother of Edward the Confessor, is said to have undergone on a suspicion of her chastity; though the truth of the story is now, we believe, nearly exploded.

Both sorts of Ordeal might be performed by deputy, but the principal was to answer for the success of the trial; the deputy only venturing some corporal pain for hire, or perhaps for friendship. 4 Comm. 342, 3.

ORDEFFE, or ORDELFE, effossio metalli, from the Saxon ore, metallum, and delfan, effodere.] A word often used in charters of privileges; signifying a liberty, whereby a man claims the ore found in his own ground; but properly is the ore lying under ground. A delfe of coal, is coal lying in veins under ground, before it is dug up. Cowell.

ORDELS, Oaths and Ordels, was part of the privileges and immunities granted in old charters, meaning the right of administering oaths, and adjudging ordeal trials, within such a precinct or liberty. Cowell.

ORDERS, Are of several sorts, and by divers Courts; as of the Chancery, King's Bench, &c. Orders of the Court of Chancery, either of course or otherwise, are obtained on the petition or motion of one of the parties in a cause, or of some other interested in or affected by it; and they are sometimes made on hearings, sometimes by consent of parties. They are to be pronounced in open Court, and drawn up by the Registrar from his notes; and if there be any difficulty in adjusting the notes, a summons is given by the Registrar for the clerk or solicitor of the other side to attend, whereupon they are settled, or the Court is applied to if it cannot be otherwise done: before the Orders are entered and passed by the Registrar, the other side hath four days allowed to object against them, for which purpose copies are delivered; and when they are perfected, they are to be served on the parties, or the clerk or solicitor employed by them. If an Order is of course, the solicitor usually draws up the notes or minutes, and gives them to the Registrar's clerk, to draw up the Order from; and when the Order is drawn up, it is to be entered by the entering clerk, which must be within eight days from the pronouncing; then the Registrar passes and signs it, after which is the service, &c. For not obeying an Order, personally served, a party may be committed. See the Books of Practice.

ORDERS OF THE COURT OF KING'S BENCH, Rules made by the Court in causes there depending; which when drawn up and entered by the clerk of the Rules, become Orders of the Court. 2 Lill. 261.

See Sir George Cooke's Rules and Orders in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, and Cases in Practice, 2 vols. 8vo. a very excellent work, from which many things in our modern books of practice are taken, though the authors have seldom been so ingenuous as to acknowledge from whence they were taken, or to refer to any authorities, in many of those instances. And see also this Dictionary, title Motion.

ORDERS OF JUSTICES OF PEACE, or of the SESSIONS; See Justices of the Peace; Sessions.

ORDINALE, A book which contains the manner of performing divine offices, in quo ordinatur modus, &c.

ORDINANCE, ordinatio.] Is a law, decree, or statute, variously used.

ORDINANCE OF THE FOREST, ordinatio forestæ.] A statute made touching matters and causes of the forest, anno 34 Ed. 1. st. 5.

ORDINANCE OF PARLIAMENT, Is said to be the same with Act of parliament; for in the Parliament-Rolls acts of parliament are often called Ordinances, and Ordinances, Acts; but originally there seems to be this difference between them; that an Ordinance was but a temporary act, by way of prohibition, which the Commons might alter or amend at their pleasure; and an act of parliament is a perpetual law, not to be altered but by King, Lords, and Commons. Rot. Parl. 37 Ed 3: Pryn on 4 Inst. 13. Coke says, that an Ordinance of Parliament is to be distinguished from an act; inasmuch as the latter can be only made by the King and the three Estates, whereas the former is by one or two of them. Co. Litt. See Statute.

ORDINARY, ordinarius.] A civil-law term, for any judge who hath authority to take cognizance of causes in his own right, and not by deputation; by the common law it is taken for him who hath Ordinary or exempt and immediate jurisdiction in causes ecclesiastical. Co. Litt. 344: Stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. st. 1. c. 19.

This name is applied to a Bishop who hath original jurisdiction; and an Archbishop is the Ordinary of the whole province, to visit and receive appeals from inferior jurisdictions, &c. 2 Inst. 398: 9 Rep. 41: Wood's Inst. 25.—The word Ordinary is also used for every commissary or official of the bishop, or other ecclesiastical judge having having judicial power; an archdeacon is an Ordinary; and Ordinaries may grant administration of intestates' estates, &c. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 11: 9 Rep. 36. But the bishop of the diocese is the true and only Ordinary to certify excommunications, lawfulness of marriage, and such ecclesiastical and spiritual acts to the judges of the common law; for he is the person to whom the Court is to write in such things. 2 Shep. Abr. 472.

For the Ordinary's power, it is declared by many statutes; as relating to visiting hospitals, by stat. 2 H. 5. st. 1. c. 1. The certifying of bastardy, &c. Stat. 9 H. 6. c. 11. Concerning questions of tithes, that shall come in debate before him. Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 20. Allowance of school-masters, &c. Stats. 23 Eliz. c. 1: 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. If a man may keep a school without licence of the Ordinary, see Ld. Raym. 603: and this Dictionary, title Schoolmaster. And the authority of Ordinaries in general is restored, by stat. 13 Car. 2 st. 1. c. 12.

The Ordinary's power and interest in a church is of admitting, instituting, and inducting parsons; of seeing and taking care that it be provided with a pastor, by the patron who has the right of presenting; or in his default to bestow the church on some proper person to serve the cure, &c. 1 Roll. Rep. 453. Before presentation to a church, the Ordinary may sequester the profits; and during the vacation, it is said, he may make a lease. 1 Keb. 370. When the Ordinaries or their ministers have committed extortion or oppression, they may be indicted, putting the things in certain, and in what manner, &c. 25 Ed 3. st. 3. c. 9.

Formerly clerks accused of crimes were delivered to the Ordinary, and the bodies of such clerks kept in the Ordinary's prison until tried before him by a jury of twelve clerks; and if condemned, they were liable to no greater punishment than degradation, loss of goods, and the profits of their lands; unless they had been guilty of apostacy, &c. This was when they had the privilege of being tried only by ecclesiastical judges; which was so far indulged them, that after they had been once delivered to the Ordinary, they could not be remanded to any temporal Court, until the stat. 8 Eliz. c. 4. See this Dictionary, title Clergy, Benefit of.

No ornaments can be set up in a church without consent of the Ordinary. 1 Stran. 576: see 9 Co. 36; and stats. Westm. 2. cap. 19: 31 E. 3. c. 11: 21 H. 8. cap. 5: 2 Inst. cap. 19. ORDINARY OF NEWGATE, The clergyman who is attendant in ordinary upon condemned malefactors in that prison, to prepare them for death; and who records the behaviour of those unhappy culprit.

ORDINATIONE CONTRA SERVIENTES, A writ that lay against a servant for leaving his master contrary to the statute. Reg. Orig. 189.

ORDINATION OF THE CLERGY. By common law, a deacon of any age might be instituted and inducted to a parsonage or vicarage: but now, by statute, no man is capable of taking any ecclesiastical benefice with cure, promotion, or dignity, unless he be ordained a priest, to qualify him for the same. A clerk is to be twenty-three years old, and have deacon's orders, before he can be admitted into any share of the ministry: and a priest must be twenty-four years of age, before he shall be admitted into orders to preach, or to administer the sacraments; but the archbishop may dispense with one to be made deacon at what age he pleases, though he cannot with one who is to be made a priest. See stats. 13 Eliz. c. 12; 13 & 14 C. 2. c. 4.

Deacons and priests are to be ordained only on the four Sundays immediately following the Ember Weeks, except on urgent occasions; and it is to be done in the cathedral or parish church where the bishop resides, in time of divine service, and in the presence of the archdeacon, dean, and two prebendaries, or of four other grave divines. And no bishop shall admit any person into orders, without a title or assurance of being provided for; and before any are admitted, the bishop shall examine them in the presence of the ministers, who assist him at the imposition of hands; on pain, if he admits any not qualified, &c. of being suspended by the archbishop from making either deacons or priests for two years. Can. 31, 34.

If any impediment be objected against one who is to be made either priest or deacon, at the time he is to be ordained, the bishop is bound to surcease from ordaining him, until he shall be found clear of that impediment; and it is generally held, that whatever are good causes of deprivation, are also sufficient causes to deny admission to orders; as incontinency, drunkenness, illiterature, perjury, forgery, simony, heresy, outlawry, bastardy, &c. 2 Inst. 631: 5 Rep. A person to be ordained priest, must bring a testimonial of four persons, known to the bishop, of his life and doctrine; and be able to give an account of his faith in Latin: and a deacon is not to be made a priest, unless he produce to the bishop such a testimonial of his life, &c. and that he hath been found faithful and diligent in executing the office of a deacon.

A bishop shall not make any one deacon and minister on the same day; for there must be some time to try the behaviour of a deacon in his office, before he is admitted to the order of priesthood, which time is generally a year, but it may be shorter, on reasonable cause allowed by the bishop; priests and deacons are not only to subscribe the thirty-nine articles, but take the oath of the King's supremacy, &c. as directed and altered by stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 1, 8. A priest by his ordination receives authority to preach the word, and administer the Holy Sacraments, &c. But he may not preach without licence from the bishop, archbishop, or one of the universities.

The stat. 31 Eliz. cap. 6, punishes corrupt Ordination of priests, &c. (which, says Blackstone, seems to be the true, though not the common notion of Simony). If any persons shall take any reward, or other profit, to make and ordain a minister, or to license him to preach, they shall by this statute forfeit 40*l*. and the party so ordained, &c. 10*l*.; and be incapable of any ecclesiastical preferment for seven years afterwards. See further titles Parson; Clergy.

ORDINES, A general chapter, or other solemn convention of the religious of such a particular order. Paroch. Antiq. p. 576.

ORDINES MAJORES ET MINORES, The holy orders of priest, deacon, and subdeacon, any of which did qualify for presentation and admission to an ecclesiastical ecclesiastical dignity or cure were called Ordines majores and the inferior orders of chantor, psalmist, ostiary, reader, exorcist, and acolyte were called Ordines minores; for which the persons so ordained had their prima tonsura different from the tonsura clericalis. Cowell.

ORDINUM FUGITIVI, Signified those of the religious who deserted their houses, and throwing off the habits, renounced their particular order, in contempt of their oath and other obligations. Paroch. Antiq. 388.

ORDNANCE, Letters patent for making it, are not within the statute of monopolies, 21 Jac. 1. c. 3. § 10.

ORDO, That rule which the monks were obliged to observe. Eadmer. vita S. Anselmi, 3.

ORDO ALBUS, The White Friars, or Augustines; the Cistercians also wore white.

ORDO NIGER, The Black Friars. Ingulphus, p. 851. The Cluniacs likewise wore black. Mat. Paris, 321, 514.

ORFGILD, or CHEAPGELD, from Sax. orf, pecus, and gild, solutio vel redemptio.] A delivery or restitution of cattle. But Lambard says, it is a restitution made by the hundred, or county, for any wrong done by one who was in pledge; or rather a penalty for taking away cattle. Lamb. Arch. 125.

ORFRAIES, aurifrisium.] A sort of cloth of gold, frizled or embroidered, formerly made and used in England, worn by our Kings and nobility; and the clothes of the King's guards were called Orfraies, because adorned with such works of gold. Mention is made of these Orfraies in the Records of the Tower.

ORGALLOUS, More truly Orguillous, that is, proud and high minded, derived from the French orgueil, pride. 4 Inst. 89.

ORGEYS, mentioned in stat. 31 E. 3. st. 3. c. 2; is the greatest sort of North-sea fish (for the statute says they are greater than lob fish); which we call organ-ling, corruptly from Orkney-ling, because the best are near that island. Cowell.

ORGILD, sine compensatione.] Without recompence; as where no satisfaction was to be made for the death of a man killed, so that he was judged lawfully slain. Spelman.

ORIEL COLLEGE, A prebend of Rochester, how annexed to its provostship; see stat. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 6. § 7.

ORIGINAL, or ORIGINAL WRIT, The beginning or foundation of a suit. When a person has received an injury and thinks it worth his while to demand a satisfaction for it, he must apply for that specific remedy which he is advised or determined to pursue. To this end he is to sue out an Original, or Original Writ, from the Court of Chancery, the officina justitiæ, wherein all the King's writs are framed.

This Original Writ is a mandatory letter from the King in Chancery, sealed with his great seal; and lies in all personal actions, against every person not privileged as an attorney, officer, or prisoner of the Court. Formerly, indeed, it was not usual to proceed in the King's Bench by Original Writ, in debt, detinue, or other action of a mere civil nature. But the modern practice is different, and where the defendant pleaded to the jurisdiction, in an action of debt commenced by Original Writ, the Court gave judgment on demurrer for the plaintiff; and declared that if such a plea should come before them again they would inquire by whom it was signed. See Hardw. 317. On the other hand an Original Writ was formerly the most common, if not the only ground of proceeding against peers and members of the House of Commons; but now by stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 3. § 2, they may also be sued by Original bill and summons, attachment and distress infinite. Still, however, an Original Writ is the only ground of proceeding against a Corporation or Hundredors on the statutes of hue and cry, &c. or where by reason of the defendant's being abroad, or keeping out of the way, he cannot be arrested or served with process; [and it is intended to sue him to outlawry]. There is also this benefit attending it, in other cases; that after judgment in an action by Original, a writ of error will not lie in the Exchequer-chamber where it is often brought for the mere purpose of delay; but only in Parliament. 1 Sid. 424. The reason is, that at common law no writ of error lay, except in Parliament, from the judgment of the Court of K. B. and the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8, which gave a writ of error in the Exchequer-chamber, only extends to such actions as are first commenced in the King's Bench; therefore, though a writ of error will lie in the Exchequer-chamber, on a judgment by bill, which originates in the King's Bench, yet it is otherwise where the judgment is upon an Original Writ, which issues out of Chancery, where the action in that case is first commenced. Run. Ej. 83, &c: Gilb. K. B. 319.

Original Writs are calculated for the commencement or removal of actions. And they are either de cursu, or magistralia; the former were framed in the King's Court, before the division of it; the latter were made out by the Masters in Chancery pursuant to the stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. stat. 1. c. 24. In personal actions they are ex contractu, vel ex delicto, upon contracts, or for wrongs immediate or consequential. See Tidd's Pract. K. B. cap. 1, and the authorities there cited.

In actions of covenant, debt, and detinue the Original Writ is called a Præcipe, by which the defendant has an option given him, either to do what he is required, or shew cause to the contrary; but in assumpsit, and actions for wrongs, it is called a pone, or si te fecerit securum; by which the defendant is peremptorily required to shew cause in the first instance. Finch L. 257.

The use of the præcipe is where something certain is demanded by the plaintiff, which it is incumbent on the defendant himself to perform; as to restore the possession of land, to pay a certain liquidated debt, to perform a specific covenant, to render an account, and the like; in all which cases the writ is drawn up in the form of a command, to do thus, or shew cause to the contrary; giving the defendant his choice to redress the injury, or stand the suit. The other sort of Original is in use where nothing is specifically demanded, but only a satisfaction in general; to obtain which, and administer complete redress, the intervention of some judicature is necessary. Such are writs of trespass, or on the case, wherein no debt or other specific thing is sued for in certain, but only damages to be assessed by a jury. For this end the defendant is immediately called upon to appear in Court, provided the plaintiff gives good security of prosecuting his claim. 3 Comm. c. 18. p. 274.

In point of form the Original Writ is special or general; nominatum vel innominatum. 1 Bac. Abr. 29: Gilb. C. P. 3. The former contains the time, place, and other circumstances of the demand, very particularly; the latter only a general complaint, without expressing the particulars, as the writ of trespass quare clausum fregit, &c. But in order to save the great and unnecessary expence of suing forth special writs in small and trifling suits, and to avoid oppression which might otherwise arise, it is enacted by stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 27. § 5, that "no special writ or process shall be issued out of any superior Court where the cause of action shall not amount to the sum of ten pounds or upwards." And by a rule of Court M. 23 Geo. 3. "in all actions in which the plaintiff shall proceed against the defendant by special Original Writ, and shall recover less than the sum of fifty pounds, he shall not, on taxing costs, be allowed any more or other costs than he would be entitled to in case he had proceeded by bill; except in such actions in which he could not proceed by bill, or in which any defendant shall be actually outlawed."

The Original Writ should be directed to the Sheriff or Sheriffs of the county where the action is brought and intended to be tried, and the VENUE should be laid in that county. But as to this latter circumstance there is a difference between local and transitory actions; as to which see titles Action; Venue.

The Original Writ, issuing out of Chancery, should be teste'd, (that is witnessed) in the King's name at Westminster, or wherever else the Chancery is holden: and as that Court is supposed to be always open, it may be teste'd in vacation as well as in term-time. It should, however, be always teste'd after the cause of action accrued, and should be made returnable on a general return day in term-time, ubicunque, i. e. wheresover the King shall then be in England. In proceeding to outlawry, if the instructions be carried to the Cursitor within the first week of a term, and the cause of action will admit of it, he will, for the sake of expedition, make the Original returnable on the first or any other return of the preceding term. Otherwise it is usually made returnable in the same or the next term; or, as it does not affect the liberty of the defendant, it may be made returnable at the distance of two or three terms. But there should be fifteen days at least between the teste and return of an Original; the law requiring that distance of time, between the service and return of it, to enable the defendant to come from any part of the kingdom, though if there be less, it will be aided by the defendant's appearing and pleading in chief.

The want of an Original is aided after verdict, by stat. 18 Eliz. c. 14; but not after judgment by default, &c. And a bad Original is not aided, even after verdict; nor a good one, which does not warrant the declaration: the Court, however, will amend any defect in the Original, arising from the misprision of the clerk, in not pursuing his instructions; or from his ignorance in form, though not in substance. See title Amendment.

See farther titles Latitat; Practice; Process, &c.

ORIGINALIA. In the treasurer's-remembrancer's office in the Exchequer, the transcripts, &c. sent thither out of the Chancery are called by this name, and distinguished from recorda, which contain the judgments and pleadings in suits tried before the Barons.

ORPED, Some Orped knight, i. e. a knight whose cloaths shone with gold. Blount.

ORPHAN, orphanus.] A fatherless child: and in the city of London there is a Court of Record established for the care and government of orphans. 4 Inst. 248.

The Lord Mayor and Alderman of London had the custody of Orphans under age and unmarried, of freemen that died, and the keeping of their lands and goods: and if they committed the custody of an Orphan to any man, he should have the writ of ravishment of ward, if the Orphan were taken away; or the Mayor and Aldermen might imprison the offender until he produced the infant. 2 Danv. Abr. 311. If any one, without consent of the Court of Aldermen, marries such an Orphan under the age of twenty-one years, though out of the city, they may fine, and imprison him until the fine is paid. 1 Lev. 32: 1 Ventr. 178. Executors and administrators of freemen dying, are to exhibit true inventories of their estates before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen in the Court of Orphans, and must give security to the Chamberlain of London and his successors, by recognisance, for the Orphan's part; which if they refuse to do, they may be committed to prison until they obey. Wood's Inst. 522. If any Orphan, who by the custom of London is under the government of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, sue in the Spiritual Court for any legacy, &c. a prohibition shall be granted; because the Lord Mayor and Aldermen only have jurisdiction of them. 5 Rep. 73. But an Orphan may waive the benefit of suing in the Court of Orphans, and file a bill in equity for discovery of the personal estate, &c.

The Lord Mayor and Commonalty of London being answerable for the Orphans' money paid into the chamber of the city, and having become indebted to the Orphans and their creditors, in a greater sum than they could pay; by stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. cap. 10, it is enacted, that the lands, markets, fairs, &c. belonging to the city of London, shall be chargeable for raising eight thousand pounds per ann. to be appropriated for a perpetual fund for Orphans; and, towards raising such a fund, the Mayor and Commonalty may assess two thousand pounds yearly upon the personal estates of inhabitants of the city, and levy the same by distress, &c. Also a duty is granted of four shillings per ton on wines imported, and on coals; and every apprentice shall pay 2*s.* 6*d.* when he is bound; and 5*s.* when he is admitted a freeman, for raising the fund; the fund is to be applied for payment of the debts due to Orphans, by interest after the rate of 4*l.* per cent. &c. And by § 18 of the said statute, no person shall be compelled, by virtue of any custom in the city, to pay into the chamber of London any sum of money or personal estate belonging to an Orphan of any freeman for the future. By stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 29, the duty of 6*d.* per chaldron on coals, given by the stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 10, towards the Orphan debt, is continued for thirty-five years; and by stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 37, for forty-six years more; and various provisions are made for the security and application of the Orphans' fund.

ORTELLI, Fr.] A forest word, signifying the claws of a dog's foot. Kitch.

ORTOLAGIUM, A garden plot, or hortilage. Mon. Angl. tom. 1.

ORYAL, oriolum] A room, or cloister, of a monastery, priory, &c. whence it is presumed that Oriel or Oryel College in Oxford took name. Matt. Paris, in vit. Abb. St. Alban.

OSCULUM PACIS, A custom formerly of the church, that in the celebration of the mass, after the priest had spoke these words, viz. Pax Domini vobiscum, the people kissed each other, was called Osculum Pacis; afterwards, when this custom was abrogated, another was introduced; which was, whilst the priest spoke the aforementioned words, a deacon offered the people an image to kiss, which was commonly called Pacem. Matt. Paris, anno 1100.

OSMONDS, A kind of iron ore, antiently brought into England. See the obsolete statute 32 H. 8. c. 14.

OSTENSIO, A tribute antiently paid by merchants for leave to expose their goods for sale in markets. Leg. Ethelred. c. 23.

OSWALD'S LAW, Lex Oswaldi.] The law by which was effected the ejecting married priests, and introducing monks into churches, by Oswald Bishop of Worcester, about the year 964.

OSWALD'S LAW HUNDRED, An ancient hundred in Worcestershire, so called from Bishop Oswald, who obtained it of King Edgar, to be given to St. Mary's church in Worcester; it is exempt from the jurisdiction of the Sheriff, and comprehends 300 hides of lands. Camd. Brit.

OTHO, Was a deacon-cardinal of St. Nicholas, in carcere Tulliano, a legate for the Pope here in England, 22 H. 3, whose constitutions we have at this day. Stow's Annals, 303. Cowell.

OTHOBONUS, Was a deacon-cardinal of St. Adrian, and the Pope's legate here in England, 15 H. 3, as appeareth by the award made betwixt the said King and his Commons at Kenilworth. His Constitutions we have at this day in use. Cowell.

OUCH, A collar of gold, or such like ornament, worn by women about their necks. See the old statute 24 H. 8. c. 13. Cowell.

OVEALTY; Equality; see Owelty.

OVER, Sax. ofer, ripa.] In the beginning or ending of the names of places, signifies a situation near the bank of some river; as St. Maryover, in Southwark, Andover, in Hampshire, &c.

OVERCYTED, or OVERCYHSED, from the Sax. ofer, i. e. super, & cythan, offendere.] Proved guilty or convict. Is used where a person is convicted of any crime; that it is found upon the offender: this word is mentioned in the laws of Edward; apud Brompton, p. 836. Blount: Cowell.

OVERHERNISSA, Contumacy, or contempt of Court. In the laws of Athelstan, cap. 25, it is used for Contumacy: but in a council held at Winchester, anno 1027, it signifies a forfeiture paid to the bishop by one who came in after excommunication. See Spelman.

OVERSAMESSA, Seems to have been an ancient fine before the statute for hue and cry, laid upon those who, hearing of a murder or robbery, did not pursue the malefactor. 3 Inst. 116: Lib. Rub. cap. 36. See Cowell, who says it is elsewhere written Oversegenesse and Oversenesse. It seems confounded with the preceding word, Overhernissa; and that all these terms signify a forfeiture for contempt or neglect.

OVERSEERS OF THE POOR, Are public officers created by the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, to provide for the poor of every parish; and are sometimes two, three, or four, according to the extent of parishes. Churchwardens by this statute are called Overseers of the Poor, and they join with the Overseers in making a Poor's rate, &c. But the churchwardens having distinct business of their own, usually leave the care of the Poor to the Overseers only; though anciently they were the sole Overseers of the Poor. Dalt. ch. 27: Wood's Inst. 93. See title Poor.

OVERSEWENESSE; See Overhernissa.

OVERT, Fr.] Open; Overture, an opening, also a proposal. Law Fr. Dict.

OVERT-ACT, apertum factum.] An open act which by law must be manifestly proved. 3 Inst. 12. Some Overt-act is to be alleged in every indictment for high treason; such as for treason in compassing the death of the King, the providing arms to effect it, &c. 3 Inst. 6, 12. And no evidence shall be admitted of any Overt-act, that is not expresly laid in the indictment, by stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. See title Treason.

OVERT-WORD, An open plain word, not to be mistaken. Stat. 1 Mar. sess. 2. c. 3.

OVRES, Fr.] Acts, deeds, or works: Ovrages, or Ouvrages, are days' works. 8 Rep. 131.

OURLOP, The leirwite or fine paid to the lord by the inferior tenant, when his daughter was corrupted or debauched. Petr. Bles. Contin. Hist. Croyland, 115.

OUSTED, from the Fr. ouster, to put out.] As Ousted out of possession is where one is removed or put out of possession. 3 Cro. 349.

OUSTER LE MAIN, amovere manum.] A livery of land out of the King's hand, on a judgment given for him that sued a monstrans de droit; for when it appeared upon the matter, that the King had no title to the land he seised, judgment was given in the Chancery that the King's hands be amoved; and thereupon an amoveas manus was awarded to the escheator, to restore the land, it being as much as if the judgment were given that the party should have his land again. Staundf. Prærog. cap. 24: see stat. 28 Ed. 1. stat. 3. cap. 19. It was also taken for the writ granted upon a petition for this purpose. F. N. B. 256. But now all wardships, liveries, and Ouster le Mains, &c. are taken away by stat. 12 Car. 2. cap. 24. See titles Monstrans de Droit; Tenures.

OUSTER LE MER, oultre, i. e. ultra, & le mer, mare.] One cause of essoign or excuse, if a man appeared not in Court on summons, for that he was then beyond the seas. See Essoign.

OUTFANGTHEF, from the Sax. ut, i. e. extra, fang, captus, & theof, fur.] A liberty or privilege, as used in the ancient Common Law, whereby a lord was enabled to call any man dwelling in his manor, and taken for felony in another place out of his fee, to judgment in his own Court. Rastal: Bract. lib. 2. tract. 2. cap. 35: stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 15.

OUTHEST, or Outhorn; A calling men out to the army, by the sound of an horn.

OUTHOUSES, Are those belonging and adjoining to dwelling-houses; and taking away any money, goods, &c. from such Out-houses, in the day-time, of 5s. value, is felony without benefit of clergy. Dalt. c. 99. See Larceny II. 2.

OUTLAND. The Saxon Thanes divided their hereditary lands into Inland, such as lay nearest their dwelling, which they kept to their own use; and Outland, which lay beyond the demeans, and was granted out to tenants, at the will of the lord, like copyhold estates. This Outland they subdivided into two parts; one part they disposed amongst those who attended their persons, called Theodans, or lesser Thanes; the other part they allotted to their husbandmen, or churls. Spelm. de Feud. cap. 5.

OUTLAW, Sax. utlaghe, Lat. utlagatus.] One deprived of the benefit of the law, and out of the King's protection. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 47. When a person is restored to the King's protection, he is inlawed again. See Outlawry.

OUTLAWRY,

Utlagaria.] The being put out of the Law—The loss of the benefit of a subject, that is, of the King's protection. Cowell.

Outlawry is a punishment inflicted for a contempt, in refusing to be amenable to the justice of that Court, which hath authority to call a defendant before them; and as this is a crime of the highest nature, being an act of rebellion, against that State or Community of which he is a member, so it subjects the party to forfeitures and disabilities; for he loseth his liberam legem, is out of the King's protection, &c. Co. Litt. 128: Doct. & Stud. dial. 2. cap. 3: 1 Roll. Abr. 802.

And as to forfeitures for refusing to appear, the law distinguishes between Outlawries in capital cases, and those of an inferior nature; for as to Outlawries in treason and felony, the law interprets the party's absence a sufficient evidence of his guilt, and without requiring further proof, accounts him guilty of the fact, on which ensues corruption of blood, and forfeiture of his estate, real and personal. Co. Litt. 128: 3 Inst. 161.

But Outlawry in personal actions does not occasion the party to be looked on as guilty of the fact, nor does it occasion an intire forfeiture of his real estate, yet it is very fatal and penal in its consequences; for hereby he is restrained of his liberty, if he can be found; forfeits his goods and chattels, and the profits of his lands, while the Outlawry remains in force. Plow. 541: 9 H. 6. 20. b: Show. Parl. Ca. 73.

Outlawry in civil actions, is putting a man out of the protection of the law, so that he is not only incapable of suing for the redress of injuries, but may be imprisoned and forfeits all his goods and chattels, and the profits of his lands; his personal chattels immediately upon the Outlawry, and his chattels real, and the profits of his lands, when found by inquisition. 1 Salk. 395. So penal were the consequences of an Outlawry, that until some time after the Conquest, no man could have been outlawed except for Felony, the punishment whereof was death; but in Bracton's time, and somewhat earlier, process of Outlawry was ordained to lie in all actions vi et armis. Bract. lib. 5. p. 425. and since, by a variety of statutes, (the same as introduced the capias,) process of Outlawry lies in account, debt, detinue, and divers other common or civil actions. See post, Div. I.

If the defendant be a woman, the proceeding is called a waiver; for as women were not sworn to the law, by taking the oath of allegiance in the leet, (as men anciently were when of the age of twelve years, or upwards,) they could not properly be outlawed, or put out of the law, but were said to be waived; that is, derelicta, left out, or not regarded. Litt. § 186: Co Litt. 122 b. And for this same reason, an infant cannot be outlawed under the age of twelve years. Co. Litt. 128. a. See post, Div. II.

Anciently Outlawry was looked upon as so horrid a crime, that any one might as lawfully kill a person outlawed, as he might a wolf, or other noxious animal; but the law herein was changed in Edward the Third's time, which provides, that a person outlawed shall be put to death by the Sheriff only, having lawful authority for that purpose. Co. Litt. 128. b: See post, Div. IV.

It is now holden that no man is entitled to kill an outlaw wantonly or wilfully; but in so doing is guilty of murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 497: unless it happens in the endeavour to apprehend him. Bracton, fol. 125.

Also, from the heinousness of the offence, the Sheriff may, on a capias utlagatum, break open the house of the person outlawed; for it would be unreasonable, that the protection, allowed in other cases, should extend to him who is declared a contemner and violator of the law; therefore the seizing him as an outlaw, implies the liberty of entering and seizing him wherever he lies hid. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 202: 9 Co. 91: 1 Bulst. 146: Cro. Eliz. 908: Moor 606, 668: Yelv. 28: Cro. Car. 537: 4 Leon. 41: 2 Jon. 233.

I. Where the defendant is abroad, or keeps out of the way, so that he cannot be arrested or served with process, the plaintiff, on the return of Non est inventus to the pluries capias (see Capias), may have a writ of exigi facias (see post III.) and proceed to Outlawry: or if there be several defendants in a joint action, and one of them be abroad, or keep out of the way, the plaintiff may have a writ of exigi facias against that defendant, and must proceed to Outlawry against him before he can go on against the others. 1 Stra. 473: 1 Wils. 78: 2 Stra. 1269: 1 Black. Rep. 20. See Tidd's Pract. K. B. cap. 4.

Process of Outlawry lies in all appeals, and in all indictments of conspiracy and deceit, or other crimes of a higher nature than trespass vi & armis; but it lies not in an action, nor, as some say, on an indictment on a statute, unless it be given by such statute, either expressly, as in the case of præmunire; or impliedly, as in cases made treason or felony by statute; or where a recovery is given by an action in which such process lay before, as in case of forcible entry. Staundf. 192: Bro. title Outlawry, 26, 36, 59: Co. Litt. 128. b: Dyer 213, 214: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 113: and several authorities there cited.

In

In an assise, a capias pro fine lies; and, upon that, process of Outlawry, if the assise be found with force; but being a mixt action, as favouring of the realty, it is out of the statute of Additions, 1 Hen. 5. cap. 5, which extends only to personal actions, appeals, and indictments. 2 Inst. 665: 6 Mod. 85.

So process of Outlawry lies in replevin, and is given by the statute 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. cap. 17, which gives the capias in this manner; when on the pluries replegiari facias the Sheriff returns averia elongata, then a capias in withernam issues, and on that being returned nulla bona, a capias issues, and so to Outlawry; but it does not lie on the Original writ of replevin, which is vicontiel and determined; therefore as no addition is required in such Original writ, so neither ought there to be any in the second writ; for where a writ or process is founded on a former, it must pursue the former, and cannot vary from it. 6 Mod. 84: 1 Salk. 5.

By the Common Law, in all actions of trespass quare vi & armis, and in which there is a fine to the King, a capias was the process; and herein process of Outlawry lay by the Common Law. 35 H. 6. 6. b: 22 H. 6. 13: Rast. Ent. 239: 10 Co. 72: 2 Roll. Abr. 805.

But in account, debt, detinue, annuity, covenant, and such actions as are grounded upon negligence or laches merely, no capias lay at Common Law, but only summons and distress infinite; therefore the capias and Outlawry in these actions were introduced by acts of parliament. Co. Litt. 128 b: 3 Co. 12: 2 Bulst. 63: 2 Inst. 143: Cro. Jac. 222, 261: Yelv. 158: Raym. 128: 1 Keb. 890, 908: 1 Sid. 248, 258: of detinue of charters. Dyer 223. a. dubitatur.

By the statute of Marlbridge, (52 H. 3.) cap. 23, the writ of monstravit de compto was given, where before the process in account was summons, attachment, and distress infinite: and by stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1. st. 1.) cap. 11, process of Outlawry is given in account. 2 Inst. 145, 380: F. N. B. 259.

By stat. 25 Ed. 3. stat. 5. cap. 17, such process shall be made in a writ of debt and detinue of chattels, and taking of beasts, by writ of capias, and by process of exigent, by the Sheriff's return, as is used in a writ of account. 3 Co. 12: 2 Roll. Rep. 295: 2 Bulst. 63.

And by stat. 19 Hen. 7. cap. 9, it is enacted, that like process be had in actions upon the case, as in actions of trespass, or debt.

But it hath been adjudged, that process of Outlawry lies in no case but where a capias lies; that therefore where the proceeding is by bill, and not by original, as there can be no capias, so there can be no process of Outlawry, as in a bill of privilege by or against an attorney. 1 Leon. 329: 1 Roll. Abr. 76: 1 Sid. 159: 1 Keb. 577. See title Original.

Outlawry is either upon mesne process before, or upon final process after, judgment: upon mesne process the plaintiff cannot proceed to Outlawry, unless the action be commenced by original writ. 1 Sid. 159. Nor can the defendant be outlawed after judgment, unless the action were so commenced; therefore where the defendant was outlawed after judgment, in an action commenced by bill of privilege, it was holden, that process of Outlawry did not lie, as there was no capias in the Original action. 1 Leon. 329. See title Original. After judgment the plaintiff may have an exigi facias, and proceed to Outlawry, upon a capias ad satisfaciendum without an alias or pluries; because the defendant, having been already in Court before judgment, and having cognisance of the debt ought to pay it on the first suing out of the capias; and his not performing the judgment is a contumacy, for which he is put out of the King's protection. Gilb. C. P. 17. And no writ of Proclamation is required upon an exigent after judgment, but only upon mesne process. Cro. Jac. 577. See post III.

It is clear, that the Courts at Westminster may issue process of Outlawry, and that the Court of King's Bench, either upon an indictment originally taken there, or removed thither by certiorari, may issue process of capias and exigent into any county of England, upon a non est inventus returned by the Sheriff of the county where he is indicted, and a testatum that he is in some other county. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 198.

Also Justices of oyer and terminer may issue a capias or exigent, and so proceed to the Outlawry of any person indicted before them, directed to the Sheriff of the same county where they hold their sessions at Common Law; and by the statute of 5 Ed. 3. cap. 11, they may issue process of capias and exigent to all the counties of England, against persons indicted or outlawed of felony before them. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 31, 199.

But Justices of gaol delivery regularly cannot issue a capias or exigent; because their commission is to deliver the gaol de prisonibus in eâ existentibus; so that those whom they have to do with, are always intended in custody already. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 199.

Justices of the peace may make out process of Outlawry upon indictments taken before themselves, or upon indictments taken before the Sheriff, and returned to the justices of the peace, by the statute of 1 Ed. 4. cap. 2; but the power of the Sheriff, to make any process upon indictments, taken before him, is taken away by that statute. 2 Hale's Hist. 199.

It is made a quære by Hale, whether a coroner can by law, make out process of Outlawry, against a man indicted by inquisition before him. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 199.

It hath been held, that though the process in inferior Courts be a capias, that yet they cannot proceed to outlaw the party. Yelv. 158: Cro. Jac. 222, 261: Raym. 128: 1 Sid. 248, 259: 1 Keb. 890, 908.

The process to the Outlawry, viz. the capias and exigent, must be in the King's name, and under the judicial seal of the King, appointed to that Court, which issues that process, and with the teste of the chief justice or chief judge of that Court or Sessions. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 199.

II. If a Peer of the realm be indicted, and cannot be found, process of Outlawry shall be awarded against him, and he shall be outlawed per judicium coronatorum. 2 Inst. 49: 3 Inst. 31: Staundf. 130: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 16.

But in civil actions, between party and party, regularly a capias or exigent lies not against a peer; yet in case of an indictment for treason or felony, or for trespass vi & armis, as an assault or riot, process of Outlawry shall issue against a peer; for the suit is for the King, and the offence a contempt against him; therefore, if a rescue be returned against a peer; or if a peer be convict of a disseisin with force, or denies his deed, and it be found against him, a capias pro fine and exigent shall issue, issue, for the King is to have a fine; and the same reason holds upon an indictment of trespass or riot, much more in the case of felony. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 199, 200: Cro. Eliz. 170, 503: 5 Co. 54: 1 Roll. Abr. 220.

An infant above the age of fourteen may be outlawed, and the Outlawry is not erroneous; but an infant under the age of fourteen cannot be outlawed; if he be, it is erroneous. 3 Hen. 5. Utlagat.: Fitz. title Outlawry 11: 2 Roll. Abr. 805: Dyer 104: 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 207, 208. Lord Coke says, within the age of twelve years. 1 Inst. 128. a.

But the Outlawry of such infant is not void, it being of record, but is voidable only by writ of error. Dyer 239. a: 2 Roll. Abr. 805.

A woman, it has been already remarked, is said to be waived, and not outlawed; therefore where a capias and exigent were awarded against three men and two women, and the return was utlagati existunt, where, as to the women, it ought to have been waiviatæ existunt, this was held to be error. Cro. Jac. 358: 1 Rol. Rep. 407: 1 Rol. Abr. 804.

If in an action against husband and wife, the husband is outlawed, and wife waived, and she is taken upon the capias utlagat., though she is to be discharged of the imprisonment, (because the plaintiff cannot proceed against her alone,) yet she still remains waived; and when her husband is taken he must bring her in. See Dyer 271. b: Cro. Jac. 445: Cro. Eliz. 370: Hut. 86: 1 Sid. 21: Cro. Car. 58, 59: Hut. 86.

If two are sued in a joint action, and neither of them will appear, process of Outlawry must be taken out against both. Cro. Eliz. 648.

If an exigent be awarded against two, and the return primo exacti fuerunt & non comparuerunt, without saying nec eorum aliquis comparuit, it is erroneous. 2 Roll. Abr. 802.

As to Outlawry in action of account, vide 41 Ed. 3. 3: 1 Roll. Abr. 127: 1 Brownl. 25: 41 Ed. 3. 13. b: Moor 188: 2 Leon. 76: Dyer 239. pl. 203: N. Bendl. 148. pl. 205: Moor 74. pl. 203: 1 And. 10: 1 Sid. 173: 1 Keb. 642.

As to awarding Outlawry against principal and accessary, by the stat. of Westm. 1. 3 E. 1. cap. 14, it is provided, that none be outlawed upon appeal of commandment, force, aid, or receipt, unless he who is appealed of the deed be attainted, so that one like law be used therein through this realm; nevertheless he that will so appeal, shall not, by reason of this, intermit or leave off to commence his appeal at the next county, against them, no more than against their principals which he appealed of the deed; but their exigent shall remain, until such as be appealed of the deed, be attainted of Outlawry or otherwise.

In the construction of this statute, the following particulars are laid down by Hawkins, as most remarkable:

1st, That it seems agreed, that it extends as well to indictments as to appeal; not only because the word appeal in the statute may in a large sense be taken for any accusation in general; but because indictments are certainly as much within the reason of the statute as appeals; and the Common Law (for the settling whereof this statute was made) did not make any distinction in this respect between appeals and indictments. 2 Inst. 183: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 129.

2dly, That it seems agreed, that wherever some of the defendants are expresly charged as principals, and others as accessaries, before the award of this exigent, the Outlawry thereon, of those charged as accessaries, cannot but be reversible; because it appears upon record that the exigent issued, contrary to the direction of the statute; but if several be outlawed, on a writ of appeal, which chargeth them all alike without any distinction, there can be no advantage taken of the appellant's not having pursued the statute, since it appears not, but that he might have charged them all as principals. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 130, 306: 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 200.

3dly, That it is strongly holden, that if an appellant take out the exigent, at the same time, against all the defendants, he must, when they appear, count against them all as principals, and shall be concluded from charging any of them as accessaries, because he has taken out such process as is erroneous, where all are not principals; but he makes a doubt, whether this be law at this day, since all errors, as the law seems now to be holden, are salved by appearance. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 131: and vide 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 200.

4thly, That it seems the better opinion, that where there are more than one principal, the exigent shall not issue, till all of them are arraigned; and herein it is said by Hale, that if A. and B. be indicted as principals in felony, and C. as accessary to them both, the exigent against the accessary shall stay till both be attainted by Outlawry or plea; for that it is said, if one be acquitted, the accessary is discharged, because indicted as accessary to both, therefore shall not be put to answer till both be attaint; but hereof he adds a dubitatur, because though C. be accessary to both, he might have been indicted as accessary to one, because the felonies are in law several; but if he be indicted as accessary to both, he must be proved so. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 132: 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 200, 201.

In treason all are principals; therefore process of Outlawry may go against him who receives, at the same time as against him that did the fact. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 238.

III. Formerly the exigent must have been sued in the county where the party really resided, for there all actions were originally laid; and because Outlawries were at first only for treason, felony, or very enormous trespasses, the process was to be executed at the Torn, which is the Sheriff's criminal Court; and this held not only before the Sheriff, but before the coroners, who were ancient conservators of the peace, being the best men in each county, to preside with the Sheriff in his Court, and who pronounced the Outlawry in the county Court on the party's being quinto exactus; therefore anciently there was no occasion for any process to any other county than that in which the party actually resided. Fitz. Exigent. 26: Dyer 295.

It is enacted by stat. 6 Hen. 6. cap. 1, "That before any exigents be awarded against persons indicted in the King's Bench, of treason or felony, writs of capias shall be directed as well to the Sheriff of the county in which they are indicted, as to the Sheriff of the county whereof they may be named in the indictments; the capias having at least six weeks before the return thereof."

And

And it is further enacted, by stat. 8 H. 6. cap. 10, "That upon every indictment or appeal, before any exigent awarded, presently after the first writ of capias returned, another writ of capias shall be awarded, directed to the Sheriff of the county, whereof he who is indicted is or was supposed to be conversant, by the same indictment, containing, according to the circumstances, three, or four, months from the date to the return; by which second writ of capias, the Sheriff shall be commanded to take him, if he can be found within his bailiwick; and if he cannot, to make proclamation in two counties, before the return of the same writ; after which writ so served and returned, if he which is so indicted or appealed, come not at the day of such writ returned, the exigent shall be awarded."

This statute not to extend to indictments, or appeals, taken within the county of Chester.

It is enacted by stat. 10 H. 6. cap. 6, "That such second capias as is required by 8 Hen. 6. cap. 10, shall be awarded upon indictments or appeals removed into the King's Bench, or elsewhere, by certiorari or otherwise."

In the construction of these statutes, the following opinions have been holden:

That though the words are express, that any Outlawry pronounced, contrary to the directions of the statute, shall be void; yet it is not to be taken, as if such Outlawries were absolutely void, but only voidable by writ of error. Cro. Eliz. 179: 3 Co. 59: Plowd. 137: Hob. 166.

If a defendant be expressly named of the same county wherein he is indicted, or appealed, and be also named under an alias dictus of another, it hath been adjudged that there is no need of any capias, with a command for proclamation according to 8 Hen. 6. c. 10, because that which comes under the alias dictus is not traversable nor material; also if a defendant be named of B. and late of D. there is no need of any capias to the Sheriff of the county wherein D. lies; because it appears, the defendant is at present conversant at B; but if a defendant be named of no certain place at present, but only late of B. and late of D. and late of E. &c. being all in different counties from that in which the prosecution is commenced, a capias shall go to the Sheriff of each county. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 126: 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 195, 6. Vide Cro. Jac. 167.

In civil cases, the writ of exigi facias (see this Dictionary, title Exigent) is a judicial writ made out by the filazer, as clerk of the exigents and directed to the Sheriff of the county where the action is laid; commanding him to cause the defendant to be required or exacted from county Court to county Court, or from husting to husting, if in London; that is, at five successive county Courts or hustings, until he be outlawed, if he do not appear, and if he appear to take him, &c. This writ should be teste'd on the quarto die post of the return of the pluries capias before, or of the capias after, judgment; and if there be not five county Courts between the teste and return of it, there issues an exigent de novo, grounded upon the Sheriff's return to the former writ with a clause (from whence it is called an allocatur exigent), directing the Sheriff to allow the several county Courts at which the defendant has already been required. 1 Plowd. 371. In London the Hustings are holden once every fortnight; on which account the action is generally laid there, when the plaintiff intends to proceed to Outlawry. See Tidd's Pract. K. B.

It hath been holden, that in London, where the holding of the Hustings is uncertain, no exigi facias shall issue with an allocatur Hustings; because the Court cannot take notice of the set times of holding it, as they may of the times of holding the county Courts; but it is now agreed, that if an exigent issues in London, and they begin "Husting de placito terræ," (as they may,) they shall proceed along at that Hustings to the Outlawry, without mingling their Husting de communibus placitis; but if an allocato Husting comes, they shall proceed without omitting any Husting. Palm. 287: 2 Leon. 14; 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 202.

In addition to the exigent, a writ of Proclamation was introduced by stat. 6 Hen. 8. c. 4, which requires it to be directed to the Sheriff of the county of which the defendant is called, or described in the original; for there he was supposed to dwell; and if he did not in fact dwell there, he might have avoided the Outlawry, by the statute of Additions. Dyer 214. See Gilb. C. P. 19: Thes. Brev. 88. But the writ of Proclamation is at present governed by stat. 31 Eliz. c. 3. § 1, which enacts, that, "in every action personal, wherein any writ of exigent shall be awarded out of any Court, a writ of Proclamation shall be awarded and made out of the same Court, having day of teste and return, as the said writ of exigent shall have directed, and delivered of record to the Sheriff of the county where the defendant at the time of the exigent so awarded shall be dwelling; which writ of Proclamation shall contain the effect of the same action; and that the Sheriff of the county unto whom any such writ of Proclamation shall be delivered, shall make three Proclamations, one in the open county Court, another at the general quarter sessions of the peace, in those parts where the defendant at the time of the exigent awarded shall be dwelling, and the third one month at the least before the quinto exactus by virtue of the said writ of exigent, at or near the most usual door of the church or chapel of that town or parish where the defendant shall be so dwelling; and if the defendant shall be dwelling, out of any parish, (i. e. in any extraparochial place) then in such place as aforesaid of the next adjoining parish in the same county, and upon a Sunday immediately after divine service, and sermon, (if there be one,) and if there be no sermon, then forthwith after divine service; and that all Outlawries had and pronounced, whereupon no writs of proclamations shall be awarded and returned according to the form of this statute, shall be utterly void and of none effect."

IV. Upon the defendant's being put in exigent, he is either taken by the Sheriff, appears voluntarily, or makes default. If he be taken, he either remains in custody of the Sheriff, or gives bail, &c. as upon a common arrest. Formerly, if the defendant had appeared voluntarily, at any time before the return of the exigent, he might have obtained a writ of supersedeas from the filazer, as clerk of the supersedeas, on entering a common appearance of the term in which the exigent issued, and he may still do so where the action does not require special bail. But upon a question, whether in a case originally requiring special bail, if the defendant stand out to an exigent, gent, he can come in and appear to the exigent, without putting in special bail; it was ruled by the Court of K. B. that there ought to be special bail. It would be very unreasonable, they said, that the defendant should gain an advantage, by standing out till process of Outlawry: he certainly ought not to be in a better condition then than if he had appeared at first. And accordingly the direction given was, that the filazer should not issue a supersedeas till the defendant should put in special bail. 3 Burr. 1920.

If the defendant be neither arrested nor appear, but make default at five successive county Courts, or Hustings, he is outlawed if a man, or if a woman, she is waived, by the judgment of the coroners, or of the Recorder in London; and the judgment of Outlawry being returned by the Sheriff upon the exigent, the filazer, as clerk of the Outlawries, will make out a writ of capias utlagatum, which is either general or special, and may be issued into any county, without a testatum; nor is there any occasion upon an Outlawry after judgment, to revive the judgment by scire facias, after a year and a day.

By the general writ of capias utlagatum, the Sheriff is commanded, "that he do not omit by reason of any liberty of his county, but that he take the defendant, if he be found in his bailiwick, and him safely keep, so that he may have his body in Court on a general return day, &c. wheresoever, &c. to do and receive what the Court shall consider of him." The defendant, being taken by the Sheriff on this writ, either gives bail to appear and reverse the Outlawry, or remains in custody until he actually reverse it, or obtain a charter of pardon, or be relieved under an insolvent act.

At Common Law the defendant could not have been bailed, when taken by the Sheriff on a capias utlagatum. 3 Burr. 1484: 4 Burr. 2540. And this case is particularly excepted out of the stats. 23 H 6. c. 9: 13 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 2. § 4; by the latter of which statutes it is expressly declared, that "no Sheriff, &c. shall discharge any person or persons taken upon any writ of capias utlagatum out of custody without a lawful supersedeas first had and received for the same." But now by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. §§ 4, 5, "if any person outlawed in the Cout of King's Bench, other than for treason and felony, shall be taken and arrested upon any capias utlagatum out of the said Court, the Sheriff making the arrest may, in all cases where special bail is not required by the said Court, take an attorney's engagement under his hand to appear for the defendant, and reverse the Outlawry, and may thereupon discharge the defendant from such arrest; and in those cases where special bail is required by the said Court, the said Sheriff shall and may take security of the defendant by bond, with one or more, sufficient Surety or Sureties in the penalty of double the sum for which special bail is required, and no more, for his appearance, by attorney in Court, at the return of the writ, and to do and perform such things as shall be required by the said Court; and after such bond taken may discharge the defendant from the said arrest. Or in case the defendant shall not be able to give security as aforesaid, before the return of the writ, he shall and may be discharged, whenever he shall find sufficient security to the Sheriff for his appearance by attorney in the said Court, at some return in the ensuing term, to reverse the Outlawry, and to do and perform such other thing and things as shall be required by the said Court." This statute has been construed not to extend to criminal cases, at least not to misdemeanors after conviction. 4 Burr. 2539. And even in civil cases the defendant cannot be bailed where he was not bailable upon the process to Outlawry. Id. 2540. For it was the design of the statute, to put him in the same condition as if he had not been outlawed; and therefore he is not bailable when taken upon an Outlawry after judgment; neither upon this statute will the Court restore goods taken upon a special capias utlagatum, but they will of course be restored upon the reversal of the Outlawry. Carth. 459: 1 Ld. Raym. 349.

When there is no affidavit of a bailable cause of action, the Sheriff is authorised by the statute to discharge the defendant on an attorney's undertaking to appear and reverse the Outlawry; but when an affidavit has been made, he ought not to be discharged without giving the security required by the statute; which is not a common bail bond, but a bond with one or more sufficient Surety or Sureties for appearance by attorney at the return of the writ, and to do and perform such things as shall be required by the Court, that is, to put in bail to a new action, plead within a limited time, put the plaintiff in the same condition, and such like matters. 3 Burr. 1483: 4 Burr. 2540; and it is not necessary that the affidavit should be made before the Outlawry. 2 Stra. 1178, 9: 1 Wils. 3: Fort. 39. Or the sum sworn to be indorsed, on the capias utlagatum. 2 Burr. 1482. But it is sufficient if there be an affidavit before the defendant is discharged; the Court having determined that process of Outlawry is not within the statute for preventing frivolous and vexatious arrests. See 3 Burr. 1483.

By the special writ of capias utlagatum the Sheriff is commanded not only to take the defendant, as by the general writ, but also "to enquire by the oath of honest and lawful men of his county, what goods and chattels, lands and tenements, he hath or had on the day of his Outlawry, or at any time afterwards; and by their oath to extend and appraise the same according to the true value, and to take them into the King's hands, and safely keep them, so that he may answer to the King for the true value and issues of the same, making known what he shall do thereupon to the Court, on the return day." Off. Brev. 35: Thes. Brev. 59. Upon this writ the Sheriff is to impannel a jury who are to make enquiry of the goods and chattels of the defendant including his debts. Co. 95: Lane 23: Lutw. 329, 1513: Gilb. C. P. 200. And also of his leasehold and freehold lands and tenements; to appraise the goods, and to extend or value the lands, &c. but they are not to enquire of his copyholds, Parker 190. Or trust property, Cro. Jac. 513: Sty. 41. But see the statute of Frauds 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 10.

Witnesses may be subpœnaed to attend the execution of the enquiry, and when made, the Sheriff is to take possession of the goods and chattels of the defendant, and of the leasehold tenements in his own occupation. 9 Hen. 6. 20, 21. But he must not oust or disturb the possession of his tenants. Id. 21 H. 7. 7. And can only take the issues or profits of his freehold tenements. Id: Plowd. 541: Hardr. 166, 176: Bunb. 103, 105. The inquisition should set forth, with convenient certainty, the appraised value of the goods; the particulars of the debts; of what lands, &c. the defendant is seised or possessed; the different parcels; in whose tenure; and of what annual value beyond reprises. But the inquisition, being merely an office of instruction or information, does not require so much certainty as an office of entitling. 2 Salk. 469: Bunb. 103. And if the lands, &c. be undervalued, there may be a melius inquirendum. Hard. 106.

When the special writ of capias utlagatum is returned, it should be delivered, with the inquisition annexed, to the filazer, as clerk of the exigents and Outlawries, and afterwards filed in the office of the custos brevium, 3 T. R. 578, 9; from whence a transcript is sent into the Exchequer. Gilb. C. P. 16. Out of this Court there issues a venditioni exponas to sell the goods, a scire facias to recover the debts, and a levari facias to levy the issues and profits; under which latter writ the Sheriff may not only take the rent and moveables of the party outlawed, but also the cattle of a stranger, levant and couchant, on the lands extended. 1 Ld. Raym. 305, and the cases there cited in the last edition. In aid of these writs a bill may be exhibited in the Exchequer against the outlaw to compel a discovery of his real and personal estate, &c. either by the plaintiff to enable him to take out execution, or by the Attorney General on behalf of the Crown. Hardr. 22; And it is said to be the course of that Court, upon an Outlawry, to prefer an information in the nature of an action of trover and conversion against him who hath the goods of the party outlawed. 1 Mod. 90.

The money raised by the Sheriff under these writs belongs to the Crown, but the plaintiff may have it paid to him in satisfaction of his debt and costs, by applying to the Court of Exchequer, or Lords of the Treasury; and he may also obtain a lease of the lands, &c. under the Exchequer seal. Hardr. 106, 422: T. Raym. 17: 1 Lev. 33. Or a grant of the King's right to levy the profits. 9 H. 6. 20: 2 Roll. Abr. 808: Gilb. C. P. 17. If the money raised by the Sheriff do not exceed the sum of fifty pounds, the Court of Exchequer, on motion, will order it to be paid to the plaintiff; but if it exceed that sum, the plaintiff must petition for it to the Lords of the Treasury, stating the amount of his debt, a short abstract of the proceedings, with the expences he has been put to, and praying, in respect thereof, that the Attorney General may be authorized to consent, on behalf of the Crown, that the money remaining in the Sheriff's hands may be paid over to the petitioner. The petition is referred by the Lords of the Treasury to their solicitor, who should be furnished with an affidavit, sworn before a baron, of the amount of the debt and costs, and a certificate of the proceedings from the clerk in Court, whereupon he will make his report, which should be filed with the clerk of the Treasury. A warrant is then issued under the King's sign-manual for the Attorney General to give his consent to an order pursuant to the prayer of the petition; upon which a motion is made in the Court of Exchequer, and the Attorney General consenting, an order is framed accordingly; this order must be engrossed, and put under seal, with a subpoena annexed to perform it; and the Sheriff being served therewith must pay over the money, or will be liable to an attachment. 2 Cromp. 47. See Tidd's Pract. K. B. cap. 4, and the authorities there cited.

V. There are two ways of reversing an Outlawry; first, by writ of error returnable coram nobis. Co. Litt. 259. b: Fort. 38. 2dly, By motion founded on a plea, averment or suggestion of some matter apparent; as in respect of a supersedeas, omission of process, variance, or other matter apparent on the record; and yet in these cases some have holden that in another term the defendant is driven to his writ of error. But for any matter of fact, as death, imprisonment, beyond sea at the time of the exigent awarded; (Carth. 259: 1 Ld. Raym. 349: 2 Stra. 1178: 1 Wils. 3;) service of the King, &c. he is driven to his writ of error, unless it be in the case of felony, and there in favorem vitæ he may plead to it. It seems, however, to be discretionary in the Court to relieve by motion, or put the parties to a writ of error; and of late years they have gone farther than heretofore upon motion, the more effectually to expedite justice, save expence, and preserve the credit and character of the defendant. Tidd's Pract. K. B. c. 4.

Regularly, in all Outlawries, as well personal as criminal, the party, in order to reverse the same, was to appear in person, and could not appear by attorney. 2 Leon. 22: Cro. Jac. 462: 2 Salk. 496.

But now by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 18, already referred to, no person who shall be outlawed in the Court of B. R. for any cause whatsoever (treason and felony only excepted,) shall be compelled to appear in person in the said Court to reverse such Outlawry; but may appear by attorney and reverse the same without bail in all cases, except where special bail shall be ordered by the said Court.

By stat. Westm. 1. (3 E. 1.) cap. 9, it is expresly provided, that those who are outlawed, have abjured the realm, &c. should be excluded the benefit of replevin; yet it hath been always held, that the Court of King's Bench may in their discretion, in special cases, bail a person upon an Outlawry of felony; as where he pleads that he is not of the same name, and therefore not the same person with him that was outlawed, or alleges any other error in the proceedings. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 40.

By stat. 31 Eliz. cap. 3. § 3, it is enacted, "That before any allowance of any writ of error, or reversing of any Outlawry be had by plea, or otherwise, through or by want of any proclamation to be had or made according to the form of this statute, the defendant and defendants in the original action shall put in bail, not only to appear and answer to the plaintiff in the former suit in a new action to be commenced by the said plaintiff for the cause mentioned in the first action, but also to satisfy the condemnation, if the plaintiff shall begin his suit before the end of two terms next after the allowing the writ of error, or otherwise avoiding of the said Outlawry."

On reversing the Outlawry for any other error in law, besides the want of proclamations, it was long unsettled whether the defendant should be obliged to put in special bail. In the earliest cases upon the subject, it was determined that he should. Litt. Rep. 301: Carth. 459: 1 Ld. Raym. 349: Gilb. C. P. 19. But there are cases to the contrary in the time of Holt, Chief Justice, 12 Mod. 545: 1 Ld. Raym. 605: 2 Salk. 496: And in one of them (2 Salk. 496,) it is said, that if the party outlawed come in gratis, upon the return of the exigent, &c. he may be admitted, by motion, to reverse the Outlawry, lawry, for any other cause but want of proclamations without putting in bail; but if he come in by cepi corpus, he shall not be admitted to reverse it without appearing in person, as in such case he was obliged to do at Common Law; or putting in bail with the Sheriff for his appearance upon the return of cepi corpus, and for doing what the Court shall order. In two subsequent cases, however, special bail was put in upon reversing the Outlawry, for errors in law, though it does not appear the party came in gratis. Wall v. Walton, E. 12 G. 3. cited, 1 Wils. 47: 2 Stra. 951: 2 Barn. K. B. 298. At length, in the case of Stevenold v. Hampson, the Court upon considering the words of stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. § 3, which empowers the outlaw to appear by attorney, and says, "the Outlawry shall be reversed without bail in all cases, except where special bail shall be ordered by the Court," declared they were of opinion they had a discretionary power to require it or not; and that the want of an affidavit before the Outlawry was no objection, because that is only requisite to warrant an arrest; and though the stat. 31 Eliz. c. 3. § 3. be the only act that expressly requires bail, it is not to be inferred from thence that in other cases it ought not to be insisted on; for that act makes a new error, and the bail upon it is absolutely to pay the condemnation money. 2 Stra. 1178, 9: 1 Wils. 3. And it is now settled, that on reversing an Outlawry, for any other error in law, besides the want of proclamations, the bail is common or special, in like manner as upon the arrest. Where special bail is required, it need not be put in before the allowance of the writ of error, but it is well enough if put in at any time before the reversal. 1 Ld. Raym 605: 2 Stra. 951: 2 Barn. K. B. 928. The recognizance, in such case, is usually taken in the common form; but see 12 Mod. 545, per Holt, and 2 Salk. 496. And it is settled that the bail may render the defendant, and are not, at all events, answerable for the debt. Tidd's Pract. K. B. and the authorities there cited.

In general, an Outlawry can only be reversed upon payment of costs; but if the process have been abused, and made subservient to purposes of oppression, as where a man has been outlawed, who was already in prison at the plaintiff's suit, or being at large, did not abscond but appeared publickly, and might have been arrested or served with process, the Court on motion will order the plaintiff to reverse the Outlawry at his own expence. 2 Vent. 46: 2 Salk. 495: Barnes 321: T. Jon. 211: Comb. 19: 12 Mod. 415.

It is clearly agreed, that an attainder of felony of a person who had any lands shall never be reversed by writ of error, without a scire facias against all the tertenants and lords mediate and immediate; but it is settled, that such scire facias is not necessary in the case of high treason. Dyer 34. pl. 20: Cro. Eliz. 235: 1 Keb. 241: 1 Sid. 316: 3 Keb. 29: 3 Mod. 32, 47: 4 Mod. 366: Ld. Raym. 154.

Also it is said, that it is not necessary in the case of felony, when it is suggested on the roll that the party had no lands, and the Attorney General confesses it. 2 Salk. 495.

It is agreed, that after an Outlawry of treason or felony is reversed, the party shall be put to plead to the indictment, for that still remains good, and he may be tried at the King's Bench bar; or the record may be remitted into the country, if it were removed into the King's Bench by certiorari, with a command to the justices below, to proceed by the statute of 6 Hen. 6 c. 1: Cro. Jac. 646: Cro. Car. 365: 3 Mod. 42: 6 Mod. 115: 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 209.

So if a man be outlawed by process in an information, and comes in and reverses the Outlawry, he must plead instanter to the information. 1 Salk. 371: 5 Mod. 141.

The law is the same in civil cases; and therefore, if an Outlawry in a personal action be reversed, the original remains. March 9: 3 Lev. 245.

Generally speaking, when the Outlawry is reversed, or the defendant has obtained a charter of pardon, he may be discharged, if in custody, by writ of supersedeas. See stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 2. § 4. And his property, if taken into the King's hands, shall be restored to him by writ of amoveas manus, or otherwise, according to the course of the Exchequer. As to chattels real, see Cro. Eliz. 278: 2 Vern. 312: Bunb. 105. And as to chattels personal, see 5 Mod. 61. Where he has obtained a charter of pardon, he must sue out a scire facias to give notice thereof to the plaintiff, in order that he may further prosecute his action, if he think proper. See Tidd's Pract. K. B. c. 4.

It hath been adjudged, that if the King grant over the lands of a person outlawed for treason or felony, and afterwards the Outlawry be reversed, the party may enter on the patentee, and need neither sue a petition to the King, nor a scire facias against the patentee. 1 And. 188. A person shall, after Outlawry reversed, be restored to his law, and be of ability to sue. Co. Litt 288. b.

If the goods of a person outlawed are sold by the Sheriff upon a capias utlagatum, and after the Outlawry is reversed by writ of error, he shall be restored to the goods themselves; because the Sheriff was not compellable to sell these goods, but only to keep them to the use of the King. 5 Co. 90: 1 Roll. Abr. 778.

If an advowson come to the King, by forfeiture upon an Outlawry, and the church becoming void, the King presents, and then the Outlawry is reversed: yet the King shall enjoy that presentment, because the presentment there came to the King as the profit of the advowson. Moor 269.

But if the church be void at the time of the Outlawry, and the presentation is thereby forfeited as a chattel principally and distinct of itself, there, upon reversal of the Outlawry, the party shall be restored to the presentation. Cro. Eliz. 170.

If a termor being outlawed for felony, grants over his term, after the Outlawry is reversed, the grantee may have trespass for the profits taken between the reversal of the Outlawry and the assignment; for by the reversal it is as if no Outlawry had been, and there is no record of it. Cro. Eliz. 170: 13 Co. 20, 22.

It is said, that if a man be outlawed in the King's Bench, and the party's goods are seized into the King's hands, and then the Outlawry is reversed, there can be no restitution; the reason whereof is, for that the Court of King's Bench cannot send a writ to the treasurer; and the Court of Exchequer have no record before them to issue out a warrant for restitution. 5 Mod. 61. See 2 Vern. 312: 2 Lev. 49.

For more learning on this subject, see 3 New Abr. and 22 Vin. Abr. title Outlawry.

OUT-

OUTPARTERS, mentioned in stat. 9 H. 5. st. 1. c. 7. A kind of thieves in Riddesdale, that stole cattle, or other things without that liberty; some are of opinion, that those which in the fore-named statute are termed Outparters, are now called outputters, being such as set matches for the robbing any man or house. Cowell. See Intakers.

OUTRIDERS, Bailiffs errant, employed by the Sheriffs, or their deputies, to ride to the farthest place of their counties or hundreds, with the more speed to summon such as they thought good to their county or hundred courts. See stat. 14 E. 3. st. 1. c. 9.

OWEL, An old French word for equal. Law Fr. Dict.

OWELTY, Equality. Co. Litt. 169. When there is lord, mesne, and tenant, and the tenant holds of the mesne by the same service that the mesne holds over of the lord above him, this is called Owelty of services. F. N. B. 136.

OWLERS, Persons that carry wool, &c. to the sea-side by night, in order to be shipped off contrary to law. See Wool.

OWLING, The offence of exporting, &c. wool by night. See Wool.

OXEN; See Cattle.

OXFILD, A restitution anciently made by a hundred or county, for any wrong done by one that was within the same. Lamb. Archaion, 125.

OXFORD. See University: Courts of Universities.

OXGANG, from Ox, i. e. bos, and gang, or gate, iter.] Is commonly taken for fifteen acres of land, or as much as one ox can plough in a year. Skene says 13 acres. See Spelman.

Six Oxgangs of land, is so much as six oxen can plough. Cromp. Jurisd. 220. But an Oxgang seemeth properly to be spoken of such land as lieth in Gaynour. Old Nat. Br. fol. 117. See Co. Litt. 69. Cowell.

OYER. This word was anciently used for what we now call assises. Anno 13 Ed. 1. See Oyer and Terminer.

OYER, Fr. Audire, Lat. To hear.] Previous and preparatory to pleading in bar, the defendant may crave Oyer of the writ, or bond, or other specialty upon which the action is brought, that is, to hear it read to him; the generality of defendants in the times of ancient simplicity being supposed incapable to read it themselves: whereupon the whole is entered verbatim upon the record, and the defendant may take advantage of any condition or other part of it, not stated in the plaintiff's declaration. 3 Comm. c. 20. p. 299.

To demand Oyer of an obligation, is not only to desire the plaintiff's attorney to read the same; but to have a copy thereof, that the defendant may consider what to plead to the action. Hob. 217.

Oyer of Deeds, &c. is demandable by the plaintiff, or by the defendant. If the plaintiff in his declaration necessarily makes a profert in curia of any deed, writing, letters of administration, or the like, the defendant may pray Oyer, and must have a copy thereof delivered to him, if demanded; paying for the same after the rate of 4*d. per* sheet, and also for the stamps. 2 Salk. 497: R. T. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. So likewise if the defendant in his plea makes a necessary profert in curia of any deed, &c. the plaintiff may pray Oyer, and shall have a copy at the like rate. Id: 6 Mod. 122. And the party of whom Oyer is demanded, is bound to carry it to the adverse party. 2 Term Rep. 40. Formerly, all demands of Oyer were made in Court (as it is now in case of criminal appeals,) where the deed is, by intendment of law, when it is pleaded with a profert in curiâ. 12 Mod. 598: 3 Salk. 119. And therefore when Oyer is craved, it is supposed to be of the Court, and not of the party; and the words ei legitur in hæc verba, &c. are the act of the Court. Id: 1 Sid. 108. But see 2 Lutw. 1644, contra. In practice, however, Oyer is now usually demanded, and granted by the attornies. 6 Mod. 28. And where the plaintiff is entitled to have Oyer of a deed, it cannot be dispensed with by the Court, nor can the defendant be compelled to plead without it, even though the deed be lost. 2 Lill. P. R. title Oyer 266: 2 Keb. 274: 6 Mod. 28: 2 Str. 1186: 1 Wils. 16. But where the deed is in the hands of a third person, the Court will oblige him to give Oyer, and produce it. 2 Str. 1198.

When a deed is shewn in Court, it remains there in contemplation of law, all the term in which it is shewn; for all the term is considered in law but as one day. And at the end of the term, if the deed be not denied, the law doth adjudge it to be in the custody of the party to whom it belongs; but if it be denied, then it shall remain in Court till the plea is determined, and if it eventually turn out not to be the plaintiff's deed, it shall be destroyed. Co. Litt. 231. b: 5 Co. 74. b: 2 Lutw. 1644. But letters testamentary, or of administration, are not supposed to remain in Court all the term; for the plaintiff may have occasion to produce them elsewhere. 2 Salk. 497: 12 Mod. 598; hence it is, that Oyer of a deed cannot, in strictness, be demanded, but during the same term it is pleaded. 5 Co. 74. b: 2 Lutw. 1644: 1 Term Rep. 149. And as a general imparlance is always to a subsequent term, it follows that Oyer of a deed cannot be demanded after such imparlance. 1 Keb. 32: 2 Lev. 142: Prœm. 400: 3 Keb. 480, 491: 6 Mod. 28. A different doctrine is, indeed, laid down in one place, which must be understood of a special imparlance to another day in the same term. 12 Mod. 29, and see 2 Show. 310.

Though Oyer is not, in strictness, demandable of a record, (1 Ld. Raym. 347, 4*th edition, note* (a): Dougl. 476, 7: 1 Term Rep. 149, 50.) yet if a judgment or other matter of record in the same court be pleaded, the parties pleading it must give a note in writing, of the term and number-roll whereon such judgment or matter of record is entered and filed; or in default thereof the plea is not to be received. Keilw. 96: Carth. 454: 1 Ld. Raym. 347: Carth. 517: 1 Ld. Raym. 550: 2 Str. 823: R. T. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. (b). And probably, on this account, the party was not anciently permitted to plead nul tiel record of a judgment or matter of record in the same Court. 5 H. 7. 24, per Brian. 3 Keb. 76. But where a judgment or matter of record is pleaded in a different Court, the party not being entitled to an account of the term and number-roll, must plead nul tiel record. And it seems, that Oyer is not demandable of an act of parliament. Dougl. 476: Godb. 186, contra.

Formerly the defendant was allowed Oyer of the Original Writ, in order to demur or plead in abatement, for any apparent insufficiency or variance. Gilb. C. P. 52: 12 Mod. 35, 189: 2 Lutw. 1644: 6 Mod. 27: 2 Salk.

498: 2 Ld. Raym. 970: R. T. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. b: 2 Wilf. 97: Co. Ent. 320. But this indulgence having been abused and made an instrument of delay, it is now holden, that if the defendant demand Oyer of the Original Writ, the plaintiff may proceed, as if no such demand had been made. Dougl. 227, 8: Barnes 340: and see Bro. Abr. title Oyer, pl. 19.

The demand of Oyer is a kind of plea, and should regularly be made, before the time of pleading is expired. If it be not made till after that time, the plaintiff may consider the demand as a nullity, and sign judgment. Tidd's Pract. K. B. But though Oyer be not in strictness demandable, yet if it be given, the party demanding has a right to make use of it. Dougl. 476, 7. If the defendant would insist upon his demand of Oyer, he should move the Court to have it entered upon record. 6 Mod. 28. If the plaintiff on the other hand would contest the Oyer, he may either counterplead it, or strike out the rest of the pleading, and demur. 2 Lev. 142: 2 Salk. 497: and see 2 Ld. Raym. 970. Upon which the judgment of the Court is, either that the defendant have Oyer, or that he answer without it. 2 Lev. 142. On the latter judgment, the defendant may bring a writ of error; for to deny Oyer where it ought to be granted is error, but not è converso. 2 Salk. 497: 6 Mod. 28: 2 Ld. Raym. 970: 2 Stra. 1186: 1 Wilf. 16.

There is no settled time prescribed for the plaintiff to give Oyer, though if not given when demanded, the defendant shall have the same time to plead, after Oyer given, as he had at the time of demanding it. 1 Str. 705: R. T. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. (b). And he may either set forth the Oyer in his plea, or not, at his election. 2 Str. 1241: 1 Wilf. 97. If he set it forth, the Court must adjudge upon it, as parcel of the record, though it was not strictly demandable at the time of granting it. 3 Salk. 119: Carth. 513: 6 Mod. 27: Dougl. 160. But the defendant is not bound to set it forth in his plea. 2 Str. 1241: 1 Wilf. 97: Barnes 127, contra; and if he do not, the plaintiff may pray an inrollment, and so make it part of his replication.

The time allowed for the defendant to give Oyer of a deed, &c. to the plaintiff, is two days exclusive after it is demanded. Carth. 454: 2 Term Rep. 40. And if it be not given in that time, the plaintiff may sign judgment, as for want of a plea. 6 Mod. 122. If given, the plaintiff shall have the same time to reply after Oyer given him by the defendant, as he had at the time of demanding it. R. T. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. (b).

Where there may be Oyer, the party demanding it is not bound to plead without it, but defendant may plead without it if he will, on taking upon him to remember the bond or deed; though if he plead without Oyer, he cannot after waive his plea, and demand Oyer. Mod. Caf. 28: 3 Salk. 119. After a plea in abatement, Oyer may not be had the same term, to plead another dilatory plea. Mod. Caf. 27: 2 Lill. 267.

When on Oyer of a deed, it is entered, the whole case appears to the Court as if the deed were in the plea, and the deed is become parcel of the record: though Oyer of a deed can only be demanded during the time it is produced in Court; and then it may be entered in hæc verba, and there may be a demurrer, or issue upon it, &c. 5 Rep. 76: Lutw. 1644: 3 Salk. 119.

If a bond is brought into Court, Oyer is grantable only the first term, for afterwards it is adjudged in the possession of the party. Yet Oyer of a recognizance was granted in a term subsequent to the declaration. Ld. Raym. 84.

A defendant ought to crave Oyer of the plaintiff's deed, on which he hath declared; and cannot set forth another to plead performance thereof. Mod. Caf. 154: 2 Nelf. Abr. 1225.

So where a deed is pleaded, the other party cannot allege that there is other matter contained in the deed, but must set it forth on Oyer. Strange 227.

If the defendant after craving Oyer of a deed, do not set forth the whole of it, the plaintiff may sign judgment as for want of a plea. 4 Term Rep. 370.

If there is misnomer in a bond, &c. the defendant is to plead the misnomer, and that he made no such deed without craving Oyer; for if he doth, he admits his name to be right. 1 Salk. 7.

If defendant will take advantage of a variance between the writ and count, he must crave Oyer of the writ, and spread it on the record, i. e. shew it to the Court. 2 Wilf. 395.

OYER of RECORD, audire recordum.] A petition made in Court, that the Judges, for better proof-sake, will hear or look upon any record. See the preceding title Oyer.

OYER AND TERMINER, Fr. Ouir & Terminer, Lat. Audiendo & Terminando.] A commission directed to the Judges, and other gentlemen of the county to which it is issued, by virtue whereof they have power to hear and determine treasons, and all manner of felonies and trespasses. Cromp. Jurisd. 121: 2 Inst. 419: 4 Inst. 152. In our statutes the term is often printed Oyer and Determiner, 4 Inst. 162. See this Dictionary, title Justices of Oyer, &c. and the references there, to which the following observations may be added.

The usual commission of Oyer and Terminer of Justices of assise is general; and when any sudden insurrection, or trespass is committed, which requires speedy reformation, then a special commission is immediately granted. See stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 29: F. N. B. 110.

A man may have a special commission of Oyer and Terminer, to inquire of extortions and oppressions of under-sheriffs, bailiffs, clerks of the markets, and all other officers, &c. on the complaint and suit of any one who will sue it out: and the King may make a writ of Associations unto the Justices of Oyer and Terminer, to admit those into their company whom he hath associated unto them; also another writ may be sent to the Judges to proceed, although all the Justices do not come at the day of the sessions; and this writ is called the writ of Si non omnes, &c. New Nat. Brev.

As to these commissions it is said, that if a commission of Oyer and Terminer, &c. be awarded to certain persons to inquire at such a place, they can neither open their commission at another, nor adjourn it thither, or give judgment there; if they do, all their proceedings are, as coram non judice. But it is held, that justices appointed pro hac vice may adjourn their commission from one day to another, though there be no words in their commission to such purpose; for a general commission authorising persons to do a thing, implicitly allows them convenient time for the doing it. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 5. § 14.

Upon the general commission of Oyer and Terminer, there should issue a precept to the Sheriff in the name of the the commissioners, bearing date fifteen days before their sessions, that he return twenty-four persons for a grand jury ad inquirendum, &c. on such a day; and the Sheriff is to return his panel annexed to the precept; and by the statute 5 Ed. 3. c. 11, Justices of Oyer and Terminer may issue process of outlawry in any county of England, against persons indicted before them; but all their processes are regularly to be in the names and under the seals of the commissioners, viz. three of them, one being of the quorum. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 26, 31. See this Dictionary, title Outlawry.

As the same justices, at the same time, may execute the commission of Oyer and Terminer, and also that of gaol delivery, they may proceed, by virtue of the one, in those cases where they have no jurisdiction by the other, and make up their records accordingly. 2 Hale P. C. 20; and see 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 5. On indictments found before the Justices of Oyer and Terminer, they may proceed the same day against the parties indicted.

There is a special commission of Oyer and Terminer, granted upon urgent occasions; and the party suing it might thereupon take out a writ to the Sheriff, commanding him to arrest goods wrongfully taken away, and keep them in safe custody, till order made concerning them by the Justices assigned to determine the matter. Reg. Orig. 126: F. N. B. 112.

OYES, A corruption of the Fr. Oyez, i. e. Audite, hear ye.] The term used by a public crier, to enjoin silence and attention.

OYSTER-FISHERY, (in the river Medway,) is regulated by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 19; and a Court is kept for that purpose at Rochester yearly, where, by a jury of free dredger-men of the Oyster-fishery, the same is to be inquired into; and they may make rules and orders when Oysters shall be taken, what quantities in a day, and to preserve the brood of Oysters, &c. And may impose penalties not exceeding 5*l.* Also water-bailiffs shall be appointed to examine boats, &c. By stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 51, for regulating Oyster-fishing in general, fine and imprisonment may be inflicted on persons unlawfully fishing for Oysters. But this act not to affect any other local statutes. See titles Fish; Navigation Acts.

PAIN, or PEINE, FORT ET DURE, Fr.—Lat. poena fortis & dura.] A special punishment heretofore inflicted on those who, being arraigned of felony, refused to put themselves on the ordinary trial, but stubbornly stood mute; vulgarly called Pressing to Death. See title Mute.

PAINS AND PENALTIES. Acts of parliament to attaint particular persons of treason or felony, or to inflict Pains and Penalties, beyond or contrary to the Common Law, to serve a special purpose, are to all intents and purposes new laws, made pro re nata, and by no means an execution of such as are already in being. 4 Comm. c. 19. § 1.

An act passed in the ninth year of King George I. for inflicting Pains and Penalties on the bishop of Rochester, Mr. Kelly, and others, for being concerned in Layer's conspiracy; by virtue of which statute, the bishop was deprived and banished, and disabled to hold any office, dignity, benefice, &c. And the others were imprisoned during life, and to forfeit all their lands and goods; and escaping from prison, or the bishop returning from banishment, to be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy, &c. Also persons corresponding with the bishop, except licensed under the sign-manual, were adjudged felons by the statute. Stat. 9 Geo. 1. cc. 16, 17. See title Attainder.

PAINTERS. The Price of Painters' work is limited by statute; they shall not take above 16*d.* a day, for laying any flat colour mingled with oil or size upon timber, stone, &c. And plasterers are forbid using the trade of a painter in London, or to lay any colour of painting, unless they are servants to Painters, &c. on pain of 5*l.* But they may use whiting, blacking, red lead, oker, &c. mixt with size only. Plasterers not to exercise the trade of Painters in London, without serving an apprenticeship, stat. 1 Jac. 1. c 20.

PAIS, A county or region, pagus; g, in i [illegible] conversio. Spelm.] Trial per Pais, by the country, i. e. a Jury.

PAISSO, Pasnage, or liberty for hogs to run in forests or woods to feed on mast. Mon. Angl. i. 682. See Passing.

PALACES, The steward, treasurer, and comptroller may inquire by a jury of the King's servants, if any of the servants conspire the death of the King, or of any councillor, &c. Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 14. The limits of the Palace of Westminster, stat. 28 Hen 8. c. 12. The great master of the King's house to have the same authority as the Lord Steward, stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 39, repealed, stat. 1 Mar. st. 3. c. 4: The penalty of striking in the King's Court, stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 12. inquiries of murders, &c. within the verge, Ib. See Striking; Murder.

PALAGIUM, A duty to lords of manors, for exporting and importing vessels of wine in any of their ports.

PALATINE, County: see County.

PALFREY, Palfredus, palafredus, palefredus, palifredus.] One of the better sorts of horses used by noblemen or others for State: and sometimes of old taken for a horse fit for a woman to ride. Camden says, that William Fauconberg held the manor of Cukeny, in the county of Nottingham in serjeanty, by the service of shoeing the King's Palfrey, when the King should come to Mansfield. See 1 Inst. 149.

PALICEA, A park pale. Cowell.

PALINGMAN,

PALINGMAN, mentioned in stats. 22 Ed. 4. c. 23: 11 H. 7. c. 23; seems to be a merchant denizen, one born within the English pale. But Skinner judges it to signify a fishmonger, or merchant of fish. Cowell.

PALLA, A canopy; also often used for an altar-cloth. Matt. Paris, sub ann. 1236.

PALLIO COOPERIRE. It was anciently a custom where children were born out of wedlock, and their parents afterwards intermarried, that those children, together with the father and mother, stood under a cloth extended while the marriage was solemnizing, which was in the nature of adoption; and by such custom, the children were taken to be legitimate. Epist. Rob. Grosthead Episc. Lincoln. Such children, however, were never legitimate in this country at Common Law, though the clergy wanted to have a law pass to render them legitimate. See Bastard.

PALL; PALLIUM, The pontifical vesture made of lambs' wool, in breadth not exceeding three fingers cut round that it may cover the shoulders; it has two labels or strings on each side, before and behind, and likewise four purple crosses on the right and left, fastened with pins of gold, whose heads are Sapphire: these vestments the Pope gives or sends to archbishops and metropolitans, and upon extraordinary occasions to other bishops; who wear them about their necks at the altar, above their other ornaments. The Pall was first given to the bishop of Ostia, by Pope Marcus the Second, anno 336.

Durandus, in his Rationale, tells us that it is made after the following manner, viz. The nuns of St. Agnes every year, on the feast-day of their saint, offer two white lambs on the altar of their church, during the time they sing Agnus Dei in a solemn mass; which lambs are afterwards taken by two of the canons of the Lateran church, and by them given to the Pope's subdeacons, who put them to pasture till shearing time, and then they are shorn, and the Pall is made of their wool, mixed with other white wool; the Pall being thus made is carried to the Lateran church, and there placed on the high altar by the deacons of that church on the bodies of St. Peter and St. Paul; and after the usual watching, it is carried away in the night, and delivered to the subdeacons who lay it up safe. Selden's Hist. Tithes 227. See also Cressy's Church Hist. 972.

PALMISTRY, A kind of divination, practised by looking upon the lines and marks of the hands and fingers; being a deceitful art used by Egyptians, prohibited by stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 4. See title Egyptians.

PAMPHLETS, Of a certain size, are among the articles liable to a stamp duty.

PANDECTS, The books of the Civil Law, compiled by Justinian. See title Civil Law.

PANDOXATRIX, An ale-wife who both brews and sells ale or beer; from pandoxatorium, a brewhouse, Statut. & consuetud. burgi villæ de Montgom. temp. Hen. 2.

PANEL, panella, pannellum.] According to Sir Edward Coke, denotes a little part; but Spelman says, that it signifies schedula vel pagina, a schedule or page; as a Panel of parchment, or a counterpane of an indenture; but it is used more particularly for a schedule or roll, containing the names of such jurors as the Sheriff returns to pass upon any trial. Kitch. 226: Reg. Orig. 223. And the impannelling a jury is the entering their names by the Sheriff into a Panel or little schedule of parchment; in panello assisæ. Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 12. See titles Jury; Trial.

PANES DE MANDATO; See Mandato.

PANETIA, A pantry, or place to set up cold victuals. Cowell.

PANIS ARMIGERORUM, The bread distributed to servants. Mon. Angl. i. 240.

PANIS BISUS, Coarse bread. Mon. Angl. i. 240.

PANIS BLACKWHYTLOF, Bread of a middle sort, between white and brown, such as in Kent is called Ravel-bread. In religious houses it was their coarser bread, made for ordinary guests, and distinguished from their household loaf, or Panis conventualis, which was pure manchet, or white bread. Cowell.

PANIS MILITARIS, Hard biscuit, brown George, camp bread, coarse and black. The prior and convent of Ely grant to John Grove, a corody or allowance,—Ad suum victum quolibet die unum panem monachalem, i. e. a white loaf; and to his servant unum panem nigrum militarem, i. e. a little brown loaf or biscuit. Cartular. Ely. MS. f. 47.

PANNAGE, or PAWNAGE, pannagium, Fr. Pasnage.] That food which the swine feed upon in the woods, as mast of beech, acorns, &c. Also it is the money taken by the Agisters for the food of hogs in the King's forest. Cromp. Jurisd. 155 Stat. West. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 25. Manwood says pannage signifies most properly the mast of the woods or hedge rows. And see Linwood. It is mentioned in the statute 20 Car. 2. c. 3. And in ancient charters this word is variously written; as pannagium, pasnagium, pathnagium, paunagium & pessona. See 8 Rep. 47.

PANNUS, A garment made with skins. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 14.

PANTILES, Are among the articles liable to certain duties of excise.

PAPER. The duties on this article, form a very productive branch of the public revenue, and are under the survey of the Commissioners of Excise. See that title, and titles Customs; Books, &c.

PAPER-BOOKS, The issues in actions, &c. upon special pleadings, made up by the clerk of the Papers, who is an officer for that purpose. Upon an issue in law, it is termed the Demurrer-book. The clerks of the Papers of the Court of King's Bench, in all copies of pleas and Paper-books by them made up, shall subscribe to such Paper-books, the names of the counsel who have signed such pleas, as well on the behalf of the plaintiff as defendant; and in all Paper-books delivered to the judges of the Court, the names of the counsel who did sign those pleas are to be subscribed to the books, by the clerks or attornies who deliver the same. R. Pasch. 18 Car. 2: 2 Lill. Abr. 268. See titles Issue; Practice; Pleading.

PAPER-OFFICE, An ancient office within the palace of Whitehall, wherein all the public Papers, writings, matters of state and council, letters, intelligences, negotiations of the King's ministers abroad, and generally, all the Papers and dispatches that pass through the offices of the two principal Secretaries of State, are lodged and transmitted, and there remain disposed in the way of library. There is also an office belonging to the Court of King's Bench so called. Dict.

PAPISTS,

PERSONS professing the Popish religion; now, more liberally, distinguished by the denomination of ROMAN-CATHOLICS.

The word Papist seems to be considered by the Roman-Catholics themselves as a nick-name of reproach, originating in their maintaining the supreme ecclesiastical (and heretofore temporal) power of the Pope, Papa.—For this reason, probably, the word Papist is not to be found in the Index to a most valuable production by a gentleman of that persuasion; though in one of the notes on the work he has given perhaps a more clear and explicit summary of the law on this subject, than has any where else appeared; and which is therefore here introduced, corrected from some trifling errors, and modified so as to answer the present purpose. See 1 Inst. 391, a. in the Notes, and the words Roman-Catholics in the Index to the Notes. See also 4 Comm. c. 4, and Mr. Christian's Notes there.

As to papal provisions, and papal process, see this Dictionary, title Præmunire.

I. Of the Laws passed against Papists since the Reformation.

And herein,

1. Of the Penalty on Papists for exercising their religious Worship; including the Laws respecting their Places of Education, and Ministers, or as they are usually termed Priests.
2. Of the Penalties for not conforming to the Established Church; and see this Dictionary, title Non-conformists.
3. Of the Penalties for refusing to take the Oath of Supremacy, and the Declaration against Popery. [With respect to the not taking the Sacrament, and the Declaration against Transubstantiation, see this Dictionary, title Non-conformists, as regards the Corporation and Test Acts.]
4. Of the Laws affecting the Landed Property of Papists.

II. Of the Laws past in the present Reign (Geo. III.) to relieve the Papists.

III. Of the comparative Situations of Papists and Protestant Dissenters; and of the Disabilities to which the former are still liable. [As relates to the Operation of the Corporation-Act and Test-Act, see title Non conformists.]

I. 1. By various statutes, if any English priest of the church of Rome, born in the dominions of the Crown of England, came to England from beyond the seas, or tarried in England three days without conforming to the church, he was guilty of high treason; and they also incurred the guilt of high treason who were reconciled to the see of Rome, or procured others to be reconciled to it. By these laws also Papists were totally disabled from giving their children any education in their own religion. If they educated their children at home, for maintaining the schoolmaster, if he did not repair to church, or was not allowed by the bishop of the diocese, they were liable to forfeit 10*l*. a month, and the schoolmaster was liable to forfeit 40*s*. a day; if they sent their children for education to any school of their persuasion abroad, they were liable to forfeit 100*l*. and the children so sent were disabled from inheriting, purchasing, or enjoying any lands, profits, goods, debts, duties, legacies, or sums of money.—Saying mass was punishable by a forfeiture of 200 marks: hearing it, by a forfeiture of 100. See stats. 1 Eliz. c. 2: 23 Eliz. c. 1: 27 Eliz. c. 2: 29 Eliz. c. 6: 35 Eliz. c. 2: 2 Jac. 1. c. 4: 3 Jac. 1. cc. 4, 5: 7 Jac. 1. c. 6; 3 Car. 1. c. 2: 25 Car. 2. c. 2: 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 27: 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13.

By stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4, where the parents of Protestant children are Papists, the Lord Chancellor may take care of the education of such Protestant children, and make order for their maintenance suitable to the ability of the parent.

2. Under this head are to be classed those laws which are generally called the Statutes of Recusancy. It should be observed, that absence from church alone and unaccompanied by any other act, constitutes Recusancy, in the true sense of that word. Till the stat. 35 Eliz. c. 2, all Non-conformists were considered as Recusants, and were all equally subject to the penalties of Recusancy; that statute was the first penal statute made against Popish Recusants, by that name, and as distinguished from other Recusants. From that statute arose the distinction between Protestant and Popish Recusants; the former were subject to such statutes of Recusancy as preceded that of the 35th of Elizabeth, and to some statutes against Recusancy made subsequently to that time; but they were relieved from them all by the act of Toleration, stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 18. From the stat. 35 Eliz c. 2, arose also the distinction between Papists or persons professing the Popish religion, in general, and Popish Recusants, and Popish Recusants Convict. Notwithstanding the frequent mention, in the statutes, of Papists or persons professing the Popish religion, neither the statutes themselves, nor the cases adjudged upon them, present a clear notion of the acts or circumstances that, in the eye of the law, constituted a Papist, or a person professing the Popish religion. When a person of that description absented himself from church, he came under the legal description of a Popish Recusant; when he was convicted in a Court of law of absenting himself from church, he was termed a Popish Recusant Convict; to this must be added the constructive Recusancy, incurred by a refusal to take the Oath of Supremacy. With respect to the statutes against Recusancy; by these statutes, Popish Recusants Convict were punishable by the censures of the church, and by a fine of 20*l*. for every month during which they absented themselves from church; they were disabled from holding offices or employments; from keeping arms in their houses; from maintaining actions or suits at law, or in equity; from being executors or guardians; from presenting to advowsons; from practising in the law or physic; and from holding offices civil or military; they were subject to the penalties attending excommunication; were not permitted to travel five miles from home, unless by licence, upon pain of forfeiting all their goods; and might not come to Court under pain of 100*l*. [No marriage or burial of such Recusant, or baptism of his child, should be had otherwise than by ministers of the church of England, under severe penalties imposed by stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5.]

A married

A married woman, when convicted of Recusancy, was liable to forfeit two thirds of her dower or jointure. She could not be executrix or administratrix to her husband, nor have any part of his goods; and during her marriage she might be kept in prison, unless her husband redeemed her at the rate of 10*l.* a month, or the third part of his lands; Popish Recusants Convict were, within three months after conviction, either to submit and renounce their religious opinions, or, if required by four justices, to abjure the realm; and if they did not depart, or if they returned without licence, they were guilty of felony, and were to suffer death as felons. See the statutes referred to under the former head; and, for the cases applicable to them, this Dictionary, title Recusant.

3. It must be premised, that the Roman-Catholics make no objection to take the Oath of Allegiance in stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13; or the Oath of Abjuration in stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 53.—With respect to the Oath of Supremacy, by stat. 1 Eliz. c. 1, the persons therein mentioned were made compellable to take the Oath of Supremacy contained in that act: by stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 4, another oath was prescribed to be taken, commonly called the Oath of Allegiance and Obedience; these oaths were abrogated by stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 8; and a new Oath of Allegiance and a new Oath of Supremacy were introduced, and required to be taken in their stead; the stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13, contains an Oath of Supremacy, in the same words as the Oath of Supremacy required to be taken by stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 8. By that oath persons are made to swear, that "no foreign prince, person, prelate, State, or potentate, hath, or ought to have, any jurisdiction, power, supremacy, pre eminence, or authority, ecclesiastical or spiritual, within the realm." It was required to be taken by the persons therein named; it might be tendered to any person, by any two justices of the peace; and persons refusing the Oath so tendered were adjudged to be Popish Recusants Convict, and to forfeit and to be proceeded against as such. This was the constructive Recusancy referred to above. See also title Oaths. It was not the offence itself of Recusancy, which, as already observed, consisted merely in the party's absenting himself from church; it was the offence of not taking the Oaths of Supremacy, and the other Oaths prescribed by the stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13, the refusal of which was, by that statute, placed on the same footing as a legal conviction on the statutes of Recusancy; and subjected the party refusing to the penalties of those statutes. This was the most severe of all the laws against Papists. The punishment of Recusancy was penal in the extreme; and the persons objecting to the oath in question might be subjected to all the penalties of Recusancy, merely by their refusing the oath when tendered to them. It added to the penal nature of these laws, that the oath in question might be tendered, at the mere will of two justices of peace, without any previous information or complaint, before a magistrate, or any other person. Thus by refusing to take the Oath of Supremacy, when tendered to them, they became liable to all the penalties of recusancy; and the same refusal, by stats. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 4: 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13, restrained them from practising the law as advocates, barristers, solicitors, attornies, notaries, or proctors; and from voting at elections. With respect to the declaration against popery, the stat. 30 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 1, contains the declaration, and prescribes it to be made by members of either House of Parliament before they take their seats. By it, they declare their disbelief of the doctrine of transubstantiation, and their belief that the invocation of saints, and the sacrifice of the mass, are idolatrous.

4. How the landed property of Papists was affected by the laws against Recusancy has been already mentioned. By stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4, it was enacted, that a person educated in the Popish religion, or professing the same, who did not in six months, after the age of sixteen, take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and subscribe the declaration prescribed by stat. 30 C. 2. st. 2. c. 1, should, in respect of himself only, and not of his heirs or posterity, be disabled to inherit or take lands by descent, devise, or limitation, in possession, reversion, or remainder; and that, during his life, till he took the oaths, and subscribed the declaration against Popery, his next of kin, who was a Protestant, should enjoy the lands, without accounting for the profits; and should be incapable of purchasing; and that all estates, terms, interests, or profits out of lands, made, done, or suffered to his use, or in trust for him, should be void.

By stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5: 1 W. & M. c. 26: 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 14: 11 G. 2. c. 17, Papists, or persons professing the Popish religion, were disabled from presenting to advowsons, and other ecclesiastical benefices, and to hospitals and other charitable establishments. By annual acts of the legislature, Papists being of the age of eighteen years, and not having taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, were subjected to the burthen of the double land-tax. By stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 55, they were required to register their names and estates in the manner, and under the penalties, therein mentioned; and by stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 18, continued by several subsequent statutes, an obligation of inrolling their deeds and wills was imposed on them. Such were the principal penal laws against Roman Catholics, at the time of the accession of the House of Brunswick.

The above summary of the laws against Papists is extracted from the publication of a Roman-Catholic; it is observable that it does not exactly tally with the enumeration made by Blackstone, in 4 Comm. c. 4; but it is presumed, the above statement is as correct as interest and conscience, two powerful incentives, could possibly make it. As an apology for the origin of these laws, the learned Commentator observes, that they are seldom exerted; and are rather to be accounted for from their history, and the urgency of the times which produced them, than to be approved, on a cool review, as a standing system of laws. The Student will perceive the necessity of their being recapitulated in this work; as most of them are now only repealed on certain conditions (see post II.), which, if not complied with, leave the Popish Recusant in a state, even yet by no means enviable; though, as it appears, absolutely necessary for the preservation of our constitution.

II. The only act of any importance which, till the reign of his present Majesty, was passed for thier relief, (and that operated but in an indirect manner for their benefit,) was stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 18. On the construction of stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4, it had been held, that as it expressly confined the disability of Papists to take by descent to themselves only, and preserved their heirs and posterity from its operation, it was not to be construed as preventing the vesting of the freehold and inheritance in them, in cases of descent, or transmitting them to their posterity; but that the disability respected only the pernancy of the profits, or beneficial property of the lands, of which it deprived them, during their non-conformity. Whether that part of the statute which relates to their taking by purchase should receive the same construction was a frequent subject of discussion, the statute being, in that branch of it, without any limitation. To remedy this, the said stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 18, was passed; it enacts, that no sale for a full and valuable consideration, by the owner or reputed owner of any lands, or of any interest therein, theretofore made, or thereafter to be made, to a Protestant purchaser, shall be impeached, by reason of any disability of such Papist, or of any person under whom he claims, in consequence of stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4; unless the person taking advantage of such disability shall have recovered before the sale, or given notice of his claim to the purchaser; or before the contract for sale, shall have entered his claim at the quarter sessions, and bona fide pursued his remedy. The statute then recites the clauses of stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4, disabling Papists from purchasing; and afterwards enacts, that these clauses shall not be thereby altered or repealed, but shall remain in full force. This proviso is couched in such general words, that it created a doubt in some, whether it did not nearly frustrate the whole effect of the act. To this it was answered, that, notwithstanding the proviso, the enacting part of the statute was in full force, for the benefit of a Protestant purchaser; and that, the proviso operated only to declare that Papists themselves should not derive any benefit from the act, in any purchases they should attempt to make, under the foregoing clauses. This was considered the better opinion, and on the authority of it, many purchases of considerable consequence were made. See also stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 5.

During the present reign, two statutes, each of great importance, have been passed in favour of the Roman-Catholics; by stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 60, it was enacted, that so much of stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4, as related to the prosecution of Popish priests and jesuits, and imprisoning for life Papists who keep schools, or to disable Papists from taking by descent or purchase, should be repealed, as to all Papists, or persons professing the Popish religion, claiming under titles not thentofore litigated, who, within six months after the act passed, or their coming of age, should take the oath therein prescribed.

This is an oath expressive of allegiance to his Majesty, abjuration of the Pretender, renunciation of the Pope's civil power, and abhorrence of the doctrines of destroying, and not keeping faith with, heretics; and of deposing or murdering princes excommunicated by authority of the See of Rome.

Upon this statute a case was decided in Chancery, Dec. 18, 1783, Bunting v. Williamson. A bill had been filed, claiming an estate given to a person professing the Popish religion, by will, alleging the incapacity occasioned by stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4. The testator died many years before, and after his death a suit had been instituted by another person, who claimed as his heir at law, and that suit was depending at the time when the stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 60, was passed; but was afterwards dismissed for want of prosecution. The plaintiff filed his bill some time after the act, claiming in right of his wife as heir at law. The defendants pleaded their title under the testator's will; and that the defendant, who was beneficially interested, having or claiming the estate under that will, had taken the oath prescribed by the act; and concluded with an averment, that the title had not been before litigated by the plaintiff, or any person under whom he claimed. The plaintiffs, on argument of the plea, contended, that the words not hitherto litigated, extended to the case then before the Court, because the title had been litigated, and was in litigation at the time the act passed. But the lords commissioners Ashburst and Hotham were clearly of opinion, that the plaintiff not having before litigated the title, nor claiming under any person who had litigated it, the case of the defendants was within the benefit of the act, notwithstanding the prior litigation; and the plea was allowed.

The Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 32, has afforded the most effectual relief yet bestowed on the Roman-Catholics. That statute may be divided into six parts: the 1st contains the declaration and oath afterwards referred to in the body of the act, and prescribes the method of taking it: the 2d is a repeal of the statutes of Recusancy, in favour of persons taking the oath thereby prescribed: the 3d is a toleration, under certain regulations, of the religious worship of the Roman-Catholics, qualifying in like manner, and of their schools for education: the 4th enacts, that in future no one shall be summoned to take the Oath of Supremacy prescribed by stats. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 8: 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13: or the declaration against transubstantiation required by stat. 25 Car. 2. c. 2; that the stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 9, for removing Papists, or reputed Papists, from the cities of London and Westminster shall not extend to Roman-Catholics taking the appointed oath; and that no peer of Great Britain or Ireland, taking that oath, shall be liable to be prosecuted for coming into his Majesty's presence, or into the Court or house where his Majesty resides, under stat. 30 Car. 2. st. 2 c. 1. The 5th part of the act repeals the laws requiring the deeds and wills of Roman-Catholics to be registered or inrolled: the 6th excuses persons acting as counsellors at law, barristers, attornies, clerks, or notaries, from taking the Oath of Supremacy or the declaration against transubstantiation.

To state this statute something more particularly: Roman-Catholics, who are willing to comply with the requisitions contained in it, must appear at some of the Courts at Westminster, or at the Quarter Sessions held for the county, city, or place where they shall reside, and shall make and subscribe a declaration, that they profess the Roman-Catholic religion; and also an oath, which is nearly similar to that required by stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 60, the substance of which is stated above; the chief difference in the oath is, that the words of that in stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 32, are stronger, and more adapted to present times and circumstances, and probably intended to be less liable to equivocation or evasion. Of this declaration and oath being duly made by any Roman-Catholic, the officer of the Court shall grant him a certificate; and such officer shall yearly transmit to the Privy Council, lists of all persons who have thus qualified themselves ſelves within the year in his reſpective Court. The ſtatute then provides, that a Roman-Catholic thus qualified ſhall not be proſecuted under any ſtatute for not repairing to a pariſh church, nor ſhall he be proſecuted for being a Papiſt, nor for attending or performing maſs or other ceremonies of the church of Rome; provided that no place ſhall be allowed for an aſſembly to celebrate ſuch worſhip until it is certified to the Seſſions; nor ſhall any miniſter officiate in it until his name and deſcription are recorded there. And no ſuch place of aſſembly ſhall have its doors locked or barred during the time of meeting or divine worſhip.

And if any Roman-Catholic whatever is elected conſtable, churchwarden, overſeer, or into any parochial office, he may execute the ſame by a deputy, to be approved as if he were to act for himſelf as principal. But every miniſter who has qualified ſhall be exempt from ſerving upon juries, and from being elected into any parochial office. And all the laws for frequenting divine ſervice on Sundays ſhall continue in force; except where perſons attend ſome place of worſhip allowed by this ſtatute, or the Toleration Act of the Diſſenters; ſtat. 1 W. & M. ſt. 1. c. 8.

And if any perſon diſturb a congregation allowed under this act, he ſhall, as for diſturbing a diſſenting meeting, be bound over to the next ſeſſions, and, upon conviction there, ſhall forfeit 20*l.*

No Roman-Catholic miniſter ſhall officiate in any place of worſhip having a ſteeple and a bell, or at any funeral in a church or church-yard, or ſhall wear the habits of his order, except in a place allowed by this ſtatute, or in a private houſe where there ſhall not be more than five perſons beſides the family. This ſtatute ſhall not exempt Roman-Catholics from the payment of tithes, or other dues, to the church; nor ſhall it affect the ſtatutes concerning marriages, or any law reſpecting the ſucceſſion to the Crown. No perſon who has qualified ſhall be proſecuted for inſtructing youth, except in an endowed ſchool, or a ſchool in one of the Engliſh Univerſities; and except alſo, that no Roman-Catholic ſchoolmaſter ſhall receive into his ſchool the child of any Proteſtant father; nor ſhall any Roman-Catholic keep a ſchool until his or her name be recorded as a teacher at the ſeſſions.

No religious order is to be eſtabliſhed; and every endowment of a ſchool or college by a Roman-Catholic ſhall ſtill be ſuperſtitious and unlawful.

The firſt part of the above act gives riſe to two obſervations. The declaration preſcribed by the act is contained in theſe words: "I. A. B. do hereby declare, that I do profeſs the Roman-Catholic religion." Till the paſſing of this act, the perſons who were the ſubject of it were known in the Engliſh law by the name of Papiſts, reputed Papiſts, or perſons profeſſing the Popiſh religion. By requiring this declaration from them, the law has impoſed on them, and probably will in future recogniſe them by, the name of Roman-Catholics. Still, when the antient penal laws againſt them are to be mentioned with profeſſional accuracy, it ſeems abſolutely neceſſary to mention them under the name applied to them by the abrogated law. The other obſervation is of more importance. As the bill was originally framed, and as it ſtood, when, having paſſed the Commons, it was brought into the Houſe of Lords, the firſt clauſe in it directed, that the oath contained in the ſtat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 60, ſhould be taken no longer; but that the oath appointed by the bill ſhould, in future, be adminiſtered in its ſtead, and ſhould give the ſame benefits and advantages, and ſhould operate to the ſame effects and purpoſes, as the oath contained in the ſtatute 18 Geo. 3. c. 60. This clauſe was altered, in the Houſe of Lords, to the form in which it now ſtands. It does not expreſs that the oath contained in it ſhall entitle the perſons taking it to the benefits of the ſtat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 60, it only expreſſes that it ſhall be lawful for Catholics to take the oath preſcribed at the places and times, and in manner, therein mentioned. Thus it is very uncertain whether perſons taking only the oath preſcribed by the ſtat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 32, will be entitled to the benefit of the ſtat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 60, ſo as to be relieved from the penalties and diſabilities from which the perſons taking the oath preſcribed by that act were releaſed by it. The chief of theſe penalties and diſabilities were thoſe inflicted by ſtat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4, which diſabled them from taking by deſcent or purchaſe. From theſe penalties and diſabilities they are expoſed to much real grievance. It ſeems, therefore, adviſable for every Roman-Catholic, who wiſhes to be ſecure in the enjoyment of his landed property, to take both the declaration and oath preſcribed by the ſtat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 32; and the oath preſcribed by the former ſtat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 60.

As to the double land-tax, that, being impoſed by the annual land-tax act, a repeal of it could not be effected by any proſpective act. It is repealed, by omitting from the annual land-tax act the clauſe impoſing it. The land-tax act of the year 1794 contains alſo a clauſe, which, after reciting that lands formerly liable to a double aſſeſſment were then poſſeſſed by Proteſtants, enacted, that where any place, in conſequence of that circumſtance, ſhould be rated at more than four ſhillings in the pound, the commiſſioners might, on application, examine into the truth of the complaint, and certify the ſame to the barons of the Exchequer, before the 29th of the following September, who were to diſcharge the exceſs by the following November.

III. The Statute 1 W. & M. ſt. 1. c. 18, (commonly called the Toleration-Act,) exempts all Diſſenters, except Papiſts and ſuch as deny the Trinity, from all penal laws relating to religion; provided they take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and ſubſcribe the declaration againſt Popery, and repair to ſome congregation regiſtered in the Biſhop's Court, or at the Seſſions. But there is nothing in this act which diſpenſes either with the Teſt-Act or the Corporation-Act, ſo far as they impoſe the obligation of receiving the ſacrament of our Lord's Supper on perſons ſerving in offices, or elected to ſerve in corporations; and there is nothing in the ſtatute 31 Geo. 3. c. 32, which diſpenſes Catholics from that obligation, in caſe of their ſerving in offices, or being admitted into corporations. With reſpect therefore to the Teſt-Act and Corporation-Act, theſe are the only ſtatutes which ſubject the Proteſtant diſſenters to any penalties or diſabilities; to theſe the Roman-Catholics are ſubject equally with the Proteſtant diſſenters: there is, therefore, no penalty or diſability that affects the Proteſtant diſſenters, to which Roman-Catholics are not subject equally; but there still remain several penalties and disabilities to which Roman-Catholics are subject, that do not in any respect whatever affect the Protestant Dissenters.

The principal of these are, that by stat. 30 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 1, Roman-Catholics, in consequence of refusing the Oath of Supremacy, or the declaration against Popery, are disabled from sitting in either House of Parliament. By stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 27, those who refuse to take the Oath of Supremacy are disabled from voting at elections; and by several statutes, Roman-Catholics are disabled from presenting to advowsons. This latter is peculiar to them; Quakers, and even Jews, having the full enjoyment of the right of presentation. This restraint seems the more unnecessary, as no person can be presented to a living who has not been ordained according to the rites of the Church of England. Previously to his ordination he is examined on his faith and morals by his bishop; he takes the Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy, and subscribes the Thirty-nine Articles; and previously to his admission, he subscribes the three articles respecting the Supremacy, the Common Prayer, and the Thirty-nine Articles; and he makes the Declaration of Conformity. By the Act of Conformity, stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4, he is bound to use the Common Prayer, and other rites and ceremonies of the Church of England.

Under the stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5, which disables Popish Recusants Convict from presenting to benefices, it has been adjudged, that the person is only disabled to present; and that he continues patron to all other purposes. Cawley 230. That such a person, by being disabled to grant an avoidance, is not hindered from granting the advowson itself, in fee, or for life, for good consideration. 1 Jon. 19, 20. And that if an advowson or avoidance belonging to a Papist come into the King's hands, by reason of an Outlawry, or conviction of Recusancy, &c. the King, and not the Universities, shall present. 1 Jon. 20: Hob. 126. But where a presentment is vested in the University, at the time when the church becomes void, it shall not be divested again by the patron's conforming, &c. 10 Rep. 57.

Grants of advowsons, or right of presentation to churches, &c. by any Papists, or person anywise in trust for him, to be void, except made for valuable consideration to some Protestant purchaser, for the benefit of a Protestant only; and persons claiming under such grant shall be deemed as trustees for a Papist, and they and their presentees be compelled to make discovery thereof, and the intent. See stats. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 14: 11 Geo. 2. c. 17.

And bishops are required to examine parsons presented, on oath, before institution, whether the person presenting be the real patron, and made the presentation in his own right, or whether he be not a trustee for a Papist, &c. And if the parson presented refuse to be examined, his presentation shall be void.

Upon the Corporation-Act, it seems to have been the prevailing opinion, that the election of a person who did not comply with the requisites of that statute, and all the acts done by him, were void. To prevent the consequences of this, the stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 6, was passed, intituled, "An Act for quieting and establishing Corporations;" by which it was enacted, that no incapacity, disability, forfeiture, or penalty should be incurred, unless the person were removed, or a prosecution against him commenced, within six months after his election. It was also enacted, that the acts of the person omitting to qualify should not be avoided. Upon this act an important question arose, whether dissenters, being ineligible to public offices, could be obliged to fine for not serving them. This point came to a direct issue, in the case of Harrison v. Evans, (see this Dictionary, title Dissenters,) when it was determined in favour of the dissenters. For the relief of those who omit to qualify for serving in offices, or for being elected into corporations, an act of parliament is past annually, by which, after mentioning the Corporation and Test Acts, and some others which do not relate to the point under consideration, it is enacted, that persons who, before the passing of the act, have omitted to qualify in the manner prescribed by those acts, and who shall properly qualify before the 25th of the ensuing December, shall be indemnified against all penalties, forfeitures, incapacities, and disabilities; and their elections, and the acts done by them, are declared to be good. There is nothing in this act which excludes Catholics from the benefit of it.

By the Militia Act, it is enacted, that no person shall be inrolled in the militia unless he takes the following oath: "I, A. B. do sincerely promise and swear, that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to his Majesty King George, his heirs and successors. And I do swear, that I am a Protestant, and that I will faithfully serve in the militia, within the kingdom of Great Britain, for the defence of the same, during the time for which I am inrolled, unless I shall be sooner discharged." It seems to deserve consideration, whether, under the existing laws, Catholics may not claim to be exempted from serving in the militia, upon the same ground as, in the case of Harrison v. Evans, the Protestant dissenters claimed, and were allowed, to be exempted from the obligation of serving in offices, viz. That by law they are ineligible, and consequently are not compellable to fine for not serving.

With respect to the right of Roman-Catholics to serve on Juries, there does not appear to have ever been any law which subjected them to any such disability, except the statutes generally called the Statutes of Recusancy. The stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 1, commonly called the Corporation-Act, relates to those offices only which concern the government of cities and corporations. The stat. 25 Car. 2. c. 2, commonly called the Test-Act, since explained by stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 26, regards only civil and military offices. Neither of these acts, therefore, abridges Catholics of the right in question. With respect to the statutes of Recusancy, among other penalties to which these subjected Popish Recusants Convict, one was, that they became liable, upon conviction, to all the consequences of excommunication; and it has been generally understood, that persons excommunicated are disabled from serving on juries. It has been already observed, that, in the proper sense of the word, not attending the service of the Church of England alone, and unaccompanied by any other circumstance, constitutes Recusancy. Of this non-attendance at church every Roman-Catholic, necessarily, was guilty, and he might be convicted of it by a very summary process. But till his guilt was established in a judicial manner, the law did not take notice of it; and therefore, unless an actual conviction had taken place, he was not subject to any of the penalties consequent on Recusancy. But it has been mentioned, that there was, besides this, a species of constructive Recusancy, to which every Catholic was liable, by refusing to make the declaration against Popery, and to take the Oath of Supremacy. This had a more direct operation on their ability to serve as Jurors. Now, as well the declaration against Popery as the Oath of Supremacy might be tendered to a Catholic in the very Court where he presented himself to serve as a juryman: A refusal amounted to conviction; on conviction he became subject to all the penalties of excommunication, and one of those penalties, (at least, by the opinion of the old lawyers,) was a disqualification to serve on juries. Thus, it was always in the power of the Court, and perhaps of any two Magistrates present, to convict, on the spot, a Catholic of Recusancy, and thereby render problematical at least his capacity to serve as a juror. Such appears to have been the situation of Catholics, in this respect, previously to the stat. 31 G. 3. c. 32. Since the passing of that act, they stand, as to the serving upon juries, in the same predicament as the rest of his Majesty's Subjects. By that statute, they are freed from the penalties incident either to positive or to constructive Recusancy. It has been stated, that ministers of Roman-Catholic congregations are exempted from serving on juries, by § 8 of the statute; it seems to follow, therefore, that, without this clause, they would have been liable to serve; and consequently, that all persons out of the reach of this clause are in the eye of the law subject to the duty, and have, of course, the capacity of serving.

It has been heretofore said, that persons convicted of Popish Recusancy may be taken up by the writ de excom. capiend., and shall not be admitted as competent witnesses in a cause: but this seems to be carried beyond the intent of the statute. 2 Bulst. 155, 156.

With respect to the right of Roman-Catholic merchants to be summoned to the meetings of British factories abroad, it appears, that they have, and always had, a right to be admitted to them. The meetings of the factory in Portugal were regulated by stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 17, but that act contains nothing which discriminates Roman-Catholic from other merchants. All the foreign factories are, therefore, in this respect, in the same predicament. Now, if Roman-Catholics are excluded from factories by any act, it must be either by the Corporation-Act or by the Test-Act. But with respect to the Corporation Act, it is to be observed, that a factory is not a corporation, in the legal acceptation of that word; and even if it were, it would not fall within the operation of the Corporation Act, as that is confined to cities, corporations, &c. within England and Wales, and the town of Berwick upon Tweed. The operation of the Test Act is more extensive than the operation of the Corporation-Act; it expressly mentions his Majesty's Navy, the islands of Jersey and Guernsey, and persons who should be admitted into any service or employment in his Majesty's or the Prince of Wales's household within the districts therein mentioned. A factory abroad does not, therefore, fall within the operation of that act. Besides, the privilege of being admitted to the meetings of a foreign factory is not an office, or even a right, of that description which falls within either of those acts. There is reason to suppose, that, in point of fact, Roman-Catholics have not generally been summoned to attend meetings of factories since the year 1720. But the operation and tendency of the laws against Catholics seem to have been such as induced them to forbear asserting some of their most valuable rights, even such as were of the most indisputable nature, rather than obtrude themselves into public notice. If they wish to enforce their right of admission, or their right of voting, they should give notice of their desire to be summoned, and offer to attend at the meetings; then, if admittance should be refused them, or their votes rejected, the proceedings will be illegal; and not only they, but all other persons subject to the proceedings of the factory, will be justified in refusing to pay their contribution-money, or to comply in any other manner with the resolutions or orders of the meeting. Besides, a refusal to admit them to the meetings is certainly a personal injury; and wherever a personal injury is done to an English Subject abroad, the remedy must be sought in the jurisdiction where the cause of action happens, if it is subject to the King's jurisdiction; if the King has no jurisdiction in that place, this necessarily gives the King's Court a jurisdiction, within which it is brought, by the known fiction of laying the venue in some county of England. This is explained by Lord Mansfield, in his argument in Fabrigas v. Mostyn, Cowp. 170: See also Phillybrown v. Ryland, Stra 624: Ld. Raym. 1388: 8 Mod. 354. And as to the general principle of such an action, see Ashby v. White, 6 Mod. 45: 1 Salk. 19: 3 Bro. Parl. Ca.: and this Dictionary, title Parliament, VI. B. 3.

What has been said of the right of Roman Catholics to insist on being admitted to the meetings of English factories abroad, and of their means of redress, in case of refusal, applies, with proper qualifications, to every other case, of a similar description, where their right of admission, acting, or voting, is refused them.

With respect to the right of Roman-Catholics to hold offices exercisable abroad, it has been observed, that the Corporation Act extends only to cities, &c. within England and Wales, and the town of Berwick upon Tweed; that the Test Act mentions only those places, and his Majesty's Navy, and Jersey and Guernsey; and that the stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 32, repeals the statutes of Recusancy, and relieves Roman-Catholics from the penalties imposed on them for refusing the Oath of Supremacy, and the declaration against Popery: it seems therefore to follow, that there is now in force no law which disables Roman-Catholics from holding offices wholly exercisable abroad, or from serving or holding offices under the East-India Company, in their foreign possessions. Besides, upon the construction of these laws, and every other law supposed to affect the Roman-Catholics, there seems reason to think, that the same spirit which induced the Legislature to repeal so large a proportion of the penal code against them, will influence the judicature in their construction of the unrepealed part of that code, or of any other statute unfavourable to them, in its apparent tendency or operation, so far as it may be open to a doubtful interpretation.

PAR, A term in Exchange, where a man to whom a bill is payable receives of the acceptor just so much in value, &c. as was paid to the drawer by the remitter. Merch. Dict. And in exchange of money, Par is defined to be a certain number of pieces of the coin of one country, containing in them an equal quantity of silver to that of another number of pieces of the coin of some other country; as where thirty-six shillings of the money of Holland have just as much silver as twenty shillings English money; and bills of exchange drawn from England to Holland, at the rate of thirty-six shillings Dutch, for each pound sterling, is according to the Par. Locke's Consid. of Money 18.

PARACIUM, The tenure between parceners, viz. that which the youngest oweth to the eldest. Domesday.

PARAGE, paragium.] Equality of name, blood, or dignity; but more especially of land, in the partition of an inheritance between coheirs: hence comes to disparage and disparagement. Co. Litt. 166. Paragium was also commonly taken for the equal condition betwixt two parties, to be contracted in marriage; for the old laws did strictly provide, that young heirs should be disposed in matrimony cum paragio, with persons of equal birth and fortune, sine disparagatione. See title Tenure.

PARAMOUNT, From the French par, i. e. per and monter, ascendere.] Signifies in our law the highest lord of the fee, of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. F. N. B. 135.—As there may be a lord mesne, where lands are held of an inferior lord, who holds them of a superior under certain services; so this superior lord is lord Paramount: and all honours, which have manors under them, have lords Paramount. The King is said to be chief lord, or lord Paramount of all the lands in the kingdom. Co. Litt. 1. See title Tenures.

PARAPHARNALIA, or PARAPHERNALIA, from the Greek Παρὰ, Præter, and Φερνὴ Dos.] Those goods which a wife is entitled to [secum fert] over and above her dower or jointure, after her husband's death. See title Baron and Feme IV. 7.

PARASITUS, A domestic servant. Blount.

PARAVAIL, per-availe.] Tenant Paravail is the lowest tenant of the fee, or he who is immediate tenant to one who holdeth over of another; and he is called tenant Paravail, because it is presumed he hath profit and avail by the land. F. N. B. 135: 2 Inst. 296: 9 Rep. See title Tenure.

PARCELLA TERRÆ, A parcel of land; used in some ancient charters.

PARCEL-MAKERS, Two officers in the Exchequer that make the Parcels of the escheators' accounts, wherein they charge them with every thing they have levied for the King's use within the time of their being in office, and deliver the same to the auditors to make up their accounts therewith. Practice Excheq. 99.

PARCENERS,

QUASI Parcellers; i. e. rem in parcellas dividentes.] Persons holding lands in copartnership, and who may be compelled to make division. See Litt. § 241. These are of two sorts; viz. Parceners according to the course of the Common Law; and Parceners according to custom.

I. Of the Nature of an Estate in Parcenary, or Coparcenary.

II. How such Estate may be parted or dissolved, and the Consequences thereof.

I. PARCENERS by the Common Law, are where a man or woman seised of lands or tenements in fee-simple or fee-tail hath no issue but daughters, and dieth, and the tenements descend to such daughters, who enter into the lands descended to them, then they are called Parceners, and are but as one heir to their ancestor; and they are termed Parceners, because by the writ de partitione faciendâ the law will constrain them to make partition; though they may do it by consent, &c. Litt. 243: 1 Inst. 164. And if a man seised of lands in fee-simple, or in tail, dieth without any issue of his body begotten, and the lands descend to the sisters, they also are Parceners; and in the same manner where he hath no sisters, but the lands descend to his aunts, or other females of kin in equal degree, they are also Parceners; but where a person hath but one daughter, she shall not be called Parcener, but daughter and heir, &c. Litt. § 242.

If a man hath issue two daughters, and the eldest hath issue divers sons and daughters, and the youngest hath issue divers daughters; the eldest son of the eldest daughter shall not inherit alone, but all the daughters of the youngest shall inherit, and the eldest son is coparcener with the daughters of the youngest sister, and shall have one moiety, viz. his mother's part; so that men descending of daughters may be Parceners as well as women, and shall jointly plead and be impleaded, &c. 1 Inst. 164. None are Parceners by the Common Law, but either females, or the heirs of females, who come to lands or tenements by descent. Litt. 254.

Parceners by custom is, where a person seised in fee-simple, or in fee-tail of lands or tenements of the tenure called gavelkind, hath issue divers sons, and dies; such lands shall descend to all the sons as Parceners by the custom, who shall equally inherit and make partition as females do, and writ of partition lies in this case, as between females, &c. Litt. § 265. Women Parceners make but one heir, and have but one freehold; but between themselves they have in judgment of law several freeholds, to many purposes; for one of them may enfeoff the other of her part; and the parcenary is not severed by the death of any of them; but if one dies, her part shall descend to her issue, &c. 1 Inst. 164, 165. If one Parcener make a feoffment in fee of her part, this is a severance of the coparcenary, and several writs of præcipe shall lie against the other Parceners and the feoffee. 1 Inst. 167. Though if two coparceners by deed alien both their parts to another in fee, rendering to them two, and their heirs, a rent out of the land, they shall have the rent in course of parcenary; because their right in the land out of which the rent is reserved was in parcenary. Ibid. 160.

If there be two Parceners, and each of them taketh husband, and have issue, and the wives die, the parcenary is divided, and here is a partition in law. 1 Inst. 160. Partition of lands held in tail, by the death of one sister without issue is made void, and the other sister as heir in tail will be entitled to the whole land, and may have writ of formedon where the other Parcener hath aliened.

aliened. New Nat. Br. 476. And a writ of nuper obiit lies for one Parcener deforced by another, &c. F. N B. 197.

If any Parceners or their issues be disseised, they must join in an assise against the disseisor; so if they have cause to bring any action of waste, &c. 1 Inst. 95, 198. Two Parceners are of land, one enters and claims the whole, and is disseised, she alone may maintain assise; but if the disseisin be of rent, the other Parceners must be named, or the writ shall abate. Jenk. Cent. 41, 42.

The possession of one Parcener, &c. of land, without an actual ouster, gives possession to the other of them. Hob. 120: Dyer 128. One Parcener may justify detaining the deeds, concerning the lands, against another, as they belong to one as well as the other. 2 Roll. Abr. 31.

Parceners are to make partition of the lands descended; and estates of coparcenary at Common Law are applicable only to inheritances: partition may be made between Parceners of inheritances which are entire and dividable, as of an advowson, rent-charge, or such like; but it is otherwise of inheritances which are not entire and indivisible, as of a piscary, common with out number, or such uncertain profits out of lands; for in such case the eldest Parcener shall have them, and the others have contribution from her out of some other inheritance left by the ancestor; but if there be no such inheritance, then the eldest shall have these uncertain profits for one time, and the youngest for another time. Dyer 153. See post II.

Parceners cannot make partition, so as for one to have the land for one time, and another for another, &c. for each is to have her part absolutely: but if an advowson descend to them, they may present by turns; and if there be a common, &c. which may not be divided, one may have it for one year, and another for another year, &c. 1 Inst. 164.

An advowson is an entire thing, and yet, in effect, the same may be divided betwixt Parceners, for they may present by turns; and if there be coparceners of an advowson appendant to a manor, and they make partition of the manor, without mentioning the advowson, the same is still appendant, and they may present by turns. 8 Rep. 79. If two Parceners be of an advowson, and they agree to present by turns, this is a good partition as to the possession; but it is not a severance of the estate of inheritance. 1 Rep. 87. And where there are coparceners of an advowson, the eldest hath privilege to present first; not in respect of her person, but estate: and if one Parcener hath a rent granted to her upon a partition made, to make her part equal with the other, she may distrain for the arrears of common right; and so shall the grantee of the rent, because it is not annexed to her person only, but to her estate. 3 Rep. 32. See post II.

In the case of coparceners of a title of honour the King may direct which one of them and her issue shall bear it; and if the issue of that one become extinct, it will again be in abeyance, if there are descendants of more than one sister remaining. But upon the failure of the issue of all, except one, the descendant of that one being the sole heir, will have a right to claim, and to assume the dignity.

There are instances of a title, on account of a descent to females, being dormant, or in abeyance, for many centuries. Harg. Co. Litt. 165.

Lord Coke says, there is a difference in an office of honour, which shall be executed by the husband or deputy of the eldest. Ibid. Yet when the office of Great Chamberlain had descended to two sisters, coheiresses of the Duke of Ancaster, one of whom was married to Peter Burrell Esq. the Judges gave it as their opinion in the House of Lords, "that the office belongs to both sisters; that the husband of the eldest is not of right entitled to execute it; and that both sisters may execute it by deputy, to be approved of by them; such deputy not being of a degree inferior to a knight, and to be approved of by the King." See Bro. P. C.

The properties of Parceners are in some respects like those of joint-tenants; they having the same unities of interest, title, and possession. They may sue and be sued jointly for matters relating to their own lands. Co. Litt. 164. And the entry of one of them shall in some cases enure as the entry of them all. Co. Litt. 188, 243. They cannot have an action of trespass against each other; but they differ from joint-tenants, in that that they are also excluded from maintaining an action of waste, 2 Inst. 403; for coparceners could at all times put a stop to any waste by writ of partition; but till the statute of Hen. 8, joint-tenants had no such power. See title Joint-tenants.

Parceners also differ materially from joint-tenants in four other points: 1. They always claim by descent, whereas joint-tenants always claim by purchase. Therefore, if two sisters purchase lands, to hold to them and their heirs, they are not Parceners but joint-tenants. Litt. § 254. And hence it likewise follows, that no lands can be held in coparcenary but estates of inheritance, which are of a descendible nature; whereas not only estates in fee and in tail, but for life or years, may be held in joint-tenancy.

2. There is no unity of time necessary to an estate in coparcenary: for if a man hath two daughters, to whom his estate descends in coparcenary, and one dies before the other, the surviving daughter and the heir of the other, or when both are dead, their two heirs are still Parceners; the estate vesting in them each at different times, though it be the same quantity of interest, and held by the same title. Co. Litt. 164, 174.

3. Parceners, though they have an unity, have not an entirety of interest. They are properly entitled each to the whole of a distinct moiety, Co. Litt. 163, 4; and of course there is no jus accrescendi, or survivorship, between them, for each part descends severally to their respective heirs, though the unity of possession continues; and as long as the lands continue in a course of descent, and united in possession, so long are the tenants therein, whether male or female, called Parceners. But if the possession be once severed by partition, they are no longer Parceners, but tenants in severalty; or if one Parcener aliened her share, though no partition be made, then no longer are the lands held in coparcenary, but in common. Litt. § 309: and see 2 Comm. c. 12. p. 187, 8.

II. Partition, between Parceners, may be made four ways: viz. First, When they themselves divide the lands equally into as many parts, as there are Parceners, and each chooses one share or part, the eldest first, and so one after another, &c.

Secondly,

Secondly, When they agree to choose certain friends to make division for them.

Thirdly, Partition by drawing lots, where having divided the lands into as many parts as there are Parceners, and written every part in a distinct scroll, being wrapt up, they each draw one.

And fourthly, Partition by writ de partitione facienda, which is by compulsion, where some agree to partition, and others do not; and when judgment is given on a writ of partition, it is that the Sheriff shall go to the land, and by the oaths of twelve men make partition between the parties, to hold to them in severalty, without any mention of preference to the eldest sister, &c. Litt. 248: 1 Inst. 164. But if there be a capital messuage on the land to be divided, the Sheriff must allot that wholly to the eldest of the Parceners. 1 Inst. 165. The partition, made and delivered by the Sheriff and jurors, ought to be returned into Court under the seal of the Sheriff, and the seals of the twelve jurors; for the words of the judicial writ of partition, which command the Sheriff to make partition, are Assumptis tecum duodecim, &c. et partitionem inde scire facias justiciariis, &c. sub sigillo tuo et sigillis eorum per quorum sacramentum partitionem illam fecerit, &c. If partition be made by force of the King's writ, and judgment thereof given, it shall be binding to all parties, because it is made by the Sheriff, by the oath of twelve men, by authority of law; and the judgment is, that the partition shall remain firm and stable for ever 1 Inst. 171.

Blackstone says, there are many methods of making partition, four of which are by consent, and one by compulsion; to which latter may now be added, or indeed for which may be substituted, the proceedings in a Court of equity to obtain a decree for partition. See this Dictionary, title Joint-tenants III. 2.

The four modes of partition by consent are thus stated by Blackstone: The first is, where they agree to divide the lands into equal parts in severalty, and that each shall have such a determinate part. The second is, when they agree to choose some friend to make partition for them, and then the sisters shall choose each of them her part, according to seniority of age; or otherwise, as shall be agreed. The privilege of seniority is in this case personal; for if the eldest sister be dead, her issue shall not choose first, but the next sister. But if an advowson descend in coparcenary, and the sisters cannot agree in the presentation, the eldest and her issue, nay, her husband, or her assigns, shall present alone, before the younger. Co. Litt. 166: 3 Rep. 22. And the reason given is, that the former privilege, of priority in choice upon a division, arises from an act of her own, the agreement to make partition, and therefore is merely personal; the latter, of presenting to the living, arises from the act of law, and is annexed not only to her person, but to her estate also. [It has been doubted whether the grantee of the eldest sister shall have the first and sole presentation after her death. Harg. Co. Litt. 166. But it was expressly determined in favour of such a grantee, in 1 Ves. 340.] A third method of partition is, where the eldest divides, and then she shall choose last; for the rule of law is, cujus est divisio alterius est electio. The fourth method is, where the sisters agree to cast lots for their shares.

But there are some things which are in their nature impartible. The mansion-house, common of estovers, common of piscary uncertain, or any other common without stint, shall not be divided; but the eldest sister, if she pleases, shall have them, and make the others a reasonable satisfaction in other parts of the inheritance; or if that cannot be, then they shall have the profit of the thing by turns in the same manner as they take the advowson. Co. Litt. 164, 165.

There is yet another consideration attending the estate in coparcenary; that if one of the daughters has had an estate given with her in frankmarriage by her ancestor, (which is a species of estate-tail, freely given by a Relation for advancement of his kinswoman in marriage,) in this case, if lands descend from the same ancestor to her and her sisters, in fee-simple, she or her heirs shall have no share of them, unless they will agree to divide the lands so given in frankmarriage in equal proportion with the rest of the lands descending. Bract. l. 2. c. 34: Litt. § 266—273. This is denominated bringing the lands into hotch-pot; Britton, c. 72; which term Littleton § 267, 8, thus explains: "It seemeth that this word hotch pot is, in English, a pudding; for in a pudding is not commonly put one thing alone, but one thing with other things together." By this housewifely metaphor our ancestors meant to inform us, that the lands, both those given in frankmarriage and those descending in fee-simple, should be mixed and blended together, and then divided in equal proportions among all the daughters. But this was left to the choice of the donee in frankmarriage; and if she did not choose to put her lands into hotch-pot, she was presumed to be sufficiently provided for, and the rest of the inheritance was divided among her other sisters. The law of hotch-pot took place then only, when the other lands descending from the ancestor were fee-simple; for if they descended in tail, the donee in frankmarriage was entitled to her share, without bringing her lands so given into hotch-pot. Litt. § 274. And the reason is, because lands descending in fee-simple are distributed by the policy of law, for the maintenance of all the daughters, and if one has a sufficient provision out of the same inheritance equal to the rest, it is not reasonable that she should have more; but lands descending in tail are not distributed by the operation of the law, but by the designation of the giver, per formam doni; it matters not therefore how unequal this distribution may be. Also no lands but such as are given in frankmarriage shall be brought into hotch-pot, for no others are looked upon in law as given for the advancement of the woman, or by way of marriage portion. Litt. § 275. And therefore, as gifts in frankmarriage are fallen into disuse, the law of hotch-pot would not now deserve much notice, had not this method of division been revived and copied by the statute for distribution of personal estates. See this Dictionary, title Executor V. 9.

The estate in coparcenary may be dissolved, either by partition, which disunites the possession; by alienation of one Parcener, which disunites the title, and may disunite the interest; or by the whole at last descending to and vesting in one single person, which brings it to an estate in severalty. See 2 Comm. c. 12. p. 189, &c.

In a writ of partition, the judgment was quod partitio fiat; and before it was executed by the Sheriff, a writ of error was brought; and it was adjudged that a writ of error doth not lie upon this first judgment, because this is not like other actions, where error lies before the habere facias seisinam is returned, and the judgment is final; but it is not so in this case, as there must be another judgment, i. e. quod partitio stabilis maneat, which cannot be till the partition is made, and returned by the Sheriff. Hetley 36: Dyer 67.

If there are two Parceners of a manor, and, on partition made, each hath demesnes and services allotted; in this case each is said to have a manor. 1 Leon. 26: Davis 61. A partition may not be made of franchises, as goods of felons, waifs, estrays, &c. which are casual. 5 Rep. 3.

Where two persons hold lands pro indiviso, and one would have his part in severalty, and the other refuseth to make partition by deed; there the writ de partitione faciendâ lies against him who refuses, directed to the Sheriff; and he must be present when the partition is made; and if it is objected before the return of the writ, that he was not present, he may be examined by the Court; but after the writ is returned and filed, it is too late. Cro. Eliz. 9.

A writ of partition was taken forth, and the Sheriff made partition, but was not upon the land; and on motion that the return might not be filed, but that a new writ might be awarded, because the Sheriff was not on the land, the Court staid the filing, and on examining the Sheriff, ordered a new writ. Cro. Car. 9, 10.

On writ of partition to the Sheriff to make partition of lands, part of the lands were allotted to one, and the jury would not assist the Sheriff to make partition of the other part; which appearing on the return of the writ, the Court was moved for an attachment against the jury, and a new writ to the Sheriff. Godb. 265. Partition was brought by tenant in fee of one moiety, against tenant for life of the other moiety, on the stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 32. And though it has been resolved, if partition be made between one who hath an estate of inheritance, and another who hath a particular estate for life; that the writ ought to be framed upon the statute, and to be made special, setting forth the particular estate: yet it was held to be good where the writ was general. Goldsb. 84: 2 Lutw. 1015.

By stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 31, a partition may be made of any estate of freehold, or for term of years, &c. of manors, lands, tenements, and hereditaments whereof the partition is demanded; and if after process of pone returned upon a writ of partition, and affidavit of notice given of the writ to the tenant to the action, and a copy left with the tenant in possession at least forty days before the return of the said pone, &c. there be no appearance entered in fifteen days; the demandant having entered his declaration, the Court may give judgment by default, and award a writ to make partition, whereby the demandant's part or purpart will be set out severally; which writ being executed after eight days' notice, and returned, and thereupon final judgment entered, shall conclude all persons, &c. But the Court may suspend or set aside the judgment, if the party concerned move the Court in a year, and shew good matter in bar. And by this statute, if the High Sheriff, by reason of distance, &c. cannot be present at the execution of any judgment in partition, then the Undersheriff in the presence of two justices of peace of the county, shall proceed to the execution of the writ by inquisition, and the High Sheriff is to make the return, &c. When the partition is made and returned, the persons who were tenants of the lands or any part thereof, before divided, shall continue tenants of the lands they held to the respective owners, under such conditions and rents as before; and no plea in abatement shall be admitted or received in any suit of partition; nor shall the same be abated by the death of any tenant, &c.

In a writ of partition the defendant pleaded, that he formerly brought writ of partition against the plaintiff, and had judgment to have partition: and held a good plea; but it was a question, whether it should be pleaded in bar or abatement, or by way of estoppel. Dyer 92. No damages can be recovered on a writ of partition, though the writ and declaration conclude ad damnum. Hetl. 35: Noy 143.

Where judgment for debt is had against one Parcener, the lands, &c. of both may be taken in execution; and the moiety undivided is to be sold, and then the vendee will be tenant in common with the other Coparcener: if the Sheriff seize only a moiety and sell it, the other Parcener will have a right to a moiety of that money. 1 Salk. 392. All partitions ought to be according to the quality and true value of the lands, and be equal in value: but if partition be made by Parceners of full age, and unmarried, and sanæ memoriæ, it binds them for ever, although the value be unequal, if it be made of lands in fee; and if it be of lands intailed, it shall bind the parties themselves for their lives, but not their issue, unless it be equal: if it be unequal, the issue of her who hath the lesser part, may, after her decease, disagree, and enter and occupy in common with the aunt; also if any be covert, it shall bind the husband, but not the wife, or her heirs; or if any be within age, it shall not bind the infant, but she may at her full age disagree, &c. 1 Inst. 166, 170: 2 Lil. Abr. 283. Though if a wife, after coverture, or the infant at her age, accept of the unequal part, they are concluded for ever. 1 Inst. 170. And where there be two Coparceners, and one hath seven daughters, and dieth; if the other Parcener releaseth to any one of the daughters her whole part, here, although she to whom the release is made, have not an equal part, the release is good. Ibid. 193. It hath been adjudged, that notwithstanding a partition is unequal, if it be by writ, it can not be avoided; but if it be by deed, it may be avoided by entry. 1 Inst. 171.

If the estate of a Parcener be in part evicted, that shall defeat the whole partition; partition implying a warranty and condition in law to enter upon the whole on eviction, as in case of exchange of lands. 1 Inst. 173: 1 Rep. 87. And if after partition, one of the parts is recovered from a Parcener by lawful title, she shall compel the others to make a new partition. Cro. Eliz. 902. But as to eviction of Parceners, if one sell her part, and then the part which the other Parcener hath, is evicted; in this case she who loseth her part, cannot enter on the alienee, for by alienation the privity is destroyed. 1 Inst. 173. Among Parceners, a partition upon the land may be good without deed; but not among joint-tenants, &c. Dyer 29, 194. See title Joint-tenants.

PARCENARY, The holding of lands jointly by Parceners, when the common inheritance is not divided. Litt. 56.

PARCHMENT, Is one of the articles liable to a duty of excise; and, in case of deeds, &c. written on it, to stamps. See Paper.

PARCO FRACTO, A writ against him who violently breaks a pound, and takes out beasts from thence, which for some trespass done, &c. were lawfully impounded. Reg. Orig. 166. If a person hath authority to take beasts out of the pound, if he breaks the pound before he demands the cattle of the keeper thereof, and he refuseth or interrupts him in the taking of them, &c. the writ Parco fracto lies. Dr. & Stud. 112. Damages are recoverable in this writ; and the party may be punished, as for a pound-breach in the Court-leet. 1 Inst. 47: F. N. B. 100. The word parcus was frequently used for a pound to confine trespassing or straying cattle; whence imparcare to impound, imparcatio pounding, and imparcamentum, right of pounding, &c.

PARDON,

Pardonatio; venia.] The remitting or forgiving of an offence committed against the King; and is either ex gratiâ Regis, or by course of law. Staundf. Pl. Cor. 47.

Pardon ex gratiâ Regis is that which the King affords by virtue of his prerogative. See this Dictionary, title Judges. Pardon by course of law is that which the law in equity affords for a light offence; as casual homicide, when one killeth a man, having no such meaning. West. Symbol. par. 2. title Indictments, § 46.

The power of pardoning offences is inseparably incident to, and is the most amiable prerogative of, the Crown; and this high prerogative the King is entrusted with upon a special confidence, that he will spare those only whose case, could it have been foreseen, the law itself may be presumed willing to have excepted out of its general rules; which the wisdom of man cannot possibly make so perfect as to suit every particular case. 1 Show. 284.

Anciently the right of pardoning offences, within certain districts, was claimed by lords, who had jura regalia by ancient grants from the Crown, or by prescription. But by stat. 27 H. 8. cap. 24. it was enacted, "That no person shall have power to pardon any treasons or felonies, nor any accessaries, nor outlawries; but that the King shall have the authority thereof, united to the Crown of this realm, as of right it appertaineth." Co. Litt. 114: 3 Inst. 233. And this power belongs only to a King de facto, and not to a King de jure, during the term of usurpation. Bro. Abr. title Chamber de Pardon 22.

The power of pardoning offences is stated by Blackstone to be one of the great advantages of Monarchy in general, above every other form of government; and which cannot subsist in Democracies. Its utility and necessity are defended by him, on all those principles which do honour to human nature. See 4 Comm. c. 31. p. 396, 7.

He then proceeds to consider Pardons under the following heads; a distribution here followed, as most convenient:

I. The Object of Pardon; that is, in what Cases, and for what Offences, a Pardon may be granted; or not.

II. The Manner of pardoning; wherein how far a Pardon is grantable of common Right; and by what Words Offences may be pardoned.

III. The Method of allowing a Pardon.

IV. The Effect of such Pardon when allowed.

I. The King may pardon all offences merely against the Crown, or the Public; excepting, 1; That, to preserve the liberty of the Subject, the committing any man to prison out of the realm is by the habeas-corpus act, stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2, made a præmunire, unpardonable even by the King. Nor, 2; can the King pardon, where private justice is principally concerned in the prosecution of offenders: "non potest rex gratiam facere cum injuriâ et damno aliorum." 3 Inst. 236. Therefore in criminal appeals of all kinds (which are the suit, not of the King, but of the party injured,) the prosecutor may release, but the King cannot pardon. Ibid. 237. Neither can he pardon a common nusance, while it remains unredressed, or so as to prevent an abatement of it; though afterwards he may remit the fine; because though the prosecution is vested in the King to avoid multiplicity of suits, yet, during its continuance, this offence savours more of the nature of a private injury to each individual in the neighbourhood, than of a public wrong. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 33. Neither, lastly, can the King pardon an offence against a popular or penal statute, after information brought; for thereby the informer hath acquired a private property in his part of the penalty. 3 Inst. 338.

There is also a restriction of a peculiar nature, that affects the prerogative of pardoning, in case of parliamentary impeachments; viz. that the King's Pardon cannot be pleaded to any such impeachment, so as to impede the inquiry, and stop the prosecution of great and notorious offenders. Therefore when, in the reign of Charles II. the Earl of Danby was impeached by the House of Commons of high treason, and other misdemeanors, and pleaded the King's Pardon in bar of the same, the Commons alleged, "that there was no precedent, that ever any Pardon was granted to any person impeached by the Commons of high treason, or other crimes depending the impeachment;" and thereupon resolved, "that the Pardon so pleaded was illegal and void; and ought not to be allowed in bar of the impeachment of the Commons Commons of England:" for which resolution they assigned this reason to the House of Lords; "that the setting up a Pardon to be a bar of an impeachment, defeats the whole use and effect of impeachments; for should this point be admitted, or stand doubted, it would totally discourage the exhibiting any for the future; whereby the chief institution for the preservation of the Government would be destroyed." Com. Journ. 28th Apr. 1679: 5 May 1679: 26 May 1679. Soon after the Revolution the Commons renewed the same claim, and voted, "that a Pardon is not pleadable in bar of an impeachment." And at length it was enacted by the Act of Settlement, stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2, "that no Pardon under the great seal of England, shall be pleadable to an impeachment by the Commons in Parliament." But, after the impeachment has been solemnly heard and determined, it is not understood that the King's royal grace is farther restrained or abridged; for, after the impeachment and attainder of the six rebel lords in 1715, three of them were from time to time reprieved by the Crown, and at length received the benefit of the King's most gracious Pardon; and a remarkable record is cited by Mr. Christian, Rot. Parl. 50 E. 3. n. 188; in which it is asserted by the King, and acknowledged by the Commons, that the King's prerogative, to pardon delinquents convicted on impeachment, is an antient as the Constitution itself.

It is laid down in general, that the King may pardon any offence, so far as the public is concerned in it, after it is over, consequently may prevent a popular action on a statute, by pardoning the offence before the suit is commenced; but it seems, that he cannot wholly pardon a public nusance, while it continues such, because such Pardon would take away the only means of compelling a redress; yet it is said, that such a Pardon will save the party from any fine, to the time of the Pardon. Plowd. 487: Keilw. 134: 12 Co. 29, 30: 3 Inst. 237: Vaugh. 333.

It seems agreed, that the King can by no previous licence, Pardon, or dispensation, make an offence dispunishable, which is malum in se; as being either against the law of nature, or so far against the public good as to be indictable at Common Law; and that a grant of this kind, tending to encourage the doing of evil, which it is the chief end of government to prevent, is against the common good, therefore void. Dav. 75: 5 Co. 35: 12 Co. 29: Vide 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37: 3 H. 7. 15. pl. 30.

Where a thing, in its own nature lawful, was made unlawful by Parliament, it was formerly taken as a general rule, that the King might dispense with it, as to a particular time or place, or person, so far as the public was concerned in it; unless such dispensation could not but be attended with an inconvenience, as the introducing a monopoly; or frustrating the end for which the law was made; as the licensing a particular person to import foreign cards or wines, &c. in which case it was commonly taken to be void; also, where a statute gave a particular interest, or right of action to the party grieved, it was always agreed, that no charter from the King, could bar the right of the party, grounded on such statute; also where a statute was express, that the King's charter against the purport of it, though with the clause of non obstante, should be void; it seems to have been always generally agreed, that regularly no such clause could dispense with it. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 28.

It seems to have been agreed, that no dispensation of any statute, except the statutes of mortmain, was of any force without a clause of non obstante; neither is such clause now of any effect, for it is declared and enacted by stat. 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2, that no dispensation by non obstante of or to any statute, or any part thereof, be allowed; but that the same shall be held void, except a dispensation be allowed in such statute; but it is provided, that no charter, grant, or Pardon, granted before the 23d of October 1699, shall be any ways invalidated by that act, but that the same shall be and remain of the same force, and no other, as if the said act had never been made. See this Dictionary, titles King V. 3: Non obstante.

The King cannot by any charter bar any right of entry or action, real or personal, on contract, or for wrong done, or any legal interest, or benefit before vested in the Subject; therefore it seems clear, that he cannot bar any action on a statute by the party grieved, nor even a popular action commenced before his Pardon, nor a recognizance for the peace before it is forfeited. Plowd. 487: 2 Roll. Abr. 178: Cro. Car. 199: Keilw. 134: Moor. 863.

Neither can the King pardon an appeal, except only where it is carried on at his suit, after a nonsuit of the party; therefore if a person attainted, on an appeal carried on at the suit of the party, get the King's Pardon, he must sue a scire facias against the appellant, before the Pardon shall be allowed. And if the appellant appear on the scire facias, he may pray execution notwithstanding the Pardon; but if the Sheriff return a scire feci, or two nihils, and the appellant appear not, on demand, or if he return the appellant dead, the appellee shall be discharged; but some have holden, that in this last case, a scire facias shall go against the heirs of the deceased. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 35, 36.

But there is no need of any scire facias against the lord by escheat; because the Pardon no way tends to reverse the attainder whereon the title of escheat is founded. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 37.

It hath been strongly holden, that the King may pardon the burning of the hand, on a conviction of manslaughter on an appeal, as being no part of the judgment at the suit of the party; but collateral and exemplary punishment inflicted by the statute, and intended only by way of satisfaction to public justice; like the finding of sureties by one convicted on the statute against trespass in parks. But for this see 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 39.

In an appeal in which the defendant was found guilty of manslaughter, it was doubted whether the King could pardon the burning in the hand, and the defendant compounded with the appellant for forty marks. 4 Comm. 317, n. cites 3 P. Wms. 453.

II. First, a Pardon must be under the great seal. A warrant under the privy seal, or sign manual, though it may be a sufficient authority to admit the party to bail, in order to plead the King's Pardon when obtained in proper form, yet is not of itself a complete irrevocable Pardon. 5 St. Tr. 166, 173.

Next, it is a general rule, that wherever it may reasonably be presumed that the King is deceived, the Pardon is void. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 8. Therefore any suppression of truth, or suggestion of falsehood, in a charter of Pardon, will vitiate the whole; for the King was misinformed. 3 Inst. 238.

General words have also a very imperfect effect in Pardons. A Pardon of all felonies will not pardon a conviction or attainder of felony; for it is presumed the King knew not of those proceedings; but the conviction or attainder must be particularly mentioned. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 8. And a Pardon of felonies will not include piracies; for that is no felony punishable at the Common Law. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 6, &c.

It is also enacted by stat. 13 R. 2. st. 2. c. 1, that no Pardon for treason, murder, or rape, shall be allowed, unless the offence be particularly specified therein; and particularly in murder it shall be expressed, whether it was committed by laying in wait, assault, or malice prepense. Upon which Coke observes, that it was not the intention of the Parliament that the King should ever pardon murder, under these aggravations; and therefore they prudently laid the Pardon under these restrictions, because they did not conceive it possible that the King would ever excuse an offence by name, which was attended with such high aggravations. 3 Inst. 236. And it is remarkable enough, that there is no precedent of a Pardon in the register for any other homicide, than that which happens se defendendo, or per infortunium; to which two species the King's Pardon was expresly confined by the stats. 2 E. 3. c. 2: and 14 E. 3. c. 15; which declare that no Pardon of homicide shall be granted, but only where the King may do it by the oath of his Crown, that is to say, where a man slayeth another in his own defence, or by misfortune. But the stat. 13 Ric. 2. st. 2. c. 1, before mentioned, enlarges by implication the royal power; provided the King is not deceived in the intended object of his mercy. And therefore Pardons of murder were always granted with a non obstante of the statute of King Richard, till the time of the Revolution; when the doctrine of non obstantes ceasing, it was doubted whether murder could be pardoned generally; but it was determined by the Court of King's Bench, that the King may pardon on an indictment of murder, as well as a subject may discharge an appeal. Salk. 499. Under these and a few other restrictions, it is a general rule, that a Pardon shall be taken most beneficially for the Subject, and most strongly against the King.

A Pardon may also be conditional; that is, the King may extend his mercy upon what terms he pleases; and may annex to his bounty a condition either precedent or subsequent, on the performance whereof the validity of the Pardon will depend; and this by the Common Law. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 45. Which prerogative is daily exerted in the Pardon of felons, on condition of being confined to hard labour for a stated time; or of transportation to some foreign country for life, or for a term of years; such transportation or banishment being allowed and warranted by the habeas-corpus act, 31 Car. 2. c. 2. § 14; and both the imprisonment and transportation rendered more easy and effectual by stats. 8 Geo. 3. c. 15: 19 Geo. 3. c. 74: 24 Geo. 3. c. 56: 31 Geo. 3. c. 46. See this Dictionary, title Transportation.

By the statute of Gloucester, 6 E. 1. cap. 9, it is enacted, "That if it be found by the country, that a person tried for the death of a man, did it in his defence, or by misfortune, then, by the report of the justices to the King, the King shall take him to his grace, if it please him." 2 Inst. 316.

But it seems to be settled at this day, agreeable to the ancient Common Law, in affirmance whereof this statute was made, that in such a case, or where one indicted of homicide se defendendo confesses the indictment, if the party cause the record to come into Chancery, the Chancellor will of course make him a Pardon, without speaking to the King, and that by such Pardon the forfeiture of goods may be saved; for these words, "If it shall please the King," shall be taken as spoken only by way of reverence to him, and not intended to make such a Pardon discretionary. But if the party be found to have fled, it is made a quære, if the Pardon save the forfeiture of the flight, for that is not grounded on the homicide, but on the contempt of law? 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 2.

If an approver convict all the appellees, whether by battel or verdict, the King, ex merito justitiæ, ought to pardon him as to his life, and also give him his wages from the time of appeal, to the time of conviction. 3 Inst. 139: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. § 27: 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 233.

As to persons entitled to Pardons on discovering their accomplices, see stats. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8: 6 & 7 W. & M. c. 17: 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23: 5 Ann. c. 31, &c.: and this Dictionary, titles Accessaries; Receivers.

It has been already mentioned as a general rule, that wherever it appears, by the recital of the Pardon, that the King was misinformed, or not rightly apprised, both of the heinousness of the crime, and also how far the party stands convicted upon record, the Pardon is void, upon a presumption that it was gained from the King by imposition. See also Yel. 43, 47: Cro. Jac. 18, 34, 548: 2 Roll. Abr. 188: Dyer 352. pl. 26: Raym. 13: 1 Sid. 41: 3 Inst. 338. And on this ground it hath been holden, that the Pardon of a person convicted by verdict, of felony, is void, unless it recite the indictment and conviction; also it hath been questioned, if the Pardon of a person barely indicted of felony be good, without mentioning the indictment; but it hath been adjudged, that such a defect is saved by the words sive indictatus sive non. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 8.

Anciently a Pardon of all felonies, included all treasons as well as felonies; and it seems to be taken for granted in many books, that such a general Pardon is, even at this day, pleadable to any felony, except murder, rape, and piracy; and that the only reason why it may not also be pleaded to murder and rape is, because stat. 13 Rich. 2. st. 2. c. 1, requires an express mention of them; and that the only reason why it is not pleadable to piracy is because it is a felony by the Civil Law. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 466: 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 45: See ante; and 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 9.

No Pardon of felony shall be carried beyond the express purport of it; therefore if the King reciting an attainder of robbery, pardon the execution, he thereby neither pardons the felony itself, nor any other consequence of it, besides the execution. 6 Co. 13: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 12.

It was formerly adjudged, that murder might be pardoned under the general description of a felonious killing, with a clause of non obstante. 1 Sid. 366: 1 Show. 283: Keling 24: 3 Mod. 37. And Pardons of manslaughter still remain as they were at Common Law before the doctrine of non obstante was exploded; therefore ſore the Pardon of the felonious killing of J. S. may be pleaded to an indictment of manſlaughter in killing him; but where ſuch a Pardon is pleaded to a coroner's inqueſt of manſlaughter, the Court may refuſe to allow it, till the fact be found manſlaughter by a jury directed by a higher Court. 2 Keb. 363, 415: Keling 24: 2 Jon. 56.

If a general act expreſsly pardon petit treaſon, and except murders, it cannot be avoided by indicting a perſon guilty of petit treaſon for murder only, omitting the word proditoriè; for the leſs offence being included in the greater is pardoned by the Pardon of it; therefore ſuch an exception of murder is to be intended of ſuch murder only as is ſpecially ſo called, and doth not amount to petit treaſon. Dyer 50. pl. 4; 235. pl. 19: 6 Co. 13.

Neither doth the exception of murder, in a general act of Pardon of all felonies, extend to ſelo de ſe; for though this offence be in ſtrictneſs murder, yet in common ſpeech, according to which ſtatutes are commonly expounded, it is generally underſtood as a diſtinct offence, the word murder ſeeming primâ ſacie to import the murder of another. 1 Lev. 8, 120: 1 Sid. 150: 1 Keb. 66, 548.

It is ſaid, that a general act of Pardon of all felonies, miſdemeanors, and other things done before ſuch a day, pardons a homicide from a wound before the day, whereof the party died not till after; becauſe the ſtroke being pardoned, the effects of it are conſequently pardoned. Plowd. 401, Cole's caſe: 1 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 426: Dyer 99. pl 65.

It is ſaid, that a Pardon of all miſpriſions, treſpaſſes, offences, and contempts, will pardon a contempt in making a falſe return, and a ſtriking in Weſtminſter Hall, and barratry, and even a præmunire; alſo it is laid down in general, that it will pardon any crime not capital. 1 Lev. 106: 1 Sid. 211: 2 Mod. 52: vide 2 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 252: Dyer 308. a.

III. A Pardon by act of Parliament is more beneficial than by the King's charter; for a man is not bound to plead it, but the Court muſt, ex officio, take notice of it. Foſt 43. Neither can a man loſe the benefit of it by his own laches or negligence, as he may of the King's charter of Pardon. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 64. The King's charter of Pardon muſt be ſpecially pleaded, and that at a proper time; for if a man is indicted, and has a Pardon in his pocket, and afterwards puts himſelf upon his trial by pleading the general iſſue, he has waived the benefit of ſuch Pardon. Ibid. § 59. But if a man avails himſelf thereof, as ſoon as by courſe of law he may, a Pardon may either be pleaded upon arraignment, or in arreſt of judgment, or in the preſent ſtage of proceedings, in bar of execution. Antiently, by ſtat. 10 E. 3. c. 2, no Pardon of felony could be allowed, unleſs the parties found ſureties for the good behaviour before the Sheriff and coroners of the county. Salk. 499. But that ſtatute is repealed by the ſtat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 13; which, inſtead thereof, gives the judges of the Court a diſcretionary power to bind the criminal pleading ſuch Pardon, to his good behaviour, with two ſureties, for any term not exceeding ſeven years. See title Larceny.

IV. The effect of ſuch Pardon by the King is to make the offender a new man; to acquit him of all corporal penalties and forfeitures annexed to that offence, for which he obtains his Pardon; and not ſo much to reſtore his former, as to give him a new credit and capacity. But nothing can reſtore or purify the blood when once corrupted, if the Pardon be not allowed till after attainder, except the high and tranſcendant power of Parliament. Yet if a perſon attainted receives the King's Pardon, and afterwards hath a ſon, that ſon may be heir to his father, becauſe the father, being made a new man, might tranſmit new inheritable blood; though had he been born before the Pardon, he could never have inherited at all. See title Attainder.

A Pardon will not only diſcharge any ſuit in the Spiritual Court ex officio, but alſo any ſuit in ſuch Court ad inſtantiam partis pro reformatione morum, or ſalute animæ; as for defamation, or laying violent hands on a clerk, &c. See 5 Co. 51: Latch. 190: Cro Eliz. 684: Hob. 81: Cro. Jac. 335: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 41, &c.

If a perſon be impriſoned on an excommunicato capiendo for non-payment of coſts, and the King pardons all contempts, it is ſaid, that he ſhall be diſcharged without any ſcire facias againſt the party, and that the party muſt begin anew to compel payment of coſts; becauſe the impriſonment was grounded on the contempt, which is wholly pardoned. 1 Jon 227: 2 Roll. Abr. 178. Cro. Jac. 159: 8 Co. 68, 69.

But no Pardon will diſcharge a ſuit in the Spiritual Court, any more than in a temporal, for a matter of intereſt or property in the plaintiff; as for tithes, legacies, matrimonial contracts, and ſuch like; alſo it is agreed, that after coſts are taxed in a ſuit, in ſuch Court, at the proſecution of the party, whether for a matter of private intereſt, or pro reformatione morum, or pro ſalute animæ, or for defamation, &c. they ſhall not be diſcharged by a ſubſequent Pardon. 5 Co. 51: Latch. 190: Cro. Car. 46, 7. And with reſpect to coſts, ſee 2 Roll. Abr. 304. Noy 85: Latch. 155.

PARDONERS, Perſons who carried about the Pope's indulgencies, and ſold them to any who would buy them. An. 22 H. 8.

PARENT, parens.] A father or mother; but generally applied to the father; Parents have power over their children by the law of nature, and the Divine law; and by thoſe laws they muſt educate, maintain, and defend their children. Wood's Inſt. 63. The Parent or father hath an intereſt in the profits of the children's labour while they are under age, if they live with and are maintained by him; but the father hath no intereſt in the eſtate of a child, otherwiſe than as his guardian. Ibid. The eldeſt ſon is heir to his father's eſtate at Common Law; and if there are no ſons, but daughters, the daughters ſhall be heirs, &c. And there being a reciprocal intereſt in each other, Parents and children may maintain the ſuits of each other, and juſtify the defence of each other's perſon. 2 Inſt. 564.

A Parent may lawfully correct his child being under age in a reaſonable manner: for this is for the benefit of his education. The conſent or concurrence of the Parent to the marriage of a child under age is neceſſary: but theſe and all other powers of a Parent ceaſe in law, when a child arrives at the age of twenty-one. See 1 Comm. c. 16, and this Dictionary, titles Age; Baſtard; Poor; Marriage; Guardian; and other appoſite titles.

PARENTELA, or DE PARENTELA SE TOLLERE, To renounce his kindred, which was done in open Court before the Judge, and in the presence of twelve men, who made oath, that they believed it was done lawfully, and for a just cause. We read it in the laws of H. 1. cap. 88. See Vill.

PARISH, parochia.] Did anciently signify what we now call the diocese of a bishop: but at this day it is the circuit of ground in which the people who belong to one church do inhabit, and the particular charge of a secular priest. It is derived from the Saxon Preost-scyre Preost scyre; which signifies the precinct of which the priest had the care, in English priest-shire.

How ancient the division of parishes is, may at present be difficult to ascertain; for it seems to be agreed on all hands, that in the early ages of Christianity in this island, Parishes were unknown, or at least signified the same that a diocese does now. There was then no appropriation of ecclesiastical dues to any particular church; but every man was at liberty to contribute his tithes to whatever priest or church he pleased, provided only that he did it to some: or, if he made no special appointment or appropriation thereof, they were paid into the hands of the bishop, whose duty it was to distribute them among the clergy, and for other pious purposes, according to his own discretion. 1 Comm. Introd. § 4.

Camden (in his Britannia) says, England was divided into Parishes by archbishop Honorius about the year 630. Sir Henry Hobart lays it down, that Parishes were first erected by the council of Lateran, which was held anno Domini 1179. Each widely differing from the other, and both of them perhaps from the truth; which will probably be found in the medium between the two extremes. For Mr. Selden has clearly shewn, (of Tithes, c. 9.) that the clergy lived in common without any division of Parishes, long after the time mentioned by Camden. And it appears from the Saxon laws that Parishes were in being long before the date of that council of Lateran, to which they are ascribed by Hobart. 1 Comm. ub. sup.

We find the distinction of Parishes, nay, even of mother churches, so early as in the laws of King Edgar, about the year 970. Before that time the consecration of tithes was in general arbitrary; that is, every man paid his own (as before observed) to what church or Parish he pleased. But this being liable to be attended with either fraud, or at least caprice, in the persons paying, and with either jealousies or mean compliances in such as were competitors for receiving them; it was ordered by the law of King Edgar, (c. 1.) That "dentur omnes decimæ primariæ ecclesiæ ad quam parochia pertinet." However, if any thane, or great lord, had a church within his own demesnes, distinct from the mother church, in the nature of a private chapel; then, provided such church had a cœmetery or consecrated place of burial belonging to it, he might allot one third of his tithes for the maintenance of the officiating minister: but, if it had no cœmetery, the thane must himself have maintained his chaplain by some other means; for in such case all his tithes were ordained to be paid to the primariæ ecclesiæ or mother church. 1 Comm. ub. sup.

This proves that the kingdom was then universally divided into Parishes; which division happened probably not all at once, but by degrees. For it seems pretty clear and certain, that the boundaries of Parishes were originally ascertained by those of a manor or manors: since it very seldom happens that a manor extends itself over more Parishes than one, though there are often many manors in one Parish. But at present the boundaries of the one afford no inference or evidence whatever of the boundaries of the other. The lords, as Christianity spread itself, began to build churches upon their own demesnes or wastes, to accommodate their tenants in one or two adjoining lordships; and, in order to have divine service regularly performed therein, obliged all their tenants to appropriate their tithes to the maintenance of the one officiating minister, instead of leaving them at liberty to distribute them among the clergy of the diocese in general: and this tract of land, the tithes whereof were so appropriated, formed a distinct Parish: which will account well enough for the frequent intermixture of Parishes one with another. For if a lord had a parcel of land detached from the main of his estate, but not sufficient to form a Parish of itself, it was natural for him to endow his newly-erected church with the tithes of those disjointed lands; especially if no church was then built in any lordship adjoining to those outlying parcels. Thus Parishes were gradually formed, and Parish churches endowed with the tithes that arose within the circuit assigned. But some lands, either because they were in the hands of irreligious and careless owners, or were situate in forests and desert places, or for other now unsearchable reasons, were never united to any Parish, and therefore continue to this day extraparochial; and their tithes are now by immemorial custom payable to the King instead of the bishop, in trust and confidence that he will distribute them for the general good of the church. 2 Inst. 647: 2 Rep. 44: Cro. Eliz. 512. Yet extraparochial wastes and marsh lands, when improved and drained, are by the statute 17 Geo. 2. c. 37, to be assessed to all parochial rates in the Parish next adjoining. 1 Comm. ub. sup. and see 1 Wilf. 182.

Lord Holt held, that Parishes were instituted for the ease and benefit of the people, not of the parson; and the reason why parishioners must come to their Parish church is, because, having charged himself with the cure of their souls, he might be enabled to take care of that charge. 3 Salk. 88, 89. A Parish may comprise many vills; but generally it shall not be accounted to contain more than one, except the contrary be shewn, because most Parishes have but one vill within them. Hil. 23 Car. 1. B. R. And it shall not be intended that there is more than one Parish in a city, if it be not made to appear; for some cities have but one Parish. Ibid. Where there are several vills in a Parish, they may have peace-officers, and overseers of the poor, for every particular vill: and an ancient vill in a Parish, that time out of mind hath had a church of its own, and churchwardens and parochial rights, being reputed a Parish, is a Parish within the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, to provide for its own poor; and shall not pay to the poor of the Parish wherein it lies. Cro. Car. 92, 384, 396. But to make a vill a reputed Parish within stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, it must have a parochial chapel, chapelwardens and sacraments at the time that statute was made. 2 Salk. 501. Parishes in reputation are within that statute, especially when it has been the constant usage of such Parishes to choose their own overseers; who may distrain for a poor-tax, &c. 2 Roll. Rep. 160: 2 Nelf. Abr. 1235. See titles Poor; Overseers; Vill.

Money given by will to a Parish, shall be to the poor of the Parish. Chanc. Rep. 134. If a highway lie in a Parish, the Parish is obliged to repair it; and it is the most convenient and equal for the parishioners in every Parish, to repair the ways within it, if they are able. 2 Lil. 272. See title Highways.

PARISH-CLERK. In every parish the parson, vicar, &c. hath a Parish Clerk under him, who is the lowest officer of the church. They were formerly clerks in orders, and their business was at first to officiate at the altar, for which they had a competent maintenance by offerings; but now they are laymen, and have certain fees with the parson, on christenings, marriages, burials, &c. besides wages, for their maintenance. Count. Pars. Compan. 83, 84. They are to be twenty years of age at least, and known to be of honest conversation, sufficient for their reading, singing, &c. And their business consists chiefly in responses to the minister, reading lessons, singing psalms, &c. And in the large parishes of London some of them have deputies, to dispatch the business of their places, which are more gainful than common rectories. The law looks upon them as officers for life; they are regarded by the Common Law, as persons who have freeholds in their offices; and therefore though they may be punished, yet they cannot be deprived, by ecclesiastical censures. 1 Comm. 395. And they are generally appointed by the minister, unless there is a custom for the parishioners or churchwardens to choose them; in which case the canon cannot abrogate such custom; and when chosen it is to be signified to, and they are to be sworn into their office by, the archdeacon. Cro. Car. 589: Can. 91. And if such custom appears, the Court of B. R. will grant a Mandamus to the archdeacon to swear him in, for the establishment of the custom turns it into a temporal or civil right. 1 Comm. 395. He may make a deputy without licence of the Ordinary; Strange 942; and cannot sue in the Spiritual Court for fees as being a temporal officer. 2 Strange 1108.

PARISHIONER, parochianus.] An inhabitant of or belonging to any parish, lawfully settled therein. Parishioners are compellable to put things in decent order; but the judgment of the majority is the only rule for the degrees of that decency; and the Court inclined that a rate for that purpose is binding; as for moving the communion-table out of the body of the church into the chancel, or raising it higher, &c. 7 Mod. 70.

Parishioners have a right to view parish books. 11 Mod. 134.

Parishioners are a body politic to many purposes; as to vote at a vestry if they pay scot and lot; and they have a sole right to raise taxes for their own relief, without the interposition of any superior Court; may make by-laws to mend the highways, and to make banks to keep out the sea, and for repairing the church, and making a bridge, &c. or any such thing for the public good; and by stat. 3 & 4 W. 3. c. 11, to tax and levy poor rates, and to make and maintain fire-engines; and by stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 28, for purchasing workhouses for the poor. Arg. 8 Mod. 354. See further, titles Churchwardens; Overseers; Poor; Vestry.

PARISH OFFICERS. Divers persons are exempted from serving parish offices on account of their professions, viz. Physicians and surgeons, apothecaries, dissenting teachers, and persons having prosecuted any felon to conviction, &c. See this Dictionary, titles Churchwarden; Constable; Reward.

PARK, Lat. parcus, Fr. parque, i. e. locus inclusus.] A large quantity of ground inclosed and privileged for wild beasts of chase, by the King's grant or by prescription. 1 Inst. 233.

Manwood defines a Park to be a privileged place for beasts of venary, and other wild beasts of the forest and chase, tam sylvestres, quam campestres: and differs from a chase or warren, in that it must be inclosed; for if it lies open, it is good cause of seizure into the King's hands, as a thing forfeited; as a free chase is, if it be inclosed; besides, the owner cannot have an action against such as hunt in his Park, if it lies open. Manw. Forest Laws: Cromp. Jurisd. 148. No man can erect a Park without licence under the broad seal; for the Common Law does not encourage matter of pleasure, which brings no profit to the commonwealth. But there may be a Park in reputation, erected without lawful warrant; and the owner may bring his action against persons killing his deer. Wood's Inst. 207.

To a Park three things are required: 1. A grant thereof; 2. Inclosures by pale, wall or hedge; 3. Beasts of a Park, such as the buck, doe, &c. And where all the deer are destroyed, it shall no more be accounted a Park; for a Park consists of vert, venison, and inclosure; and if it is determined in any of them, it is a total disparking. Cro. Car. 59, 60.

The King may by letters patent dissolve his Park. 2 Lil. Abr. 273.

Parks as well as chases are subject to the Common Law, and are not to be governed by the forest laws. 4 Inst. 314.

Pulling down Park walls or pales, the offenders shall be liable to the same penalty as for killing deer, &c. See Deer-stealers.

A Park, says Blackstone, is an inclosed chase extending only over a man's own grounds. The word Park, indeed, properly signifies an inclosure; but yet it is not every field or common which a gentleman pleases to surround with a wall or paling, and to stock with a herd of deer, that is thereby constituted a legal Park; for the King's grant, or at least immemorial prescription, is necessary to make it so. 1 Inst. 233: 2 Inst. 199: 11 Rep. 86. Though now the difference between a real Park, and such inclosed grounds, is in many respects not very material; only that it is unlawful, at Common Law, for any person to kill any beasts of Park or chase, except such as possess the franchises of forest, chase, or Park. 2 Comm. c. 3. p. 38. But this latter doctrine is strenuously combated by Mr. Christian in his Annotations on the Commentaries. See this Dictionary, title Game; as also titles Forest; Chase; Warren, &c.

PARK-BOTE, Signifies to be quit of inclosing a Park, or any part thereof. 4 Inst. 308.

PARLE HILL, Spelman gives this description of it; Collis vallo plerumque munitus, in loco campestri, ne insidiis exponatur; ubi convenire olim solebant centuriæ aut vicinæ incolæ ad lites inter se tractandas & terminandas: Scotis reor Grith hail, q. Mons pacificationis, cui asyli privilegia concedebantur: & in Hiberniâ frequentes vidimus, the Parle and Parling Hills. Spelm. Gloss.

PARLIAMENT.

Parliamentum. The derivation of the word is uncertain; and its etymon, if we were to follow the imaginations of various authors, subject even to some degree of ridicule. It seems properly to be derived from the French Parler, to speak. Freedom of speech being of the essence of representation, and without which such a National Council can have no effect. The word (which was first applied to general assemblies of the States under Louis VII. in France, about A. D. 1150,) was not used in England till the reign of Hen. III. and the first mention of it, in our statute law, is in the preamble to stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. A. D. 1272. When therefore it is said Parliaments met before that æra, it is by a licence of speech considering every national assembly as a Parliament. See 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 147; and the notes there.] Parliament may be defined to be

I. Some authors say, that the ancient Britons had no such assemblies; but that the Saxons had; which may be collected from the laws of King Ina, who lived about the year 712. And William the First, called the Conqueror, having divided this land among his followers, so that every one of them should hold their lands of him in capite, the chief of these were called Barons, who thrice every year assembled at the King's Court, viz. at Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide, among whom the King used to come in his royal robes, to consult about the public affairs of the kingdom. This King called several Parliaments, wherein it appears, that the freemen or Commons of England were also there, and had a share in making laws: he by settling the Court of Parliament so established his throne, that neither Briton, Dane, nor Saxon could disturb his tranquillity, the making of his laws were by act of Parliament, and the accord between Stephen and him was made by Parliament; though all the times since have not kept the same form of assembling the States. Doddridge's Antiq. Parliament.

There was a Parliament before there were any barons; and if the Commons do not appear, there can be no Parliament; for the knights, citizens, and burgesses represent the whole Commons of England, but the peers only are present for themselves, and none others. Doddr.

Coke affirms, that many Parliaments were held before the Conquest; and produces an instance of one held in the reign of Alfred: he likewise gives us a conclusion of a Parliament holden by Athelstan, where mention is made, that all things were enacted in the great synod, or council at *Gratel*y, whereat was archbishop Wolfehelme, with all the noblemen and wise men, whom the King called together. 1 Inst. 110. It is apparent, (says Mr. Prynne) from all the precedents before the time of the Conquest, that our pristine synods and councils were nothing else but Parliaments; that our Kings, nobles, senators, aldermen, wise men, knights and Commons, were present and voting in them as members and judges: And Sir Henry Spelman, Camden, and other writers, prove the Commons to be a part of the Parliament in the time of the Saxons, but not by that name, or elected as consisting of knights, citizens, and burgesses. Pryn. Sovereign Pow. Parliament

As to the origin of the present House of Commons, our authors of antiquity vary very much; many are of opinion that the Commons began not to be admitted as part of the Parliament, upon the footing they are now, until the 49 H. 3, because the first writ of summons of any knights, citizens, and burgesses, is of no ancienter date than that time. But the Great Charter in the 17th year of King John, (about which time the distinction of barones majores and minores is supposed to have begun) was made per Regem, barones, & liberos homines totius regni.

Selden says, that the borough of St. Albans claimed by prescription in the Parliament, 8 Ed. II, to send two burgesses to all Parliaments, as in the reigns of Edw. I. and his progenitors, which must be the time of King John; and so before the reign of King Henry II. And in the reign of Henry V. it was declared and admitted, that the Commons of the land were ever a part of the Parliament. Selden's Tit. Hon. 709: Polydore Virgil Hollinshed, Speed, and others mention, that the Commons were first summoned at a Parliament held at Salisbury, 16 Hen. I. Sir Walter Ralegh, in his treatise of the Prerogative of Parliaments, thinks it was anno 18 Hen. I. And Dr. Heylin finds another beginning for them, viz. in the reign of King Hen. II.

On this part of the subject Blackstone thus expresses himself; and in his Commentaries will be found, as on other subjects, the summary of former opinions, illuminated by the powerful mind of that great Commentator. See 1 Comm. c. 2.

The

The original, or first institution, of Parliaments is one of those matters which lie so far hidden in the dark ages of antiquity, that the tracing of it out is a thing equally difficult and uncertain. But it is certain, that long before the introduction of the Norman language into England, all matters of importance were debated and settled in the great councils of the realm; a practice which seems to have been universal among the northern nations; particularly the Germans, and carried by them into all the countries of Europe, which they over-ran at the dissolution of the Roman empire.

With us in England this general council hath been held immemorially, under the several names of Michel Synoth, or great council; Michel Gemote, or great meeting; and more frequently Wittena gemote, or the meeting of wise men. It was also styled in Latin, Commune concilium regni; Magnum concilium; Regis curia magna; Conventus magnatum, vel procerum; Assisa generalis; and sometimes Communitas regni Angliæ. Glan. l. 13. c. 32; l. 9. c. 10: Pref. 9 Rep: 2 Inst. 526. We have instances of its meeting to order the affairs of the kingdom, to make new laws, and to mend the old; or as Fleta, l. 2. c. 2, expresses it, "novis injuriis emersis nova constituere remedia;" so early as the reign of Ina, King of the West Saxons; Offa, King of the Mercians; and Ethelbert, King of Kent, in the several realms of the heptarchy. And, after their union, the Mirror, c. 1. § 3, informs us, that King Alfred ordained for a perpetual usage, that these councils should meet twice in the year, or oftener, if need be, to treat of the government of God's people; how they should keep themselves from sin, should live in quiet, and should receive right. Our succeeding Saxon and Danish monarchs held frequently councils of this sort, as appears from their respective codes of laws; the titles whereof usually speak them to be enacted, either by the King with the advice of his Wittena-gemote, or wise men, as, "hæc sunt instituta, quæ Edgarus rex consilio sapientum suorum instituit;" or to be enacted by these sages with the advice of the King, as, "hæc sunt judicia, quæ sapientes consilio regis Ethelstani instituerunt:" or lastly, to be enacted by them both together, as, "hæc sunt institutiones, quas rex Edmundus, et episcopi sui, cum sapientibus suis instituerunt."

There is also no doubt but these great councils were occasionally held under the first princes of the Norman line. Glanvil, who wrote in the reign of Henry II. speaking of a particular amount of an amercement in the Sheriff's Court, says, it had never yet been ascertained by the General Assise, or Assembly, but was left to the custom of particular counties. Glanv. l. 9. c. 10. Here the general assise is spoken of as a meeting well known, and its statutes or decisions are put in a manifest contradistinction to custom, or the common law. And in Edward III.'s time, an act of Parliament, made in the reign of William the Conqueror, was pleaded in the case of the abbey of St. Edmund's Bury, and judicially allowed by the Court. Year-Book, 21 E. 3. c. 60.

Hence it indisputably appears, that Parliaments or general councils are coeval with the kingdom itself. How those Parliaments were constituted and composed is another question, which has been matter of great dispute among our learned antiquaries; and particularly whether the Commons were summoned at all; or if summoned, at what period they began to form a distinct assembly. It is however generally agreed, that in the main the constitution of Parliament, as it now stands, was marked out so long ago as the seventeenth year of King John, A. D. 1215, in the great charter granted by that prince; wherein he promises to summon all archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, and greater barons, personally; and all other tenants in chief under the Crown, by the sheriff and bailiffs; to meet at a certain place, with forty days' notice, to assess aids and scutages, when necessary. And this constitution has subsisted, in fact, at least from the year 1266, 49 Hen. III; there being still extant writs of that date, to summon knights, citizens, and burgesses to Parliament; the former of which may be seen in Elsynge, c. 1. § 2.

In fine, Parliament is the highest and most honourable, and absolute Court of justice in England; consisting of the King, the Lords of Parliament, and the Commons; the Lords being divided into spiritual and temporal; and the Commons divided into knights of shires or counties; citizens out of cities; and burgesses from boroughs; the words of the old Latin writ to the Sheriff for the election, being Duos milites gladiis cinctos magis idoneos & discretos comitatûs tui; & de quâlibet civitate comitatûs tui duos cives; & de quolibet burgo duos burgenses, de discretioribus & magis sufficientibus, &c. 1 Inst. 109.

II. The Parliament is regularly to be summoned by the King's writ or letter issued out of Chancery, by advice of the Privy Council, at least forty days before it begins to sit.

This is a provision of the Magna Charta of King John: Faciemus summoneri, &c. ad certum diem, scilicet ad terminum quadraginta dierum, ad minus; et ad certum locum. Black. Mag. Ch. Joh. 14. It is enforced by stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 25, which enacts that there shall be forty days between the teste and the return of the writ of summons, and this time is by the uniform practice, since the Union, extended to fifty days. This practice was introduced by the 22d article of the act of union, stat. 5 Ann. c. 8, which required that time between the teste and the return of the writ of summons for the first Parliament of Great Britain. See 2 Hats. 235.

It is a branch of the royal prerogative, that no Parliament can be convened by its own authority; [meaning by the authority of the Lords and Commons only, who in common parlance, though not in strictness of law, are considered as the Parliament;] or by the authority of any, except the King alone. And this prerogative is founded upon a very good reason; for supposing the Lords and Commons had a right to meet spontaneously without being called together, it is impossible to conceive that all the members, and each of the Houses, would agree unanimously upon the proper time and place of meeting; and if half of the members met, and half absented themselves, who shall determine which is really the legislative body, the part assembled, or that which stays away? It is therefore necessary that the Parliament should be called together at a determinate time and place; and highly becoming its dignity and independence, that it should be called together by none but one of its own constituent parts: and of the three constituent parts, this office can only appertain to the King, as he is a single person, whose will may be uniform and steady; the first person in the nation, being superior perior to both Houses in dignity; and the only branch of the Legislature that has a separate existance, and is capable of performing any act at a time when no Parliament is in being. Nor is it an exception to this rule, that by some modern statutes, on the demise of a King or Queen, if there be then no Parliament in being, the last Parliament revives, and it is to sit again for six months, unless dissolved by the successor; for this revived Parliament must have been originally summoned by the Crown.

It is true, that by stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 1. it was enacted, that, if the King neglected to call a Parliament, for three years, the Peers might assemble and issue out writs for choosing one; and, in case of neglect of the Peers, the constituents might meet and elect one themselves. But this, if ever put in practice, would have been liable to all the inconveniences just stated; and this act itself was deemed so highly detrimental and injurious to the royal prerogative, that it was repealed by stat. 16 Car. 2. c. 1. From thence therefore no precedent can be drawn; and in fact it is an exception which fully proves the rule.

It is also true, that the Convention Parliament, which restored King Charles the Second, met above a month before his return; the Lords by their own authority, and the Commons in pursuance of writs issued in the name of the keepers of the liberty of England by authority of Parliament; and that the said Parliament sat till the twenty-ninth of December, full seven months after the Restoration, and enacted many laws, several of which are still in force. But this was for the necessity of the thing, which supersedes all law; for if they had not so met, it was morally impossible that the kingdom should have been settled in peace. And the first thing done after the King's return was to pass an act, declaring this to be a good Parliament, notwithstanding the want of the King's writs. See stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 1. So that as the royal prerogative was chiefly wounded by their so meeting, and as the King himself, who alone had a right to object, consented to waive the objection, this cannot be drawn into an example in prejudice of the rights of the Crown. Besides, we should also remember, that it was at that time a great doubt among the lawyers, whether even this healing act made it a good Parliament; and held by very many in the negative; though it seems to have been too nice a scruple. 1 Sid. 1. And, perhaps out of abundant caution, it was thought necessary to confirm its acts in the next Parliament, by stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 7. & c. 14.

It is likewise true, that at the time of the Revolution, A. D. 1688, the Lords and Commons by their own authority, and upon the summons of the Prince of Orange (afterwards King William), met in a Convention, and therein disposed of the Crown and kingdom. But it must be remembered, that this assembling was upon a like principle of necessity as at the Restoration; that is, upon a full conviction that King James II. had abdicated the government, and that the throne was thereby vacant: which supposition of the individual members was confirmed by their concurrent resolution when they actually came together. And in such a case as the palpable vacancy of the throne, it follows ex necessitate rei, that the form of the royal writs must be laid aside, otherwise no Parliament can ever meet again. For let us put another possible case, for the sake of argument, that the whole royal line should at any time fail and become extinct, which would indisputably vacate the throne; in this situation it seems reasonable to presume, that the body of the nation, consisting of Lords and Commons, would have a right to meet and settle the government; otherwise there must be no government at all. And upon this, and no other principle, did the Convention in 1688 assemble. The vacancy of the throne was precedent to their meeting, without any royal summons, not a consequence of it. They did not assemble without writ, and then make the throne vacant by the King's abdication; but the throne being previously vacant by the King's abdication, they assembled without writ, as they must do if they assembled at all. Had the throne been full, their meeting would not have been regular; but, as it was really empty, such meeting became absolutely necessary. And accordingly it is declared by stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 1. that this Convention was really the two Houses of Parliament; notwithstanding the want of writs or other defects of form. So that notwithstanding these two capital exceptions, which were justifiable only on a principle of necessity, (and each of which by the way induced a revolution in the government,) the rule laid down is, in general, certain, that the King only can convoke a Parliament. And this by the antient statutes of the realm, 4 E. 3. c. 14: 36 E. 3. c. 10. he is bound to do every year, or oftener, if need be. Not that he is, or ever was, obliged by these statutes to call a new Parliament every year, but only to permit a Parliament to sit annually for the redress of grievances, and dispatch of business, if need be. These last words are so loose and vague, that such of our monarchs as were inclined to govern without Parliaments, neglected the convoking them sometimes for a very considerable period, under pretence that there was no need for them.

Mr. Granville Sharp, in a treatise published some years ago, argued ingeniously against this construction of the stat. 4 E. 3; and maintained that the words if need be, referred only to the preceding word oftener; so that the true signification was, that a Parliament should be held once every year at all events; and, if there should be any need to hold it oftener, then, more than once. The contemporary records of Parliament, in some of which it is so expressed without any ambiguity, prove beyond all controversy that this is the true construction. See Christian's note on 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 153.

To remedy the evil of discontinuing Parliaments it was enacted, that the sitting and holding of them shall not be intermitted above three years at the most. And by stat. 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. it is declared to be one of the rights of the people, that for redress of all grievances, and for the amending, strengthening, and preserving the laws, Parliaments ought to be held frequently. This indefinite frequency is again reduced to a certainty by stat. 6 W. & M. c. 2. which enacts, as the statute of Charles the Second had done before, that a new Parliament shall be called within three years after the determination of the former.

Though the stat. 6 W. & M. c. 2. confirms the statute 16 Car. 2. c. 1. in declaring, that there shall not be a longer interval than three years after a dissolution; yet the stat. 16 Car. 2. seems to be more extensive in its operation; by providing, that there shall not be an intermission of more than three years after any sitting of Parliament, Parliament, which will extend also to a prorogation. But as the mutiny-act, and the land-tax and malt-tax acts are passed for one year only, the statutes enforcing the meeting of Parliament are now of little avail; for the Parliament must necessarily be summoned, for the dispatch of business, once every year. In antient times, indeed, especially before the abolition of the feudal tenures at the restoration of Charles II. our Kings had such a revenue, independent of Parliament, that they were enabled to reign many years together without the assistance of Parliament, and in defiance of the statutes made to compel their calling it together. 1 Comm. 153, in n.

An old statute, stat. 5 R. 2. st. 2. c. 4, ordains, that every person and commonalty, having summons to Parliament, shall come thither, on pain to be amerced, or otherwise punished: and if the Sheriff doth not summon the cities and boroughs as usual, he shall likewise be amerced, &c.

III. The constituent parts of a Parliament are, The King's Majesty, sitting there in his royal political capacity; and the three Estates of the Realm, the Lords Spiritual, the Lords Temporal, (who sit together with the King in one house,) and the Commons, who sit by themselves in another. Others however, more consonantly with the common understanding of the nature and powers of Parliament, consider the three Estates of the Realm to be King, Lords, and Commons. See post. And the King, and these three Estates together, form the great corporation or body politic of the kingdom, of which the King is said to be caput, principium, et finis. 4 Inst. 1, 2: stat. 1 Eliz. c. 3: Hale of Parl. 1. For, upon their coming together, the King meets them either in person or by representation, without which there can be no beginning of a Parliament; and he also has alone the power of dissolving them. 4 Inst. 6: 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 153.

The learned commentator then proceeds to shew how highly necessary it is, for preserving the balance of the Constitution, that the Executive Power should be a branch, though not the whole, of the Legislative; and how each branch of our civil polity supports and is supported, regulates and is regulated, by the rest. See 1 Comm. p. 153—155; and as to the general extent of the King's power, prerogative, &c. this Dictionary, title King.

On holding a Parliament, the King, the first day, sits in the Upper House, and by himself, or the Lord Chancellor, shews the reason of their meeting; then the Commons are commanded to choose their Speaker; which done, two or three days afterwards he is presented to the King, and after some speeches is allowed, and sent down to the House of Commons; when the business of Parliament proceeds. 12 Rep. 115. See post VI.

A Parliament cannot begin, on return of the writs, without the King in person, or by representation; and by representation two ways, either by a Guardian of England, by letters patent under the great seal, when the King is out of the realm; or by commission, to certain Lords in case of indisposition, &c. when his Majesty is at home. 4 Inst. 6, 7. And if any Parliament is to be holden before a Guardian of the Realm, there must be a special commission to begin the Parliament; but the teste of the writs of summons is to be in the guardian's name: and by an ancient law, stat. 8 H. 5. c. 1, if the King, being beyond sea, cause a Parliament to be summoned in this kingdom, by writ under the teste of his lieutenant, and after the King returns hither, the Parliament shall proceed without any new summons.

In the 5th year of Henry V. a Parliament was holden before John Duke of Bedford, brother to the King, and guardian of the kingdom. Anno 3 Ed. IV. a Parliament was begun in the presence of the King, and prorogued to a further day; and then William Archbishop of York, the King's commissary by letters patent, held the same Parliament, and made an adjournment, &c. And 28 Eliz. the Queen by commission under the great seal, (reciting, that for urgent occasions she could not be present in her royal person,) did authorise John Whitgift Archbishop of Canterbury, William Lord Burleigh, Lord Treasurer of England, and Henry Earl of Derby, Lord Steward, to hold a Parliament, &c. Ad faciendum omnia et singula, &c. necnon ad Parliamentum adjornand. et prorogand. &c. And in the upper part of the page, above the beginning of the commission is written, Domina Regina repræsentatur per commissionarios, viz. &c. These commissioners sat on a form before the cloth of state, and after the commission read, the Parliament proceeded.

The constituent parts of Parliament, next in order, are the Spiritual Lords. These consist of two Archbishops, and twenty-four Bishops; and at the dissolution of monasteries by Henry VIII. consisted likewise of twenty-six mitred abbots, and two priors. Seld. Title Hon. 2, 5, 27. A very considerable body; and in those times equal to half the number of the temporal nobility; Co. Litt. 97: See 4 Inst. 1; by which it appears, that the number of the temporal nobility was one hundred and six. All these hold, or are supposed to hold, certain antient baronies under the King; for William the Conqueror thought proper to change the spiritual tenure, of frankalmoign or free alms, under which the bishops held their lands during the Saxon Government, into the feodal or Norman tenure by barony; which subjected their estates to all civil charges and assessments, from which they were before exempt; Gilb. Hist. Exch. 55: Spelm. W. 1. 291, and in right of succession to those baronies, which were unalienable from their respective dignities, the bishops and abbots were allowed their seats in the House of Lords. Glanv. 7, 1: Co. Litt. 97: Seld. Tit. Hon. 2, 5, 19. But though these Lords Spiritual are, in the eye of the law, a distinct estate from the Lords Temporal, and are so distinguished in most of our acts of Parliament, yet in practice they are usually blended together under the one name of the Lords; they intermix in their votes, and the majority of such intermixture binds both Estates. And from this want of a separate assembly, and separate negative, of the prelates, some writers have argued, (Whitelocke on Parl. c. 72: Warburt. Alliance, b. 2, c. 3.) very cogently, that the Lords Spiritual and Temporal are now in reality only one Estate; Dyer 60: which is unquestionably true in every effectual sense; though the antient distinction between them still nominally continues. For if a bill should pass their House, there is no doubt of its validity, though every Lord Spiritual should vote against it; of which Selden and Sir E. Coke give many instances; as on the other hand, it seems that it

It would be equally good, if the Lords Temporal present were inferior to the bishops in number, and every one of those Temporal Lords gave his vote to reject the bill; though Sir E. Coke seems to doubt whether this would not be an ordinance, rather than an act of Parliament, 4 Inst. 25: see Selden's Baronage, p. 1. c. 6: Gibs. Cod. 286. See also 2 Inst. 585, 6, 7: and Keilw 184; where it is holden by the Judges, 7 Hen. VIII, that the King may hold a Parliament without any Spiritual Lords. This was also exemplified in fact in the two first Parliaments of Charles II, wherein no bishops were summoned; till after the repeal of the stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 27, by stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 1. c. 2.

No rational or antient principle can perhaps be suggested, why the bishops should not have exactly the same legislative functions, as the other Peers of Parliament; the style of the House of Lords, viz. the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, was probably intended as a compliment to the bishops; to express the precedence that they are entitled to, before all the temporal barons; which originally was the only character that gave a claim to a seat in the House of Lords. Unless precedents could be found to the contrary, there seems to be no reason to doubt, but that any act at this day would be valid, though all the Temporal Lords or all the Spiritual Lords were absent. 1 Comm. 156, n.

In the stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2, the style of the Parliament is, the Lords and Commons in Parliament assembled; but there is the same style used also in stat. 1 Eliz. c. 11, a revenue act. On the 18th of February 1641, a motion was made in the Irish House of Lords, "That as all the bishops were against a representation about certain grievances, the Lords Spiritual should not be named: upon which the Judges were consulted; and their opinion was, that in any act or order which passed, it must be entered "by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal." 1 Mountm. 344.

The Lords Temporal consist of all the Peers of the realm; (the bishops not being in strictness held to be such, but merely Lords of Parliament, Staundf. P. C. 153;) by whatever title of nobility distinguished; Dukes, Marquisses, Earls, Viscounts, or Barons; as to which dignities, see this Dictionary, under those titles, and title Peers. Some of these sit by descent, as do all antient Peers; some by creation, as do all new made ones; others, since the union with Scotland, by election, which is the case of the sixteen Peers, who represent the body of the Scots nobility. The number of Lords Temporal is indefinite, and may be increased, at will, by the power of the Crown; and once, in the reign of Queen Anne, there was an instance of creating no less than twelve together; in contemplation of which, in the reign of George I, a bill passed the House of Lords, and was countenanced by the then ministry, for limiting the number of the peerage. This was thought by some to promise a great acquisition to the Constitution; by restraining the prerogative from gaining the ascendant in that august assembly, by pouring in at pleasure an unlimited number of new-created Lords. But the bill was ill relished and miscarried in the House of Commons, whose leading members were then desirous to keep the avenues to the other House as open and easy as possible. 1 Comm. 157.

The utility of this body is defended by the learned Judge, on the ground that distinction of rank and honours is necessary in every well-governed State; and the advantages resulting from those, whom he compares to pillars, reared from among the people, more immediately to support the Throne, are stated with the constitutional accuracy, for which that writer is so eminent.

The Commons, according to the present ordinary acceptation of the term, consist of all such men of property in the kingdom as have not seats in the House of Lords; indeed in its largest sense the word comprehends all who are not Peers of the realm: but it appears, in it original signification, to have been confined to those only who had a right to sit, or had a right to vote for representatives in the House of Commons; and in its strict parliamentary sense, in which alone it ought to be here understood, it means the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses who are the representatives, in the House of Commons, of the various counties, cities, and boroughs in the kingdom. In a free state, every man who is supposed a free agent ought to be in some measure his own governor; and therefore a branch, at least, of the legislative power should reside in the whole body of the People. In the State of Great Britain it is wisely contrived, that the people should do that, by their representatives, which it is impracticable to perform in person; representatives chosen by a number of minute and separate districts, wherein all the voters are, or easily may be, distinguished. The counties are therefore represented by knights, elected by the proprietors of lands: the cities and boroughs are represented by citizens and burgesses, chosen by the mercantile part, or supposed trading interest, of the nation. The number of English representatives is five hundred and thirteen, and of Scotch forty-five; in all, five hundred and fifty eight. And every member, though chosen by one particular district, when elected and returned, serves for the whole realm. For the end of his coming thither is not particular, but general; not barely to advantage his constituents, but the common-wealth; to advise his Majesty (as appears from the writ of summons) "de communi consilio, super negotiis quibusdam arduis et urgentibus, regem, statum, et defensionem regni Angliæ, et ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, concernentibus." 4 Inst. 14. And therefore (says Blackstone) he is not bound to consult with, or take the advice of, his constituents upon any particular point, unless he himself thinks it proper or prudent so to do. See 1 Comm. 157. 9, and the notes there.

These are the constituent parts of a Parliament; the King, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons; Parts, of which each is so necessary, that the consent of all three is required to make any new law that shall bind the subject. Whatever is enacted for law by one, or by two only, of the three, is no statute; and to it no regard is due, unless in matters relating to their own privileges. For though, in times of madness and anarchy, the House of Commons once passed a vote (which, as has been well observed, was a natural prologue to the tragical drama immediately afterwards performed), "that whatsoever is enacted or declared for law, by the Commons in Parliament assembled, hath the force of law; and all the people of this nation are concluded thereby, although the consent and concurrence of the King or House of Peers be not had thereto;" yet, when the Constitution was restored in all its forms, it was particularly enacted by stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 1, that if any person shall maliciously or advisedly affirm, that both or either of the Houses of Parliament have any legislative authority, without the King, such person shall incur all the penalties of a præmunire: we must, however, remember the exceptions to this rule; arising, as has been already mentioned, from State necessity.

Peers

IV. 1. The power and jurisdiction of Parliament, says Sir Edward Coke, is so transcendent and absolute, that it cannot be confined, either for causes or persons, within any bounds. 4 Inst. 36. It hath sovereign and uncontrollable authority in the making, confirming, enlarging, restraining, abrogating, repealing, reviving, and expounding of laws; concerning matters of all possible denominations, ecclesiastical or temporal, civil, military, maritime, or criminal; this being the place where that absolute despotic power, which must in all governments reside somewhere, is intrusted, by the Constitution of these kingdoms. All mischiefs and grievances, operations and remedies, that transcend the ordinary course of law, are within the reach of this extraordinary tribunal. It can regulate or new-model the succession to the Crown; as was done in the reign of Henry VIII. and William III. It can alter the established religion of the land; as was done, in a variety of instances, in the reigns of king Henry VIII. and his three children. It can change and create afresh even the Constitution of the kingdom, and of Parliaments themselves; as was done by the act of union, and the several statutes for triennial and septennial elections. It can, in short, do every thing that is not naturally impossible; and therefore some have not scrupled to call its power, by a figure rather too bold, the omnipotence of Parliament; an expression, however, which in fact seems to signify nothing more than the supreme sovereign power of the State; or a power of action uncontrolled by any superior." In this sense, the King in the exercise of his prerogatives, and the House of Lords in the intepretation of laws, are also omnipotent; that is, free from the control of any superior provided by the Constitution. True it is, that what the Parliament doth, no authority upon earth can undo. So that it is a matter most essential to the liberties of this kingdom, that such members be delegated to this important trust as are most eminent for their probity, their fortitude, and their knowledge; for it was a known apophthegm of the great lord treasurer Burleigh, "that England could never be ruined but by a Parliament;" and as Sir Matthew Hale observes, this being the highest and greatest Court, over which none other can have jurisdiction in the kingdom, if by any means a misgovernment should any way fall upon it, the Subjects of this kingdom are left without all manner of remedy of Parliament. Hale of Parl. 49. To the same purpose Montesquieu (though it is earnestly to be hoped too hastily,) presages, that as Rome, Sparta, and Carthage have lost their liberty and perished, so the Constitution of England will in time lose its liberty, will perish; it will perish whenever the Legislative Power shall become more corrupt than the Executive. Sp. L. l. 11. c. 6.

It must be owned that Mr. Locke, and other theoretical writers have held, that "there remains still inherent in the people a supreme power to remove or alter the Legislature, when they find that Legislature act contrary to the trust reposed in them; for when such trust is abused, it is thereby forfeited, and devolves to those who gave it." Locke on Gov. part 2. § 149. 227. But, however just this conclusion may be in theory, we cannot practically adopt it; nor take any legal steps to carry it into execution, under any dispensation of government at present actually existing. For this devolution of power to the people at large, includes in it a dissolution of the whole form of government established by that people; reduces all the members to their original state of equality, and by annihilating the sovereign power, repeals all positive laws whatsoever, before enacted. No human laws will therefore suppose a case, which at once must destroy all law, and compel men to build afresh upon a new foundation; nor will they make provision for such a desperate event, as must render all legal provision ineffectual. So long, therefore, as the English Constitution lasts, we may venture to affirm, that the power of Parliament is absolute and without control.

In order to prevent the mischiefs that might arise by placing this extensive authority in hands, either incapable or improper to manage it, it is provided by custom and the law of Parliament, that no one shall sit or vote in either House unless he be twenty-one years of age. Whitel. c. 50: 4 Inst. 47. This is also expressly declared by stat. 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 25. § 8, with regard to the House of Commons; doubts having arisen from some contrary adjudications whether or not a minor was incapacitated from sitting in that House. This provision has not always been strictly attended to; one of the warmest advocates for the Constitution (if his own professions are to be credited, though not according to universal opinion,) having, it is believed, first taken his seat when a minor. It is also enacted by stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 6, that no member be permitted to enter into the House of Commons, till he hath taken the Oath of Allegiance before the Lord Steward, or his deputy. The Lord Steward, on the first day of the meeting of a new Parliament, attends in a room adjoining to the House of Commons, and administers the oath to the members present; and he then executes a commission or deputation, empowering any one or more of a great number of members specified to administer the oath to others. By stats. 30 Car. 2. st. 2: 1 Geo. 1. c. 13, no member shall vote or sit in either House till he hath, in presence of the House, taken the Oath of Allegiance, Supremacy, and Abjuration; (the latter now as altered by stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 53, see title Oaths;) and subscribed and repeated the declaration against transubstantiation, and invocation of Saints, and the sacrifice of the Mass. Aliens, unless naturalized, were likewise by the law of Parliament incapable to serve therein; and now it is enacted, by stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2, that no alien, even though he be naturalized, shall be capable of being a member of either House of Parliament.

There are not only these standing incapacities, but if any person is made a Peer by the King, or elected to serve in the House of Commons by the people, yet may the respective Houses, upon complaint of any crime in such person, and proof thereof, adjudge him disabled, and incapable to sit as a member, and this by the law and custom of Parliament. 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 163; cites Whitel.

of Parl. c. 102; and refers to Lords Journ. 3 May 1620: 13 May 1624: 26 May 1725: Comm. Journ. 14 Feb. 1580: 21 Ju. 1628: 9 Nov.: 21 Jan. 1640: 6 Mar. 1676: 6 Mar. 1711: 17 Feb. 1769.

The sentence immediately preceding was not in the first editions of the Commentaries, but was added, no doubt, with an allusion to the Middlesex election; the circumstances of which were briefly these: On January 19-20, 1764, J. W. was expelled the House of Commons for being the author of a seditious libel: at the next election in 1768 he was elected, for the county of Middlesex; and on February 3, 1769, it was resolved, that J. W. Esq. who had acknowledged himself to be the author and publisher of a paper which the House had previously pronounced to be an insolent, scandalous, and seditious libel, (not the same for which he was expelled in the former Parliament), and who had been convicted in the Court of K. B. of having printed and published a seditious libel, and three obscene and impious libels, and been sentenced to twenty-two months' imprisonment, be expelled this House. A new writ having been ordered for the county of Middlesex, Mr. W. was re-elected without opposition; and on February 17, 1769, it was resolved, "that J. W. Esq. having been, in this session of Parliament, expelled this House, was and is incapable of being elected a member to serve in this present Parliament:" and the election was declared void, and a new writ ordered. He was a second time re-elected without opposition; and on March 17, 1769, the House again declared the election void, and ordered a new writ: At the next election Mr. Luttrell, who had vacated his seat for the purpose, by accepting the Chiltern Hundreds, offered himself a candidate against Mr. W. Mr. W. had 1143 votes, and Mr. Luttrell 296. Mr. W. was again returned by the Sheriff. On April 15, 1769, the House resolved, that Mr. Luttrell ought to have been returned, and ordered the return to be amended; allowing fourteen days for a petition against the return: one was accordingly presented on April 29, by certain freeholders of Middlesex; and on the 8th of May the House resolved that Mr. Luttrell was duly elected. On the 3d of May 1783, (fourteen years afterwards) it was resolved, that the resolutions of the 17th February 1769 should be expunged from the Journals of the House, as being subversive of the rights of the whole body of electors of this kingdom. And at the same time it was ordered, that all the declarations, orders, and resolutions respecting the election of J. W. should be expunged.

The history of England furnishes many instances of important constitutional questions that have deeply agitated the minds of the people of this country, which can raise little or no doubt in the minds of those who view them at a distance, uninfluenced by interest or passion. It has been thought by some that it was a violent measure in the House of Commons to expel a member for the libels which he had published; but that the subsequent proceedings were agreeable to the law of Parliament, that is, to the law of the land, the authorities referred to, by the learned commentator, seem most unanswerably to prove. But what shall be considered to be the law with regard to the incapacities of candidates, since these proceedings were expunged, it will be difficult indeed to determine. The resolution to expunge implies the correction of an error, after mature deliberation. If it had not been declared that a former resolution was subversive of the rights of electors, it might perhaps have been supposed that it was intended only as a personal compliment to the member expelled. But it does not state in what instance the former resolution was so subversive. They who wish for a certain knowledge of their rights and liberties must lament such a want of precision; but they must wait with patience till the wisdom of the House has occasion to explain its own judgment; and which, perhaps, if ever it should arise, would be attended with the same outrageous spirit of party, which too frequently influences the decision of public questions; acting rather upon grounds and motives, which ought to be discarded with the most religious impartiality, than on the broad basis of sound constitutional doctrine, or the real interest and welfare of the Subject. See 1 Comm. c. 2, p. 163, and n.

As every Court of justice hath laws and customs for its direction, some the civil and canon, some the Common Law, others their own peculiar laws and customs; so the high Court of Parliament hath also its own peculiar law, called the Lex et consuetudo Parliamenti: a law much better to be learned out of the rolls of Parliament, and other records, and by precedents and continual experience, than can be expressed by any one man. 4 Inst. 50. It will be sufficient to observe, that the whole of the law and custom of Parliament has its original from this one maxim, "that whatever matter arises, concerning either House of Parliament, ought to be examined, discussed, and adjudged in that House to which it relates, and not elsewhere." 4 Inst. 15. Hence, for instance, the Lords will not suffer the Commons to interfere in settling the election of a Peer of Scotland; the Commons will not allow the Lords to judge of the election of a member; nor will either House permit the subordinate Courts of law to examine the merits of either case. But the maxims upon which they proceed, together with the method of proceeding, rest entirely in the breast of the Parliament itself; and are not defined and ascertained by any particular stated laws. See post VI. (B) 3.

It has indeed been well hinted, to all the members of this supereminent judicature, that when they are declaring what is the law of Parliament, their character is totally different from that with which, as Legislators, they are invested, when they are framing new laws; and that they ought never to forget the admonition of that great and patriotic chief justice Lord Holt, viz. "That the authority of Parliament is from the law, and as it is circumscribed by law, so it may be exceeded; and if they do exceed those legal bounds and authority, their acts are wrongful, and cannot be justified any more than the acts of private men." 1 Salk. 505. And for the position, that Parliament in their judicial capacity, are governed by the common and statute laws, as well as the Courts in Westminster-Hall; see 4 Inst. 14, 15: 2 St. Tr. 735.

The Courts at Westminster may judge of the privilege of Parliament, where it is incident to a suit the Court is possessed of; and Courts may proceed to execution between the sessions of Parliament, notwithstanding appeals lodged, &c. 2 St. Tr. 66, 209.

The King cannot take notice of any thing, said to be done in the House of Commons, but by the report of the House; and every member of the House of Parliament has a judicial place, and cannot be a witness. 4 Inst. 15. When Charles I. being in the House of Commons, and sitting in the Speaker's chair, asked the then speaker, whether certain members (whom the King named) were present? The Speaker, from a presence of mind which arose from the genius of that House, readily answered, "That he had neither eyes to see, nor tongue to speak, but as the House was pleased to direct him." Atkin's Jurisd. and Antiquity of the House of Commons. Hen. VIII, having commanded Sir Thomas Gaudy (one of the judges of the King's Bench) to attend the chief justices and know their opinion, whether a man might be attainted of high treason by Parliament, and never called to answer; the judges declared it was a dangerous question, and that the High Court of Parliament ought to give examples to inferior Courts, for proceeding according to justice, and no inferior Court could do the like. Lex Constitution. 161.

The House of Lords is a distinct Court from the Commons, to several purposes, and is the sovereign Court of justice, and dernier resort: they try criminal causes on impeachments of the Commons; and have an original jurisdiction for the trial of Peers, upon indictments found by a grand jury: they also try causes upon appeals from the Court of Chancery, or upon writs of error to reverse judgments in B. R. &c. And all their decrees are as judgments; and judgments given in Parliament may be executed by the Lord Chancellor. 4 Inst. 21: Finch. 233: 1 Lev. 165. It is said, that the judicial power of Parliament is in the Lords; but that the House of Lords hath no jurisdiction over original causes, which would deprive the Subject of the benefit of appeal. 2 Salk. 510. Also the House of Commons is a distinct Court to many purposes; they examine the right of elections, expel their own members, & commit them to prison, and sometimes other persons &c. See post. And the book of the clerk of the House of Commons is a record. 2 Inst. 536: 4 Inst. 23. The Commons, coming from all parts, are the grand inquest of the realm; to present public grievances and delinquents to the King and Lords to be punished by them: and any member of the House of Commons has the privilege of impeaching the highest Lord in the kingdom. Wood's Inst. 455.

The High Court of Parliament is the supreme Court in the kingdom, not only for the making, but also for the execution of laws; by the trial of great and enormous offenders, whether Lords or Commoners, in the method of parliamentary impeachment. Acts of Parliament to attaint particular persons of treason or felony, or to inflict pains and penalties, are new laws made pro re natâ, and by no means an execution of such as are already in being: but an impeachment before the Lords, by the Commons of Great Britain, in Parliament, is a prosecution of the already known and established law, and has been frequently put in practice; being a presentment to the most high and supreme Court of criminal jurisdiction by the most solemn grand inquest of the whole kingdom. 1 Hal. P.C. 150. A Commoner, it is said by Blackstone, who quotes authorities to prove his position, cannot be impeached before the Lords for any capital offence, but only for high misdemeanors; a Peer may be impeached for any crime: But it appears, that the right of impeaching a Commoner even in capital cases, has been claimed and asserted by the Lords. See 4 Comm. 260, in n.

The Commons usually, in case of an impeachment of a Peer for treason, address the Crown to appoint a Lord High Steward for the greater dignity and regularity of their proceedings; which High Steward was formerly elected by the Peers themselves, though he was generally commissioned by the King. 1 Hal. P. C. 350. But it hath been strenuously maintained, that the appointment of an High Steward in such cases is not indispensably necessary, but that the House may proceed without one.

This custom of impeachment has a peculiar propriety in the English Constitution; for though in general the union of the legislative and judicial powers ought to be most carefully avoided, yet it may happen that a Subject, intrusted with the administration of public affairs, may infringe the rights of the people, and be guilty of such crimes as the ordinary magistrate either dares not or cannot punish. Of these the representatives of the people, or House of Commons, cannot properly judge; because their constituents are the parties injured; and can therefore only impeach. In the trial of such an impeachment, ordinary tribunals would naturally be swayed by the authority of so powerful an accuser. Reason, therefore, will suggest that this branch of the Legislature, which represents the people, must bring its charge before the other branch, which consists of the nobility, who have neither the same interests nor the same passions as popular assemblies. It is proper that the nobility should judge, to insure justice to the accused; as it is proper that the people should accuse, to insure justice to the commonwealth. 4 Comm. c. 19. p. 261. See further this Dictionary, title Impeachment.

As to the Court of the Lord High Steward for the trial of a Peer, see this Dictionary, title Peers; and as to the civil appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords, Post V. 2.

IV. 2. The privileges of Parliament are very large and indefinite; and therefore when in 31 Hen. 6, the House of Lords propounded a question to the Judges concerning them, the chief justice, Sir John Fortescue, in the name of his brethren, declared, "that they ought not to make answer to that question, for it hath not been used aforetime that the justices should, in any wise determine the privileges of the High Court of Parliament; for it is so high and mighty in its nature, that it may make law; and that which is law, it may make no law: and the determination and knowledge of that privilege belongs to the Lords of Parliament, and not to the justices." Selds Baronage, p. 1, c. 4. Privilege of Parliament was principally established, in order to protect its members, not only from being molested by their fellow-subjects, but also more especially from being oppressed by the power of the Crown. If therefore all the privileges of Parliament were once to be set down and ascertained, and no privilege to be allowed but what was so defined and determined, it were easy for the Executive Power to devise some new case, not within the line of privilege, and under pretence thereof to harass any refractory member, and violate the freedom of Parliament. The dignity and independence of the two Houses are therefore in a great measure preserved by keeping

keeping the privileges indefinite. But in anſwer to this obſervation it has been juſtly remarked, that clearneſs and certainty are eſſentially neceſſary to the liberty of Engliſhmen; and that rights and privileges cannot well be claimed, unleſs they are aſcertained and defined.

There are ſeveral privileges of the members of either Houſe, which are ſufficiently certain and notorious These are, privilege of ſpeech, of perſon: [and before the ſtat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50, of their domeſtics, and of their lands and goods]. As to the firſt, privilege of ſpeech, it is declared by the ſtat. 1 W. & M. ſt. 2. c. 2, as one of the liberties of the people, "that the freedom of ſpeech, and debates, and proceedings in Parliament, ought not to be impeached, or queſtioned, in any Court or place out of Parliament." And this freedom of ſpeech (with other privileges) is particularly demanded of the King in perſon, by the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, at the opening of every new Parliament.

If any member of either Houſe, however, ſpeak words of offence in a debate, after the debate is over he is called to the bar, where commonly on his knees he receives a reprimand from the Speaker; and if the offence be great, he is ſent to the Tower. When the bill of attainder of the earl of Strafford was paſſing the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Taylor, a member of that Houſe, oppoſed it with great violence and indecency, and being heard, to explain himſelf, was commanded to withdraw; whereupon it was reſolved he ſhould be expelled the Houſe, be made incapable of ever ſerving as a member of Parliament, and ſhould be committed priſoner to the Tower, there to remain during the pleaſure of the Houſe: and he was called to the bar, where he kneeled down, and Mr. Speaker pronounced the ſentence accordingly. And Sir John Elliot, Denzil Hollis, and another perſon having ſpoken theſe words, viz. "The King's Privy Council, his judges and his counſel learned in the law, have conſpired to trample under their feet the liberties of the Subject, and of this Houſe," an information was filed againſt them by the Attorney General; and farther, for that the King having ſignified his pleaſure to the Houſe of Commons for the adjournment of the Parliament, and the Speaker endeavouring to get out of the chair, they violenter, &c. detained him in the chair, upon which there was a great tumult in the Houſe, to the terror of the Commons there aſſembled, and againſt their allegiance, in contempt of the King, his crown and dignity: the defendants pleaded to the juriſdiction of the Court; and refuſed to anſwer but in Parliament; but it was adjudged, that they ought to anſwer, the charge being for a conſpiracy, and ſeditious acts, to prevent the adjournment of the Parliament, which may be examined out of it; and not anſwering, judgment was given againſt them, that Sir John Elliot ſhould be committed to the Tower, and fined 2000*l.*; and the other two were fined and impriſoned. Cro. Car. 130.

The other privileges, of perſons, [and heretofore of ſervants, lands, and goods,] are immunities as antient as Edward the Confeſſor; in whoſe laws we find this precept, "ad ſynodos venientibus, ſive ſummoniti ſint, ſive per ſe quid agendum habuerint ſit ſumma pax." L. Ed. Conf. c. 3. This included formerly not only privilege from illegal violence, but alſo from legal arreſts and ſeizures by proceſs from the Courts of law. And ſtill to aſſault by violence a member of either Houſe, or his menial ſervants, is a high contempt of Parliament, and there puniſhed with the utmoſt ſeverity. It has likewiſe peculiar penalties annexed to it in the Courts of law, by ſtat. 5 Hen. 4. c. 6, and 11 Hen. 6. c. 11. By this latter ſtatute, aſſaulting a member coming to or attending in Parliament incurs the penalty of double damages, and the offender ſhall make fine and ranſom.

Sir Robert Brandling made an aſſault upon Mr. Witherington, a member of the Houſe of Commons, in the country before his coming up to Parliament, and Sir Robert was ſent for by the Houſe, and committed to the Tower. And anno 19 Jac. I. ſome ſpeeches paſſed privately in the Houſe between two of the members, and one of them going down the Parliament ſtairs ſtruck the other, who catching at a ſword in his man's hand, endeavouring to return the ſtroke; on complaint to the Houſe of Commons they were both ordered to attend, where he who gave the blow was committed to the Tower during the pleaſure of the Houſe. Dict.

Neither can any member of either Houſe be arreſted and taken into cuſtody, unleſs for ſome indictable offence; without a breach of the privilege of Parliament. See poſt.

But all other privileges which derogate from the Common Law in matters of civil right are now at an end, ſave only as to the freedom of the member's perſon; which in a Peer (by the privilege of peerage) is for ever ſacred and inviolable; and in a Commoner (by the privilege of Parliament) for forty days after every prorogation, and forty days before the next appointed meeting: which is now, in effect, as long as the Parliament ſubſiſts, it ſeldom being prorogued for more than fourſcore days at a time. 2 Lev. 72. It does not appear that the privilege from arreſt is limited to any preciſe time after a diſſolution; but it has been determined by all the Judges, that it extends to a convenient time. Col. Pit's [illegible] Prynne is of opinion, that it continued [illegible] the number of days the member received wages after a diſſolution: which were in proportion to the diſtance between his home and the place where the Parliament was held. 4 Parl. Writs 68. As to all other privileges which obſtruct the ordinary courſe of juſtice, they were reſtrained by ſtats. 12 W. 3. c. 3: 2 & 3 Ann. c. 18: 11 Geo. 2. c. 24; and are now totally aboliſhed by ſtat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50; which enacts, that any ſuit may at any time be brought againſt any Peer or member of Parliament, their ſervants, or any other perſon entitled to privilege of Parliament; which ſhall not be impeached or delayed by pretence of any ſuch privilege; except that the perſon of a member of the Houſe of Commons ſhall not thereby be ſubject to any arreſt or impriſonment. Likewiſe, for the benefit of commerce, it is provided by ſtat. 4 Geo. 3. c. 33, that any trader, having privilege of Parliament, may be ſerved with legal proceſs for any juſt debt to the amount of 100*l.* and unleſs he makes ſatisfaction within two months, it ſhall be deemed an act of bankruptcy; and that a commiſſion of bankrupt may be iſſued againſt ſuch privileged traders in like manner as againſt any other. See this Dictionary, title Bankrupt.

The ſtat. 12 W. 3. c. 3, enacted, that actions might be proſecuted againſt perſons entitled to privilege of Parliament, after a diſſolution or prorogation, until a new Parliament was called, or the ſame was re-aſſembled: and after adjournment for above fourteen days, the reſpective Courts might proceed to judgment, &c.

Proceedings

Proceedings were to be by summons and distress infinite, &c. until the parties should enter a common appearance; and the real or personal estates of the defendants to be sequestered for default of appearance; but the plaintiff not to arrest their bodies: and where any plaintiff should be staid or prevented from proceeding by privilege of Parliament, he should not be barred by any statute of limitation, or nonsuited, dismissed, or his suit discontinued for want of prosecution; but at the rising of the Parliament should be at liberty to proceed to judgment and execution. This act was, by stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50, extended to Scotland.

The stat. 2 & 3 Ann. c. 18, provided, that actions may be prosecuted against officers of the revenue, or in any place of public trust, for any forfeiture or breach of trust, &c. and shall not be staid by colour of privilege; but such officer being a member of Parliament, is not subject to arrest during time of privilege, but summons, attachment, &c.

The stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 24, enacted, that any person might prosecute a suit in any Court of record, &c. in Great Britain or Ireland, against any Peer or Member of the House of Commons, or other person entitled to privilege, in the intervals of Parliaments, or of Sessions, if above fourteen days; and the said Courts, after dissolutions or prorogations, were to give judgment, and award execution: and no proceedings in law against the King's immediate debtor, as such, &c. to be delayed under colour of such privilege; only the person of a Member of Parliament, &c. shall not be arrested or imprisoned.

The stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50, already mentioned, provides, that suits may at any time be prosecuted in Courts of record, equity, or admiralty, and Courts having cognisance of causes [redacted] Peers and Members of the House of Commons, and their servants, &c. Process by distringas being found dilatory, the Court, out of which the writ proceeds, may order the issues to be sold, and the money arising thereby to be applied to pay the costs to the plaintiff, and the surplus to be retained till the appearance of the defendant, &c.—When the purpose of the writ is answered, the issues are to be returned; or, if sold, the money remaining is to be repaid.—Obedience to the rule of the Court of King's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer may be enforced by distress infinite.

Judgment was had against the defendant, and afterwards he was chosen a member of Parliament, and after his election he was taken in execution, yet he had his privilege; though the book tells us minus justè. Moor 57. And where judgment being had against a defendant, he was taken in execution in the morning, and about three hours afterwards was chosen a member of Parliament; the House agreed, that being arrested before he was chosen, &c. he shall not have his privilege. Moor 340. See further this Dictionary, title Privilege.

To shew what the Subject has gained by the provisions of the several acts of Parliament, which have restrained the privileges of members, so far as they could be used as exceptions to, or infringements on, public justice, we need only recur to the cases in our books treating of the privileges of Parliament, relating to arrests of members of the House of Commons, and their servants, and the manner of their confinement, releasement, &c. In the first year of King Jac. I, Sir Thomas Shirley, a member of Parliament, was arrested four days before the sitting of the Parliament, and carried prisoner to the Fleet; on which a warrant issued to the clerk of the Crown for a habeas corpus to bring him to the House, and the serjeant was sent for in custody, who being brought to the bar, and confessing his fault, was excused for that time: but on hearing counsel at the bar for Sir Thomas Shirley, and the warden of the Fleet, and upon producing precedent, Simpson the prosecutor, who caused the arrest to be made, was ordered to be committed to the Tower; and afterwards the warden refusing to execute the writ of habeas corpus, and the delivery of Sir Thomas being denied, was likewise committed to the Tower; though on his agreeing to deliver up Sir Thomas, upon a new warrant for a new writ of habeas corpus, and making submission to the House, he was discharged: this affair taking up some time, the House entered into several debates touching their privilege, and how the debt of the party might be satisfied; which produced three questions: First, Whether Sir Thomas Shirley should have privilege? Secondly, Whether presently, or to be deferred? And, Thirdly, Whether the House should petition the King for some course for securing the debt of the party, according to former precedents, and saving harmless the warden of the Fleet? All which questions were resolved; and a bill was brought in to secure Simpson's debt, &c. which also occasioned the statute 1 Jac. 1. c. 13, for relief of plaintiffs in writs of execution, where the defendants in such writs are arrested, and set at liberty by privilege of Parliament; by which a fresh prosecution and new execution may be had against them when that privilege ceases. Lex Constitution. 141. And anno 19 Jac. I. one Johnson, a servant to Sir James Whitlock, a member of the House of Commons, was arrested by two bailiffs; who being told Sir James Whitlock was a Parliament-man, answered, that they had known greater men's servants than his taken from their masters in time of Parliament: and this appearing, the two bailiffs were sentenced to ask pardon of the House and Sir James Whitlock, on their knees; that they should both ride on one horse bare backed, back to back, from Westminster to the Exchange, with papers on their breasts signifying their offence; all which was to be executed presently, sedente curiâ. Lex Const. 141.

In action of debt on a bond, conditioned that B. B. should render himself at such a day and place to an arrest; defendant pleaded, that by privilege of Parliament, the members, &c. and their servants ought not to be arrested by the space of forty days before the sitting of the Parliament, nor during the session, nor forty days afterwards; and that B. B. was at that time servant to such a member of Parliament, so as he could not render himself to be arrested: upon demurrer to this plea, it was adjudged ill, because he might have rendered himself at the time and place; but then it would be at their peril if he was arrested. 1 Brownl. 81.

The only way by which Courts of justice could anciently take cognizance of privilege of Parliament was by writ of privilege, in the nature of a supersedeas, to deliver the party out of custody when arrested in a civil suit. Dyer 59: 4 Pryn. Brev. Parl. 757. For when a letter was written by the Speaker to the Judges to stay proceedings against a privileged person, they rejected it as contrary to their oath of office. Latch. 58, 150: Noy 83. But since the stat. 12 W. 3. c. 3, which enacts, that no privileged person shall be subject to arrest or imprisonment, it hath been held, that such arrest is irregular ab initio, and that the party may be discharged upon motion. Stra. 989. It is to be observed, that there is no precedent of any such writ of privilege, but only in civil suits: and that the stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 13, and that of King William (which remedy some inconveniences arising from privilege of Parliament) speak only of civil actions. And therefore the claim of privilege hath been usually guarded with an exception as to the case of indictable crimes; or as it hath been frequently expressed of treason, felony, and breach (or surety) of the peace. See 4 Inst. 25. Whereby it seems to have been understood, that no privilege was allowable to the members, their families, or servants, in any crime whatsoever; for all crimes are treated by the law as being contra pacem domini regis: and instances have not been wanting wherein privileged persons have been convicted of misdemeanors; and committed or prosecuted to outlawry, even in the middle of a session; which proceeding has afterwards received the sanction and approbation of Parliament. Mic. 16 E. 4, in Scac: Ld. Raym. 1461: Comm. Journ. 1726. To which may be added, that in the year 1763, the case of writing and publishing seditious libels was resolved, by both Houses, not to be entitled to privilege; and that the reasons upon which that case proceeded extended equally to every indictable offence. It is not a little remarkable, that the contrary position had been determined, a short time before, by the Court of Common Pleas. A circumstance which serves to shew that the House, where the case of one of their own members and the dignity of the House were concerned, made a determination more consonant to the rules of general municipal justice, and more favourable to political subordination, than one of the Courts of law in Westminster-Hall. See 2 Wils. 251: Comm. Journ. 24 Nov: Lords Journ. & Protest, 29 Nov. 1763.

The chief, therefore, if not the only, privilege of Parliament in criminal cases, seems to be the right of each House to receive immediate information of the imprisonment or detention of any member, with the reason for which he is detained; a practice that is daily used upon the slightest military accusations, preparatory to a trial by a Court Martial; and which is recognized by the several temporary statutes for suspending the Habeas Corpus act (particularly stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 54;) whereby it is provided, that no member of either House shall be detained, till the matter of which he stands suspected be first communicated to the House of which he is a member, and the consent of the said House obtained for his commitment or detaining. But yet the usage has uniformly been ever since the Revolution, that the communication has been subsequent to the arrest. 1 Comm. c. 2.

V. 1. One very ancient privilege of Peers, considered as members of Parliament, is that declared by the charter of the Forest, (cap. 11,) confirmed in Parliament, 9 H. 3; viz. That every Lord, spiritual or temporal, summoned to Parliament, and passing through the King's forests, may, both in going and returning, kill one or two of the King's deer without warrant; in view of the forester, if he be present, or on blowing a horn, if he be absent; that he may not seem to take the King's venison by stealth. 1 Comm. c. 2.

In the next place they have a right to be attended, and constantly are, by the Judges of the Courts of K. B. and C. P. and such Barons of the Exchequer as are of the degree of the coif, or have been made serjeants at law; as likewise by the King's learned Counsel being serjeants, and by the Masters of the Court of Chancery; for their advice in point of law, and for the greater dignity of their proceedings. [The Lord Chancellor is usually the Speaker of the House.] The Secretaries of State, with the Attorney and Solicitor General, were also used to attend the House of Peers, and have to this day (together with the Judges, &c.) their regular writs of summons, issued out at the beginning of every Parliament, ad tractandum & consilium impendendum, though not ad consentiendum; but whenever, of late years, they have been members of the House of Commons, their attendance here hath fallen into disuse. See stat. 31 H. 8. c. 10: Moor 551: 4 Inst. 4, 48: Hale of Parl. 140. On account of this attendance there are several resolutions, before the Restoration, declaring the Attorney General incapable of sitting among the Commons. See post. VI. (B) 2. Sir Henry Finch, member for the University of Oxford, afterwards Lord Nottingham, and Chancellor, was the first Attorney-General who enjoyed that privilege. Sim. 28.

Another privilege is, that every Peer, by licence obtained from the King, may make another Lord of Parliament his proxy, to vote for him in his absence. Seld. Baronage, p. 1. c. 1. A privilege which a member of the other House can by no means have; as he is himself but [illegible] people. 4 Inst. 12. This licence has long ceased in Ireland; but the proxies in the English House of Lords are still entered, in Latin, ex licentiâ regis. This created a doubt in Nov. 1788, whether the proxies in that Parliament were legal, on account of the King's illness. 1 Ld. Mountm. 342. But it seems now to be so much a mere form, that the licence may be presumed. Proxies cannot be used in a committee. Ib. 106. A proxy cannot sign a protest in England; but he can in Ireland. 2 Ld. Montm. 191. The order that no Lord should have more than two proxies, (i. e. be a proxy for more than two absent Lords,) was made anno 2 Car. 1. because the Duke of Buckingham had no less than fourteen. 1 Rushw. 269. There is an instance, in Wight 50, where a proxy is called litera attornatûs ad Parliamentum; which it is in effect. The Peer who has the proxy is always called, in Latin, procurator. If a Peer, after appointing a proxy, appears personally in Parliament, his proxy is revoked and annulled. 4 Inst. 13. By the orders of the House no proxy shall vote upon a question of "guilty or not guilty:" and a spiritual Lord shall only be proxy for a spiritual Lord, and a temporal Lord for a temporal. Two or more Peers may be proxy for one absent Peer; but Coke is of opinion, that they cannot vote, unless they all concur. 4 Inst. 12: 1 Woodd 41.

Each Peer has also a right, by leave of the House, when a vote passes contrary to his sentiments, to enter his dissent on the Journals of the House with the reasons for such dissent, which is usually styled his Protest. 1 Comm. c. 2. Lord Clarendon relates, that the first instances stances of protests, with reasons, in England were in 1641; before which time they usually only set down their names as dissentient to the vote. The first regular protest in Ireland was in 1662. 1 Ld. Mountm. 402.

All bills likewise that may, in their consequences, any way affect the right of the peerage, are by the custom of Parliament to have their first rise and beginning in the House of Peers; and to suffer no changes or amendments in the House of Commons.

There is also one statute peculiarly relative to the House of Lords, which regulates the election of the sixteen representative Peers of North Britain, in consequence of the twenty-second and twenty-third articles of the Union; and for that purpose prescribes the oaths, &c. to be taken by the electors; directs the mode of balloting; prohibits the Peers electing from being attended in an unusual manner; and expressly provides, that no other matter shall be treated of in that assembly, save only the election, on pain of incurring a præmunire. Stat. 6 Ann. c. 23.

2. Considered in its judicial capacity, the House of Peers is the supreme Court of judicature in the kingdom; having at present no original jurisdiction over causes, but only upon appeals and writs of error; to rectify any injustice or mistake of the law committed by the Courts below. But this House has original criminal jurisdiction in the cases of impeachment by the Commons, and of the trial of Peers. See this Dictionary under these titles: and see ante IV. 1.

To this authority, this august tribunal succeeded of course upon the dissolution of the Aula Regia; for as the Barons of Parliament were constituent members of that Court, and the rest of its jurisdiction was dealt out to other tribunals, over which the great officers who accompanied those barons were respectively delegated to preside; it followed, that the right of receiving appeals, and superintending all other jurisdictions, still remained in the residue of that noble assembly, from which every other great Court was derived. They are, therefore, in all causes the last resort, from whose judgment no further appeal is permitted; but every subordinate tribunal must conform to their determinations; the law reposing an entire confidence in the honour and conscience of the noble persons who compose this important assembly, that (if possible) they will make themselves masters of those questions, upon which they undertake to decide; and in all dubious cases refer themselves to the opinions of the Judges, who are summoned by writ to advise them; since upon their decision all property must finally depend. 3 Comm. c. 4. p 57.

Hitherto also Blackstone refers the tribunal established by stat. 14 E. 3. c. 5, consisting (though now out of use) of one prelate, two earls, and two barons, who are to be chosen at every new Parliament, to hear complaints of grievances and delays of justice in the King's Courts; and (with the advice of the Chancellor, Treasurer and Justices of both benches) to give directions for remedying those inconveniences in the Courts below. This Committee seems to have been established, lest there should be a defect of justice, for want of a supreme Court of appeal, during any long intermission or recess of Parliament; for the statute further directs, "that if the difficulty be so great that it may not well be determined, without assent of Parliament, it shall be brought by the said prelate, earls, and barons unto the next Parliament, who shall finally determine the same." 3 Comm. 58.

VI. (A) As the House of Lords seem to be politically constituted, for the support of the rights of the Crown; so the province of the House of Commons is to stand for the preservation of the People's liberties. The Commons, in making and repealing laws, have equal power with the Lords; and for laying taxes on the Subject, the bill is to begin in the House of Commons. And as formerly the laying and levying of new taxes have caused rebellions and commotions, this has occasioned, (particularly anno 9 E. 3,) when a motion has been made for a subsidy of a new kind, that the Commons have desired a conference with those of their several counties and places, whom they have represented, before they have treated of any such matters. 4 Inst. 34.

It is the ancient indisputable privilege and right of the House of Commons, that all grants of subsidies or parliamentary aids, do begin in their House, and are first bestowed by them; although their grants are not effectual, to all intents and purposes, until they have the assent of the other two branches of the Legislature. 4 Inst. 29. The general reason given, for this exclusive privilege of the House of Commons, is, that the supplies are raised upon the body of the people, and therefore it is proper that they alone should have the right of taxing themselves. This reason would be unanswerable if the Commons taxed none but themselves; but it is notorious, that a very large share of property is in the possession of the House of Lords; that this property is equally taxable, and taxed, as that of the Commons; and therefore the Commons not being the sole persons taxed, this cannot be the reason of their having the sole right of raising and modelling the supply. The true reason, arising from the spirit of our Constitution, seems to be this; the Lords being a permanent hereditary body, created at pleasure by the King, are supposed more liable to be influenced by the Crown, and when once influenced, to continue so, than the Commons, who are a temporary elective body, freely chosen by the people; it would therefore be extremely dangerous to give the Lords any power of framing new taxes for the subject; it is sufficient that they have a power of rejecting, if they think the Commons too lavish or improvident in their grants. But, so reasonably jealous are the Commons of this valuable privilege, that herein they will not suffer the other House to exert any power, except that of rejecting. They will not permit the least alteration or amendment to be made by the Lords to the mode of taxing the people by a money bill; under which appellation are included all bills by which money is directed to be raised upon the Subject, for any purpose, or in any shape whatsoever; either for the exigencies of Government, and collected from the kingdom in general, as the land-tax; or for private benefit, and collected in any particular district, as by turnpikes, parish rates, and the like. This rule is even extended to all bills for canals, paving, provision for the poor, and to every bill in which tolls, rates, or duties are ordered to be collected; and also to all bills in which pecuniary penalties and fines are imposed for offences.

offences. 3 Hats. 110. But perhaps it is carried beyond its original spirit and intent, when the money raised is not granted to the Crown. Yet Sir Matthew Hale mentions one case, founded on the practice of Parliament in the reign of Henry VI. wherein he thinks the Lords may alter a money bill; and that is, if the Commons grant a tax, as that of tonnage and poundage, for four years; and the Lords alter it to a less time, as for two years; here, he says, the bill need not be sent back to the Commons for their concurrence, but may receive the royal assent without farther ceremony; for the alteration of the Lords is consistent with the grant of the Commons. See Hale on Parliaments, 65, 6: Year-Book, 33 Hen. 6, 17. But such an experiment will hardly be repeated by the Lords, under the present improved idea of the privilege of the House of Commons; and, in any case where a money bill is remanded to the Commons, all amendments in the mode of taxation are sure to be rejected. And, even if the Commons desire to agree with the amendment, the form is to reject the bill so amended by the Lords, and to bring in a new bill containing those amendments, solely for the purpose of preserving the privileges of the Commons. See post. VII. Upon the application of this rule, there have been many warm contests between the Lords and Commons, in which the latter seem always to have prevailed. See many conferences collected by Mr. Hatsel, in his Appendix to the third volume, and particularly in Appendix D; the conference of 20 and 22 April 1671; the general question is debated with infinite ability on both sides, but particularly on the part of the Commons, in an argument, drawn up by Sir Heneage Finch, then Attorney General; and who there answers the case alluded to by Hale from the Year-Book.

VI. (B) 1. In the election of knights, citizens, and burgesses, to represent the counties, cities, and boroughs of the kingdom, consists the exercise of the democratical part of the British Constitution: the only true Sovereignty of the People being shewn in their choice of their representatives. This choice is, therefore, a matter of such high importance, to the preservation of rational freedom, that the laws have very strictly guarded against any usurpation or abuse of this power by many salutary provisions; which shall be here considered according to the division of the subject made at the beginning of this article.

The true reason of requiring any qualification, with regard to property in voters is, to exclude such persons as are in so mean a situation, that they are esteemed to have no will of their own. If these persons had votes, they would be tempted to dispose of them under some undue influence or other. This would give a great, an artful, or wealthy man a larger share in elections than is consistent with general liberty. If it were probable that every man would give his vote freely, and without influence of any kind, then, upon the true theory and genuine principles of liberty, every member of the community, however poor, should have a vote; in electing those delegates, to whose charge is committed the disposal of his property, his liberty, his life. But since that can hardly be expected in persons of indigent fortunes, or such as are under the immediate dominion of others, all popular States have been obliged to establish certain qualifications, whereby some who are suspected to have no will of their own, are excluded from voting; in order to set other individuals, whose wills may be supposed independent, more thoroughly upon a level with each other. 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 171.

This constitution of suffrages is framed upon the wisest principle; steering between the two extremes of too much regard to property on the one hand, or to mere numbers on the other. Only such persons are entirely excluded from being electors as can have no will of their own; there is hardly a free agent to be found who is not, [or may not if he pleases,] be entitled to a vote in some place or other of the kingdom. Nor is comparative wealth or property entirely disregarded in elections; for though the richest man has only one vote at one place, yet if his property be at all diffused, he has probably a right to vote at more places than one, and therefore has many representatives. This, says Blackstone, is the spirit of our Constitution; not that it is, in fact, quite so perfect as described; for, he candidly adds, if any alteration might be wished or suggested in the present frame of Parliaments, it should be in favour of a more complete representation of the people. 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 171. Perhaps this has been already, in some degree, accomplished; and as one step towards it, and more particularly in order to preserve the right of election as much as possible from being made the instrument of undue influence, it is enacted by stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 41, that no person employed in managing or collecting the duty of excise, customs, stamps, salt, windows, or houses, or the revenue of the post-office, shall vote at any election; and if such person presumes to vote, he shall forfeit 100*l*. This act does not extend to freehold offices granted by letters patent.

(a). To consider, therefore, first, the qualifications of Electors of Knights of the Shire; or as they are more commonly termed, Members for the Counties.

By stats. 8 H. 6. c. 7: 10 H. 6. c. 2; (amended by stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 58, which made the residence of the electors and the elected in their respective counties, cities, and boroughs no longer necessary;) the knights of the shire shall be chosen by people, whereof every man shall have freehold, to the value of 40*s*. by the year within the county; which, by subsequent statutes, is to be clear of all charges and deductions, except parliamentary and parochial taxes.

The stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 25, requires, that every freeholder shall take an oath that he is a freeholder of the county, and has freehold lands or hereditaments of the yearly value of 40*s*. lying at such a place, within the said county, and that he hath not before polled at the election.

The voter's evidence of the value must, therefore, be received at the poll; but it is not conclusive, and may be contradicted by other evidence, upon a scrutiny, or before a committee. The stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 25, expressly declares, that public taxes are not to be deemed charges payable out of the estate; and therefore it might be thought to be the plain and obvious construction of the act, that wherever a freeholder has an estate which would yield him 40*s*. before these taxes are paid, or for which he would receive a rent of 40*s*. if he paid the taxes himself, he would have a right to vote: yet an election-committee of the House of Commons

Commons [see post VI. (B) 3.] has decided, that where a tenant paid a rent, less than 40*s*. but paid parochial taxes, which, added to the rent, amounted to more than 40*s*. the landlord had no right to vote. 2 Lud. 475. Two committees have held that the interest of a mortgage is a charge, which, if it reduces the value under 40*s*. takes away the vote; though there is an intermediate decision of a committee in which the contrary was held.

The Knights of Shires are the representatives of the landholders or landed interest of the kingdom; their electors must therefore have estates in lands or tenements within the county represented; these estates must be freehold, that is, for term of life at least; because beneficial leases for long terms of years were not in use at the making of these statutes; and copyholders were then little better than villeins, absolutely dependent on their lords. This freehold must be of 40*s*. annual value; because that sum would, at the time of passing the statutes, with proper industry, furnish all the necessaries of life, and render the freeholder, if he pleased, an independent man. 1 Comm. 172. So that it should seem the first step towards a parliamentary reform, would be rather to restrain, than enlarge, the qualifications of electors; 40*s*. per ann. in the time of Hen. 6, being equal to 20*l*. or more, of the present day. A consideration not much adverted to, at least not brought forward, by those who seem very anxious to new-model Parliament, according to its antient constitution.

The other less important qualifications of the electors for counties, in England and Wales, may be collected from the following statutes, viz. stats. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 25: 10 Ann. c. 23: 2 Geo. 2. c. 24: 18 Geo. 2. c. 18: 19 Geo. 2. c. 28: 31 Geo. 2. c. 14: 3 Geo. 3. c. 24: 20 Geo. 3. c. 17: and 30 Geo. 3. c. 35. These statutes direct;

That no person under twenty-one years of age, shall be capable of voting for any member. This extends to all sorts of members, as well for boroughs as counties, as does also the next, viz.

That no person convicted of perjury, shall be capable of voting in any election.

That no person shall vote in right of any freehold, granted to him fraudulently, to qualify him to vote. Fraudulent grants are such as contain an agreement to re-convey, or to defeat the estate granted; which agreements are made void, and the estate is absolutely vested in the person to whom it is so granted. And every person who shall prepare or execute such conveyance, or who shall give his vote under it, shall forfeit 40*l*. Stat. 10 Ann. c. 23. § 1.

To guard the better against such frauds, it is farther provided, that every voter shall have been in the actual possession or receipt of the profits of his freehold, to his own use, for twelve calendar months before; except it came to him by descent, marriage, marriage-settlement, will, or promotion to a benefice or office.

That no person shall vote, in respect of an annuity or rent-charge, unless registered with the clerk of the peace twelve calendar months before. Such annuity or rent-charge to be issuing out of a freehold estate; and if it accrues or devolves, by operation of law, within a year before the election, a certificate of it to be entered with the clerk of the peace, before the first day of the election. Stat. 3 Geo. 3. c. 24: Heyw. 145.

That in mortgaged or trust-estates, the person in possession, under the above-mentioned restrictions, shall have the vote.

That only one person shall be admitted to vote for any one house or tenement; to prevent the splitting of freeholds, and multiplying votes for election purposes. But this does not extend to cases which arise from operation of law as devises, descents, &c. As if an estate should descend to any number of females, the husband of each would have a right to vote, if his interest amounted to 40*s*. a year. And, by stat. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. § 12, a husband may vote for his wife's right of dower, without an actual assignment of it by metes and bounds. It may happen that two or more votes may be given, successively, for the same estate or interest, at the same election; as where a freeholder votes and dies, his heir or devisee may afterwards vote at the same election. And it seems to be generally true, that where no length of possession is required, by any act of Parliament, the elector may be admitted to vote, though his right accrued since the commencement of the election. 1 Dougl. 272: 2 Lud. 427.

That no estate shall qualify a voter, unless the estate has been, at all events, assessed to some land-tax aid for at least twelve months next before the election; and, for six months before the election, either in the name of the voter, or his tenant, or of the tenant actually occupying the same; but if he has acquired it by marriage, descent, or other operation of law, in that case it must have been assessed to the land-tax, within two years before the election, either in the name of the predecessor, or person through whom the voter derives his title, or in the name of the tenants of such person, or in the name of the tenant actually occupying the same. And see stat. 30 Geo 3. c. 35; by which it is provided, that a person may vote for lands, &c. assessed for six months in his own (i. e. the voter's) name, or for lands coming by descent, &c. assessed within two years in the name of his predecessor, &c. though the name of the tenant is not mentioned. And a person may vote for lands, assessed for six months in the name of the actual tenant, though the name of the voter, or his predecessor, &c. is not mentioned. The statutes do not extend to fee-farm rents, (duly registered and issuing out of assessed lands,) chambers in Inns of Courts, or seats belonging to public offices, which are not usually assessed to the land-tax:

That no tenant by copy of Court-roll shall be permitted to vote as a freeholder. See title Copyhold.

(b). The Electors of Citizens and Burgesses are supposed to be the mercantile part, or trading interest, of the kingdom. But as trade is of a fluctuating nature, and seldom long fixed in a place, it was formerly left to the Crown to summon, pro re natâ, the most flourishing towns to send representatives to Parliament. So that as towns increased in trade, and grew populous, they were admitted to a share in the Legislature. But the deserted boroughs continued to be summoned, as well as those to whom their trade and inhabitants were transferred; except a few, which petitioned to be eased of the expence, then usual, of maintaining their members; 4*s*. a day being allowed for a knight of the shire, and 2*s*. for a citizen or burgess; which was the rate of wages established in the reign of Edward III. 4 Inst. 16. Hence the members for boroughs now bear above a quadruple proportion to those for counties; and the number of parliamentliament-men is increased since Fortescue's time, in the reign of Henry VI. from 300 to upwards of 500, exclusive of those for Scotland. The Universities were in general not empowered to send burgesses to Parliament; though once in 28 E. 1, when a Parliament was summoned to consider the King's right to Scotland, there were issued writs which required the University of Oxford to send up four or five, and that of Cambridge two or three, of their most discreet and learned lawyers for that purpose. Prynne Parl. Writs, i. 345. But it was King James I, who indulged them with the permanent privilege, to send constantly two of their own body, to serve for those students, who, though useful members of the community, were neither concerned in the landed nor the trading interest; and to protect, in the Legislature, the rights of the Republic of Letters. 1 Comm. c. 2. p. 174.

Mr Christian, in his note on the above passage, quotes Prynne, to shew that the wages formerly given to members of Parliament had no other origin than that principle of natural equity and justice, qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus. Mr. Christian suggests, that representation, at the first, was nothing more than the attendance of part of a number who were all individually bound to attend, and where the attendance of the rest was dispensed with: and as all were under the same obligation to render this service, and it was left to themselves to determine which of them should undertake it, it became equitable, that all should contribute to the expence and inconvenience incurred. Prynne says, the first writs de expensis militum, &c. are coeval with our Kings' first writs of summons to elect and send knights, citizens, and burgesses to Parliament, viz. anno 49 Hen. 3; before which there are no memorials of either of those writs. These expences were reduced to the certainty abovementioned, of 2*s.* and 4*s. per* day, in the 16th of E. II; though there are some instances where a less sum was allowed; and even one in 3 E. 4, 1463, where Sir John Strange, the member for Dunwich, agreed to take a cade and half a barrel of herrings as a composition for his wages. Glanv. Rep. Pref. p. 23.

Andrew Marvell, member for Hull, in the Parliament after the Restoration, was, it is said, the last member who received these wages; and they were formerly of so much consequence, that many boroughs petitioned to be excused from sending members to Parliament, on account of the expence. Pryn. on 4 Inst. 32. And from 33 E. 3, uniformly through the five succeeding reigns, the Sheriff of Lancashire returned, that there were no cities or boroughs in his county that ought or were used, or could, on account of their poverty, send any citizens or burgesses to Parliament. 1 Comm. c. 174, in n.

From these exemptions, and from new creations, by royal charter, which commenced in the reign of Ed. IV; who, in the 17th year of his reign, granted to the borough of Wenlock the right of sending one burgess to Parliament, Sim. 97; the number of the members of the House of Commons perpetually varied. Charles II. in the 29th year of his reign, granted, by his charter, to Newark, the privilege of sending representatives to Parliament; and this was the last time that this prerogative of the Crown was exercised. 1 Dougl. El. 69. Since the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII. the number of the representatives of the Commons is nearly doubled; for in his first Parliament the House consisted only of 298 members: it does not appear that any place has lost its right, of sending representatives to Parliament, since that time; and 260 have since been added by act of Parliament, or by the King's charter, either creating new, or reviving old, boroughs. The Legislature added, 27 for Wales, by stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 26; 4 for the county and city of Chester, by stat. 34 Hen. 8. c. 13; 4 for the county and city of Durham, by stat. 25 Car. 2. c. 9; and 45 for Scotland, by the act of union; in all 80; and 180 have been added by charter.

The number of the House of Commons may be stated thus:

In the first Parliament of Hen. VIII.		298	Memb.
Created since by statute		80	558
Created or restored by charter, viz. by Hen. VIII. 4: by Ed. VI. 48: Mary, 21: Eliz. 60: Jac. I. 27: Car. I. 18: Car. II. 2.	180	180

The right of election in boroughs is various; depending entirely on the several charters, customs, and constitutions of the respective places, which have occasioned infinite disputes. In some measure to prevent this evil, the stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 7, enacted, that the determination of the House of Commons, (the old judicature in cases of contested elections,) as to the right of election, should bind the returning officer, in taking the poll. That statute was enlarged by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 24; by the 4th section of which the last determination of the House of Commons was declared to be final. The statutes which established the modern judicature of election-committees, did not transfer to them the same power of specially determining on the right of election; but by stats. 28 Geo. 3. c. 52. § 25—30: 34 Geo. 3. c. 83, such committees are invested with the power of binding, by their decision, the right of election; and of appointing a returning officer where the right is litigated; subject to an appeal, by petition to the House within fourteen days after the commencement of the next sessions, and not otherwise. Such petition to be referred to another committee of the House, to be chosen according to the regulations of the said statutes. The determination of such appellate committee, (or of the first committee, if not appealed against,) is now, therefore, conclusive in all subsequent elections. See post. 3.

By stat. 3 Geo. 3. c 15, no freeman of any city or borough (other than such as claim by birth, marriage, or servitude) shall be entitled to vote therein, unless he hath been admitted to his freedom twelve calendar months before. This is called the Durham Act, and it was occasioned by the Corporation of Durham having, upon the eve of an election, in order to serve one of the candidates, admitted 215 honorary freemen. Some corporations have the power of admitting honorary freemen, viz. persons who, without any previous claim or pretension, are admitted to all the franchises of the corporation. The Durham Act is confined to persons of that description solely. It has frequently been contended, that if honorary freemen are created for the occasion, that is, merely for an election purpose, it is a fraud upon the rights of election; and that, by the Common Law, as in other cases of fraud, the admission and all the consequences would be null and void; that within the year, by the statute, fraud was presumed; but that after that time, time, the statute left the necessity of proving it upon those who imputed it. But in the Bedford case, the committee were clearly of opinion, that the objection of occasionality did not lie against freemen made above a year before the election. 2 Dougl. El. 91. As to the right of election in the borough of New Shoreham, see stat. 11 Geo. 3. c. 55; and in the city of Coventry, stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 54.

No length of possession is required from voters in burgage-tenure boroughs. There are about 29 burgage-tenure boroughs in England. 1 Dougl. 224. In these the right of voting is annexed to some tenement, house, or spot of ground, upon which a house in antient times has stood. Any number of these burgage-tenure estates may be purchased by one person, which, at any time before a contested election, may be conveyed to so many of his friends, who would each in consequence have a right to vote.

By stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 100, it is enacted, that in boroughs, where the householders or inhabitants of any description claim to elect, no person shall have a right to vote as such inhabitant, unless he has actually been resident in the borough, six months previous to the day on which he tenders his vote.

By stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 20, the statutes for preventing fraudulent conveyances to multiply votes on electing knights of shires, (see ante a,) are made to extend to lands or tenements, for which any persons shall vote for the election of members to serve in Parliament for any city or town, that is a county of itself; and if any person votes at such election as a freeholder, not having his estate a year before, he is liable to the penalties imposed on unqualified voters at county elections.

It has been already observed, that the question who are or ought to be the electors in boroughs, hath very much exercised the British House of Commons: Anno 22 Jac. 1, it was resolved, that where there is no charter or custom to the contrary, the election in boroughs is to be made by all the householders, and not freeholders only: and in a question whether the Commons, or the capital burgesses of a certain borough in Lincolnshire, were the electors of members of Parliament, anno 4 Car. 1, it was agreed, that the election of burgesses, in all boroughs, did of common right belong to the commoners; and that nothing could take it from them but a prescription and constant usage beyond the memory of man. It has been holden, that the commonalties of cities and burghs are only the ordinary and lower sort of citizens, burgesses or freemen; and that the right of election of burgesses to Parliament in all boroughs, belongs to the commoners, viz. the ordinary burgesses or freemen; and not the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council; though the meaning of the words communitates civitatum & burgorum, has always signified, rightly understood, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, where they were to be found; or the steward or bailiff, and capital burgesses, or the governing parts of cities and towns, by what persons soever they were governed, or titles called. Dict.

VI. (B) 2. As to the qualifications of persons to be Elected members of the House of Commons, some of these depend upon the law and custom of Parliament, declared by the House of Commons. 4 Inst. 47, 8. Others upon certain statutes. And from these it appears,

That they must not be aliens born, or minors.

They must not be any of the twelve Judges, because they sit in the Lords' House. But persons who have judicial places in the other Courts, ecclesiastical or civil, are eligible. 4 Inst. 47. Nor of the Clergy; the reason assigned for which is, that they might sit in the convocation. Nor persons attainted of treason or felony, for they are unfit to sit any where. 4 Inst. 47: 1 Comm. 175.

With respect to the Clergy, their right or capacity of sitting in Parliament seems yet disputable; and Mr. Christian, in his notes on this passage of the Commentaries, brings many arguments and authorities to prove, that as they are now allowed to be electors, in right of their glebe, they are certainly eligible as members. In the case of Newport, A. D. 1785, it was determined, by an election-committee, that a gentleman regularly admitted to deacon's orders was capable of being elected. 2 Lud. 269. And in the time of Richard II. there is a memorable instance of a clergyman, who signalized himself in the House of Commons, Sir Thomas Haxey, clerk. He brought in a bill, which passed the Commons, to lessen the expences of the King, and to remove bishops! and ladies from the Court; a proceeding which was then considered as treasonable. See Rot. Parl. 20 R. 2. p. 16, 23. Mr. Christian adds, that the reason why the Clergy, having no other lands than their glebes, never voted nor were elected in ancient times, seems not in any degree to depend either upon taxation or the convocation, but to be owing solely to the tenure of their glebe land, viz. Frankalmoign; which exempted them from attendance on the Courts of the King, Lords, and Sheriffs. 2 Comm. 101. And even if they held other lands, holy orders exempted them by the Common Law from secular services and temporal offices; and this was confirmed by Magna Charta, and the statute of Marlbridge. 2 Inst. 3, 121. This was an exemption, and not an exclusion; but what are now important rights were originally considered as duties and burdens; it is not, therefore, strange that the Clergy should avail themselves of this privilege, till the dis-user become regarded as an incapacity. 1 Comm. 175, n.

To this may be added, that as attendance of this nature is for the service of the public, the whole nation has such an interest therein, that the King cannot grant an exemption to any person from being elected as a knight, citizen, or burgess in Parliament; and for that elections ought to be free. 29 Hen. 6. And persons who are eligible might formerly in all cases, and may still in some, be compelled to serve in Parliament against their consent. See 1 Dougl. El. Ca. 284. See post, next page.

Sheriffs of counties, and mayors and bailiffs of boroughs, are not eligible in their respective jurisdictions, as being returning officers. Bro. Abr. title Parliament 7: Hal of Parl. 114. But Sheriffs of one county are eligible to be knights of another. Whitelock of Parl. ch. 99, 100, 101.

Thus it has been decided, that the Sheriff of Berkshire could not be elected for Abingdon, a borough within that county. 1 Dougl. El. Ca. 419. But a Sheriff of Hampshire may be elected for the town of Southampton within that county; because Southampton is a county of itself, itself, and is as independent of Hampshire as of any other county. 4 Doug. 87. It seems that the expression, that Sheriffs of one county are eligible to be knights of another, is too confined; as they may be also members for any city or borough not in the county for which they are Sheriffs.

In strictness, all members ought to have been inhabitants of the places for which they are chosen. Stats. 1 Hen. 5. c. 1: 23 Hen. 6. c. 15; but this having been long disregarded, was at length entirely repealed, as has already been mentioned, by stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 58.

No persons concerned in the management of any duties or taxes, created since 1692, (except the commissioners of the treasury; stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 7;) nor any of the officers following, viz. commissioners of prizes, transports, sick and wounded, wine licences, navy and victualling; secretaries, or receivers of prizes; comptrollers of the army accounts; agents for regiments; governors of plantations, and their deputies; officers of Minorca or Gibraltar; officers of the excise and customs; clerks or deputies in the several offices of the treasury, exchequer, navy, victualling, admiralty, pay of the army or navy, secretaries of state, salt, stamps, appeals, wine-licences, hackney-coaches, hawkers, and pedlars; nor any persons that hold any new office or place of profit under the Crown since 1705; are capable of being elected or sitting as members. See stats. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 2; 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 10; 6 Ann. c. 7: 15 Geo. 2. c. 22

All the persons enumerated above are utterly incapable of sitting in the House of Commons, whilst they continue in their respective situations. But by stat. 15 Geo. 2. c. 22. § 3. the treasurer or comptroller of the navy, the secretaries of the treasury, the secretary to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, secretaries of the Admiralty, under-secretary to any of the secretaries of state, deputy pay-master of the army, and persons having an office or employment for life, or during good behaviour, are expressly excepted from the prohibition, and are therefore eligible.

The office or trust of a member of Parliament cannot be resigned; and every member is compellable to discharge the duties of it, unless he can shew such cause as the House, in its discretion, will think a sufficient excuse for his non-attendance, upon a call of the House; the only way, therefore, of vacating a seat, is by accepting a situation, in consequence of which the law declares his seat vacant. So where members wish to vacate their seats and retire from Parliament, it is now usual for the Crown to grant them the office of the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds. Mr. Hatsel observes, "that the practice of accepting this nominal office, which began (he believes) only about the year 1750, has been now so long acquiesced in, from its convenience to all parties, that it would be ridiculous to state any doubt about the legality of such a proceeding; otherwise (he believes) it would be found very difficult, from the form of these appointments, to shew that it is an office of profit under the Crown." 2 Hats. 41. It is observable, that the words of the act are, "office, or place of profit;" perhaps, therefore, it is sufficient if the office is new, though not of profit, for in another part of the act the words office of profit are used: the distinction may seem trifling, but for a good purpose it may be applicable. This mode of vacating a seat has been repeatedly denied to such members as, for any offences, are liable to expulsion from Parliament: and would thus wish to avoid the disgrace of such expulsion.

No person having a pension under the Crown during pleasure, or for any term of years, is capable of being elected or sitting. Stats. 6 Ann. c. 7: 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 56.

If any member accepts an office of profit under the Crown, which was in existence prior to 1705, except an officer in the army or navy accepting a new commission, his seat is void; but such member is capable of being re-elected. Stat. 6 Ann. c. 7. § 26.

All knights of the shire shall be actual knights, or such notable esquires and gentlemen as have estates sufficient to be knights, and by no means of the degree of yeomen. Stat. 23 Hen. 6. c. 15. This by the stat. de militibus, 1 E. 2, was 20*l*. a year, and put in force against those who had 40*l*. a year till 16 Car. 1. c. 16. But it is now reduced to a certainty, by ordaining,

That every Knight of a Shire shall have a clear estate of freehold or copyhold, or mortgage, if the mortgagee has been seven years in possession, to the value of 600*l*. per annum; and every Citizen and Burgess to the value of 300*l*; except the eldest sons of Peers, and of persons qualified to be knights of shires, and except the members for the two Universities." Stat. 9 Ann. c. 5. This somewhat balances the ascendant which the boroughs have gained over the counties, by obliging the trading interest to make choice of landed men; and of this qualification the member must make oath, and give in the particulars in writing, at the time of his taking his seat.

By stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 45, no contractor with the officers of government, or with any other person for the service of the public, shall be capable of being elected, or of sitting in the House, as long as he holds any such contract, or derives any benefit from it. But this does not extend to contracts with corporations, or with companies, which then consisted of ten partners; or to any person to whom the interest of such a contract shall accrue by marriage or operation of law, for the first twelve months. And if any person disqualified by such a contract shall sit in the House, he shall forfeit 500*l*. for every day; and if any person who engages in a contract with government admits any member of Parliament to a share of it, he shall forfeit 500*l*. to the prosecutor.

With the exception of these standing restrictions and disqualifications, every Subject of the realm is eligible of common right; though there are instances wherein persons, in particular circumstances, have forfeited that common right, and have been declared ineligible for that Parliament, by a vote of the House of Commons; (see ante;) or for ever, by an act of the Legislature. Stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 28. But it was an unconstitutional prohibition, which was grounded on an ordinance of the House of Lords, and inserted in the King's writs, for the Parliaments holden at Coventry, 6 Henry 4, that no apprentice or other man of the law should be elected a knight of the shire therein. 4 Inst. 10, 48: Prynne's Plea for Lords 379: 2 Whitelocke 359, 368: Prynne on 4 Inst. 13. In return for which our law books and historians have branded this Parliament with the name of Parliamentum indoctum, or the lack-learning Parliament. And Sir E. Coke observes, with some spleen, that there was never a good law made thereat. Walsingh. A. D. 1405: 4 Inst. 48.

It

It is said by some writers, that in ancient times the King hath nominated the very persons to be returned, and did not leave it to the election of the people; for which an instance is given in the 45th year of Ed. III. And among the Parliament writs 14 Eliz. there appears to be an appointment and return of burgesses by the Lord of a town, &c. But these are single instances in their kind. Dict.

3. The Method of proceeding in Elections is regulated, from first to last, by the law of Parliament, and a vast variety of statutes; the effect of which is given in the ensuing columns, the provisions of the several statutes being blended together. The following are the statutes on which this abridgment is founded, viz. Stats. 7 H. 4. c. 15: 8 H. 6. c. 7: 23 H. 6. c. 14: 2 W. & M. st. 1. c. 7: 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 20: 7 W. 3. c. 4: 7 & 8 W. 3. cc. 7, 25: 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 7: 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 10: 6 Ann. c. 23: 9 Ann. c. 5: 10 Ann. cc. 19, 33: 2 Geo. 2. c. 24: 8 Geo. 2. c. 30: 18 Geo. 2. c. 18: 19 Geo. 2. c. 28: 10 Geo. 3. c. 16: 11 Geo. 3. c. 42: 28 Geo. 3. c. 52: and several others, which are occasionally particularized.

In case of a new Parliament, as soon as it is summoned by the King, the Lord Chancellor sends his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery; who thereupon issues out writs to the Sheriff of every county, for the election of all the members to serve for that county, and every city and borough therein.

If a vacancy happens by the death, &c. of any member during the sitting of Parliament, the Speaker may, by order of the House, send his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown; who thereupon proceeds as in other cases where the warrant is sent by the Lord Chancellor. And with regard to a vacancy happening by death or peerage during the prorogation or recess of Parliament, the stat. 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 26, which repeals the former statutes upon this subject, provides, that if, during any recess, any two members give notice to the Speaker, by a certificate under their hands, that there is a vacancy by death, or that a writ of summons has issued under the great seal, to call up any member to the House of Lords, the Speaker shall forthwith give notice of it to be inserted in the Gazette; and at the end of fourteen days after such insertion he shall issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown, commanding him to make out a new writ for the election of another member; but this shall not extend to any case where there is a petition depending for such vacant seat; or where the writ, for the election of the member so vacating, had not been returned fifteen days before the end of the last sitting of the House; or where the new writ cannot issue before the next meeting of the House for the dispatch of business. And to prevent any impediment in the execution of this act, by the Speaker's absence from the kingdom, or by the vacancy of his seat, at the beginning of every Parliament he shall appoint any number of members from three to seven inclusive, and shall publish the appointment in the Gazette; these members in the absence of the Speaker shall have the same authority as is given to him by the statute; these are the only cases provided for by act of Parliament; for any other species of vacancy, therefore, no writ can issue during a recess of Parliament.

Within three days, (or in the Cinque-Ports within six days, stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 7,) after the receipt of this writ out of Chancery, the Sheriff is to send his precept, under his seal, to the proper returning officers of the cities and boroughs, commanding them to elect their members; and those returning officers are to proceed to election within eight days from the receipt of the precept, giving four days' notice of the same; and to return the persons chosen, together with the precept, to the Sheriff. In the borough of New Shoreham in Sussex, wherein certain freeholders of the county are entitled to vote by stat. 11 Geo. 3. c. 55, the election must be within twelve days, with eight days' notice of the same.

But elections of Knights of the Shire must be proceeded to by the Sheriffs themselves in person; and, according to former laws, at the next county Court after the delivery of the writ, to be holden at the most usual place in the county. If the county Court fell upon the day of delivering the writ, or within six days after, the Sheriff might have adjourned the Court, and election, to some other convenient time, not longer than sixteen days, nor shorter than ten; but he cannot alter the place without the consent of all the candidates. Now, by stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 84, it is enacted, that the Sheriff having indorsed on the back of the writ the day on which he received it, shall, within two days after the receipt thereof, cause proclamation to be made, at the place where the ensuing election ought by law to be held, of a special County-Court, to be there held for the purpose of such election only; on any day, Sunday excepted, not later from the day of making such proclamation than the sixteenth day, nor sooner than the tenth; and that he shall proceed on such election, at such special County-Court, in the same manner as if the said election had been held at a County-Court, or at an adjourned County-Court, according to the former laws. And by stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 64, all notices of the time and place of election of members of Parliament shall be publicly given, at the usual place, between eight in the morning and four in the afternoon, from October 25th to March 25th; and, during the other half year, between eight in the morning and six in the afternoon.

And as it is essential to the very being of Parliament, that elections should be absolutely free, all undue influence whatever upon the electors is illegal, and strongly prohibited. As soon, therefore, as the time and place of election within counties, or boroughs, are fixed, all soldiers quartered in the place are to remove, at least one day before the election, to the distance of two miles or more, and not to return till one day after the poll is ended, except in the liberty of Westminster, or other residence of the Royal Family, in respect of his Majesty's guards, and in fortified places; stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 30. § 3. Riots likewise have been frequently determined to make an election void. By vote also of the House of Commons no Lord of Parliament, or Lord Lieutenant of a County, hath any right to interfere in the election of Commoners; and, by statute, the Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports shall not recommend any members there. If any officer of the excise, customs, stamps, or certain other branches of the revenue, presume to intermeddle in elections, by persuading any voter, or dissuading him, he forfeits 100*l.* and is disabled to hold any office.

Consistently with the same principle also, it has been decided, that a wager between two electors, upon the success of their respective candidates, is illegal and void; for were it permitted, it would manifestly corrupt the freedom of elections. 1 Term Rep. 55.

Indeed, however the electors of one branch of the Legislature may be secured from any undue influence from either of the other two, and from all external violence and compulsion; the greatest danger is that, in which themselves co-operate, by the infamous practice of bribery and corruption; to prevent which it is enacted, that no Candidate shall, after the date (usually called the teste) of the writs; or after the ordering of the writs, that is, after the signing of the warrant of the Chancellor for issuing the writs, (Sim 165) or after any vacancy; give any money or entertainment to his electors, or promise to give any, either to particular persons, or to the place in general, in order to his being elected, on pain of being incapable to serve for that place in Parliament; that is, incapable of serving upon that election. This is provided by stat. 7 W. 3. c. 4. commonly called the Treating-Act; and it has been decided by a committee, according to the plain and obvious meaning of the words of the statute, that treating vacates the election only; and that the candidate is no way disqualified from being re-elected, and sitting upon a second return. 3 Lud. 459. It has been supposed, that the payment of travelling expences, and a compensation for loss of time, were not treating, or bribery, within this or any other statute; and a bill passed the House of Commons to subject such cases to the penalties imposed by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 24. upon persons guilty of bribery. But this bill was rejected in the House of Lords by the opposition of Lord Mansfield, who strenuously maintained that the bill was unnecessary; since such conduct by the laws in being was clearly illegal; and subject, in a Court of law, to the penalty of bribery. 2 Lud. 89.

To guard against still more gross and flagrant acts of bribery, it is enacted by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 24. explained and enlarged by stats. 9 Geo. 2. c. 38; 16 Geo. 3. c. 11. that if any money, gift, office, employment, or reward be given, or promised to be given, to any voter, at any time, in order to influence him to give or withhold his vote, as well he that takes, as he that offers such a bribe, forfeits 500*l.* and is for ever disabled from voting and holding any office in any corporation, unless, before conviction, he will discover some other offender of the same kind, and then he is indemnified for his own offence. But these statutes do not create any incapacity of sitting in the House; that depends solely upon the Treating-Act above mentioned.

It has been held, that it is bribery if a Candidate gives an elector money to vote for him, though he afterwards votes for another. 3 Burr. 1235. And there can be no doubt but it would also be bribery in the voter; for the words of the statute clearly make the offence mutual. And it has been decided, that such note will not be available to the person to whom it may afterwards be given gratuitously; [illegible] the property of [illegible] election [illegible] 2 Doug. 696. An [illegible] in 4 Doug. [illegible] of an attorney, which [illegible] to the amount of 21 [illegible] against the defendant.

Besides the penalties, thus imposed by the Legislature, bribery is a crime at Common Law, and punishable by indictment or information; though the Court of King's Bench will not in ordinary cases grant an information within two years, the time within which an action may be brought for the penalties under the statute. 3 Burr. 1335, 1359. But this rule does not affect a prosecution by indictment, or information by the Attorney General; who in one case was ordered by the House to prosecute two persons who had procured themselves to be returned by bribery. They were convicted and sentenced by the Court of King's Bench to pay each a fine of 1000 marks, and to be imprisoned six months. 4 Doug. 292.

Undue influence being thus endeavoured to be effectually guarded against, the election is to be proceeded to, on the day appointed; the Sheriff or other returning officer first taking an oath against bribery, and for the due execution of his office. The Candidates, likewise, if required, must swear to their qualification, or their election shall be void, and the electors in counties to theirs; and the electors both in counties and boroughs are also compellable to take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, the Oath of Abjuration, and that against bribery and corruption. And it might not be amiss, says Blackstone, if the Candidates were bound to take the latter oath, as well as the former; which, in all probability, would be much more effectual, than administering it only to the electors.

By stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 73. in order to expedite the business at elections, the returning officers are enabled, on request of the Candidates, to appoint persons to administer to voters the Oaths of Allegiance, Supremacy, the Declaration of Fidelity, the Oath of Abjuration, and the declaration or affirmation of the effect thereof, previously to their coming to vote; and to grant the voters certificates of their having taken the said Oaths; without which certificate the voters shall not be permitted to vote, if they are required to take the Oaths.

By stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 84. all electors for cities and boroughs shall swear to their name, addition, or profession, and place of abode; and also, like freeholders in counties, that they believe they are of the age of twenty-one, and that they have not been polled before, at that election. And, by the same statute it is enacted, that if a poll is demanded at any election for any county or place in England or Wales, it shall commence either that day, or at the farthest upon the next, and shall be continued from day to day (Sundays excepted) until it be finished; and that it shall be kept open seven hours at the least each day, between eight in the morning and eight at night. But should it be continued to the 15th day, then the returning officer shall close the poll at or before three o'clock in the afternoon, and shall immediately, or on the next day, publicly declare the names of the persons who have a majority of votes; and he shall forthwith make a return accordingly, unless a scrutiny is demanded by any Candidate, or by two or more of the electors, and he shall deem it necessary to grant the same; in which case it shall be lawful for him to proceed thereupon; but so, as that, in all cases of a general election, (i. e. on the calling a new Parliament,) if he has the return of the writ he shall cause a return of the the members to be filed in the Crown-office on or before the day on which the writ is returnable: If he is a returning officer acting under a precept, he shall make a return of the members at least six days before the day of the return of the writ. But if it is not a general election, then, in case of a scrutiny, a return of the member shall be made within thirty days after the close of the poll; upon a scrutiny the returning officer cannot compel any witness to be sworn, though the statute gives him power to administer an oath to those who consent to take it.

The election being closed, the returning officer in boroughs returns his precept, to the Sheriff; with the names of the persons elected by the majority: and the Sheriff returns the whole, together with the writ for the county, and the names of the Knights elected thereupon, to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, before the day of meeting, if it be a new Parliament; or within fourteen days after the election, if it be an occasional vacancy; and this under penalty of 500*l.* If the Sheriff does not return such Knights only as are duly elected, he forfeits, by the old statutes of Hen. VI. 100*l.* and the returning officer in boroughs, for a like false return, 40*l.* and they are besides liable to an action, in which double damages shall be recovered, by the latter statutes of King William: and any person bribing the returning officer shall also forfeit 300*l.*; but the members returned by him are the sitting members, until upon petition the return shall be adjudged to be false and illegal.

It has been adjudged on stat. 23 H. 6. c. 7, that though, according to the statute, no election should be made of any Knight of the Shire, but between eight and eleven of the clock in the forenoon; if the election be begun within that time, and cannot be determined in those hours, it may be made after. And if any electors give their voices before the precept for election is read and published, it will be of no force; for after the precept is thus read, &c. they may alter their voices and make a new election. 4 Inst. 48, 49.

By stat. 10 Ann. c. 23, it is enacted, that the returning officer, within twenty days after the election, is to deliver over to the clerk of the peace, all the poll books on oath made before two justices; to be preserved among the records of the sessions of the peace, &c.

By the stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 7, which gives the action for double damages in case of a false return, all such returns, wilfully made, are declared to be illegal: and over and above the remedy which the party grieved has, by action under this statute, the returning officer or other person offending, is punishable by the House; which in such cases has generally committed him to custody, and sometimes to Newgate. And the accepting and returning of indentures of return, not signed by the proper returning officer in Scotland, has been held a false return, and the Under-Sheriff offending committed. Sim. 181, 2.

And in order to prevent the evil of double returns, it was by the same stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 7, enacted, that if the returning officer return more persons than are required to be chosen by the writ or precept, the same remedy may be had by the party grieved, as in case of a false return. And by § 10 of the stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 84, it is provided, that if no return shall be made to a general writ on or before the return day, or upon a new writ within fifty-two days after the teste, or if a special return be made, the party grieved may petition the House against the same; and a committee shall determine whether any and which of the persons named in such petition ought to have been returned, or whether a new writ ought to issue; and the House shall give the necessary orders. And for any offence against this statute, the returning officer is made liable to a prosecution by information or indictment. And if any returning officer shall wilfully delay, neglect, or refuse duly to return a person elected, such person, on the determination of a committee in his favour, may sue the returning officer, and recover double damages. See stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 84. §§ 11, 14.

Where the right of election is doubtful, and consequently it is uncertain what Candidates are duly elected, the returning officer may, and for his own safety ought to, make a double return: But this must be done upon the returning officer's own judgment, not upon the agreement of the parties. If two or more sets of electors make each a return of a different member, (which is called a Double Election,) that return, only which the returning officer, to whom the Sheriff's precept was directed, has signed and sealed, is good. And the members by him returned shall sit, until displaced on petition. Sim. 184.

Where a false return, or a double return, is made, it may be amended at the bar of the House. The former either by taking the return off the file, if made by an illegal returning officer, and annexing to the writ the real return delivered by the legal officer to the Clerk of the Crown. Where the Christian name of the party returned is mistaken, it may be rectified; sometimes the amendment is made by erasure of the endorsement of the wrong name, and every thing belonging to it, and by a substitution of the right name. Formerly the returning officer himself used to amend the return; but now it is usually done by the Clerk of the Crown. The double return is amended by taking one off the file. When the return is made, in order to preserve it free from dispute, the Clerk of the Crown is directed to enter it, whether a single or a double return, in a book to be kept for that purpose in his office, within six days after the return; and no amendment or alteration must be made, by him or his deputy, or others, of the return, except by order of the House; and such book, or a copy thereof, is directed to be sufficient evidence of the return, in any action to be brought upon that statute; and for any default or omission in such particulars, or for certifying any person returned who was not returned, the Clerk of the Crown is liable to a penalty of 500*l.* to the party grieved, and forfeiture of his office. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 7; made perpetual by stat. 12 Ann. st. 1. c. 15.

In double returns, it has been formerly a general practice in the House of Commons, that neither one nor the other should sit in the House until it be decided. In the year 1640, two returns were made for Great Marlow, and in both indentures one person was returned; and he was admitted to sit, but the others ordered to withdraw until the question was determined. And in the same year, it was ordered, that where some are returned by the Sheriff, or such other officer as by law hath power to return, and others returned by private hands; in such case, those returned by the Sheriff, or other officer, shall sit until the election is quashed by the House. Ordinan. 1640. If one be duly elected, and the Sheriff,

&c. return another, the return must be reformed and amended; and he who is duly elected is to be inserted, for the election is the foundation, and not the return. 4 Inst. 49.

Double returns are to be determined before double elections; and the return immediately annexed to the writ must be first heard. Sayer. 184, n.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that he was duly elected a member of Parliament for such a borough, and that the defendant returned two other persons; and that he petitioned the House of Commons, and was adjudged to be duly elected, and his name ordered to be inserted in the roll, and the name of the other to be rased out: the plaintiff had a verdict; but it was adjudged, in arrest of judgment, that this declaration was not founded on the stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 7, because that statute gave an action where there was none before; therefore the fact must be made agreeable to it, which not being done, defendant had judgment. 2 Salk. 504. The Court will not meddle in an action upon a double return, until it is determined in Parliament. Lutw. 88. And it hath been holden, that for a double return, no action lay before the statute 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 7, because it is the only method the Sheriff had to secure himself; and when the right was decided in Parliament, then one indenture was taken off the file, so that it is not then a double return; neither can the party have an action for a false return, for the return may be determined in the House whether true or false, and if so, there will be an inconvenience in contrary resolutions, if they should determine one way, and the Court at law another; but after a dissolution the action may lie for a false return, for then the right cannot be determined in Parliament. 2 Salk. [illegible]

A double return is the same as a false return, as to action on the case, in both it is grounded on the falsity; but there is another reason why this action will not lie for a double return, because the law doth not take notice of such returns, it is only allowed by the usage of Parliament, and in cases where the proper officer cannot determine who is chosen; therefore, when he doubts, he makes a double return, and submits the choice to the determination of the House of Commons; and if that House [illegible] make determinations [illegible], it will [illegible] for the law to subject a man to an action [illegible] a fact to be determined by a Court which hath proper jurisdiction to determine it. Lutw. [illegible]

A Member elected and returned for several places, is to make his choice for which place he will serve; and if he doth not, by the time which the House shall appoint, the House may determine for what place he [illegible], and a new writ shall go out for the other place.

An action on the case lies, by a burgess against the returning officer of a borough, for refusing his vote at an election to serve [illegible]. This was decided in an action brought by [illegible], burgess of Aylesbury, against White [illegible], constables of the said borough, for refusing to receive [illegible] the election of a member of Parliament; [illegible] with 5*l.* damages; but [illegible] the opinion of three Judges, [illegible] not maintainable, because the constables [illegible] and the not receiving the plaintiff's vote is [illegible] for when the matter comes before the House, his vote will be received; that the right of electing members to serve in Parliament is to be decided in Parliament, and the plaintiff may petition the House for that purpose; and after it is determined there, he may then bring his action and not before. Holt Chief Justice contra; That the plaintiff had a right to vote; a freeholder has a right to vote by reason of his freehold; and it is a real right, and the value of his freehold was not material till the stat. 8 Hen. 6, which requires it to be 40*s. per annum*: that as it is ratione liberi tenementi in counties; so, in ancient boroughs, they have a right to vote ratione burgagii; and in cities and corporations, it is ratione franchesiæ, and a perpetual inheritance, vested in the whole corporation, but to be used by the particular members; that this is a noble privilege, which entitles the Subject to a share in the government and legislature; and that if the plaintiff hath a right, he must have a remedy to assert that right, for want of right and want of remedy is the same thing: that refusing to take the plaintiff's vote is an injury, and every injury imports a damage; and that where a parliamentary matter comes in, incidentally, to an action of property in the King's Court, it must be determined there, and not in Parliament; the Parliament cannot judge of the injury, nor give damages to the plaintiff, and he hath no remedy by way of petition: And, according to this opinion, the judgment of the other three judges was reversed, upon a writ of error brought in the House of Lords; who ordered that the plaintiff should recover his damages assessed by the jury. See Bro. P. C. and also 1 Salk. 19: 6 Mod. 45: 3 Salk. 17: 8 St. Tr. 89 Holt 524: Ld. Raym. 938: Raym. Ent. 479.

This determination occasioned much disturbance in both Houses of Parliament. and on the 25th of January 1704, the House of Commons resolved itself into a committee on the business: and, after a very long and animated debate, came to five resolutions; importing, that the Commons of England, in Parliament assembled, had the sole right to examine and determine all matters relating to the right of election of their own members; and that the right was not determinable elsewhere. That the practice of determining the qualifications of electors, in any Court of law, would expose all returning officers to a multiplicity of vexatious suits and insupportable expences; and subject them to different and independent jurisdictions, as well as to inconsistent determinations in the same case, without relief. That Ashby was guilty of a breach of privilege, as were all persons bringing actions, and all attornies, solicitors, counsellors, and serjeants at law, soliciting, prosecuting, or pleading in any such of the same nature. These resolutions, signed by the clerk, were fixed upon the gate of Westminster-Hall. The Lords, on their part, passed resolutions in support of their judgment, copies of which and the case itself were sent by the Lord Keeper to all the Sheriffs of England; to be circulated through all the boroughs of their respective counties. See Bro. P. C. title Action. Smollet's Hist. Eng. [illegible]

Several persons were in the next session committed to Newgate, under a warrant signed by Robert Harley, Speaker of the House of Commons, for prosecuting actions at law against the constables of the borough of Aylesbury, who refused to take their votes at the election of members of Parliament, &c. in contempt of the jurisdiction and privileges vileges of the House; and this matter being returned by habeas corpus severally, and the several persons defendants brought into Court, counsel moved that they might be discharged; for that the prosecution of a suit at law could be no unlawful act, nor a breach of the privilege of the House of Commons: three Judges were of opinion, that the House were the proper judges of their own privileges; but Holt Chief Justice held, that the authority of the Commons was circumscribed by laws; and if they should exceed that authority, then to say they were judges of their own privileges, is to make their privileges to be what they would have them to be; and that if they should wrongfully imprison, there could be no redress; so that the Courts at Westminster could not execute the laws upon which the liberties of the Subject subsist. 2 Salk. 503: See ante IV. 1; V. 8.

The question, as to this right of action against a returning officer for refusing a vote, was intended to have been decided on a writ of error, to review the judgment of the Court of K. B. in refusing the habeas corpus; but was put an end to by the prorogation of Parliament; and the determination in Ashby and White has never since been disputed. See Smollett's Hist. of Eng. l. 1. c 8.

The question, as to the power of the House of Commons to commit for a contempt, was again brought before the Court of King's Bench in the Honourable Alex. Murray's case. 1 Wils. 299: And before the Court of Common Pleas in the case of Brass Crosby. 3 Wils. 188: Black. Rep. 754. In both which it was ruled, according to the decision in Salkeld, that a person committed by the House of Commons for a contempt, cannot be discharged by a Court of Common Law. See this Dictionary, title Bail II.

The form and manner of proceeding upon Petitions to the House of Commons, in cases of controverted elections, are now regulated by statute, 10 Geo. 3. c. 16; (made perpetual by stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 15;) which directs the method of choosing, by lot, a select committee of fifteen members, who are sworn well and truly to try the same, and a true judgment to give according to the evidence.

This statute 10 Geo. 3. c. 16, is best known by the name of Grenville's Act; and has been much improved by stats. 11 Geo. 3. c. 42: 25 Geo. 3. c. 84: 28 Geo. 3. c. 52: 32 Geo. 3. c. 1: 36 Geo. 3. c. 59. By these statutes any person may present a petition, complaining of an undue election; but one subscriber to the petition must enter into a recognizance, himself in 200*l.* with two sureties in 100*l.* each, to appear and support his petition: and then the House shall appoint some day, beyond fourteen days after the commencement of the session, or the return of the writ, and shall give notice to the petitioners, and the sitting members, to attend the bar of the House on that day by themselves, their counsel or agents; this day, however, may be altered, but notice shall be given of the new day appointed. On the day fixed, if 100 members do not attend, the House shall adjourn from day to day; except over Sundays, and for any number of days, over Christmas-day, Whitsunday, and Good Friday: and on such day the House shall not proceed to any other business, previous to reading the order of the day for taking the petition into consideration, except swearing in members; receiving reports from committees; amending a return; attending his Majesty, or a commission, in the House of Lords; receiving messages from the Lords; proceeding in the prosecution of an impeachment before that House; or proceeding upon the order of the day for the call of the House; and making other orders for enforcing the attendance of members.

The names of all the members belonging to the House are then put into six boxes or glasses in equal numbers; and the clerk shall draw a name from each of the glasses in rotation, which name shall be read by the Speaker, and if the person is present, and not disqualified, it is put down: and in this manner they proceed till 49 such names are collected. But besides these 49, each party shall select, out of the whole number present, one person, who is called the Nominee of that party. Members who have voted at the election in question, or who are petitioners or petitioned against, cannot serve; and persons who are sixty years of age, or who have served before, are excused, if they require it; and others who can shew any material reason, may also be excused by the indulgence of the House. After 49 names are so drawn, lists of them shall be given to the respective parties; who shall withdraw, and shall alternately strike off one (the petitioners beginning) till they are reduced to 13; and these 13, with the two Nominees, constitute the select committee. If there are three parties they shall alternately strike off one, and in that case the 13 shall choose two others, as the Nominees. The members of the committee shall then be ordered by the House to meet within 24 hours: and they cannot adjourn for more than 24 hours, except over Sunday, Christmas-day, and Good Friday, without leave of the House; and no member of the Commons shall absent himself without the permission of the House. The committee shall not in any case proceed to business with fewer than 13 members, and they are dissolved if, for three successive days of sitting, their number is less than that; unless they have sate 14 days, and then they may proceed though reduced to 12, and if 25 days to 11; and they continue to sit notwithstanding a prorogation of the Parliament. All the 15 members of the committee take a solemn oath, in the House, that they will give a true judgment according to the evidence; and every question is determined by a majority. The committee may send for witnesses, and examine them upon oath, a power which the House of Commons does not possess; and if they report that the petition or defence is frivolous or vexatious, the party aggrieved shall recover costs. On the close of the whole business, the committee report their determination to the House; who order the return of the writ to be amended accordingly, if necessary, in the manner already stated; and thus the election is definitively decided. See, as to the effect of the decisions of these Committees, ante VI. B. 1. &c.

VII. THE MODE of making laws is much the same in both Houses. It is proper previously to premise, that for dispatch of business each House of Parliament has its Speaker. The Speaker of the House of Lords, whose office it is to preside there, and manage the formality of business, is the Lord Chancellor, or keeper of the King's [illegible] Seal, or any other appointed by the King's com[illegible]: and, if none be so appointed, the House of Lords [illegible]id) may elect; and an instance of that nature has occurred in the Irish House of Lords. The Speaker of the House of Commons is chosen by the House; but must must be approved by the King. And herein the usage of the two Houses differs, that the Speaker of the House of Commons cannot give his opinion or argue any question in the House; but the Speaker of the House of Lords, if a Lord of Parliament, may.

The Commons anciently had no continual Speaker, but, after consultation, their manner of proceeding was to agree upon some person of great abilities, to deliver their resolutions. In the reign of William Rufus, at a great Parliament held at Rockingham, a certain knight came forth, and stood before the people, and spake in the name and behalf of them all; who was undoubtedly the Speaker of the House of Commons at that time. The first Speaker certainly known was Peter de Montford, 44 H. 3, when the Lords and Commons sat in several Houses, or at least gave their assents severally. Lex Constitutionis 162.

Hume is mistaken, who says that Peter de la Mare, chosen in the first Parliament of Ric. II. was the first Speaker of the Commons. Vol. 3. p. 3. And in the rolls of Parliament, 51 Ed. 3. No. 87, it appears, that Sir Thomas Hungerford chevalier, qui avoit les paroles des communes en cest parlement, addressed the King, in the name of the Commons, in that jubilee year, to pray that he would pardon several persons who had been convicted on impeachments. And there he is not mentioned as if his office was a novelty. 1 Comm. 181. in n.

Sir Richard Waldgrave, 5 R. 2, was the first Speaker who made any formal apology for inability, as now practised: Richard Rich, Esq. an. 28 H. 8, was the first Speaker who is recorded to have made request for access to the King. Thomas Moyle, Esq. an. 34 H. 8, is said to be the first Speaker who petitioned for freedom of speech; and Sir Thomas Cargrave, an. 1 Eliz. was the first who made the request for privilege from arrests, &c. Sir John Bussby, an. 17 R. 2, was the first Speaker presented to the King, in full Parliament, by the Commons. And when Sir Arnold Savage was Speaker, an. 2 H. 4, it was the first time that the Commons were required by the King to choose a Speaker Ibid. The salary of the Speaker is now settled at 1500*l.* a quarter, or 6000*l.* a year, under stat. 50 Geo. 3. c. 10; which prohibits his holding any office under the Crown during pleasure.

In each House the act of the majority binds the whole; and this majority is declared by votes openly and publicly given.

In the House of Commons the Speaker never votes except when there is an equality without his casting vote, which in that case creates a majority; but the Speaker of the House of Lords has no casting vote, his vote being connected with the rest of the House; and in the case of an equality the Non-contents, or negative voices, have the same effect and operation as if they were in fact a majority. Lords' Journ. 25 June 1661. The House of Lords in Ireland observes the same rule, and in cases of equality semper præsumitur pro negante. Ld. Mountm. i. 105. Hence the order in putting the question, on appeals and writs of error, is this; "Is it your Lordships' pleasure, that this decree or judgment should be reversed?" for if the votes are equal, the judgment of the Court below is affirmed. Ib. ii. 81.

Here it may not be improper to observe, that there is no casting vote in Courts of justice; but in the superior Courts, if the Judges are equally divided, there is no decision; and the cause is continued in Court till a majority concur; which they frequently do by consent, merely for the purpose of sending the cause, by appeal, to a higher jurisdiction. At the sessions, the justices, in cases of equality, ought to respite the matter till the next session; but if they are equal one day, and the matter is duly brought before them on another day in the same sessions, and there is then an inequality, it will amount to a judgment: for all the time of the session is considered but as one day. A casting vote sometimes signifies the single vote of a person who never votes but in the case of an equality; sometimes the double vote of a person who first votes with the rest, and then, upon an equality, creates a majority by giving a second vote. A casting vote neither exists in corporations nor elsewhere, unless it is expressly given by statute or charter; or, what is equivalent, exists by immemorial usage. 1 Comm. 181, in n.

With respect to other formalities in the two Houses it may be observed, there are no places of precedency in the House of Commons as there are in the House of Lords; only the Speaker has a chair or seat fixed towards the upper end, in the middle of the house; and the clerk, with his assistant, sits near him at the table, just below the chair. The members of the House of Commons never had any robes, as the Lords ever had, except the Speaker and clerks, who in the House wear gowns, as professors of the law do during term-time. No knight, citizen, or burgess of the House of Commons, shall depart from the Parliament without leave of the Speaker and Commons assembled; and the same is to be entered in the book of the Clerk of the Parliament. Stat. 6 H. 8. *c.*16. And in the 1*st* & 2*d* of P. & M. informations were preferred by the Attorney General against thirty-nine of the House of Commons, for departing without licence, whereof six submitted to fines; but it is uncertain whether any of them were paid.

Calling the House is to discover what members are absent, without leave of the House, or just cause; in which cases fines have been often imposed: On the calling over, such of the members as are present, are marked; and the defaulters being called over again the same day, or the day after, and not appearing, are summoned, or sent for by the serjeant at arms. Lex Constitutionis 159.

Forty members are requisite to make a House of Commons for dispatch of business; and the business of the House is to be kept secret among themselves. In the 23d year of Queen Elizabeth, Arthur Hall, Esq. member of Parliament, for publishing the conferences of the House, and writing a book which contained matters of reproach against some particular members, derogatory to the general authority, power, and state of the House, and prejudicial to the validity of the proceedings, was adjudged by the Commons to be committed to the Tower for six months, fined 500*l.* and expelled the House. But the Speaker of the House of Commons, according to the duty of his office, as a servant to the House, may publish such proceedings as he shall be ordered, by the Commons assembled; and he cannot be liable for what he does that way by the command of others, unless those other persons are liable.

All bills, motions, and petitions, are by order of Parliament to be entered on the Parliament rolls, although they they are denied, and never proceed to the establishment of a statute, together with the answers. Lex Constitutionis 154.

The Speaker of the House of Commons is not allowed to persuade or dissuade in passing a bill, only to make a short narrative of it; opening the parts of the bill, so that all may understand it; if any question be upon the bill, he is to explain, but not enter into argument or dispute. When Mr. Speaker desires to speak, he ought to be heard without interruption; and when the Speaker stands up, the member standing up is to sit down: if two stand up to speak to a bill, he who would speak against the bill, if it be known, is to be first heard; otherwise he who was first up, which is to be determined by the Speaker: no member is to be taken down, unless by Mr. Speaker, in such cases as the House do not think fit to admit; and if any person speak impertinently, or besides the question, the Speaker is to interrupt him, and know the pleasure of the House whether he shall be further heard: but if he speaks not to the matter, it may be moderated: and whosoever hisses or disturbs any person in his speech, shall answer it at the bar of the House. Dict.

In enacting laws, and other proceedings in Parliament, the Lords give their voices in their House, from the puisne Lord seriatim, by the word Content, or Not Content: the manner of voting in the House of Commons, is by Yea and No; and if it be difficult to determine which are the greater number, the House divides, and four tellers are appointed by the Speaker, two of each side, to number them, the Ay's going out, and the No's staying in; and thereof report is made to the House. When the members of the House go forth, none is to stir, until Mr. Speaker rises from his seat; and then all the rest are to follow after. Dict.

To bring a bill into the House, if the relief sought by it is of a private nature, it is first necessary to prefer a petition; which must be presented by a member, and usually sets forth the grievance desired to be remedied. This petition (when founded on facts that may be in their nature disputed) is referred to a committee of members, who examine the matter alleged, and accordingly report it to the House; and then (or otherwise, upon the mere petition) leave is given to bring in the bill. In public matters the bill is brought in upon motion made to the House, without any petition at all. Formerly, all bills were drawn in the form of petitions, which were entered upon the Parliament rolls, with the King's answer thereunto subjoined; not in any settled form of words, but as the circumstances of the case required: and at the end of each Parliament the judges drew them into the form of a statute, which was entered on the statute rolls. (See, among numberless other instances, the articuli cleri, 9 Edw. 2.) In the reign of Henry V, to prevent mistakes and abuses, the statutes were drawn up by the Judges before the end of the Parliament; and in the reign of Henry VI, bills in the form of acts, according to the modern custom, were first introduced.

It appears that, prior to the reign of Henry V, it had been the practice of the Kings to add and enact more than the Commons petitioned for. In consequence of this, there is a very memorable petition from the Commons an. 2 Hen. 5, which states, that it is the liberty and freedom of the Commons, that there should be no statute without their assent, considering that they have ever been assenters, as well as petitioners; and therefore they pray that for the future there may be no additions to, or diminutions from, their petitions. And in answer to this the King granted, that from thenceforth they should be bound in no instance without their assent; saving his royal prerogative to grant and deny what he pleases of their petitions. Ruff. Pref. xv: Rot. Parl. 2 Hen. 5. No. 22.

Any member may move for a bill to be brought in, except it be for imposing a tax, which is to be done by order of the House; and leave being granted, the person making the motion, and those who second it, are ordered to prepare and bring in the same.

Public bills or acts of Parliaments, are commonly drawn by such members of the House of Commons as are most inclined to effect the good of the public, particularly in relation to the bill designed, taking advice thereupon; and acts for the revival, repeal, or continuance of statutes, are penned by lawyers, members of the House, appointed for that purpose.

The persons directed to bring in the bill, present it in a competent time to the House, drawn out on paper, with a multitude of blanks, or void spaces, where any thing occurs that is dubious, or necessary to be settled by the Parliament itself; (such, especially, as the precise date of times, the nature and quantity of penalties, or of any sums of money to be raised;) being indeed only the skeleton of the bill. In the House of Lords, if the bill begins there, it is (when of a private nature) referred to two of the Judges; to examine and report the state of the facts alleged, to see that all necessary parties consent, and to settle all points of technical propriety. This is read a first time, and at a convenient distance a second time; and after each reading the Speaker opens to the House the substance of the bill, and puts the question, whether it shall proceed any farther. The introducing of the bill may be originally opposed, as the bill itself may at either of the readings; and, if the opposition succeeds, the bill must be dropped for that session; as it must also, if opposed with success in any of the subsequent stages.

After the second reading, it is committed that is, referred to a committee; which is either selected by the House in matters of small importance, or else, upon a bill of consequence, the House resolves itself into a committee of the whole House. A committee of the whole House is composed of every member; and to form it, the Speaker quits the chair, (another member being appointed chairman,) and may sit and debate as a private member. In these committees the bill is debated clause by clause, amendments made, the blanks filled up, and sometimes the bill entirely new modelled. After it has gone through the committee, the chairman reports it to the House with such amendments as the Committee have made; and then the House reconsiders the whole bill again, and the question is repeatedly put, upon every clause and amendment. When the House hath agreed or disagreed to the amendments of the committee, and sometimes added new amendments of its own, the bill is then ordered to be engrossed, or written in a strong gross hand, on one or more long rolls (or presses) of parchment sewed together. When this is finished, it is read a third time, and amendments are sometimes then made to it; and if a new clause be added, it is done by tacking a separate piece of parchment on the bill, which is called a Rider. Nov 84. The Speaker then again opens the contents; and holding it up in his hands, puts the question, whether the bill shall pass. If this is agreed to, the title to it is then settled; which used to be a general one for all the acts passed in the session, till in the first year of Henry VIII. distinct titles were introduced for each chapter. After this, one of the members is directed to carry it to the Lords, and desire their concurrence; who, attended by several more, carries it to the bar of the House of Peers, and there delivers it to their Speaker, who comes down from his woolsack to receive it.

It there passes through the same forms as in the other House; (except engrossing, which is already done;) and, if rejected, no more notice is taken, but it passes sub silentio, to prevent unbecoming altercations. But if it is agreed to, the Lords send a message by two Masters in Chancery, (or upon matters of high dignity or importance, by two of the Judges,) that they have agreed to the same: and the bill remains with the Lords, if they have made no amendment to it. But if any amendments are made, such amendments are sent down with the bill to receive the concurrence of the Commons. If the Commons disagree to the amendments, a conference usually follows between members deputed from each house; these meet in the painted chamber, and debate the matter, and for the most part settle and adjust the difference; but, if both Houses remain inflexible, the bill is dropped. If the Commons agree to the amendments, the bill is sent back to the Lords by one of the members, with a message to acquaint them therewith. The same forms are observed, mutatis mutandis, when the bill begins in the House of Lords. But, when an act of grace or pardon is passed, it is first signed by his Majesty, and then read once only in each of the Houses, without any new engrossing or amendment. D'Ewes's Journ. 20: 73: Com. Journ. 17 June 1747. And when both Houses have done with any bill, it is always deposited in the House of Peers, to wait the royal assent; except in the case of a bill of Supply, which after receiving the concurrence of the Lords is sent back to the House of Commons. Com. Journ. 24 July 1660.

If any debate happens on the first reading of a bill, the Speaker puts the question, whether the same shall have a second reading? and sometimes upon motion appoints a day for it; for public bills, unless upon extraordinary occasions, are seldom read more than once a day, the members being allowed convenient time to consider of them: if nothing be said against a bill, the ordinary course is to proceed without a question; but if the bill be generally disliked, a question is sometimes put, whether the bill shall be rejected? If it be rejected, it cannot be proposed any more that session: when a bill hath been read a second time, any member may move to have the same amended; but no member of the House is admitted to speak more than once in a debate, except the bill be read more than once that day, or the whole House be turned into a committee, and after long time spent in debates, the Speaker collecting the sense of the House, reduces the same to a question, which he submits to the House, and it goes to the vote: and a question is to be put, after the bill is read a second time, whether it shall be committed? The chairman of the committee makes his report of a bill at the side bar of the House, reading all the alterations made, and then delivers the same to the clerk of the Parliament; who likewise reads all the amendments, and the Speaker puts the question, whether they shall be read a second time? And if that be agreed unto, he reads the amendments himself, and puts the question, whether the bill so amended shall be engrossed, and read a third time, some other day? In the House of Lords, if a bill be not committed, then it is to be read a third time, and the next question to be for its passing; and on the third reading of the bill, any member may speak against the whole bill to throw out the same, or for amendment of any clause. Pratt. Solic. in Par. 397, 398.

In cases of private bills, when the petition is read, and leave given to bring in the bill, the persons concerned and affected by it may be heard by themselves or counsel at the bar, or before the committee, to whom such bill is referred; and in case of a Peer, he shall be admitted to come within the bar of the House of Commons, and sit covered on a stool whilst the same is debating. And after counsel are heard on both sides, and the House is satisfied with the contents of the bill, it goes through the several forms.

The Royal Assent may be given two ways: 1. In person; when the King comes to the House of Peers, in his crown and royal robes, and sending for the Commons to the bar, the titles of all the bills that have passed both Houses are read; and the King's answer is declared by the clerk of the Parliament in Norman-French: a badge, it must be owned, (now the only one remaining,) of conquest; and which one could wish to see fall into total oblivion, unless it be reserved as a solemn memento to remind us that our liberties are mortal, having once been destroyed by a foreign force. If the King consents to a public bill, the clerk usually declares, "Le Roy le veut—The King wills it so to be:" if to a private bill, "Soit fait comme il est desiré; Be it as it is desired." If the King refuses his assent, it is in the gentle language of "Le Roy s'avisera; The King will advise upon it." When a bill of Supply is passed, it is carried up and presented to the King, by the Speaker of the House of Commons; and the royal assent is thus expressed, "Le Roy remercie ses loyal subjects, accepte leur benevolence, et aussi le veut; The King thanks his loyal Subjects, accepts their benevolence, and wills it so to be." Rot. Parl. 9 Hen. 4. in Pryn: 4 Inst. 30, 31. In case of an act of grace, which originally proceeds from the Crown, and has the royal assent in the first stage of it, the Clerk of the Parliament thus pronounces the gratitude of the Subject; "Les prelats, seigneurs, et commons, en ce present parliament assemblés, au nom de touts vous autres subjects, remercient tres humblement votre Majesté, et prient à Dieu vous donner en santé bonne vie et longue; The Prelates, Lords, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, in the name of all your other Subjects, most humbly thank your Majesty, and pray to God to grant you in health and wealth long to live." D'Ewes's Journ. 35.

The words Le Roi s'avisera correspond to the phrase formerly used by Courts of justice, when they required time to consider of their judgment; viz. Curia advisare vult. And there can be little doubt but, originally, these words implied a serious intent in the King to take the subject subject under consideration; and they only became in effect a negative, when the bill or petition was annulled by a dissolution, before the King communicated the result of his deliberation: for in the Rolls of Parliament, the King sometimes answers, that the petition is unreasonable, and cannot be granted; sometimes he answers, that he and his Council will consider of it; as in Rot. Parl. 37 E. 3. No. 33.

This prerogative of rejecting bills was exercised to such an extent, in ancient times, that D'Ewes informs us, that Queen Elizabeth at the close of one session gave her assent to twenty-four public, and nineteen private, bills; and at the same time rejected forty-eight, which had passed the two Houses of Parliament. Journ. 596. The last time it was exerted was in the year 1692, by King William III. who at first refused his assent to the bill for triennial Parliaments; but was prevailed upon to permit it to be enacted, two years afterwards. De Lolme 404.

By stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 21, the King may give his assent by letters patent under his great seal, signed with his hand, and notified in his absence to both Houses assembled together in the Lords' House.

When the bill has received the royal assent in either of these ways, it is then, and not before, a statute or act of Parliament, and is placed among the records of the kingdom; there needing no formal promulgation to give it the force of a law, as was necessary by the civil law with regard to the Emperor's edicts: because every man in England is, in judgment of law, party to the making of an act of Parliament, being present thereat by his representatives. However, a copy thereof is usually printed at the King's press for the information of the whole land. And formerly, before the invention of printing, it was used to be published by the Sheriff of of every county; the King's writ being sent to him at the end of every session, together with a transcript of all the acts made at that session; commanding him, "ut statuta illa, et omnes articulos in eisdem contentos, in singulis locis ubi expedire viderit, publicè proclamari, et firmiter teneri et observari faciat." And the usage was to proclaim them at his County-Court, and there to keep them, that whoever would might read or take copies thereof; which custom continued till the reign of Henry VII. 3 Inst. 41: 4 Inst. 26. See further, title Statute.

An act of Parliament, thus made, is the exercise of the highest authority that this kingdom acknowledges upon earth. It hath power to bind every Subject in the land, and the dominions thereunto belonging; nay, even the King himself, if particularly named therein. And it cannot be altered, amended, dispensed with, suspended, or repealed, but in the same forms and by the same authority of Parliament: for it is a maxim in law, that it requires the same strength to dissolve, as to create an obligation. It is true it was formerly held, that the King might in many cases dispense with penal statutes. Finch. L. 81, 234: Bacon. Elem. c. 19. But now, by stat. 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2, it is declared that the suspending or dispensing with laws by regal authority, without consent of Parliament, is illegal; as has already been repeatedly noticed. See this Dictionary, title King.

VIII. AN Adjournment is no more than a continuance of the session from one day to another, as the word itself signifies: and this is done by the authority of each House separately every day; and sometimes for a fortnight or month together, as at Christmas or Easter, or upon other particular occasions. But the adjournment of one House is no adjournment of the other. 4 Inst. 28. It hath also been usual, when his Majesty hath signified his pleasure that both or either of the Houses should adjourn themselves to a certain day, to obey the King's pleasure so signified, and to adjourn accordingly. Com. Journ. passim. Otherwise, besides the indecorum of a refusal, a prorogation would assuredly follow; which would often be very inconvenient to both public and private business. For prorogation puts an end to the session: and then such bills as are only begun and not perfected, must be resumed de novo (if at all) in a subsequent session: whereas, after an adjournment, all things continue in the same state as at the time of the adjournment made, and may be proceeded on without any fresh commencement.

A Prorogation is the continuance of the Parliament from one session to another, as an adjournment is a continuation of the session from day to day. This is done by the royal authority, expressed either by the Lord Chancellor in his Majesty's presence, or by commission from the Crown, or frequently by proclamation.

At the beginning of a new Parliament, when it is not intended that the Parliament should meet, at the return of the writ of summons, for dispatch of business, the practice is to prorogue it, by a writ of prorogation; as the Parliament called in 1790 was prorogued twice by writ; and the first Parliament in the reign of Geo. III. was prorogued by four writs. On the day upon which the writ of summons is returnable, the members of the House of Commons who attend, do not enter their own House, or wait for a message from the Lords, but go immediately up to the House of Lords where the Chancellor reads the writ of prorogation, and when it is intended that they should meet upon the day to which the Parliament is prorogued for dispatch of business, notice is given by a proclamation. 1 Comm. c. 187, in n. See post.

Both Houses are necessarily prorogued at the same time, it not being a prorogation of the House of Lords, or Commons, but of the Parliament. The session is never understood to be at an end until a prorogation: though, unless some act be passed or some judgment given in Parliament, it is in truth no session at all. 4 Inst. 28: Hale of Parl. 38: Hut. 61. And formerly the usage was, for the King to give the royal assent to all such bills as he approved, at the end of every session, and then to prorogue the Parliament; though sometimes only for a day or two: after which all business then depending in the Houses was to be begun again. Which custom obtained so strongly, that it once became a question, whether giving the royal assent to a single bill did not, of course, put an end to the session. And, though it was then resolved in the negative, yet the notion was so deeply rooted, that the stat. 1 Car. 1. c. 7, was passed to declare, that the King's assent to that and some other acts should not put an end to the session; and even so late as the reign of Charles II, we find a proviso frequently tacked to a bill, that his Majesty's assent thereto should not determine the session of Parliament. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 1: 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 1. But it now seems to be allowed, that a prorogation must be expressly made, in order to determine the session.

All orders of Parliament determine by prorogation; and one taken by order of the Parliament, after their prorogation, may be discharged on an habeas corpus, as well well as after a dissolution; but it was long since determined, that the dissolution of a Parliament did not alter the state of impeachments, brought up by the Commons in a preceding Parliament. Raym. 120: 1 Lev. 384. See title Impeachment. And it hath been resolved, that cases of appeals and writs of error, shall continue, and are to be proceeded in statu quo, &c. as they stood at the dissolution of the last Parliament. Raym. 381.

A prorogation of Parliament is always by the King, and in this case the sessions must begin de novo. An adjournment is by each House, and the sessions continues notwithstanding such adjournment. 1 Mod. 242. By a prorogation of Parliament, there is a session; and every several session of Parliament is in law a several Parliament: though if it be only an adjournment, there is no session; and when a Parliament is called and doth sit, but is dissolved without any act passed, or judgment given, it is no Session of Parliament, but a Convention. 4 Inst. 27. If a Parliament is assembled, and orders made, and writs of error brought in the House of Peers, and several bills agreed on, but none signed; this is but a Convention, and no Parliament, or Session of Parliament: but every session, in which the King signs a bill, is a Parliament: and so every Parliament is a session. 1 Rol. Rep. 29: Hut. 61.

The Parliament from the first day of sitting is called the first Session of Parliament, &c. Raym. 120. And the Courts of justice ex officio are to take notice of the beginning, prorogation, and ending of every Parliament; also of all general statutes. 1 Lev. 296: Hob. 111.

On prorogation, such bills as have passed, not having received the royal assent, must fall; for there can be no act of Parliament, without consent of the Lords and Commons, and the royal fiat of the King, giving his consent personally, or by commission.

It was heretofore provided by a clause in several militia acts, that if at the time of an actual rebellion or imminent danger of invasion, the Parliament should be separated, by adjournment or prorogation, the King might call them together, by proclamation, on fourteen days' notice of the time appointed for their re-assembling; but that provision is materially altered by stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 107. It has been held, that after a prorogation, the King cannot summon a Parliament, except under the circumstances, and in the manner described in that statute, before the day to which it was last prorogued; and it is understood that when a Parliament is prorogued to a certain day, they do not meet on that day; unless it be particularly declared, by the proclamation that gives notice of the prorogation, that they shall meet for the dispatch of business; and when it has not been prorogued by such a proclamation, and it is intended that Parliament shall actually sit, it is the established practice to issue a proclamation, to give notice that it is for the dispatch of business; and this proclamation, unless upon some urgent occasion, bears date at least forty days before the meeting. 2 Hats. 239. But by § 95, of the said stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 107, in all cases of actual invasion, or imminent danger of it, and in cases of rebellion or insurrection, the King having first communicated the occasion to Parliament, if sitting, and if no Parliament be sitting, having notified the occasion by proclamation, may order the militia to be called out and embodied. And wherever this is done, if the Parliament be adjourned or prorogued, he shall convene them within fourteen days. Pursuant to this statute the Parliament was called together, and met on the 13th of December 1792; the only doubt, and that entertained by very few persons, being at that time, whether the measure was justified by any actual insurrection. See this Dictionary, title Militia.

A Dissolution is the civil death of the Parliament; and this may be effected three ways: First, By the King's will, expressed either in person or by representation. For, as the King has the sole right of convening the Parliament, so also it is a branch of the royal Prerogative, that he may (whenever he pleases) prorogue the Parliament for a time, or put a final period to its existence. If nothing had a right to prorogue or dissolve a Parliament but itself, it might happen to become perpetual. And this would be extremely dangerous, if at any time it should attempt to incroach upon the Executive Power: as was fatally experienced by the unfortunate King Charles the First; who, having unadvisedly passed an act to continue the Parliament then in being, till such time as it should please to dissolve itself, at last fell a sacrifice to that inordinate power, which he himself had consented to give them. It is therefore extremely necessary that the Crown should be empowered to regulate the duration of these assemblies, under the limitations which the English constitution has prescribed: so that, on the one hand, they may frequently and regugularly come together, for the dispatch of business and redress of grievances; and may not, on the other, even with the consent of the Crown, be continued to an inconvenient or unconstitutional length.

A Parliament, it hath been said, ought not to be dissolved as long as any bill remains undiscussed; and proclamation must be made in the Parliament, that if any person have any petition, he shall come in and be heard, and if no answer be given, it is intended the Public are satisfied. Lex Constitutionis 157.

Secondly, A Parliament may be dissolved by the demise of the Crown. This dissolution formerly happened immediately upon the death of the reigning sovereign: for he being considered in law as the head of the Parliament, (caput, principium, et finis,) that failing, the whole body was held to be extinct. But, the calling a new Parliament immediately on the inauguration of the successor being found inconvenient, and dangers being apprehended from having no Parliament in being, in case of a disputed succession, it was enacted by stats. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 15: 6 Ann. c. 7, that the Parliament in being shall continue for six months after the death of any King or Queen, unless sooner prorogued or dissolved by the Successor: that, if the Parliament be, at the time of the King's death, separated by adjournment or prorogation, it shall notwithstanding assemble immediately: and that, if no Parliament is then in being, which has met and sat, the members of the last Parliament shall assemble, and be again a Parliament.

Lastly, a Parliament may be dissolved or expire by length of time. For if either the Legislative Body were perpetual; or might last for the life of the Prince who convened them, as formerly; and were so to be supplied, by occasionally filling the vacancies with new representatives; in these cases, if it were once corrupted, the evil would be past all remedy; but when different bodies succeed each other, if the people see cause to disapprove of the present, they may rectify its faults in the next. A Legislative Assembly also, which is sure to be separated again, (whereby its members will themselves become private men, and subject to the full extent of the laws which they have enacted for others,) will think themselves bound, in interest as well as duty, to make only such laws as are good. The utmost extent of time that the same Parliament was allowed to sit, by stat. 6 W. & M. c. 2, was three years; after the expiration of which, reckoning from the return of the first summons, the Parliament was to have no longer continuance. But by stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 38, (in order, professedly, to prevent the great and continued expences of frequent elections, and the violent heats and animosities consequent thereupon, and for the peace and security of the government then just recovering from the late rebellion,) this term was prolonged to seven years: and, what alone is an instance of the vast authority of Parliament, the very same House, that was chosen for three years, enacted its own continuance for seven. So that, as our Constitution now stands, the Parliament must expire, or die a natural death, at the end of every seventh year, if not sooner dissolved by the royal prerogative; as it generally is, in the course of every five or six years.

This Septennial Act has been thought by some to be an unconstitutional exertion of the authority of Parliament; and the reason given is, that those who had a power delegated to them for three years only, could have no right to extend that term to seven years. But this, says Mr. Christian, appears to be a fallacious mode of considering the subject. Before the Triennial Act, 6 W. & M. c. 2, the duration of Parliament was only limited by the pleasure or death of the King; and it never can be supposed that the next, or any succeeding, Parliament had not the power of repealing the Triennial Act; and if that had been done, then as before, they might have sat 17 or 70 years. It is certainly true, that the simple repeal of a former statute would have extended their continuance much beyond what was done by the Septennial Act. 1 Comm. c. 2. ad fin. in n. To this may be added an observation, which seems unaccountably to have been passed over in silence by the defenders (and therefore no wonder by the accusers) of the Septennial Act; namely, that it is not true in fact, as the argument is usually put, that a Parliament chosen for three years continued themselves for seven, since it was only one part of the Parliament, the House of Commons, which was chosen for any limited time; and the Septennial Act was the act of the whole Legislature. Will it be thought too great a presumption to remark, that it is not quite accurate in Blackstone, to say, that that House enacted its own continuance for seven years? as no Enactment on the subject could take place, till the sanction of the Lords, and finally that of the King, was obtained.

Parliamentum Diabolicum. A Parliament held at Coventry, 38 H. 6, wherein Edward Earl of March, (afterwards King Edw. IV,) and many of the chief nobility were attainted, was so called; but the acts then made were annulled by the succeeding Parliament. Holingshed's Chron.

Parliamentum Indoctorum, the Lack-learning Parliament, A Parliament held 6 H. 4, whereunto by special precept to the Sheriffs in their several counties, no lawyer, or person skilled in the law, was to come. See title Parliament VI. 2.

Parliamentum Insanum, A Parliament assembled at Oxford, anno 41 H. 3, so stiled, from the madness of their proceedings; and because the Lords came with armed men to it, and contentions grew very high between the King, Lords, and Commons, whereby many extraordinary things were done. 4 Inst.

Parliamentum Religiosorum. In most convents, they had a common room into which the brethren withdrew for conversation; and the conference there had was termed Parliamentum. Mat. Paris. The abbot of Croyland used to call a Parliament of his monks, to consult about the affairs of his monastery: and at this day, the Societies of the two Temples, or Inns of Court, call that assembly of the Benchers or Governors, a Parliament; wherein they confer upon the common affairs of their several Houses. Crompt. Jurisd. 1.

PAROL, Word of Mouth; See titles Agreement; Fraud; Assumpsit; Will; Trust.

As to what things may be done by Parol without deed, the following determinations may deserve notice.

An use will not pass by Parol without deed; but Ch. J. Pemberton said, it would be a good trust or Chancery use, if for money. 2 Show. 156. A Parol release is good to discharge a debt by simple contract. Arg. 2 Show. 417.

A promise merely executory on both parts; as if I promise B. 5*s.* if he goes to Paul's, before B. goes, I may discharge him, and so shall discharge myself of payment of the 5*s.* for no debt was yet due, nor any thing executed on either side. 3 Lev. 238. An agreement in writing, since the statute of frauds and perjuries, may be discharged by Parol. Vern. 240. A rent assigned in lieu of dower may be by Parol without deed, though it be a freehold created de novo: and though a rent lies in grant; because this is not properly a grant, but an appointment. 12 Mod. 201. Lessee for years surrendered to the lessor by Parol reserving rent; adjudged this was a good reservation upon the contract, and that an action of debt would lie for the rent after the first day of payment incurred, though the reservation was by way of contract, and without any deed. 3 Salk. 312. pl. 7.

If one has a bill of exchange, he may authorise another to indorse his name upon it, by Parol; and when that is done, it is all one as if he had done it himself. 12 Mod. 564. See title Bill of Exchange.

An insurance was made from Archangel to the Downs, and from the Downs to Leghorn, but there was a Parol agreement at the same time, that the policy should not commence till the ship came to such a place, and it was held, that the Parol agreement should avoid (or defeat) the writing; cited per Holt Ch. J. as adjudged in Pemberton's time. 2 Salk. 444, 445. See title Insurance.

If a thing is granted by a writing, which is grantable by Parol, it may be revoked by Parol. Vide 10 Mod. 74.

Deputation of an office is in its own nature grantable by Parol; and therefore though it should happen to be granted by writing, yet since it is in itself grantable by Parol, it may be revoked by Parol. 10 Mod. 74.

Parols, or Pleadings; Are the mutual altercations between the plaintiff and defendant; which at present are set down and delivered into the proper office in writing, though formerly they were usually put in by their counsel ore tenus, or viva voce, in Court, and then minuted down by the chief clerks, or prothonotaries; whence in our old law French the pleadings are frequently denominated the Parol. 3 Comm. 293. See title Pleadings.

It is sometimes joined with lease, as lease Parol, i. e. lease per Parol, a lease by word of mouth, to distinguish it from a lease in writing. Cowell.

Parol Arrest, Any Justice of Peace may, by word of mouth, authorise any one to arrest another who is guilty of a breach of the peace in his presence, &c. Dalt. 117. See title Arrest.

Parol Demurrer, Is a privilege allowed an infant, who is sued concerning lands which came to him by descent; and the Court thereupon will give judgment quod loquela predicta remaneat, quousque the infant comes to the age of twenty-one years. And where the age is granted on Parol Demurrer, (which may happen on the suggestion of either party, 3 Comm. 300,) the writ doth not abate, but the plea is put sine die, until the infant is of full age; and then there shall be a re-summons. 2 Lill. Abr. 283: 2 Inst. 258: Rast Entr. 363.

In Parol Demurrer, when it may be had, if two are vouched, and there is Parol Demurrer for the nonage of the one; it shall be for the other also. 45 Ed. 3. 23. But by the statutes Westm. 1; 3 Ed. 1. c. 46, and of Gloucester, 6 Ed 1. c. 2, in writs of entry sur disseisin in some particular cases, and in actions ancestrel brought by an infant, the Parol shall not demur; otherwise he might be deforced of his whole property, and even want a maintenance till he came of age. 6 Rep. 3, 5. So likewise in a writ of dower the heir shall not have his age; for it is necessary that the widow's claim be immediately determined, else she may want a present subsistence. 1 Roll. Abr. 137. Nor shall an infant patron have it in a quare impedit, since the law holds it necessary and expedient, that the church be immediately filled. 1 Roll. Abr. 138.

Parol Evidence; See Evidence II.

PARRICIDE, Patricida.] He who kills his father or mother. Law Lat. Dict. It is also used for the crime of killing.

By the Roman law, Parricide, or the murder of one's parents or children, was punished in a much severer manner than any other kind of homicide. After being scourged, the delinquents were sewed up in a leather sack, with a live dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and so cast into the sea. Solon, it is true, in his laws, made none against Parricide; apprehending it impossible that any one should be guilty of so unnatural a barbarity. And the Persians, according to Herodotus, entertained the same notion, when they adjudged all persons who killed their reputed parents to be bastards. And, upon some such reason as this, must we account for the omission of an exemplary punishment for this crime in our English laws; which treat it no otherwise than as simple murder, unless the child was also the servant of his parent. 1 Hal. P. C. 380.

For though the breach of natural relation is unobserved, yet the breach of civil or ecclesiastical connections, when coupled with murder, denominates it a new offence; no less than a species of treason, called parva proditio, or petit treason; which, however, is nothing else but an aggravated degree of murder; although, on account of the violation of private allegiance, it is stigmatized as an inferior species of treason. And thus, in the ancient Gothic constitution, we find the breach both of natural and civil relations, ranked in the same class with crimes against the State and Sovereign. 4 Comm. 202, 3. See title Treason.

PARSON.

Persona Ecclesiæ.] One that hath full possession of all the rights of a parochial church. He is called Parson, Persona, because, by his person the Church, which is an invisible body, is represented; and he is in himself a body-corporate, in order to protect and defend the rights of the Church (which he personates) by a perpetual succession. 1 Inst. 300. It has been also said, that he is called Parson, as he is bound, by virtue of his office, in propriâ personâ servire Deum. Fleta, l. 9. c. 18. He is sometimes called the Rector or Governor of the Church; but the appellation of Parson is the most legal, as well as the most beneficial and honourable, title that a parish priest can enjoy; because such an one, (as Coke observes,) and he only, is said vicem seu personam ecclesiæ gerere. 1 Comm. c. 11. p. 384.

The word Parson, in a large sense, includes all clergymen having spiritual presentments. And there may be two Parsons in one church; one of the one moiety, and the other of the other; and a part of the church and town allotted to each: and there may be two, that make but one Parson in a church, presented by one patron. 1 Inst. 17, 18.

A Parson hath the entire fee of his church; and where it is said he hath not the right of fee-simple, that is understood as to bringing a temporal writ of right. Cro. Car. 582. And in the time of the Parson, the patron hath nothing to do with the church; but if the Parson wastes the inheritance thereof to his own private use, in cutting trees, &c. his patron may have a prohibition, so that, to some purposes, he hath an interest during the Parson's time. 11 H. 6. 4: 11 Rep. 49.

I. The Distinction between a Parson (or Rector); and a Vicar.

II. The Method of becoming a Parson or Vicar; and of their Qualifications and Duties.

III. How one may cease to be a Parson or Vicar.

I. Though a Parson has regularly during his life the freehold in himself of the parsonage house, the glebe, the tithes, and other dues: yet these are sometimes appropriated; that is to say, the benefice is perpetually annexed to some spiritual corporation, either sole or aggregate, being the patron of the living; which the law esteems equally capable of providing for the service of the church, as any single private clergyman. See this Dictionary, title Appropriation.

The ancient appropriating Corporations, or Religious Houses, were wont to depute one of their own body to perform divine service, and administer the sacraments in those parishes, of which the Society thus became the Parson. This officiating minister was in reality no more than a curate, deputy, or vicegerent of the appropriator, and therefore called Vicarius or Vicar. His stipend was at the discretion of the Appropriator; who was however bound of common right to find somebody, qui illi de temporalibus, poralibus, episcopo de spiritualibus, debeat respondere. Seld. Tith. c. 11. 1. But this was done in so scandalous a manner, and the parishes suffered so much by the neglect of the Appropriators, that the Legislature was forced to interpose: and, accordingly, it is enacted by stat. 15 R. 2. c. 6, that in all appropriations of churches, the diocesan bishop shall ordain (in proportion to the value of the church) a competent sum to be distributed among the poor parishioners annually; and that the vicarage shall be sufficiently endowed. It seems the parish were frequently sufferers, not only by the want of divine service, but also by withholding those alms, for which, among other purposes, the payment of tithes was originally imposed: and therefore, in this act, a pension is directed to be distributed among the poor parochians, as well as a sufficient stipend to the Vicar. But he, being liable to be removed at the pleasure of the Appropriator, was not likely to insist too rigidly on the legal sufficiency of the stipend; and therefore, by stat. 4 Hen. 4. c. 12, it is ordained, that the Vicar shall be a secular person, not a member of any religious house; that he shall be Vicar perpetual, not removable at the caprice of the monastery; and that he shall be canonically instituted and inducted, and be sufficiently endowed, at the discretion of the Ordinary, for these three express purposes: to do divine service; to inform the people; and to keep hospitality.

From this statute we may date the origin of the present Vicarages; for, before this time, the Vicar was nothing more than a temporary curate; and when the church was appropiated to a monastery, he was generally one of their own body; that is one of the regular clergy; for the monks, who lived secundum regulas of their respective houses or societies, were denominated regular clergy, in contradiction to the parochial clergy, who performed their ministry in the world, in seculo; and who, from thence, were called secular clergy. All the tithes or dues of the church of common right belong to the Rector; or to the Appropriator or Impropriator, who have the same rights as the Rector; and the Vicar is entitled only to that portion which is expressed in his endowment; or what his predecessors have immemorially enjoyed by prescription, which is equivalent to a grant or endowment. These endowments frequently invest the Vicar with some part of the great tithes; therefore the words rectorial and vicarial tithes have no definite signification: But great and small tithes are technical terms; and which are, or ought to be, accurately defined and distinguished by the law. 1 Comm. c. 11, in n. See this Dict. title Tithes.

The endowments, in consequence of these statutes, have usually been by a portion of the glebe, or land, belonging to the Parsonage, and a particular share of the tithes, which the Appropriators found it most troublesome to collect, and which are therefore generally called privy or small tithes; the greater, or predial, tithes being still reserved to their own use. But one and the same rule was not observed in the endowment of all vicarages Hence some are more liberally, and some more scantily, endowed: and hence the tithes of many things, as wood in particular, are in some parishes rectorial, and in some vicarial, tithes. 1 Comm. c. 11.

The distinction therefore of a Parson and Vicar is this: The Parson has for the most part the whole right to all the ecclesiastical dues in his parish; but a Vicar has generally an Appropriator over him, entitled to the best part of the profits, to whom he is in effect perpetual curate, with a standing salary. Though in some places the vicarage has been considerably augmented by a large share of the great tithes; which augmentations were greatly assisted by stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 8, enacted in favour of poor Vicars and Curates; which rendered such temporary augmentations (when made by the appropriators) perpetual.

A Vicar indeed must necessarily have an Appropriator over him, or a sinecure Rector, who in some books is considered as, and called, an Appropriator Of benefices, some have never been appropriated; consequently, in those there can be no Vicar, and the incumbent is Rector, and entitled to all the dues of the church. Some were appropriated to secular ecclesiastical corporations, which appropriations still exist, except perhaps some few which may have been dissolved; others were appropriated to the Houses of the regular clergy; all which appropriations, at the dissolution of monasteries, were transferred to the Crown; and, in the hands of the King or his grantees, are now called Impropriations; but in some appropriated churches no perpetual Vicar has ever been endowed; in that case, the officiating minister is appointed by the Appropriator or Impropriator, and is called a perpetual Curate. 1 Comm. c. 11. in n. See further titles Vicar; Vicarage.

II. The method of becoming a Parson or Vicar is much the same. To both there are four requisites necessary: holy orders; presentation; institution; and induction. The method of conferring the holy orders of deacon and priest, according to the liturgy and canons, is foreign to the present purpose, any farther than as they are necessary requisites to make a complete Parson or Vicar. See 2 Burn. Eccl. Law 103. By Common Law, a Deacon, of any age, might be instituted and inducted to a parsonage or vicarage; but it was ordained by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 12, that no person under 23 years of age, and in deacon's orders, should be presented to any benefice with cure; and if he were not ordained Priest within one year after his induction, he should be ipso facto deprived: and now, by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4, no person is capable to be admitted to any benefice, unless he hath been first ordained a priest; and then he is, in the language of the law, A Clerk in orders. But if he obtains orders, or a licence to preach, by money or corrupt practices, (which seems to be the true, though not the common, notion of simony,) the person giving such orders forfeits 40*l.* and the person receiving 10*l.* and is incapable of any ecclesiastical preferment for seven years afterwards. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6: and see further this Dictionary, title Ordination.

Any Clerk may be presented to a parsonage or vicarage; that is, the patron, to whom the advowson of the church belongs, may offer his Clerk to the Bishop of the diocese to be instituted. A layman also may be presented; but he must take Priest's orders before his admission. 1 Burn. Eccl. Law 103. As to Advowsons, or the right of presentation, which are a species of private property, see this Dictionary, title Advowson.

But when a clerk is presented, the Bishop may refuse him upon many accounts. As, if the patron is excommunicated, and remains in contempt forty days. 2 Rol. Abr. 355. Or if the clerk be unfit; Glanv. l. 13. c. 20; which which unfitness is of several kinds. First, with regard to his person; as if he be a bastard; (though that incapacity seems now exploded, see Bastard;) an outlaw, an excommunicate, an alien, under age, or the like. 2 Roll. Abr. 356: 2 Inst. 632: Stats. 3 Ric. 2. c. 3: 7 Ric. 2. c. 12. Next, with regard to his faith or morals; as for any particular heresy, or vice that is malum in se: but if the Bishop alleges only in generals, as that he is schismaticus inveteratus, or objects a fault that is malum prohibitum, merely as haunting taverns, playing at unlawful games, or the like; it is not good cause of refusal. 5 Rep. 58. Or, lastly, the clerk may be unfit to discharge the pastoral office, for want of learning. In any of which cases the Bishop may refuse the clerk. In case the refusal is for heresy, schism, inability of learning, or other matter of ecclesiastical cognizance, there the Bishop must give notice to the patron of such his cause of refusal, who, being usually a layman, is not supposed to have knowledge of it; else he cannot present by lapse: but, if the cause be temporal, there he is not bound to give notice. 2 Inst. 632. See title Advowson II.

If an action at law be brought by the Patron against the Bishop for refusing his clerk, the Bishop must assign the cause. If the cause be of a temporal nature and the fact admitted, (as, for instance, outlawry,) the judges of the King's Courts must determine its validity, or whether it be sufficient cause of refusal; but if the fact be denied, it must be determined by a jury. If the cause be of a spiritual nature, (as, heresy, particularly alledged,) the fact, if denied, shall also be determined by a jury; and if the fact be admitted or found, the Court, upon consultation, and advice of learned divines, shall decide its sufficiency. 2 Inst. 632. If the cause be want of learning, the Bishop need not specify in what points the clerk is deficient, but only allege, that he is deficient; for the stat. 9 Edw. 2. st. 1. c. 13, is express, that the examination of the fitness of a person presented to a benefice belongs to the ecclesiastical judge. 5 Rep. 58: 3 Lev. 313. But because it would be nugatory in this case to demand the reason of refusal from the Ordinary, if the patron were bound to abide by his determination, who has already pronounced his clerk unfit; therefore, if the Bishop returns the clerk to be minus sufficiens in literaturâ, the Court shall write to the Metropolitan, to re-examine him, and certify his qualifications; which certificate of the Archbishop is final. 2 Inst. 632.

If the Bishop hath no objections, but admits the patron's presentation, the clerk so admitted is next to be instituted by him; which is a kind of investiture of the spiritual part of the benefice; for by institution the care of the souls of the parish is committed to the charge of the clerk. When a Vicar is instituted, he (besides the usual forms) takes, if required by the Bishop, an oath of perpetual residence; for the maxim of law is, that vicarius non habet vicarium: and, as the non-residence of the Appropriators was the cause of the perpetual establishment of vicarages, the law judges it very improper for them to defeat the end of their constitution, and by absence to create the very mischief which they were appointed to remedy; especially as, if any profits are to arise from putting in a curate and living at a distance from the parish, the Appropriator, who is the real Parson, has undoubtedly the elder title to them. And it appears that the Bishop cannot dispense with the Vicar's oath, which is, that he will be resident upon his vicarage, unless dispensed withal by his diocesan. 1 Burn. Eccl. Law 148.

When the Ordinary is also the patron, and confers the living, the presentation and institution are one and the same act, and are called a Collation to a benefice. See title Advowson I. By institution or collation the church is full, so that there can be no fresh presentation till another vacancy, at least in the case of a common patron; but the church is not full against the King, till induction: nay, even if a clerk is instituted upon the King's presentation, the Crown may revoke it before induction, and present another clerk. Co. Litt. 344. Upon institution also the clerk may enter on the parsonage house and glebe, and take the tithes; but he cannot grant or let them, or bring an action for them, till induction. 1 Comm. c. 11. p. 391. See further this Dictionary, title Institution.

Induction is performed by a mandate from the Bishop to the Archdeacon, who usually issues out a precept to other clergymen to perform it for him. It is done by giving the clerk corporal possession of the church, as by holding the ring of the door, tolling a bell, or the like; and is a form required by law, with intent to give all the parishioners due notice, and sufficient certainty of their new minister, to whom their tithes are to be paid. This therefore is the investiture of the temporal part of the benefice, as institution is of the spiritual. See further title Induction. And when a clerk is thus presented, instituted, and inducted into a rectory, he is then, and not before, in full and complete possession, and is called in law persona impersonata, or Parson imparsonee. Co. Litt. 300.

The Duties of a Parson or Vicar, are principally of ecclesiastical cognizance; see this Dictionary, title Preaching; those only excepted which are laid upon him by statute. And those are indeed so numerous, that it is impracticable to recite them here with any tolerable conciseness or accuracy; they are to be gathered chiefly from such authors as have compiled treatises expressly upon this subject; though these, it is remarked by Blackstone, are not very much to be relied on. The article of Residence may here be slightly noticed; upon the supposition of which the law doth stile every parochial minister an incumbent. By stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 13, persons wilfully absenting themselves from their benefices, for one month together, or two months in the whole, in the year, incur for every month a penalty of 5*l.* to the King, and 5*l.* to any person that will sue for the same; except chaplains to the King, or others therein mentioned, during their attendance in the household of such as retain them: (See title Chaplain:) and also except all Heads of Houses, magistrates, and professors in the Universities; (viz. the Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor, Commissary, Doctors of the Chair, and Readers of Lectures;) and all students under forty years of age residing there, bona fide for study. Legal residence is not only in the parish, but also in the parsonage house, if there be one: for it hath been resolved, that the statute intended residence, not only for serving the cure, and for hospitality; but also for maintaining the house, that the successor also may keep hospitality there. 6 Rep. 21. And if there be no parsonage house, it hath been holden that the incumbent is bound to hire one, in the same parish, to answer the purposes of residence.

For the more effectual promotion of this important duty of residence in the parochial clergy, a provision is made by the stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 53, for raising money upon ecclesiastical benefices, and to be expended in rebuilding, or repairing, the houses belonging to such benefices. This statute enables the Incumbent, when there is no parsonage house, or where it is so ruinous as not to be repaired with one year's income of the living, to borrow, with the consent of the Patron and Ordinary, upon mortgage of the revenue of the living, a sum not exceeding two years' clear value, to be laid out in repairs, building, or the purchase of a house. The interest of which was, under this statute, to be repaid by the Incumbent yearly, and 5*l.* per cent. of the principal, or 10*l.* per cent. if he did not reside 20 weeks within a year. And where the income is 100*l.* a year, and the incumbent does not reside 20 weeks within a year, the patron and the Ordinary are empowered to undertake this without his consent. The Governors of Queen Anne's bounty may lend money upon such mortgages at 4*l.* per cent. interest, and 100*l.* upon a living under 40*l.* a year, without any interest. Colleges and other Corporations may lend money for this purpose upon their own livings without interest. And the statute contains the forms and modes of proceeding to fulfil its various purposes.

Under this statute the money borrowed was directed to be discharged by paying 5*l.* per cent. yearly, upon the principal remaining due; the consequence was, that it would have been diminished by decreasing instalments; which would have produced an infinite series; so that the whole could never have been paid. And it required another statute, which was passed merely for the purpose, to correct this palpable blunder; by this latter statute the original sum must be paid, as stated, at the farthest, within 20 years. See stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 66.

III. Although there is but one way, whereby one may become a Parson or Vicar; there are many circumstances, besides death, by which one may cease to be so.

By Cession, in taking another benefice. For by stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 13, if any one having a benefice of 8*l.* per annum, or upward, (according to the present valuation in the King's books, Cro. Car. 456,) accepts any other, the first shall be adjudged void, unless he obtains a dispensation; which no one is entitled to have, but the chaplains of the King and others therein mentioned; the brethren and sons of Lords and Knights; (but not of baronets, as that dignity did not exist at the time of the stat. 21 H. 8;) and doctors and bachelors of divinity and law, admitted by the universities of this realm. See this Dictionary, titles Chaplain; Plurality. And a vacancy thus made, for want of a dispensation, is called Cession. See this Dictionary, title Cession.

By Consecration; for when a Clerk is promoted to a bishoprick, all his other preferments are void, the instant that he is consecrated. See this Dictionary, title Bishops. But there is a method, by the favour of the Crown, of holding such livings in commendam. Commenda, or ecclesia commendata, is a living commended by the Crown to the care of a clerk, to hold till a proper pastor is provided for it. This may be temporary for one, two, or three years; or perpetual; being a kind of dispensation to avoid the vacancy of the living, and is called a commenda retinere. There is also a commenda recipere, which is to take a benefice de novo, in the Bishop's own gift, or the gift of some other patron consenting to the same; and this is the same to him as institution and induction are to another clerk. See further this Dictionary, title Commendam.

By Resignation. But this is of no avail, till accepted by the Ordinary; into whose hands the resignation must be made. Cro. Jac. 198. See further this Dictionary, title Resignation.

By Deprivation; either, first, by sentence declaratory in the Ecclesiastical Courts, for fit and sufficient causes allowed by the Common Law; such as attainder of treason or felony, Dyer 108: Jenk. 210; or conviction of other infamous crime in the King's Courts; for heresy, infidelity, (Fitz. Ab. tit. Trial 54,) gross immorality, and the like; or, secondly, in pursuance of divers penal statutes, which declare the benefice void, for some nonfeasance or neglect, or else some mal-feasance or crime. As, for Simony; by stats. 31 Eliz. c. 6: 12 Ann st. 2. c. 12; see title Simony:— for maintaining any doctrine in derogation of the King's supremacy, or of the thirty-nine articles, or of the Book of Common Prayer; by stats. 1 Eliz. cc. 1, 2: 13 Eliz. c. 12:—for neglecting, after institution, to read the liturgy and articles in the church, or make the declarations against popery, or take the abjuration oath; stats. 13 Eliz. c. 12: 13 & 14 C. 2. c. 4: 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 6:—for using any other form of prayer than the liturgy of the church of England; stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2:—or for absenting himself sixty days in one year from a benefice belonging to a popish patron, to which the clerk was presented by either of the universities; stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 26; see title Papist: in all which and similar cases the benefice is ipso facto void, without any formal sentence of deprivation. 6 Rep. 29, 30: 1 Comm. c. 11.

For further matter relating to this subject, see this Dictionary, titles Church; Clergy; Curate; Quare Impedit; Tithes, &c.

PARSONAGE, Personatus, Personagium.] Is sometimes taken for a dignitary in a church, and sometimes for the benefice itself. Cowell.

Parsonage, or rectory, is a parish church, endowed with a house, glebe, tithes, &c.; or a certain portion of lands, tithes, and offerings, established by law, for the maintenance of the minister who hath the cure of souls: and though properly a Parsonage or rectory doth consist of glebe land and tithes; yet it may be a rectory, though it have no glebe, but the church and church-yard: also there may be neither glebe nor tithes, but annual payments in lieu thereof. Pars. Counc. 190. The rights to the Parsonage and church lands are of several natures; for the Parson hath a right to the possession; the Patron hath the right of presentation; and the Ordinary a right of investiture, &c. But the rights of the Patron and Ordinary are only collateral rights; neither of them being capable of possessing or retaining the church themselves; though no charge can be laid on the church or Parsonage, but by the consent and agreement of all of them. Hughes's Pars. Law 188. See titles Parson; Appropriation.

PARSON MORTAL. The rector of a church instituted and inducted, for his own life, was called Persona mortalis: and any collegiate or conventional body, to whom the church was for every appropriated, was termed Persona immortalis. Cartular. Rading. MS. f. 182. See titles Parson; Appropriation.

PARTES FINIS NIHIL HABUERUNT, &c. Is an exception taken against a fine levied. 3 Rep. 88. See title Fine of Lands.

PARTICIPATIO, Is the charity so called, by which the poor are made participes of other men's goods. We read it in several places in the Monast. 2 tom. page 321.

PARTIES, Are those who are named in a deed or fine, as parties to it; as those who levy the fine, and to whom the fine is levied: so they who make any deed, and they to whom it is made, are called Parties to the deed. Cowell. See titles Deeds; Fine of Lands.

PARTITION, Partitio] The dividing land descended by the Common Law, or custom, among co-heirs or parceners, where there are two at least. In Kent, where the land is of gavelkind nature, they call their Partition shifting, from the Saxon shiftan, to divide. In Latin it is called dercissere. Partition also may be made by joint-tenants, or tenants in common, by assent, deed, or writ. See titles Joint-tenants; Parceners; Tenants in Common.

PARTITIONE FACIENDA, mentioned in stat. 31 H. 8. c. 1.] A writ that lies for those who hold lands or tenements pro indiviso, and would sever to every one his part; against those who refuse to join in Partition, as coparceners, tenants in gavelkind, &c. Old. Nat. Brev. 142: F. N. B. 61. See title Parceners; Joint-tenants; Tenants in Common.

PARTNERS, Are where two or more persons agree to come into any trade or bargain in certain proportions agreed upon. If there are two partners in trade, and judgment is recovered against one of them, his moiety of the goods in partnership only, shall be taken in execution. Show. 174. See title Bankrupt IV. 7.

PART-OWNERS, Those who are concerned in ship matters, and have joint shares therein. And when there are Part-owners of a ship, the majority may fit her out, without consent of the rest; and if they do, such majority run all hazard, and are to partake of the profits. Show. 13, 30. Action lies as well against the part-owners of a ship, for the loss or spoiling of goods delivered to the master, as against the master; for as the master of a ship is chargeable in respect of his wages, so are Part-owners in respect of the freight: but the action against the Part-owners must be brought against all of them, or defendants may take advantage of it, by pleading in abatement, &c. Show. 30, 105: 3 Lev. 259. See title Insurance.

PARTY-WALLS; See titles Fire; London.

PARVISE, Seldon (in his Notes on Fortescue, c. 51.) defines it to be, an afternoon's exercise, or moot for the instruction of young students; bearing the same name originally with the Parvisiæ at Oxford. Seld. Notes, page 56. Chaucer mentions it in one of his prologues.

PASCHA CLAUSUM, The octaves of Easter or Low Sunday, which closes that solemnity: and die (sali) post Pascha Clausum, is a date in some of our old deeds. The first statute of Westminster, anno 3 Ed. 1, is said to be made the Monday after Easter week; post de la cluse de Pasche, &c.

PASCHA FLORIDUM, The Sunday before Easter, called Palm Sunday; when the proper hymn or gospel sung was occurrunt turbæ cum floribus & palmis, &c. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS. 75.

PASCHAL RENTS, Rents or yearly tributes paid by the clergy to the Bishop or Archdeacon, at their Easter visitations.

PASCUA, A particular meadow or pasture ground, set apart to feed cattle. See Lindwood. Prov. Ang. l. 3. c. 18: and post, Pastura.

PASCUAGE, pascuagium, Fr. pascage.] The grasing or pasturing of cattle. Mon. Angl. ii. 23. The same with pannage.

PASNAGE, And pathnage in woods, &c. See title Pannage.

PASSAGE, passagium.] Is properly over water, as way is over land; it relates to the sea, and great rivers, and is a French word signifying transitum. In stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 7, it is used for the hire a man pays for being transported over sea, or any river: and it is mentioned among customs and duties, as theolonio, Passagio, & lastagio. Chart. Hen. 1.

All persons shall have free passage on the river Severn; and if any be disturbed, he may have his remedy by action. Stat. Antiq. 9 H. 6. c. 5. There were also other statutes passed for regulating the passage of this river, and preventing disorders therein by the Welch, &c. 19 Hen. 7. c. 18: 26 Hen. 8. c. 5.

Passagio is also the name of a writ directed to the keepers of the ports to permit a man to pass over sea, who has the King's leave, Reg. Orig. 193. The prices of passage at Dover, &c. were limited by stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 8. None to pass out of the realm without the King's licence, Stat. 5 R. 2. st. 1. c. 2. See titles King; Ne exeat regno. Passage from Kent to Calais restrained to Dover. Stat. an. Ed. 4. c. 10.

PASSAGIUM, Or Passagium Regis. A voyage or expedition to the Holy Land, when made by the Kings of England in person. Cowell.

PASSATOR, He who has the interest or command of the passage of a river, or the lord to whom a duty is paid for passage. Cowell.

PASSIAGIARIUS, A ferry-man. Thorn's Chronicle, in an. 1287.

PASS-PORT, A compound of two French words, viz. passer, transire, and port, portus, a haven. It signifies a licence, for the safe passage of any man from one place to another. See stat. 2 E. 6. c. 2; and titles Alien IV; Safe conducts.

PASTITIUM, A pasture field. Domesday, per Gale 761.

PASTORAL STAFF. The form of it was streight which signified rectum regimen. All the top part of it was crooked, and the other part sharp: the crooked signified, that the bishop presided over the people; and the sharp signified, to punish the stubborn. Cowell.

PASTURE, Is any place generally where cattle may feed; and feeding for cattle is called Pasture, wherefore feeding grounds are called common of Pasture: but common

common of Pasture is properly a right of putting beasts to pasture in another man's soil; and in this there is an interest of the lord and of the tenant. Wood's Inst. 196, 197. For in those waste grounds, which are usually called Commons, the property of the soil is generally in the lord of the manor; as in common fields it is in the particular tenants. And common of Pasture is either appendant, appurtenant, because of vicinage, or in gross. See title Common.

PASTUS, The procuration, or provision, which tenants were bound to make for their lords at certain times, or as often as they made a progress to their lands: This, in many places, was turned into money. Hoc modo per ævum liberabo à Pastu Regis & Principum. Chart. Walgasi Regis Merciorum in Mon. Angl. i. 123.

PATENTEE, One to whom the King grants his letters patent. 7 Ed. 6. c. 3.

PATENTS, The King's writings, sealed with the Great Seal, having their name from being open: and they differ from writs. Crompt. Jurisd. 126. The King is to advise with his Council touching grants and Patents made of his estate, &c. And in petitions for lands, annuities, or offices, the value is to be expressed; also a former Patent is to be mentioned where the petition is for a grant in reversion, or the Patents thereupon shall be void. Stats. 1 Hen. 4. c. 6: 6 Hen. 8. c. 15.—Patents, which bear not the date and day of delivery of the King's warrants into Chancery, are not good. Stat. 18 Hen. 6. c. 1.—Where the King's Patent creates a new estate, of which the law doth not take knowledge; the Patents are void. 8 Rep. 1: 5 Rep. 93. But Patents shall not be avoided by nice constructions: if a Patent may be taken to two intents, and is good as to one, and not as to the other, it is valid. Jenk. Cent. 138. When the King would pass a freehold, it is necessary that the Patent be under the Great Seal; and it ought to be granted de advisamento of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and Lord Treasurer in the usual manner. Fitzgib. 291. See titles Grants of the King; Scire Facias.

As to Patents for new inventions, see title Monopoly. For Patents of peerage, title Peer. For Patents of precedence, title Barrister.

PATRIA, The country; the men of a neighbourhood: Thus when it is said inquiratur per patriam, a jury of the neighbourhood is meant. In like manner, Assisa vel recognitio per assisam, idem est quod recognitio Patriæ. Cowell. See titles Jury; Assise.

PATRIMONY, An hereditary estate, or right descended from ancestors. The legal endowment of a Church, or Religious House, was called ecclesiastical Patrimony; and the lands and reversions, united to the See of Rome, are called St. Peter's Patrimony. Cowell.

PATRINUS, A godfather; as Matrina is a god-mother. Ll. H. 1.

PATRITIUS, An honour conferred on men of the first quality, in the time of the English Saxon Kings. Mon Ang. i. 13.

PATRON, He who hath the disposition of an ecclesiastical benefice. See titles Advowson; Parson.

The Patron's right is the most worthy and first act and part of a promotion to a benefice, and is granted and pleaded by the name of libera dispositio ecclesiæ. Hob. 152. But during the vacancy of a church, the freehold of the glebe is not in the Patron; for it is in abeyance. 8 H. 6. 24: Litt. 144. A Patron shall not have an action for trespass done when the Church is vacant: and if a man who hath a right to glebe lands, releaseth the same to the Patron, that is not good; because the Patron has not any estate in the land. 11 H. 6. 4. If the Patron grants a rent out of a church, it is void even against himself. 38 Ed. 3. 4. See further, this Dict. titles Advowson; Parson; Vicar, &c.

PAVAGE, Pavagium.] Money paid towards paving the streets or highways. Rex concessit Pavagium villæ de Huntingdon per quinquennium. Pla. Parl. 35 Edw. 1.

PAUPER, A poor man; according to which we have a term in law, to sue in formâ pauperis. See title Costs II.

Before a person is admitted to sue in formâ pauperis, he must have counsel's hand to his petition, certifying the judge to whom the petition is directed, that he conceives the petitioner hath good cause of action; he must also annex an affidavit to his petition, that he is not worth five pounds, all his debts paid, except wearing apparel, and his right to the matter in question. Lil. Reg. 633.

None ought to be admitted to sue in formâ pauperis in an action on the case, for words. Lil. Reg. 633.

A person admitted to sue in formâ pauperis, can only sue in that cause for which he is admitted, & sic toties quoties. Lil. Reg. 633.

It seems that, after the statutes which introduced costs, neither plaintiffs nor defendants could sue or defend in formâ pauperis; for that would be a means of depriving the other party of the costs given him by statute: and as stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 12, enables persons only to sue as Paupers; and as the stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 15, excepts only plaintiffs who are Paupers from paying costs; it seems, that one cannot be admitted in a civil action to defend as a Pauper. But it hath been adjudged, that a person may be admitted to defend an indictment in formâ pauperis for a misdemeanor, such as a conspiracy, keeping a disorderly house, &c. for in such proceedings there being no costs, the judges have a discretionary power of admitting or refusing them by the Common Law. Pasch. 9 Geo. 2. The King v. Wright. See stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 8, by which, persons are allowed to defend in formâ pauperis on actions and informations relating to the Customs.

It is said, that Paupers ought not to be admitted to remove causes out of inferior Courts, but ought to satisfy themselves with the jurisdiction within which their actions properly lie. 1 Mod. 368.

By the orders of the Courts, if the party admitted to sue in formâ pauperis give any fee or reward to his counsel or attorney, or make any contract or agreement with them, he shall from thenceforth be dispaupered, and not be afterwards admitted again in that suit to prosecute in formâ pauperis. Ord. Cur. 94.

Also, if it shall be made appear to the Court, that any person prosecuting in forma pauperis hath sold or contracted for the benefit of the suit, or any part thereof, while the same depends, such cause shall be from thenceforth totally dismissed the Court. Ord. Cur. 95.

It is said, that if a pauper gives notice of trial, and does not proceed, he shall be dispaupered. 1 Salk. 506.

PAWN, Pignus.] A pledge or gage for payment of money lent: it is said (risum teneatis?) to be derived à pugno, quia res quæ pignori dantur, pugno vel manu traduntur. Lit. Dict. The party who pawns goods, hath a general general property in them; they cannot be forfeited by the Pawnee, or party who hath them in Pawn, for any offence of his; nor be taken in execution for his debt; neither may they otherwise be put in execution, till the debt for which they are pawned is satisfied. Litt. Rep. 332. For the absolute property is in another: therefore they are not alienable, nor, by consequence, forfeitable; because they cannot be forfeited without loss and danger to the absolute owner; and all qualified possessors do take the property under the restriction to preserve the property of the right owner. Bro. title Attachment in Assise 20.

If a man pawns goods for money, and afterwards a judgment is had against the Pawner at the suit of one of the creditors; the goods in the hands of the Pawnee shall not be taken in execution, until the money is paid to the Pawnee: because he had a qualified property in them, and the judgment creditor only an interest. 3 Bulst. 17. And when a person hath jewels in Pawn for a certain sum, and he who pawned them is attainted, the King shall not have the jewels unless he pay the money. Plowd. 487. For the alteration of the general property doth not alter the special property in the Pawnee. 2 H. 7. 1: 1 Bulst. 29.

If a man pledge goods and then is outlawed, he cannot redeem them; because then the absolute property is in the King; but if the outlawry is reversed, then the person is re-instated in his property, as if there had been no outlawry; and therefore may redeem them. 1 Bulst. 29.

The Pawnee of goods hath a special property in them, to detain them for his security, &c. and he may assign the Pawn over to another, subject to the same conditions: and if the Pawnee die before redeemed, his executors shall have it upon the like terms as he had it.

If goods pawned are perishable, and no day being set for payment of the money, they lie in Pawn till spoiled, without any default in him who hath them in keeping; the party who pawned them shall bear the damage; for it shall be adjudged his fault that he did not redeem them sooner: and he, to whom pawned, may have action of debt for his money. Also, if the goods are taken from him, he may have action of trespass, &c. Co. Litt. 89, 208: Yelv. 179.

Where goods are pawned for money borrowed, without a day set for redemption, they are redeemable at any time during the life of the borrower. They may be redeemed after the death of him to whom pawned; but not after the death of him who pawned the goods. 2 Cro. 245: Noy 137: 1 Bulst. 9. But where a day is appointed, and the Pawner dieth before the day, his executors may redeem the Pawn at the day, and this shall be assets in their hands. 1 Bulst. 30, 31. If goods are redeemable at a day certain, it must be strictly observed; and the Pawnee, in case of failure of payment at the day, may sell them. 1 Rol. Rep. 181, 215. But still the right owner has his redemption in equity, as in case of a mortgage. 1 Inst. 205: Shep. 106.

He, who borrows money on a Pawn, is to have the pledge again, when he repays it; or he may have action for the detainer; and his tender of the money revests the special property. 2 Cro. 244. And it hath been held, that where a broker or Pawnee refuses (upon tender of the money) to redeliver the goods in Pawn, he may be indicted; because being secretly pawned, it may be impossible to prove a delivery for want of witnesses, if trover should be brought for them. 3 Salk. 268. Adjudged, that if goods are lost, after the tender of money, the Pawnee is liable to make them good to the owner; for, after tender, he is a wrongful detainer; and he who keeps goods wrongfully must answer for them at all events; his wrongful detainer being the occasion of the loss. Cro. Jac. 243: Yelv. 149: 1 Bulst. 29: Bro. Bailment, 7: 1 Rol. Rep. 129: 1 Inst. 89. But if they are lost before a tender, it is otherwise; the Pawnee is not liable, if his care of keeping them was exact; and the law requires nothing of him, but only that he should use an ordinary care in keeping the goods, that they may be restored on payment of the money for which they were deposited; and in such case if the goods are lost, the Pawnee hath still his remedy against the Pawner for the money lent. 2 Salk. 522: 3 Salk. 268.

If the Pawn is laid up, and the Pawnee robbed, he is not in general answerable; though if the Pawnee useth the thing, as a jewel, watch, &c. that will not be the worse for wearing, which he may do, it is at his peril; and if he is robbed, he is answerable to the owner, as the using occasioned the loss, &c. 2 Salk. 522: 3 Salk. 268: see Co. Litt. 89, a: 3 Inst. 108: 4 Co. 83: Palm. 551: Ow. 123: Yelv. 178: Cro. Jac. 244: 1 Bulst. 29, 30: 1 Rol. Rep. 181. If the Pawn is of such a nature, that the keeping is a charge to the Pawnee, as a cow, or a horse, &c. he may milk the one, or ride the other; and this shall go in recompence for his keeping. Things, which will grow the worse by usage, as apparel, &c. he may not use. Owen 124.

A person borrowed 100*l.* on the Pawn of jewels, and took a note from the lender, acknowledging them to be in his hands, for securing the money; afterwards, he borrowed several other sums of the same person, for which he gave his notes, without taking any notice of the jewels. As in this case it was natural to think the lender would not have advanced the sums on note only, but on the credit of the pledge in his hands before; it was decreed in equity, that if the borrower would have his jewels, he must pay all the money due on the notes. Preced. Chanc. 419, 421.

A factor cannot pawn the goods of his principal. Strange 1178. He to whom goods are delivered for safe custody cannot pawn them. Strange 1187. There can be no market-overt for Pawning. Ibid. Where money is lent on a pledge, the borrower is personally liable to the payment, unless there be an agreement to the contrary. Strange 919. See further, this Dictionary, title Bailment; and post, Pawn-brokers.

PAWNAGE, in woods and forests for swine; see Pannage.

PAWN-BROKERS. By stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 48, Pawnbrokers are annually to take out a licence on a 10*l.* stamp, if within the bills of mortality; and 5*l.* in any other part of the kingdom, for each shop kept; under the penalty of 50*l.*

By stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 57, confirmed by stats. 31 G. 3. c. 52; 33 Geo. 3. c. 53, the following rates of profit are allowed to Pawnbrokers for interest and warehouse-room:

For every pledge upon which there shall have been lent not exceeding 2*s.* 6*d.* one halfpenny, for any time during which the said pledge shall remain in pawn, not exceeding exceeding one month; and the same for every month afterwards, including the current month in which such pledge shall be redeemed, although such month shall not be expired. For 5*s.* one penny; 7*s.* 6*d.* one penny halfpenny; 10*s.* two-pence; 12*s.* 6*d.* two-pence halfpenny; 15*s.* three-pence; 17*s.* 6*d.* three pence halfpenny; 1*l.* four-pence; and so on progressively and in proportion for any sum not exceeding 40*s.*

And for every sum exceeding 40*s.* and not exceeding 10*l.* at the rate of 3*d.* and no more, for the loan of every 20*s.* of such money lent by the month; and so in proportion for any fractional sum. § 1.

A party applying for the redemption of goods pawned, within seven days after the expiration of any month, may redeem them without paying any thing for the seven days, and applying after seven, and within fourteen days, pays the profit for one month and a half of another month; but after the expiration of the first fourteen days the Pawnbroker may take for the whole month. § 3.

Entries to be made and duplicates given. § 4.

Any person fraudulently pawning the goods of another, and convicted before a justice, shall forfeit 20*s.* and also the value of the goods pawned, &c. to be ascertained by the justice; and, on failure of payment, shall be committed to the House of Correction, for not more than three months, nor less than one month, and be publicly whipped; the forfeitures, when paid, to be applied towards making satisfaction to the party injured, and defraying the costs; the overplus, if any, to the poor of the parish. § 5.

Any person, counterfeiting or altering a duplicate, may be seized and taken before a Justice; who is to commit the party to the House of Correction, for not more than three months, nor less than one. § 6.

If any person shall offer to pawn any goods, refusing to give a satisfactory account of himself, and the goods; or if there shall be reason to suspect that such goods are stolen; or if any person, not entitled, shall attempt to redeem goods pawned; they may be taken before a Justice, who shall commit them for further examination: and if it appears that the goods were stolen, or illegally obtained, or that the person offering to redeem the same has no title or pretence to them; the Justice is to commit him to be dealt with according to law, where the nature of the offence shall authorize such committment by any other law; or otherwise, for not more than three months, nor less than one. § 7.

A Justice may grant a search warrant; in executing which, a peace officer may break open doors, and the goods, if found, shall be restored to the owner. § 8.

Pawnbrokers, refusing to deliver up goods pledged within one year, on tender of the money lent, and interest, on conviction, a Justice is empowered to commit the offender till the goods be delivered up, or reasonable satisfaction made. § 9.

Persons producing notes are not to be deemed owners, unless on notice to the contrary from the real owner. § 10.

Duplicates being lost, the owners, on oath before a Justice, shall be entitled to another from the Pawnbroker. § 11.

Goods to be sold by public auction after the expiration of one year; being exposed to public view, and catalogues thereof published, and two advertisements of sale by the Pawnbroker to be inserted in some news-paper two days at least before the first day's sale under penalty of 5*l.* to the owner. § 12.

Pawnbrokers, receiving notice from the owners of goods before the expiration of a year, shall not dispose of them, until after the expiration of three months from the end of the said year. § 13.

Pawnbrokers to enter an account of sales in their books of all goods pawned for upwards of ten shillings; and in case of any overplus by the sale, upon demand within three years, it shall be paid to the owner, the necessary costs, principal, and interest being deducted; persons possessing duplicates entitled to the inspecting of the book; and in case the goods shall have sold for more than the sum entered, or the further entries not made, or the overplus is refused to be paid, the offender shall forfeit treble the sum lent, to be levied by distress. § 14.

Pawnbrokers shall not purchase goods whilst in their custody, or suffer them to be redeemed for that purpose; nor lend money to any person appearing to be under twelve years of age, or intoxicated, or purchase duplicates of other Pawnbrokers, or buy any goods before eight in the forenoon, and after seven in the evening; nor receive any goods in pawn before eight in the forenoon or after nine at night, between Michaelmas and Lady-day, and before seven o'clock in the forenoon, and after ten at night, during the remainder of the year; except the evenings of Saturday, and that preceding Good Friday and Christmas-day; nor carry on the trade on any Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas day. § 15.

Pawnbrokers are to place in their shops a table of rates allowed by this act. § 16.

Pawnbroker's christian and surname, and business, to be written over the door; under a penalty of 10*l.* half to the informer and half to the poor. § 17.

Pawnbrokers having sold goods illegally, or having embezzled or injured goods, Justices may award reasonable satisfaction to the owners, in case the same shall not amount to the principal and profit; or, if it does, the goods shall be delivered to the owner, without paying any thing under a penalty of 10*l.* § 18.

Pawnbrokers to produce their books before any Justice, if required, on a penalty of 10*l.* § 19.

Penalty on Pawnbrokers neglecting to make entry 10*l.* and for every offence against this act, where no penalty is provided, 5*l.* to be levied by distress; 2*l.* 10*s.* to the informer, the remainder to the poor. § 20.

Complaint shall, in all cases, be made within twelve months. § 21.

Churchwardens to prosecute for every offence, at the expence of the parish, on notice from a Justice. § 22.

This act does not extend to pledges for money above 10*l.* nor by § 53, to persons lending money upon goods at 5 per cent. interest.

This act to extend to the executors, &c. of Pawnbrokers and Pawners. § 25.

The form of conviction is settled by § 28; and an appeal given to the Quarter Sessions. § 29.

PAYMENT of money before the day appointed, is in law Payment at the day; for it cannot, in presumption of law, be any prejudice to him, to whom the payment is made, to have his money before the time; and it appears, by the party's receipt of it, that it is for his own own advantage to receive it then, otherwise he would not do it. Yet it is said, that defendant must not plead, that the plaintiff accepted it in full satisfaction; but that he paid it in full satisfaction. 5 Rep. 117. Payment of a lesser sum, in satisfaction of a greater, cannot be a satisfaction for the whole; unless the payment be before the day: though the gift of an horse, or robe, &c. in satisfaction, may be good. Ibid. And where damages are uncertain, a less thing may be done in satisfaction of a greater. 4 Mod. 89.

Upon solvit ad diem pleaded, it is good evidence to prove Payment at any time after the day, and before action brought; and Payment, although after the day, may be pleaded to any action of debt, upon bill, bond, or judgment, or scire facias upon a judgment. 2 Lil. Abr. 287: Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. But see 1 Stra. 652; where, on such a plea, proof was made of interest paid two years after the day, whereby the plea was falsified; which was made on presumption only; as the debt had not been demanded for thirty years. And though Payment after the day is good by way of discharge, it will not be so by way of satisfaction. 4 Mod. 250. Payment is no plea to debt on covenant, or an obligation, without acquittance; but if the obligation have a condition, it is otherwise. Dyer 25, 169. If a bond, &c. be for Payment of money; and no day is set, damages cannot be recovered till a demand is made. Bridg. 20. See title Bond.

For payment of rent, there are said to be four times: 1. A voluntary time, that is not satisfactory, and yet good to some purpose: as where a lessee pays his rent before the day, this gives seisin of the rent, and enables him to whom paid to bring his assize for it. 2. A time voluntary and satisfactory in some cases; when it is paid the morning of the last day, and the lessor dies before the end of the day, this is a good payment to bind the heir or executor, but not the King. 3. The legal, absolute, and satisfactory time, which is a convenient time before the last instant of the last day, and then it must be paid. The 4th is satisfactory, and not voluntary, but coercive, when forced and recovered by suit at law. Co. Litt. 200: 10 Rep. 127: Plowd. 172. See title Rent.

Payment of money shall be directed by him who pays it, and not by the receiver, &c. 5 Rep. 117: Cro. Eliz. 68. If the payer does not apply the Payment, the receiver may; but he must not apply it to an uncertain demand, as to a debt from a testator. Strange 1194. In the payment of a testator's debts by executors, they are to pay first judgments, mortgages, rent due by lease, &c. then bonds and bills, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 927. See title Executor V. 6.

A bill drawn on A. to pay money for value received, is a good discharge of a debt, though the bill be not paid, unless the creditor return the bill in convenient time. Show. 155. A. gives B. a bill of exchange on C. in payment of a former debt; this is not allowable as evidence on non assumpsit, unless paid; for a bill shall never go in discharge of a precedent debt, except it be part of the contract that it should be so. 1 Salk. 124. When a merchant draws a bill upon a correspondent, who accepts it, this is payment: for it makes him debtor to another person, who may bring his action. 10 Mod. 37. See title Bill of Exchange.

PAYMENT INTO COURT; See Money into Court.

PEACE, Pax.] In the general signification, is opposite to war or strife; but, particularly in law, it intends a quiet behaviour toward the King and his Subjects. And if any man is in danger from another, and makes oath of it before a Justice of Peace, he shall be secured by good bond, which is called binding to the Peace. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 2. cap. 2. 77: Cromp. Just. of Peace, 118, 129. And also frank-pledge and conservation of the Peace. Time of Peace is, when the Courts of justice are open; and Judges and ministers of the same may, by law, protect men from wrong, and administer justice to all. Co. Litt. 249.

All authority for keeping the Peace comes originally from the King, who is the Supreme Magistrate for preservation thereof; though it is said the King cannot take a recognizance of the Peace; because it is a rule in law that no one can take any recognizance, who is not either a justice of record, or by commission: also it is certain, that no duke, earl, or baron, as such, have any greater power to keep the Peace, than mere private persons. Lamb. lib. 1. c. 3: Dalt. c. 1. But the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, the Lord High Steward, the Lord Marshal, and every Justice of the King's Bench, have, as incident to their offices, a general authority to keep the Peace throughout the realm, and to award process for surety of the Peace, and take recognizances for it. And every Court of Record hath power to keep the Peace within its own precincts: as have likewise Sheriffs, who are entrusted with the custody of the counties, consequently have by it an implied power of keeping the Peace, within the same; and coroners may bind persons to the Peace, who make an affray in their presence; but may not grant process of the Peace, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C.

Peace shall be kept, and justice and right duly administered to all persons. Stat. 1 R. 2. c. 2, &c.—Breakers of the Peace to be imprisoned, and to find sureties, &c. Stats. 2 Ed. 3. c. 6: 34 Ed. 3. c. 1. Recognizances for keeping the Peace to be certified to the quarter sessions. Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 1.—The Chancery and King's Bench restrained from granting process of the Peace or behaviour without motion and affidavit; and to give costs and damages to persons wrongfully vexed by such process, and restrained from granting supersedeas, unless the process is granted in the manner required by the statute. The said Courts to punish insufficient sureties. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 8. Actions against Peace-officers made local. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. And the general issue pleadable. Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5: 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. See this Dictionary, titles Justices of Peace; Surety of the Peace; and post, Peace of the King.

PEACE OF GOD AND THE CHURCH, Pax Dei & Ecclesiæ.] Was anciently used for that cessation which the King's Subjects had from trouble and suit of law between the terms, and on Sundays and holidays. See Vacation.

PEACE OF THE KING, Pax Regis, mentioned in stat. 6 R. 2. st. 1. c. 13.] Is that Peace and security both for life and goods, which the King promiseth to all his Subjects, or others taken into his protection. And where an ou[illegible] reversed, a person is restored to the King's [illegible] this is termed ad Pacem redire. Bract. lib. 3. [illegible] point of policy seems to have been bor[illegible] from the Feudists, which, in the second book [illegible] Feudi, cap. 53, intitled, de Pace tenenda, &c.

Hotoman

Hotoman proveth. Of this Hoveden fetteth down many branches, Annal. H. 2. fol. 144, 330. As to the Peace of the Church, see title Sanctuary. The Peace of the King's highway is the immunity that the King's highway hath to be free from annoyance or moleftation. The Peace of the plough, whereby the plough and the plough cattle are fecured from diftreffes. F. N. B. 90. And fairs have been faid to have their Peace; becaufe no man might be troubled in them for any debt contracted elfewhere.

PECIA, A piece or fmall quantity of ground. Paroch. Antiq. 240.

PECTORALE, A word often met with in old writings. Moft authors agree that it is the fame with that garment called rationale, which the high prieft in the old law wore on his fhoulders, as a fign of perfection. It is worn alfo by the high prieft of the new law, as a fign of the greateft virtue. Quæ gratia & ratione perficitur; for which reafon it is called rationale. It is by fome taken to be that part of the pall which covers the breaft of the prieft, and from thence called Pectorale. But all agree that it is the richeft part of that garment, embroidered with gold, and adorned with precious ftones. Cowell.

PECTORAL, Armour for the breaft, a breaft-plate or petral, for a horfe; from the Lat. pectus; it is mentioned in ftat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 3.

PECULIAR, Fr. peculier, i. e. private.] A particular parifh or church, that hath jurifdiction within itfelf, and power to grant adminiftration or probate of wills, &c. exempt from the Ordinary.

There are Royal Peculiars, and Archbifhops' Peculiars: the King's chapel is a Royal Peculiar, exempted from all fpiritual jurifdiction, and referved to the immediate government of the King: there are alfo fome peculiar ecclefiaftical jurifdictions belonging to the King, which formerly appertained to Monafteries and Religious Houfes. It is an ancient privilege of the See of Canterbury, that wherever any manors or advowfons belong to it, they forthwith become exempt from the Ordinary, and are reputed Peculiars of that fee; not becaufe they are under no Ordinary, but becaufe they are not under the Ordinary of the diocefe, &c. For the jurifdiction is annexed to the Court of Arches, and the judge thereof may originally cite to thefe Peculiars of the Archbifhop. Wood's Inft. 504.

The Court of Peculiars of the Archbifhop of Canterbury, hath a particular jurifdiction in the city of London, and in other diocefes, &c. within his province: in all, fifty-feven Peculiars. 4 Inft. 338: Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 15. There are fome Peculiars which belong to Deans and Chapters, or a Prebendary, exempted from the Archdeacon only: they are derived from the Bifhop, of ancient compofition, and may be vifited by the Bifhop in his primary or triennial vifitation: in the mean time, an Official of the Dean and Chapter, or Prebendary, is the Judge; and from hence the appeal lies to the Bifhop of the diocefe. Wood 504. Appeal lieth from other Peculiar Courts to the King in Chancery, [illegible] 25 H. 8. c. 19. PEERAGE. The dignity of the Lords or Peers of the realm. See Peers of the Realm.

PEERS, Pares.] Signify, in law, thofe who are impannelled in an inqueft upon a man, for convicting or clearing him of any offence; the reafon is, becaufe the cuftom of the realm is to try every man in fuch cafe by his Peers or equals. See ftats. Weftm. 1. 3 E. 1. cap. 6: Mag. Car. c. 29. And in this fenfe, it is in ufe with other [illegible]ons. Cowell.

[illegible] as every one of the Nobility, being a Lord of Par[illegible], is a Peer, or equal to all the other Lords, though [illegible]eral degrees; fo the Commons are Peers to one another, another, although distinguished as Knights, Esquires, Gentlemen, &c. 2 Inst. 29: 3 Inst. 31. See post, title Peers of the Realm.

PEERS OF FEES. The word Peer denoted originally one of the same rank; afterwards, it was used for the vassals or tenants of the same Lord, who were obliged to serve and attend him in his Courts, being equal in function: these were termed Peers of Fees, because holding fees of the Lord; or because their business in Court was to sit and judge under their Lord, of disputes arising on fees; but if there were too many in one lordship, the Lord usually chose twelve, who had the title of Peers, by way of distinction; from whence, it is said, we derive our common juries, and other Peers. Cowell.

PEERS OF THE REALM.

PARES REGNI; PROCERES.] The Nobility of the Kingdom, and Lords of Parliament; who are divided into Dukes, Marquesses, Earls, Viscounts, and Barons. And the reason why they are called Peers is, that notwithstanding a distinction of dignities in our Nobility, yet in all public actions they are equal; as in their votes of Parliament, and trial of any nobleman. S. P. C. lib. 3. The appellation seems to have been borrowed from France, from those twelve Peers that Charlemaine instituted in that kingdom, called Pares vel Patricii Franciæ.

I. ALL degrees of nobility and honour are derived from the King as their fountain, and he may institute what new titles he pleases. Hence it is that all degrees of nobility are not of equal antiquity.

A Duke, though he be in England, in respect of his title of nobility, inferior in point of antiquity to many others, yet is superior to all of them in rank; this being the first title of dignity after the royal family. Camden Britan. title Ordines. Among the Saxons the Latin names of Dukes, duces, is very frequent; and signified, as among the Romans, the commanders or leaders of their armies, whom in their own language they called heretoga; and in the laws of Henry I. (as translated by Lambard), they are called heretochii. But after the Norman conquest, which changed the military p[illegible] of the nation, the Kings themselves continuing for many generations Dukes of Normandy, they would not honour any Subjects with the title of Duke, till the time of Edward III; who, claiming to be King of France, and thereby losing the ducal in the royal dignity, in the eleventh year of his reign created his son, Edward the Black Prince, Duke of Cornwall; and many, of the Royal Family especially, were afterwards raised to the like honour. This reason, however, does not seem very satisfactory, as in fact this order of Nobility was created about a year before Edw. III. assumed the title of King of F[illegible] A. D. 1337. Henry's Hist. Eng. viii. 135. (8vo.) [illegible] this Dictionary, titles Duke; King II.

In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, A. D. 1572, the whole order became utterly extinct; (Camden Britan. title Ordines: Spelman. Gloss. 191) but it was revived about fifty years afterwards by her Successor, who was remarkably prodigal of honours, in the person of George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham. 1 Comm. c. 12.

A Marquess, (Marchio,) is the next degree of nobility. His office formerly was (for dignity and duty were never separated by our ancestors) to guard the frontiers and limits of the kingdom; which were called the marches, from the Teutonic word, marche, a limit: such as, in particular, were the marches of Wales and Scotland, while each continued to be an enemy's country. The persons who had command there, were called Lords-Marchers, or Marquesses; whose authority was abolished by stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 27 (26?): though the title had long before been made a mere ensign of honour; Robert Vere, Earl of Oxford, being created Marquis of Dublin, by Richard II, in the eighth year of his reign. 2 Inst. 5. See this Dictionary, title Marquess.

An Earl is a title of nobility so ancient, that its original cannot be clearly traced out. Thus much seems tolerably certain: that among the Saxons they were called ealdormen, quasi elder men, signifying the same as senior or senator among the Romans; and also schiremen, because they had each of them the civil government of a several division or shire. On the irruption of the Danes, they changed the names to Eorles, which, according to Camden, signified the same in their language. Britan. title Ordines. In Latin they are called Comites, (a title first used in the Empire,) from being the King's attendants; à societate nomen sumpserunt, Reges enim tales sibi associant. Bracton, lib. 1. c. 8: Flet. l. 1. c. 5. After the Norman conquest, they were, for some time, called Counts or Countees, from the French; but they did not long retain that name themselves, though their shires are from thence called counties to this day. The name of Earls or Comites is now become a mere title; they having nothing to do with the government of the county, which is now entirely devolved on the Sheriff, the Earl's deputy, or vice-comes. In writs, and commissions, and other formal instruments, the King, when he mentions any Peer of the degree of an Earl, usually stiles him "trusty and well beloved cousin:" an appellation as antient as the reign of Henry IV: who, being either by his wife, his mother, or his sisters, actually related or allied to every Earl then in the kingdom, artfully and constantly acknowledged that connection in all his letters and other public acts; from whence the usage has descended to his successors, though the reason has long ago failed. See title Earl.

The name of Vice-comes, or Viscount, was afterwards made use of as an arbitrary title of honour, without any shadow of office pertaining to it, by Henry VI; when, in the eighteenth year of his reign, he created John Beaumont a Peer, by the name of Viscount Beaumont; which was the first instance of the kind. 2 Inst. 5.

The title of Baron is the most general and universal [illegible]ility; for originally every one of the Peers of [illegible]k had also a barony annexed to his other [illegible] 5, 6. But it hath sometimes happened that, [illegible]ent baron hath been raised to a new degree [illegible]e, in the course of a few generations, the two titles titles have descended differently; one perhaps to the male descendants, the other to the heirs-general; whereby the earldom, or other superior title, hath subsisted without a barony; and there are also modern instances, where Earls and Viscounts have been created without annexing a barony to their other honours: so that now the rule doth not hold universally, that all Peers are Barons. The original and antiquity of baronies have occasioned great inquiries among our English antiquaries. The most probable opinion seems to be, that they were the same with our present lords of manors; to which the name of Court-baron (which is the Lord's Court, and incident to every manor) gives some countenance. It may be collected from King John's Magna Carta, c. 14, that originally all lords of manors, or Barons, that held of the King in capite had seats in the Great Council or Parliament: till, about the reign of that Prince, the conflux of them became so large and troublesome, that the King was obliged to divide them, and summon only the greater Barons in person, leaving the small ones to be summoned by the Sheriff; and (as it is said) to sit by representation in another House, which gave rise to the separation of the two Houses of Parliament. Gilb. Hist. of Exch. c. 3: Seld. Title of Hon. 2, 5, 21. See title Parliament. By degrees the title came to be confined to the greater Barons, or Lords of Parliament only; and there were no other Barons among the peerage but such as were summoned by writ, in respect of the tenure of their lands or baronies, till Richard I. first made it a mere title of honour, by conferring it on divers persons by his letters patents. 1 Inst 9: Seld. Jan. Angl. 2. § 66.

Before the time of King Ed. III. there were but two titles of nobility, viz. Earls and Barons: the Barons were originally by tenure, afterwards created by writ, and after that by patent; but Earls were always created by letters patent. Seld. 536. See 1 Comm. c. 12. p. 398. in n. And Hen. VI. created Edmund of Hadham Earl of Richmond, by patent, and granted him precedency before all other Earls. Mary I. likewise granted to Henry Ratcliff, Earl of Sussex, a privilege by patent beyond any other nobleman, viz. that he might at any time be covered in her presence, like unto the grandees of Spain; and some few others of our Nobility have had this honour. Dict.

The stat. 31 Hen. 8. c. 10, settles the precedency of the Lords of Parliament, and great Officers of State; after whom, the Dukes, Marquesses, Earls, Viscounts, and Barons, take place according to their ancienty; but it is declared, that precedence is in the King's disposition. See this Dictionary, title Precedence.

A dignity of Earl, &c. is a title by the Common Law; and if a patentee be disturbed of his dignity, the regular course is to petition the King, who indorses it and sends it into Chancery. Staundf. Prerog. 72: 22 Edw. 3.

There are now no feudal baronies; but there are Barons by succession, and those are the Bishops; who, by virtue of ancient baronies held of the King, (into which the possessions of their bishopricks have been converted,) are called by writ to Parliament, and have place in [illegible] House of Peers as Lords Spiritual: the tempora[illegible] sessions of Bishops are held by their service to att[illegible] Parliament when called; and that is in the nature [illegible] barony. See Post II. III.

II. The right of Peerage seems to have been originally territorial, that is, annexed to lands, honors, castles, manors, and the like; the proprietors and possessors of which were (in right of those estates) allowed to be Peers of the Realm, and were summoned to Parliament to do suit and service to their Sovereign; and, when the land was alienated, the dignity passed with it as appendant. Thus the Bishops still sit in the House of Lords in right of successions to certain ancient baronies annexed, or supposed to be annexed, to their episcopal lands. Glan. l. 7. c. 1. And thus, in 11 Hen. 6, the possession of the castle of Arundel was adjudged to confer an earldom on its possessor. Seld. Tit. of Hon. b. 2. c. 9. § 5. But afterwards, when alienations grew to be frequent, the dignity of peerage was confined to the lineage of the party ennobled; and, instead of territorial, became personal. Actual proof of a tenure by barony became no longer necessary to constitute a Lord of Parliament; but the record of the writ of summons to him, or his ancestors, was admitted as a sufficient evidence of the tenure. 1 Comm. c. 12.

Peers are now created either by writ, or by patent; for those who claim by prescription must suppose either a writ or patent made to their ancestors; though, by length of time, it is lost. The creation by writ, or the King's letter, is a summons to attend the House of Peers, by the stile and title of that barony, which the King is pleased to confer; that by patent is a royal grant to a Subject of any dignity and degree of peerage. The creation by writ is the more ancient way; but a man is not ennobled thereby, unless he actually takes his seat in the House of Lords: and some are of opinion that there must be at least two writs of summons, and a sitting in two distinct Parliaments, to evidence an hereditary barony. Whitelocke of Parl. ch. 114. The most usual way, therefore, because the surest, is to grant the dignity by patent; which enures to a man and his heirs according to the limitations thereof, though he never himself makes use of it. Co. Litt. 16. Yet it is frequent to call up the eldest son of a Peer to the House of Lords by writ of summons, in the name of his father's barony: because in that case there is no danger of his children's losing the nobility, in case he never takes his seat; for they will succeed to their grandfather. And where the father's barony is limited by patent to him, and the heirs-male of his body, and his eldest son is called up to the House of Lords by writ, with the title of this barony, the writ in this case will not create a fee or a general estate tail, so as to make a female capable of inheriting the title; but upon the death of the father the two titles unite, or become one and the same. Ex parte Eliz. Perry, Bro. P. C. Creation by writ has also one advantage over that by patent: for a person created by writ holds the dignity [in tail] to him and his heirs, without any words to that purport in the writ; but in letters patent there must be words to direct the inheritance, else the dignity enures only to the grantee for life. Co. Lit. 9. 16. For a man or woman may be created noble for their own lives, and the dignity not descend to their heirs at all, or descend only to some particular heirs: as where a peerage is limited to a man, and the heirs male of his body, by Elizabeth his present lady; and not to such heirs by any former or future wife. And it is to be observed, that, though the opinion of Lord Coke is to the contrary, trary, it is now underſtood, that a creation by writ does not confer a fee-ſimple in the title, but only an eſtate-tail-general: for every claimant of the title muſt be deſcended from the perſon firſt ennobled. 1 Woodd. 37: 1 Comm. c. 12, & n.

In caſe of creation by patent, the perſon created muſt have the inheritance limited by apt words; as to him and his heirs, or the heirs male of his body, heirs of his body, &c. otherwiſe he ſhall have no inheritance. 2 Inſt. 48.

The King may create either man or woman noble for life only: and peerage may be gained for life, by act of law; as if a Duke take a wife, ſhe is a Dutcheſs in law by the intermarriage; ſo of a Marqueſs, Earl, &c. 1 Inſt. 16: 9 Rep. 97. Alſo the dignity of an Earl may deſcend to a daughter, if there be no ſon, who ſhall be a Counteſs; and if there are many daughters, it is ſaid, the King ſhall diſpoſe of the dignity to which daughter he pleaſes. 1 Inſt. 165: Wood's Inſt. 42. See titles Peereſs; Deſcent III. If a perſon is ſummoned as a Baron to Parliament by writ, and, ſitting, die, leaving two or more daughters, who all dying, one of them only leaves iſſue a ſon, ſuch iſſue has a right to demand a ſeat in the Houſe of Peers. Skin. 441.

Thomas de la Warre was ſummoned to Parliament by writ, anno 3 Hen. 8; and William his ſon, anno 3 Ed. 6, was diſabled by attainder to claim any dignity during his life, but was afterwards called to Parliament by Queen Elizabeth, and ſat there as Puiſne Lord, and died; then Thomas, the ſon of the ſaid William, petitioned the Queen in Parliament to be reſtored to the place of Thomas his grandfather; and all the Judges, to whom it was referred, were of opinion that he ſhould; becauſe his father's diſability was not abſolute by attainder, but only perſonal and temporary, during his life: and the acceptance of the new dignity by the petitioner ſhall not hurt him; ſo that when the old and new dignity are in one perſon, the old ſhall be preferred. 11 Rep. 1.

Where nobility is gained by writ, or patent, without deſcent, it is triable by record; but when it is gained by matter of fact, as by marriage, or where deſcents are pleaded, nobility is triable per pais. 22 Aſſ. 24: 3 Salk. 243. A perſon petitioned the Lords in Parliament to be tried by his Peers; the Lords diſallowed his peerage, and diſmiſſed the petition: and it was held in this caſe, that the defendant's right ſtood upon his letters-patent, which could not be cancelled but by ſcire facias: and that the Parliament could not give judgment in a thing which did not come in a judicial way before that Court. 2 Salk. 510, 511: 3 Salk. 243. Where peerage is claimed ratione Baronii, as by a Biſhop, he muſt plead that he is unus parium Regni Angliæ; but if the claim is ratione nobilitatis, he need not plead otherwiſe than purſuant to his creation. 4 Inſt. 15: 3 Salk. 243.

When a Lord is newly created, he is introduced into the Houſe of Peers, by two Lords of the ſame rank in their robes, Garter King at Arms going before, and his Lordſhip is to preſent his writ of ſummons, &c. to the Lord Chancellor; which being read, he is conducted to his place; and Lords by deſcent, where nobility comes down from the anceſtor, and is enjoyed by right of blood, are introduced with the ſame ceremony, the preſenting of the writ excepted. Lex Conſtitutionis 79.

A Nobleman, whether native or foreigner, who has his nobility from a foreign State, although the title of dignity be given him, (as the higheſt and loweſt degrees of nobility are univerſally acknowledged,) in all our legal proceedings no notice is taken of his nobility; for he is no Peer: and the laws of England prohibit all Subjects to receive any hereditary title of honour or dignity, from any foreign Prince, without conſent of the Sovereign. Lex Conſtitutionis 80, 81.

An Earldom conſiſts in office, for defence of the kingdom; and of rents and poſſeſſions, &c. and may be entailed as any other office may, and as it concerns land: but the dignity of peerage cannot be transferred by fine; becauſe it is a quality affixed to the blood, and ſo merely perſonal, that a fine cannot touch it. 2 Salk. 509. 3 Salk. 244.

A Peer cannot loſe his nobility, but by death or attainder; though there was an inſtance in the reign of Edward IV. of the degradation of George Neville Duke of Bedford by act of Parliament, on account of his poverty, which rendered him unable to ſupport his dignity. 4 Inſt. 355. But this is a ſingular inſtance: which ſerves at the ſame time, by having happened, to ſhew the power of Parliament: and, by having happened but once, to ſhew how tender the Parliament hath been, in exerting ſo high a power. It hath been ſaid indeed, that if a Baron waſtes his eſtate, ſo that he is not able to ſupport the degree, the King may degrade him; but it is expreſsly held by later authorities, that a Peer cannot be degraded but by act of Parliament. Moor 678: 12 Rep. 107: 12 Mod. 56.

George Neville Duke of Bedford was degraded by act of Parliament, 16 June, 17 Ed. 4. The preamble of the ſtatute, reciting, that the ſaid George hath not, nor may have, any livelihood to ſupport his name, eſtate, and dignity, or any name of eſtate; and that it is oftentimes ſeen when a lord is called to high eſtate, and hath not convenient livelihood to ſupport the dignity, it induceth great poverty, and often cauſeth great extortion, embracery, and maintenance, to the great trouble of all ſuch counties where ſuch eſtate ſhall happen to be: wherefore the King, by advice of his Lords and Commons, ordaineth, eſtabliſheth, and enacteth, That from henceforth the ſame creation and making of the ſaid Duke, and all the names of dignity given to the ſaid George, or to John Neville his father, be from henceforth void and of none effect, &c.

In which act theſe things are to be obſerved: Firſt, that although the Duke had not any poſſeſſions to ſupport his dignity; yet his dignity could not be taken from him without an act of Parliament. Secondly, The inconveniencies appear, where a great ſtate and dignity is, and no livelihood to maintain it. Thirdly, It is a good reaſon to take away ſuch dignity by act of Parliament; therefore the ſtatute de abſentibus made at a Parliament holden at Dublin in Ireland, the 10th of May, 28 H. 8, by reaſon of the long abſence of George Earl of Shrewſbury out of that realm, ſhall be expounded, according to [illegible] general words of the writ, to take away ſuch incon[illegible]. 12 Rep. 106, 107. Earl of Shrewſbury's caſe.

[illegible]gh dignities of peerage are granted from the [illegible]n; yet they cannot be ſurrendered to the Crown, except it be, in order to new and greater honours; nor are they transferable, unless they relate to an office: and notwithstanding there are instances of earldoms being transferred, and wherein one branch of a family sat in the House of Peers, by virtue of a grant from the other branch, particularly in the reigns of Hen. III. and Ed. II. these precedents have been disallowed. Lex Constitutionis 85, 86, 87.

A personal honour or dignity may be forfeited, on committing treason, &c. for it is implied by a condition in law, that the person dignified shall be loyal; and the office of an Earl, &c. is ad consulendum Regem tempore pacis & defendendum tempore belli, therefore he forfeits it when he takes counsel or arms against the King. 7 Rep. 33.

III. Of the Privileges of Peers as Members of the Upper House of Parliament, see this Dictionary, title Parliament.

All Peers of the realm are also looked upon as the King's hereditary counsellors, and may be called together by the King to impart their advice in all matters of importance to the realm, either in time of Parliament, or, which hath been their principal use, when there is no Parliament in being. Co. Litt. 110.

Instances of conventions of the Peers, to advise the King, have been in former times very frequent, though now fallen into disuse, by reason of the more regular meetings of Parliament. Many instances of this kind of meeting are to be found under our ancient Kings: though the former method of convoking them had been so long left off, that when Charles I. in 1640, issued out writs under the Great Seal to call a great council of all the Peers of England, to meet and attend his Majesty at York, previous to the meeting of the long Parliament, the Earl of Clarendon mentions it as a new invention, not before heard of; that is, as he explains himself, so old, that it had not been practised in some hundreds of years. But, though there had not so long before been an instance, nor has there been any since, of assembling them in so solemn a manner, yet in cases of emergency, our princes have at several times thought proper to call for and consult as many of the nobility as could easily be got together; as was particularly the case with King James the Second, after the landing of the Prince of Orange, and with the Prince of Orange himself, before he called that convention-parliament, which afterwards called him to the throne. 1 Comm.

Besides this general meeting, it is usually looked upon to be the right of each particular Peer of the realm, to demand an audience of the King, and to lay before him, with decency and respect, such matters as he shall judge of importance to the public. And therefore, in the reign of Edward II. it was made an article of impeachment in Parliament against the two Hugh Spencers, (father and son,) for which they were banished the kingdom, "that they by their evil covin would not suffer the great men of the realm, the King's good counsellors, to speak with the King, or to come near him; but only in the presence and hearing of the said Hugh the father, and Hugh the son, or one of them, and at their will, and according to such things as pleased them." 4 Inst 53. See 1 Comm. 227-9.

We are next to consider the general privileges which attach to the persons of Peers in their individual capacity.

Peers are created for two reasons; 1st, ad consulendum, 2d, ad defendendum Regem; for which reasons the law gives them certain great and high privileges, such as freedom from arrests, &c. even when no Parliament is sitting; because the law intends, that they are always assisting the King with their counsel for the commonwealth; or keeping the realm in safety by their prowess and valour. 1 Comm. 227.

In certain criminal cases, that is to say, on indictments for treason and felony, and misprision thereof, a nobleman shall be tried by his Peers; but in all misdemeanors, as libels, riots, perjuries, conspiracies, &c. he is to be tried, like a commoner by a jury. 3 Inst. 30: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 13. So in case of an appeal of felony he shall be tried by a jury. 9 Rep. 30: 2 Inst. 49: 10 E. 4. 6. b: 3 Inst. 30. And the indictments of Peers for treason or felony, are to be formed by freeholders of the county: and then the Peers shall plead before the Lord High Steward, &c. 1 Inst. 156: 3 Inst. 28. See post IV.

The privilege of Peers extends only to the Peers of Great Britain; so that a Nobleman of any other country, or a Lord of Ireland, hath not any other privileges in this kingdom than a common person: also the son and heir apparent of a Nobleman is not entitled to the privilege of being tried by his Peers, which is confined to such person as is a Lord of Parliament at the time; but it seems that an infant Peer is privileged from arrests, his person being held sacred Co. Litt. 156: 2 Inst. 48; 3 Inst. 30. See titles Arrest; Privilege; Process.

The Peers of Scotland had no privilege in this kingdom before the Union; but by the 23d clause of the articles of Union, (stat. 5 Ann. c. 5,) the sixteen elected Peers have all the privileges of the Peers of Parliament of Great Britain; also all the rest of the Peers of Scotland have all the privileges of the peerage of England, excepting only that of sitting and voting in Parliament. 1 P. Wms. 583.

This right of trial by their Peers, it seems now generally admitted, does not extend to Bishops: though the reason given for this exception, viz. that they are not ennobled in blood, and consequently not Peers with the nobility, does not seem sufficiently satisfactory. And it has been suggested, that if any instances of trials of this sort by a jury had occurred in remote times, the Bishops could not have demanded a trial in Parliament, without admitting themselves subject to temporal jurisdiction; from which they then claimed exemption: and hence it may be conjectured the Bishops have lost their right to be tried in Parliament, though only two instances can be found of their being tried by Jury, viz. those of Archbishop Cranmer and Bishop Fisher. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 12.

Some Bishops have been tried by Peers of the Realm; but it hath been when impeached by the House of Commons, as upon special occasions many others have been who have not been Peers. The Bishops may however claim all the privileges of the Lords Temporal; except that they cannot be tried by their Peers, and that they cannot, in capital cases, pass upon the trial of any other Peers, they being prohibited by canon to be judges of life and death, &c. They usually therefore withdraw voluntarily, but enter a protest, declaring their right to stay. See further, title Bishops, and 4 Comm. c. 19.

A Peer,

A Peer, or Peeress (either in her own right or by marriage), cannot be arrested in civil cases. Finch, L. 355: 1 Ventr. 298. They have also many peculiar privileges annexed to their peerage in the course of judicial proceedings. A Peer, sitting in judgment, gives not his verdict upon oath, like an ordinary juryman, but upon his honour. 2 Inst. 49. He answers also to bills in Chancery upon his honour, and not upon his oath; 1 P. Wms. 146; but, when he is examined as a witness either in civil or criminal cases, he must be sworn, (whether in inferior Courts, or in the High Court of Parliament); for the respect which the law shews to the honour of a Peer, does not extend so far as to overturn a settled maxim, that in judicio non creditur nisi juratis. Salk. 512: Cro. Car. 64. The honour of Peers is however so highly tendered by the law, that it is much more penal to spread false reports of them and certain other great officers of the realm, than of other men: scandal against them being called by the peculiar name of scandalum magnatum, and subjected to peculiar punishments by divers ancient statutes. Stats. West. 1. 3 Edw. 1. c. 34: 2 Ric. 2. st. 1. c. 5: 12 Ric. 2. c. 11. See titles Scandalum Magnatum; Libel.

At Common Law, it was lawful for any Peer to retain as many chaplains as he would; but by stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13, their number is limited. See title Chaplains. In many cases, the protestation of honour shall be sufficient for a Peer; as in trial of Peers, they proceed upon their honour, not upon oath; and if a Peer is defendant in a Court of Equity, he shall put in his answer upon his honour, (though formerly it was to be on oath): and in action of debt upon account the plaintiff being a Peer, it shall suffice to examine his attorney, and not himself on oath; but where a Peer is to answer interrogatories, or make an affidavit, as well as where he is to be examined as a witness, he must be upon his oath. Bract lib. 5. c. 9: 9 Rep. 49: 3 Inst. 29: W. Jones 152: 2 Salk. 512.

In the pleas of Parliament, 18 Ed. 1, between the Earl of Gloucester and Earl of Hereford, on long debate whether John de Hasting, a baron, ought to be sworn, because he was a Peer of the Realm, it was resolved that he ought to lay his hand on the book. The like was resolved, 10 Car. in B. R. by the Court, where the Lord Dorset's testimony was requisite. See Dy. 314. b. marg. pl. 98.

A bill was against a Peeress to discover deeds, she answers on her honour and confesses deeds. She shall produce them only upon her honour, and not on oath. Ch. Prec. 92.

A subpœna shall not be awarded against a Peer out of the Chancery, in a cause; but a letter from the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper, in lieu thereof. See title Chancery. A Peer may not be impannelled upon any inquest, though the cause hath relation to two Peers; and if a Peer be returned on a Jury, a special writ shall issue for his discharge from service. The houses of Peers shall not be searched for conventicles, but by warrant under the sign manual, or in the presence of the Lord Lieutenant, or one Deputy Lieutenant, and two Justices of the peace. Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 1: and it is expresly provided by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 1, against non-conformists, that for every third offence, which is punishable by transportation, Lords of Parliament shall be tried by their Peers.

A Nobleman menacing another person, whereby such other person fears his life is in danger, no writ of supplicavit shall issue, but a subpœna; and when the Lord appears, instead of surety, he shall only promise to keep the peace. 35 H. 6. See title Surety of the Peace.

The privilege of a Peer is so great in respect of his person, that the King may not restrain him of his liberty, without order of the House of Lords, except it be in cases of treason, &c. A memorable case wherein was that of the Earl of Arundel imprisoned by the King in the reign of King Charles I.

Every Lord of Parliament is allowed his clergy in all cases, where others are excluded by the stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12, except wilful murder; and cannot be denied clergy for any other felony wherein it was grantable at Common Law, if it be not ousted by some statute made since the first of King Ed. 6. S. P. C. 130. Lord Morley, who was tried by his Peers for murder, and found guilty of manslaughter, was discharged without clergy. Sid. 277: 2 Nels. Abr. 1181. See title Clergy, Benefit of.

In ejectment a special verdict was found on a trial at bar, and judgment for defendant, and costs taxed; and after affidavit of the demand of costs, a motion was made for an attachment against the Duchess (the Duke being dead), she being one of the lessors, for non-payment of costs; and it was alleged, that if the Court did not grant it, the defendant would be remediless; for though in other cases a distringas issues against Peers, yet in this case no process can go but an attachment. The Court refused to grant an attachment against the person of the Duchess, but ordered her to shew cause why an attachment, as to her goods and chattels, should not be issued; which rule was afterwards made absolute. Rep. of Pract. in C. B. 7, 8. See title Attachment.

A Peer, or Lord of Parliament, cannot be an approver; for it is against Magna Charta for him to pray a coroner. 3 Inst. 129. c. 56: 2 Hawk. Pl. C. c. 24. §3.

If a bill in Chancery be exhibited against a Peer, the course is first for the Lord Keeper to write a letter to him; and if he doth not answer, then a subpœna; then an order to shew cause why a sequestration should not go; and if he still stands out, then a sequestration. And the reason is, because there can be no process of contempt against his person. 2 Vent. 342. See title Chancery.

Distringas is the first process against a Peer on an information for an intrusion on the King's lands, or for a conversion of the King's goods. 2 Hawk. Pl. C. c. 27. § 12. cites Co. Ent. 387.

If a Peer be impleaded by a Commoner, yet such cause shall not be tried by Peers, but by a Jury of the country; for though the Peers are the proper pares to a Lord of Parliament in capital matters, where the life and nobility of a Peer is concerned; yet in matter of property the trial of fact is not by them, but by the inhabitants of those counties where the facts arise; since such Peers living through the whole kingdom, could not be generally cognizant of facts arising in several counties, as the inhabitants themselves where they are done; but this want of having Noblemen for their Jury was compensated as much as possible, by reurning persons of the best quality; therefore it was formerly necessary, that a Knight should be summoned in any cause where a Peer was party. G. Hist. C. B. 78, 79. See title Jury.

IV. Blackstone says, that in the method and regulation of its proceedings, the trial by the House of Peers differs but little from the trial per patriam, or by Jury; except that no special verdict can be given in the trial of a Peer; because the Lords of Parliament, or the Lord High Steward, (if the trial be had in his Court,) are Judges sufficiently competent of the law that may arise from the fact. Hatt. 116. And except also, that the Peers need not all agree in their verdict, but the greater number, consisting of twelve at the least, will conclude and bind the minority. Kelynge 56: Stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3 § 10: Foster 247. During a trial before the House of Peers in Parliament, every Peer present on the trial is to judge both of the law and the fact. Fost. 142. In cases of the impeachment of a Peer for treason, a Lord High Steward is usually, though not necessarily appointed, rather in the nature of a Speaker to regulate the proceedings, than as a Judge. 4 Comm. 260: Fost. 145. But in the Court of the High Steward, which is held in the recess of Parliament, he alone is to judge in all points of law and practice, and the Peers-triers are merely judges of the fact. Fost 142.

All the Barons of Parliament shall be tried for treason, felony, misprision, or as accessary, at the suit of the King by their Peers. See Magna Charta, 9 H. 3. 29: 2 Inst. 49: 9 Co. 30. b: Sta. 152, 153. So all the nobility, who are Peers of Parliament, by the Common Law, which is now affirmed by the stat. 20 H. 6. c. 9. And a Peer cannot waive the trial by his Peers. Kel. 56, in marg 621. 1 St. Tr. 265: 2 Rush. 94.

It has been adjudged, that if a Peer on arraignment before the Lords, refuse to put himself on his Peers, he shall be dealt with as one who stands mute; for it is as much the law of the land, that a Peer be tried by his Peers, as a Commoner by Commoners; yet if one who has a title to peerage be indicted and arraigned as a Commoner, and plead not guilty, and put himself upon his country, it hath been adjudged, that he cannot afterwards suggest that he is a Peer, and pray trial by his Peers. 2 Hawk. Pl. C. c. 44. § 19.

By stat. 7 W. 3. cap. 3. § 10, it is enacted, That upon the trial of any Peers or Peeresses, for treason or misprision, all the Peers who have a right to sit and vote in Parliament, shall be duly summoned twenty days at least before the trial, and every Peer so summoned and appearing shall vote in the trial, first taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribing and repeating the test enjoined by 30 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 1.—Formerly Lords-triers were appointed by the Crown in the trial of Peers; but this was at length found such an inlet to oppression, as to be deservedly abolished by the above stat. 7 W. 3. See title Treason. And it seems, that this act extends to every proceeding in full Parliament, for the trial of a Peer in the ordinary course of justice. Fost. 247.

By stat. 6 Ann. c. 23. § 12, Peers shall be indicted in Scotland as in England.

The Peer being indicted for the treason or felony, before commissioners of oyer and terminer, (or in the King's Bench, if the treason, &c. be committed in the county of Middlesex,) then the King by commission under the Great Seal, constitutes some Peer (generally the Lord Chancellor) Lord High Steward, who is Judge in these cases; and the commission commands the Peers of the Realm to be attendant on him, also the Lieutenant of the Tower, with the prisoner, &c. A certiorari is awarded out of Chancery, to remove the indictment before the Lord High Steward: and another writ issues to the Lieutenant of the Tower, for bringing the prisoner; and the Lord High Steward makes his precepts for that purpose, assigning a day and place, as in Westminster-Hall, inclosed with scaffolds, &c. and for summoning the Peers, which are to be twelve and above, at least, present: at the day, the Lord High Steward takes place under a cloth of state; his commission is read by the clerk of the Crown, and he has a white rod delivered him by the usher; which being returned, proclamation is made, and command given for certifying of indictments, &c. and the Lieutenant of the Tower to return his writ, and bring the prisoner to the bar; after this, the serjeant at arms returns his precept with the names of the Peers summoned, and they are called over, and, answering to their names, are recorded, when they take their places: the ceremony thus adjusted, the High Steward declares to the prisoner at the bar, the cause of their assembly, assures him of justice, and encourages him to answer without fear; then the clerk of the Crown reads the indictment, and arraigns the prisoner, but is not to insist on his holding up his hand, and the High Steward gives his charge to the Peers; this being over, the King's counsel produce their evidence for the King; and if the prisoner hath any matter of law to plead, he shall be assigned counsel; after evidence given for the King, and the prisoner's answer heard, the prisoner is withdrawn from the bar, and the Lords go to some place to consider of their evidence: but the Lords can admit no evidence, but in the hearing of the prisoner; they cannot have conference with the Judges, or demand it, (who attend on the Lord High Steward, and are not to deliver their opinions beforehand,) but in the prisoner's hearing; nor can they send for the opinion of the Judges, or demand it, but in open Court: and the Lord Steward cannot collect the evidence, or confer with the Lords, but in the presence of the prisoner; who is at first to require justice of the Lords, and that no question or conference be had, but in his presence: Nothing is done in the absence of the prisoner, until the Lords come to agree on their verdict; and then they are to be together as Juries until they are agreed, when they come again into Court and take their places; and the Lord High Steward, publicly in open Court, demands of the Lords, beginning with the puisne Lord, whether the prisoner, calling him by his name, be guilty of the treason, &c. whereof he is arraigned; who all give in their verdict; and he being found guilty by a majority of votes, such majority being more than twelve; is brought to the bar again, and the Lord Steward acquainting the prisoner with the verdict of his Peers, passes sentence and judgment accordingly; after which, an O Yes! is made for dissolving the commission, and the white rod is broken by the Lord High Steward; whereupon this grand assembly breaks up, which is esteemed the most solemn and august Court of Justice upon earth. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44: and see 4 Comm c. 19.

The Lord High Steward gives no vote himself on a trial by commission; but only on a trial by the House of Peers, while the Parliament is sitting: where a Peer is tried by the House of Lords in full Parliament, the House may be adjourned as often as there is occasion, and the evidence taken by parcels; and it hath been adjudged, that where the trial is by commission, the Lord Steward, after a verdict given, may take time to advise upon it, and his office continues till he gives judgment. But the triers may not separate upon a trial by commission, after evidence given for the King; and it hath been resolved, that the Peers in such case must continue together, till they agree, to give a verdict. State Trials ii. 702: iii. 657: and see more fully, 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 1-8.

It is said, a writ of error lies in the King's Bench of an attainder of a Peer before the Lord High Steward. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 50. § 16, cites 1 Sid. 208. If a Peer be attainted of treason or felony, he may be brought before the Court of B. R. and demanded, what he has to say why execution should not be awarded against him? And if he plead any matter to such demand, his plea shall be heard, and execution ordered by the Court, upon its being adjudged against him. 1 H. 7. 22. pl. 15: Bro. Coro. 129: Fitz. Coro. 49. Likewise the Court of King's Bench may allow a pardon pleaded by a Peer to an indictment in that Court; to save the trouble of summoning the Peers, merely for that purpose: But that Court cannot receive his plea of not guilty, &c. but only the Lord Steward on arraignment before the Lords. 2 Inst. 49.

The sentence against a Peer for treason, is the same as against a common Subject; though the King generally pardons all but beheading, which is a part of the judgment: for other capital crimes, beheading is also the general punishment of a Peer; but an. 33 H. 8, the Lord Dacres was attainted of murder, and had judgment to be hanged; and anno 3 & 4 P. & M. the Lord Stourton, being attainted of murder, had judgment against him to be hanged, which sentences were executed; and so in the case of Lord Ferrers, 10 St. Tr. 478. In this latter case it was determined by all the Judges, that a Peer, convicted of felony and murder, ought to receive judgment for the same, according to the provisions of stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 37. See title Homicide III 3. ad. fin. And secondly, Supposing the day appointed by the judgment for execution should lapse before such execution done, that a new time may be appointed for the execution; either by the High Court of Parliament, before which such Peer shall have been attainted, although the office of High Steward be determined; or by the Court of K. B. the Parliament not then sitting; and the record of the attainder being properly removed into that Court. Fost. 139.

If execution be not done, the Lord Steward may by precept command it to be done according to the judgment. 3 Inst. 31.

Trial by Peers is very ancient: In the reign of Will. I. the Earl of Hereford, for conspiring to receive the Danes into England, and depose the conqueror, was tried by his Peers, and found guilty of treason, per judicium parium suorum. 2 Inst. 50. The Duke of Suffolk, anno 28 H. 6, being accused of high treason by the Commons, put himself upon the King's grace, and not upon his Peers, and the King alone adjudged him to banishment; but he sent for the Lord Chancellor, and the Lords who were in town, to his palace at Westminster, and also the Duke, and commanded him to quit the kingdom in their presence: The Lords nevertheless entered a protest to save the privilege of their peerage; and this was deemed no legal banishment, for the King's judging in that manner was no judgment; he was extrajudicially bid to absent himself out of the realm; and in doing it, he was taken on the sea and slain. The case of the Lord Cromwell, in the reign of King Henry VIII. was very extraordinary; this Lord was attainted in Parliament, and condemned and executed for high treason, without being allowed to make any defence. It need only be observed, that this attainder was by a Parliament under the power and influence of Henry VIII. See Parliament. Hist. 3 V. 163. And several great persons during this reign were brought to trial before Lords Commissioners. Anno 32 Car. 2, the Lord Stafford was tried for treason; and after evidence given for the King, and the prisoner had made his objections to the King's evidence, he insisted upon several points of law, viz. That no overt-act was alleged in his impeachment; that they were not competent witnesses who swore against him, but that they swore for money; and whether a man could be condemned for treason by one witness, there not being two witnesses to any one point, &c. But the points insisted upon being over-ruled, he was found guilty by a majority of twenty-four votes; fifty-five against thirty-one for him. 3 St. Tr. 311. He was executed; but in 1685 the attainder was reversed by an act of Parliament, reciting, that he was innocent of the treason laid to his charge, and that the testimony whereon he was found guilty was false.

PEERESS. As we have noblemen, so we have noblewomen, and these may be by creation, descent, or marriage. And first, Hen. VIII. made Anne Bullen Marchioness of Pembroke. James I created Lady Compton, wife to Sir Thomas Compton, Countess of Buckingham in the lifetime of her husband, without any addition of honour to him; and also made Lady Finch Viscountess of Maidstone, and afterwards Countess of Winchelsea, to her and the heirs of her body. George I. made Lady Sculingburgh Duchess of Kendal. If any English woman takes to husband a French nobleman, she shall not bear the title of dignity; and if a German woman, &c. marry a nobleman of England, unless she be made denizen, she cannot claim the title of her husband, no more than her dower, &c. Lex Constitution. 80.

There was no precedent for the trial of Peeresses, when accused of treason or felony, till after Eleanor Duchess of Gloucester, wife to the Lord Protector, was accused of treason and found guilty of witchcraft, in an ecclesiastical synod, through the intrigues of Cardinal Beaufort. This very extraordinary trial gave occasion to a special statute, 20 Hen. 6. c. 9, which declares the law to be, that Peeresses, either in their own right or by marriage, shall be tried before the same judicature as other Peers of the realm. Moor 769: 2 Inst 50: 6 Rep. 52: Staundf. P. C. 152. If a woman, noble in her own right, marries a Commoner, she still remains noble, and shall be tried by her Peers; but if she be only noble by marriage, then by a second marriage with a Commoner, she loses her dignity; for as by marriage it is gained, by marriage it is also lost. Dyer 79: Co. Litt. 16. Yet if a Duchess Dowager marries a Baron, she continues a Duchess still; for all the nobility are pares, and therefore it is no degradation. 1 Inst. 16. b: 2 Inst. 50.

If a Queen Dowager takes a husband, noble or not noble, she by her subsequent marriage shall not lose her dignity. 2 Inst. 50. Yet if a woman, noble by descent, marries to an inferior degree of nobility, as if the daughter of a Duke marries a Baron, she shall have precedence only as a Baroness. Ow. 82.

A woman noble in her own right, or by a first marriage, marrying a Commoner, communicates no rank or title to her husband. 1 Inst. 326. b. There have been claims, and supported by authorities, by a husband after issue had, to assume the title of his wife's dignity, and after her death to retain the same as tenant by the curtesy, but it does not seem that such a claim would now be allowed. See 1 Inst 29 b. in n.

A woman noble by marriage, afterwards marrying a Commoner, is generally called and addressed by the style and title which she bore before her second marriage. but this is only by curtesy, as the daughters of Dukes, Marquisses, and Earls are usually addressed by the title of Lady; though in law they are Commoners. In a writ of partition brought by Ralph Howard and Lady Anne Powes, his wife, the Court held that it was a misnomer, and that it ought to have been by Ralph Howard and Anne his wife, late wife of Lord Powes deceased. Dy 79.

A Countess or Baroness may not be arrested for debt or trespass; for though, in respect of their sex, they cannot sit in Parliament, yet they are Peers of the Realm, and shall be tried by their Peers, &c. But a capias being awarded against the Countess of Rutland, it was held that she might be taken by the Sheriff; because he ought not to dispute the authority of the Court from whence the writ issued, but must execute it, for he is bound by oath so to do; and although by the writ itself it appeared, that the party was a Countess, against whom a capias would not generally lie, for that, in some cases it may lie, as for a contempt, &c. therefore the Sheriff ought not to examine the judicial acts of the Court. 6 Rep. 52.

It hath been agreed, that a Queen Consort, and Queen Dowager, whether she continue sole after the King's death, or take a second husband, and he be a Peer or Commoner; and also all Peeresses by birth, whether sole or married to Peers or Commoners; and all Marchionesses and Viscountesses are entitled to a trial by the Peers, though not expressly mentioned in the stat. 20 H. 6. c. 9: 2 Inst. 50: Cromp. Jurisd. 33: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 10, 11.

PELLOTA, Fr. Pelote.] The ball of the foot. See 4 Inst. 308.

PELT-WOOL, The wool pulled off the skin or pelt of dead sheep. See stat. 8 H. 6. c. 22.

PEN, A word used by the Britons for a high mountain, and also by the ancient Gauls; from whence those high hills which divide France from Italy are called the Appenines; and more to the purpose is the name of Penmaenmawr in Wales. Camd. Britan.

PENAL LAWS, Are of three kinds, viz. Pœna pecuniaria, pœna corporalis, and pœna exilii. Cro. Jac. 415. And penal statutes are made on various occasions, to punish and deter offenders; and they ought to be construed strictly, and not extended by equity; but the words may be interpreted beneficially, according to the intent of the legislators. 1 Inst. 54, 168. See 1 Comm. Introd. § 3. p. 89. Where a thing is prohibited by statute under a penalty, if the penalty, or part of it, be not given to him who will sue for the same, it goes and belongs to the King. Rast. Entr. 433: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26. § 17. But the King cannot grant to any person any penalty or forfeiture, &c. due by any statute, before judgment thereupon had. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 3. Though after plea pleaded, Justices of assise, &c. having power to hear and determine offences done against any penal statute, may compound the penalties with the defendant, by virtue of the King's warrant or Privy Seal.

The Courts at Westminster (particularly the Court of King's Bench) frequently give leave on motion, and an affidavit of circumstances, &c. to compound penal actions. Compounding without such leave, is punishable by indictment.

Where penalties are ordained by penal acts of Parliament to be recovered in any Court of Record, this is to be understood only of the Courts at Westminster; and not of the Courts of Record of inferior corporations. Jenk Cent. 228. The Spiritual Court may hold plea of a thing forbidden by statute upon a penalty; but they may not proceed on the penalty. 2 Lev. 222. See further, titles Information; Statutes, Action; and as to the sanction of Laws by penalties, 1 Comm. Introd. p. 56, 7.

PENALTY OF BONDS, &c.; See titles Bonds; Mortgages.

PENANCE, An ecclesiastical punishment, which affects the body of the penitent; by which he is obliged to give a public satisfaction to the church, for the scandal he hath given by his evil example. And in the primitive times, they were to give testimonies of their reformation, before they were re-admitted to partake of the mysteries of the church. In the case of incest, or incontinency, the sinner is usually injoined to do a public Penance in the cathedral or parish church, or public market, bare-legged and bare-headed in a white sheet, and to make an open confession of his crime in a prescribed form of words; which is augmented or moderated according to the quality of the fault, and the discretion of the Judge.

So,

So, in smaller faults, a public satisfaction or Penance, as the Judge shall decree, is to be made before the minister, churchwardens, or some of the parishioners, respect being had to the quality of the offence; as in the case of defamation, or laying violent hands on a minister, or the like. God. Append. 18: Wood's Inst. 507. Penance may be changed into a sum of money, to be applied to pious uses, and this is called commuting. 3 Inst. 150: 4 Inst. 336. See Articuli Cleri, 9 E. 2. c. 4: F. N. B. 53; and this Dictionary, title Clergy.

PENANCE, At Common Law, where a person stands mute. See title Mute.

PENERARIUS, An ensign bearer; as John Parient was Squire of the Body, and Penerarius to King Rich. II.

PENNY; See Peny.

PENNYWEIGHT. As every pound Troy contained twelve ounces, each ounce was formerly divided into twenty parts, called Pennyweights; and though the Pennyweight be altered, yet the denomination still continues. Every Pennyweight is subdivided into twenty-four grains. Cowell.

PENON, mentioned in an ancient statute, 11 Ric. 2. cap. 1.] A standard, banner, or ensign, carried in war. Cowell.

PENSA SALIS, Casei, &c. A wey of salt, or cheese containing 256 pounds. Cowell.

PENSAM, Ad pensam] The ancient way of paying into the Exchequer as much money for a pound sterling, as weighed twelve ounces Troy. Payment of a pound de numero, imported just twenty shillings; ad scalam twenty shillings and six-pence; and ad pensam, imported the full weight of twelve ounces. See Lowndes's Essay on Coin, p. 4 See Scalam.

PENSION, Fr Pension.] An allowance made to any one without an equivalent. Johns. See Pensioner. To receive Pension from a foreign Prince or State, without leave of our King, has been held to be criminal, because it may incline a man to prefer the interest of such foreign Prince to that of his own country. See title Contempt. Six-pence in the pound to be deducted out of all salaries. Stat. 7 Geo. st. 1. c. 27. § 19: 12 Geo. 1. c. 2. What pensions are chargeable with the land tax, and what exempt, See the Land-Tax Acts.

Persons having pensions from the Crown are declared incapable of being elected members of Parliament, &c. by stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 56. See title Parliament, VI. B. (2).

PENSION OF CHURCHES, Certain sums of money paid to clergymen in lieu of tithes. Some churches have settled on them annuities, Pensions, &c. payable by other churches; which Pensions are due by virtue of some decree made by an Ecclesiastical Judge on a controversy for tithes, by which the tithes have been decreed to be enjoyed by one, and a Pension instead thereof to be paid to another; or they have arisen by virtue of a deed made by consent of the Parson, Patron, and Ordinary; and if such Pension hath been usually paid for twenty years, then it may be claimed by prescription, and be recovered in the Spiritual Court, or a Parson may prosecute his suit for a Pension by prescription, either in that Court or at Common Law, by writ of annuity; but if he takes his remedy at law, he shall never afterwards sue in the Spiritual Court; if the prescription be denied, that must be tried by the Common Law. F. N. B. 51: Hardr. 230: Ventr. 120. A spiritual person may sue in the Spiritual Court, for a Pension originally granted and confirmed by the Ordinary; but where it is granted by a temporal person to a clerk, he cannot; as if one grant an annuity to a Parson, he must sue for it in the Temporal Courts. Cro. Eliz. 675. If a Parson or Vicar have a Pension out of another church, and it is not paid, they may bring a writ of annuity; because a Pension issuing out of a rectory is the same thing as a rent; for it may be demanded in a writ of entry, and a common recovery may be suffered of it. 2 Nels. Abr. 1243.

Upon a bill in the Exchequer for a Pension, issuing out of a vicarage, it has been held, that though there is no glebe nor tithes, but only offerings, &c. yet the Vicar is chargeable; and a suit may be brought in this Court as well as at Common Law, &c. for a Pension by prescription, Hardr. 230. A Pension out of an appropriation by prescription is suable in the Spiritual Court; and if the duty is traversed, it may be tried there. 1 Salk. 58. A libel was had in the Spiritual Court for a Pension, to which the plaintiff made a title by prescription: and a prohibition was prayed, for that the Court had no cognisance of prescriptions; but adjudged, that they having cognisance of the principal, it shall draw the accessary. 1 Vent. 3. The Curate of a chapel of ease libelled against the Vicar of the parish for the arrears of a Pension, which he claimed by prescription; though a prohibition was granted, because the Curate is removeable at the will of the Parson, therefore cannot prescribe; he must bring a quantum meruit. 2 Salk. 506. The statute 13 Ed. 1. st. 4, appoints a remedy for Pensions in the Ecclesiastical Court. And stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 19, gives damages to the value and costs, &c. See titles Corody; Courts-Ecclesiastical.

PENSIONS OF THE INNS OF COURTS, Annual payments of each member to the Houses: And also that which in the two Temples is called a Parliament, and in Lincoln's Inn a Council, in Gray's Inn is termed a Pension; being usually an assembly of the members to consult of the affairs of the Society.

PENSIONER, from Pension; one who is supported by an allowance at the will of another; a dependant. It is usually applied (in a public sense) to those who receive pensions or annuities from Government; who are chiefly such as have retired from places of honour and emolument.

PENSIONERS, Pensionarii.] Are a band of gentlemen so called, who attend as a guard on the King's person: they were instituted anno 1539, and have an allowance of fifty pounds a-year, to maintain themselves and two horses for the King's service. See Stow's Annals 973.

PENSION-WRIT. When a Pension-writ is once issued, none sued thereby in any Inns of Court, shall be discharged or permitted to come into Commons, till all duties be paid. Order in Gray's Inn, wherein it seems to be a peremptory order against such of the society as are in arrear for Pensions and other duties. Cowell.

PENTECOSTALS, Pentecostalia] Pious oblations made at the Feast of Pentecost, by parishioners to their priest, and sometimes by inferior churches or parishes, to the principal mother-church. Which oblations were also called Whitsun-farthings, and were divided into four parts, one to the parish priest, a second to the poor, a third for repair of the church, and a fourth to the Bishop. Stephens of Procurations and Pentecostals. See Kennet's Glossary in Pentecostalia.

PENY, Sax. Penig.] An ancient current silver coin. 2 Inst. 575. The Saxons had no other sort of silver coin. It was equal in weight to our three-pence. Five made one shilling Saxon, and thirty made a mark, which they called mancuse, and weighed as much as three of our half-crowns. The English penny called sterling, is round, without clipping, and weighs 32 grana frumenti in medio spicæ; twenty pence make an ounce, and twelve ounces make a pound. See stats. 20 E. 1 : 27 E. 1. st. 3; 31 E. 1. It was made with a cross in the middle, and broke into half-pence and farthings. Cowell. Mat. Paris 1279. See Denarius.

PERAMBULATION, Perambulatio.] A travelling through, or over; as Perambulation of the forest is the surveying or walking about the forest, and the utmost limits of it; by Justices, or other Officers thereto assigned, to set down and preserve the metes and bounds thereof. Stats. 16 Car. 1. c. 16: 20 Car. 2. c. 3: 4 Inst. 30. See further, title Forest.

Perambulation of parishes is to be made by the minister, churchwardens, and parishioners, by going round the same once a year, in or about Ascension week: And the parishioners may well justify going over any man's land in their Perambulation, according to usage; and it is said, may abate all nusances in their way. Cro Eliz. 441.

There is also a Perambulation of manors; and a writ de perambulatione faciendâ, which lies where any encroachments have been made by a neighbouring Lord, &c. then, by the assent of the Lords, the Sheriff shall take with him the parties and neighbours, and make a Perambulation, and settle the bounds; also a commission may be granted to other persons to make Perambulation, and to certify the same in the Chancery, or the Common Pleas, &c. And this commission is issued to make Perambulation of towns, counties, &c. New Nat. Br. 206.

If tenant for life of a lordship, and one who is tenant in fee-simple of another lordship adjoining, sue forth this writ or commission, and by virtue thereof a Perambulation is made, the same shall not bind him in reversion; nor shall the Perambulation made with the assent of tenant in tail, bind his heir. And it is said this assent of the parties to the Perambulation ought to be acknowledged and made personally in Chancery, or by dedimus potestatem; and being certified, the writ or commission issues, &c. New Nat. Br. 206. The writ begins thus: The King to the Sheriff, &c. We command you, that taking with you twelve discreet lawful men of your county, in your proper person you go to the land of A. B. of, &c. and the land of C. D. of, &c. and upon their oaths you cause to be made Perambulation betwixt the lands of the said A. in, &c. and of the said C. in, &c.; so that it be made by certain metes, or bounds and divisions, &c. And make known to our Justices at Westminster, &c.

If Perambulation be refused to be made by a lord, the other lord who is grieved thereby shall have a writ against him called de Rationabilibus Divisis. See F. N. B. 128, 133: Reg. Orig. 157: and Rationabilibus Divisis.

Questions as to boundaries, limits, &c. are now, however, in general determined, by actions of trespass, ejectment, &c.

PERJURY, AND SUBORNATION THEREOF.

PERJURY; Perjurium; mendacium cum juramento firmatum] Is defined to be, a crime committed, when a lawful oath is administered, by any who hath authority, to a person, in any judicial proceeding, who swears wilfully, absolutely, and falsely, in a matter material to the issue, or cause in question, by their own act, or by the subornation of others. 3 Inst. 163, 4.

PERJURY by the Common Law is defined a wilful false oath by one who, being lawfully required to depose the truth, in any proceeding in a Court of justice, swears absolutely, in a matter of some consequence to the point in question, whether he be believed or not. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 1.

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY, by the Common Law, is, an offence in procuring a man to take a false oath amounting to Perjury, who actually takes such oath; but if the person incited to take such oath do not actually take it, the person by whom he was so incited is not guilty of subornation; yet he is liable to be punished not only by fine, but also by infamous corporal punishment. 1 Roll. Abr. 41, 57: Yelv. 72: Cro. Jac. 158: 2 Keb. 399: 3 Mod. 122: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 10.

I. Of Perjury by the Common Law; and how restrained and punished.

II. Of the Punishment of Perjury by Statute.

I. 1st, IT is necessary to constitute the offence of Perjury, that the false oath be taken wilfully, viz. with some degree of deliberation; and it must also be corrupt, (that is, committed malo animo;) it must be wilful, positive, and absolute; not merely owing to surprise or inadvertency, or a mistake of the true state of the question. 5 Mod. 350: 4 Comm. 137: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 2.

2dly, The oath must be taken either in a judicial proceeding, or in some other public proceeding of the like nature, wherein the King's honour or interest is concerned; or before commissioners appointed by the King to inquire of the forfeitures of his tenants, or of defective titles wanting the supply of the King's patents; but it is not material whether the Court, in which a false oath is taken, be a Court of Record or not, or whether it be a Court of Common Law, or a Court of Equity or Civil Law, &c. or whether the oath be taken in face of the Court, or out of it, before persons authorised to examine a matter depending in it; as before the Sheriff on a writ of inquiry, &c. or whether it be in relation to the merits of a cause, or in a collateral matter; as where one, who offers himself to be bail for another, swears that his substance is greater than it is, &c. but neither a false oath in a mere private matter, as in making a bargain, &c. nor the breach of a promissory oath, whether public or private, are punishable as Perjury. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 3.

The law takes no notice of any Perjury but such as is committed in some Court of Justice having power to administer an oath; or before some magistrate or proper officer, invested with a similar authority, in some proceedings relative to a suit, or a criminal prosecution; for it esteems all other oaths unnecessary at least, and therefore will not punish the breach of them. For which reason it is much to be questioned, how far any magistrate is justifiable in taking a voluntary affidavit in any extrajudicial matter, as is now too frequent upon every petty occasion; since it is more than possible that by such idle oaths a man may frequently in foro conscientiæ, incur the guilt, and at the same time evade the temporal penalties of Perjury. 4 Comm. c. 10. p. 137. See the stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 39, and Burn's Justice, title Oath I.

3dly, The oath ought to be taken before persons lawfully authorised to administer it; for if it be taken before persons acting merely in a private capacity, or before persons pretending to a legal authority of administering such oath, but having no such authority, it is not punishable as Perjury; yet a false oath taken before commissioners, whose commission at the time is in strictness determined by the demise of the King, is Perjury; if taken before such time as the commissioners had notice of such demise; for it would be of the utmost ill consequence, in such case, to make their proceedings wholly void. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 4.

It is remarkable, that the House of Commons have no power to administer an oath, except in a few particular instances where that power is granted to them by express statute. It is supposed that the reason they have never obtained the general authority of administering an oath, is owing to the jealousy of the Upper House; which, by securing this privilege to itself, prevents the Commons from participating in the judicature of Parliament. 4 Comm. c. 10, in n.

4thly, The oath ought to be taken by a person sworn to depose the truth; therefore a false verdict comes not under the notion of Perjury, because the jurors swear not to depose the truth, but only to judge truly of the depositions of others; but a man may be as well perjured by an oath in his own cause, (e. g. in an answer in Chancery, or in an answer to interrogatories concerning a contempt, or in an affidavit, &c.) as by an oath taken by him as witness in another's cause. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 5.

5thly, Is it not material, whether the thing sworn be true or false, where the person who swears it in truth knows nothing of it. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69 § 6.

6thly, The oath must be taken absolutely and directly; therefore if a man only swears as he thinks, remembers or believes, he cannot be guilty of Perjury. 1 Hawk. P. C.

P. C. c. 69. § 7. But a man may be indicted for Perjury in swearing that he believes a fact to be true, which he must know to be false. Leach 270.

7thly. The thing sworn ought to be some way material; for if it be wholly foreign from the purpose, or immaterial, and neither pertinent to the matter in question, or tending to aggravate or extenuate the damages, not likely to induce the Jury to give credit to the substantial part of the evidence, it cannot amount to Perjury; because it is wholly insignificant; as where a witness introduces his evidence, with an impertinent preamble of a story, concerning previous facts, no ways relating to what is material, and is guilty of a falsity as to such facts; but a witness may be guilty of Perjury in respect to a false oath, concerning a mere circumstance, if such oath have a plain tendency to corroborate the more material part of the evidence; as if in trespass for spoiling the plaintiff's close, with defendant's sheep, a witness swears that he saw such a number of defendant's sheep in the close, and being asked how he knew them to be defendant's, swears that he knew them by such a mark, which he knew to be the defendant's; where in truth defendant never used any such mark. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 8. And it is incumbent on the prosecutor to prove the materiality of the Perjury, ibid. in n.

8thly. It is not material whether the false oath was credited, or not; or whether the party, in whose prejudice it was taken, was in the event damaged by it; for the prosecution is not grounded on the damage to the party, but on the abuse of public justice. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 9. On the trial, the oath will be taken as true, until it be disproved: and therefore to convict a man of Perjury, one probable credible witness is not enough; for the evidence must be strong, clear, and more numerous on the part of the prosecution, than the evidence on the other side. Therefore the law will not permit a man to be convicted of Perjury, unless there are two witnesses at least. 10 Mod. 195. Nor shall the party prejudiced by the Perjury be admitted as a witness to prove it. Lord Raym 396.

The punishment of Perjury and subornation, at Common Law, has been various. It was anciently death; afterwards banishment, or cutting out the tongue; then forfeiture of goods; and now it is fine and imprisonment, and never more to be capable of bearing testimony. 3 Inst. 163. The stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9. (see post II.) if the offender be prosecuted thereon, inflicts the penalty of perpetual infamy, and a fine of 40*l.* on the suborner; and in default of payment, imprisonment for six months, and to stand in the pillory: (with both ears nailed thereto. Qu? see the statute). Perjury itself is, by that statute, punished with six months imprisonment, perpetual infamy, and a fine of 20*l.* or not paying the fine, to have both ears nailed to the pillory. See post II. The prosecution, however, is usually carried on for the offence at Common Law; (by indictment at the assises, or in the King's Bench); especially as, to the penalties before inflicted, the stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25, superadds a power of punishment, by committing the offender to the House of Correction, and transportation for seven years. 4 Comm. c. 10: see post. II.

It has sometimes been wished, that Perjury, at least upon capital accusations, whereby another's life has been, or might have been, destroyed, was rendered capital, upon a principle of retaliation: and certainly the odiousness of the crime seems to plead strongly in behalf of such a law. Where, indeed, the death of an innocent person has actually been the consequence of such wilful Perjury, it falls within the guilt of deliberate murder, and deserves an equal punishment; which our antient laws, in fact, inflicted. Brit. c. 5. But Coke says, expresly, it is not holden for murder at this day. 3 Inst. 48: and see Fost. 131, 132. And the mere attempt to destroy life, by other means, not being capital, there is no reason that an attempt by Perjury should; much less that this crime should, in all judicial cases, be punished with death. See 4 Comm. c. 10. p. 38, 9; c. 14. p. 196.

II. By stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9, it is enacted, "That whoever shall unlawfully and corruptly procure any witness to commit any wilful and corrupt Perjury, or shall unlawfully or corruptly procure or suborn any witness, who shall be sworn to testify in perpetuam rei memoriam, shall, for such offence, being thereof lawfully convicted or attainted, forfeit the sum of 40*l.* And if such offender, so convicted or attainted, shall not have goods, &c. to the value of 40*l.* then such person shall suffer imprisonment by the space of one half year, without bail; and stand upon the pillory the space of one hour, in some market town next adjoining to the place where the offence was committed, in open market there; or in the market town itself where the offence was committed.

"That no person, so convicted or attainted, shall be received as a witness in any Court of Record, till such judgment shall be reversed; and that on such reversal the party grieved shall recover damages against the party who procured the judgment so reversed to be first given.

"That if any person shall, either by the subornation, unlawful procurement, sinister persuasion, or means, of any other, or by their own act, consent, or agreement, wilfully and corruptly commit wilful Perjury, that then every offender, being duly convicted, shall forfeit 20*l.* and have imprisonment by the space of six months, without bail; and the oath of such offender shall not from thenceforth be received in any Court of Record, until such judgment be reversed, &c.; on which reversal, the party grieved shall recover damages in the manner before mentioned.

"That if such offender shall not have goods or chattels to the value of 20*l.* then he shall be set on the pillory, where he shall have both ears nailed.

"One moiety of the forfeitures to the King; the other to the person grieved, who will sue for the same, &c. and that as well the Judge of every Court where any suit shall be, and whereon any such Perjury shall be committed, as also the Justices of assise and gaol delivery, and Justices of peace at their quarter sessions, may inquire of, hear, and determine offences against the act.

"The act shall no way extend to any Spiritual or Ecclesiastical Court; but every offender shall be punished by such usual laws as are used in the said Courts.

"The statute shall not restrain the authority of any Judge, having absolute power to punish Perjury before the making thereof; but every such Judge may proceed in the punishment of all offences, punishable before making the statute, as they might have done to all purposes; so that they set not on the offender less punishment than contained in the act."

In the construction of this statute, the following opinions have been holden:

That every indictment, or action, on this statute must exactly pursue the words of it; therefore, if it allege, that the defendant deposed such a matter falsò & deceptivè, or falsò & corruptè, or falsò & voluntariè, without saying, voluntariè & corruptè, it is not good; though it conclude, that sic voluntarium & corruptum commisit perjurium contra formam statuti, &c. Also it is necessary expressly to shew, that the defendant was sworn; and it is not sufficient to say, that tacto per se sacro evangelio deposuit. Cro Eliz. 147: Hetl. 12: Savil. 43: 2 Leon. 211: 1 Show. 198: Cro. Eliz. 105: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 17.

But there is no need to shew, whether the party took the false oath, through the subornation of another, or of his own act, though the words of the statute are, "If persons by subornation, &c. or their own act, &c. shall commit wilful Perjury:" for there being no medium between the branches of this distinction, they express no more than the law would have implied; therefore operate nothing. 3 Bulst. 147: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 18.

It hath been adjudged that a man cannot be guilty of Perjury within this statute, in any case wherein he may not possibly be guilty of subornation of Perjury within it; for it is reasonable to give the whole statute the same construction: neither can it be well intended, that the makers of the statute meant to extend its purview farther as to Perjury, which they seem to esteem the lesser crime, than to subornation of Perjury, which they seem to esteem the greater: therefore, since the clause concerning subornation of Perjury, mentioning only matters depending by writ, bill, plaint, or information, concerning hereditaments, goods, debts, or damages, &c. extends not to Perjury on an indictment or criminal information; the clause concerning Perjury, though penned in more general words, hath been adjudged to come under the like restriction: also since the clause concerning subornation of Perjury relates only to Perjury by witnesses, that concerning Perjury shall extend only to the like Perjury; therefore, not to Perjury in an answer in Chancery; or in swearing the peace against a man; or in any presentment by homage in a Court-baron; or in wager of law; or in swearing before commissioners of inquiry of the King's title to lands: and by the opinions of some, a false affidavit against a man in a Court of justice is not within the statute; but if such affidavit be by a third person, and relate to a cause depending in suit before the Court, and either of the parties in variance be grieved, in respect of such cause, by reason of the Perjury, it may strongly be argued that it is within the purview of the statute: also a false oath before the Sheriff, on a writ of inquiry, is within the statute. 5 Co. 99: Cro. Jac. 120: 3 Inst. 164: 2 Leon. 201: Yelv. 120: Cro. Eliz. 148: 2 Roll. Abr. 77: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. §§. 19, 21.—But it has been decided, that any Court may punish such an offence committed in the face of the Court, under this statute, 5 Eliz. c. 9.—Therefore, where one made an affidavit in the Court of Common Pleas, and confessed it was false, the Court recorded his confession, and sentenced him to the pillory: and the objections that the Court had no jurisdiction, and that the offender ought to have been brought before the Court by indictment, were over-ruled. 8 Mod. 179: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 21, in n.

It hath been collected, from the clause which gives an action to the party grieved, that no false oath is within the statute, which doth not give some person a just cause of complaint; therefore, if the thing sworn be true, though it be not known by him who swears it to be so, the oath is not within the statute, because it gives no just cause of complaint to the other party, who would take advantage of another's want of evidence to prove the truth; from the same ground, no false oath can be within the statute, unless the party against whom it was sworn suffered some disadvantage by it; therefore, in every prosecution on the statute, you must set forth the record wherein you suppose the Perjury to have been committed, and must prove at the trial that there is such a record, either by actually producing it, or an attested copy; also, in the pleadings, you must not only set forth the point wherein the false oath was taken, but must also shew how it conduced to the proof or disproof of the matter in question; and if an action on the statute be brought by more than one, you must shew how the Perjury was prejudicial to each of the plaintiffs: But it seems that a Perjury which tends only to aggravate or extenuate the damages, is as much within the statute, as a Perjury which goes directly to the point in issue; and a Perjury, in a cause wherein an erroneous judgment is given, is a good ground of prosecution upon the statute, till the judgment be reversed. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69. § 22.

If Perjury be committed, that is within this statute, but the indictment concludes not contra formam statuti, yet it is good at Common Law; but not to bring one within the corporal punishment of the statute. 2 Hal.'s Hist. P. C. 191-2.

By stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. § 2, the more effectually to deter persons from committing wilful and corrupt Perjury, or subornation of Perjury, it is enacted, "That, besides the punishment to be inflicted by law for so great crimes, it shall be lawful for the Court or Judge before whom any person shall be convicted of wilful and corrupt Perjury, or subornation of Perjury, to order such person to be sent to some house of correction, for a time not exceeding seven years, there to be kept to hard labour during the time; otherwise, to be transported for a term not exceeding seven years, as the Court shall think proper; therefore judgment shall be given, that the person convicted shall be committed or transported accordingly, besides such punishment as shall be adjudged to be inflicted on such person agreeable to the laws in being; and if transportation be directed, the same shall be executed in such manner as is provided by law for transportation of felons: and if any person so committed or transported shall voluntarily escape or break prison, or return from transportation, before the expiration of the time, such person, being lawfully convicted, shall suffer death as a felon; and shall be tried for such felony in the county where he so escaped, or where he shall be apprehended."

By stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 6, it is enacted, "That a false affirmation made by Quakers shall be liable to the same punishment as wilful Perjury." See titles Quakers; Oaths.

By stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 10. § 24. the taking, or procuring to be taken, a false oath to obtain probates or letters of administration to seamen, is made felony, without benefit of clergy.

"The Insolvent Acts impose a penalty of 500*l.* on the Sheriff, or other officer, perjuring himself; and that of felony, without clergy, on a prisoner guilty of the same crime, in order to take the benefit of the acts. See also stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 31, as to Perjury of freeholders at elections for Cricklade.

By stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 11, it is enacted, "That, in every information or indictment for Perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged, and by what Court, or before whom the oath was taken, (averring such Court or person to have authority to administer the same,) together with the proper averments to falsify the matter wherein the Perjury is assigned; without setting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding; and without setting forth the commission or authority of the Court or person before whom the Perjury was committed. § 1.

In every information or indictment for subornation of Perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged; without setting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding; and without setting forth the commission or authority of the Court or person before whom the Perjury was committed, or agreed to be committed. § 2.

"It shall be lawful for any Justice, (sitting the Court, or within twenty-four hours after,) to direct any person examined as a witness before them to be prosecuted for Perjury, in case there appear a reasonable cause; and to assign the party injured, or other person undertaking such prosecution, counsel, who shall do their duty without fee. And every prosecution so directed shall be carried on without payment of any tax, and without payment of any fees in Court, or to any officer of the Court. And the Clerk of assise, or his associate or prothonotary, or other officer of the Court attending when such prosecution is directed, shall, without fee, give the party injured, or other person undertaking such prosecution, a certificate of the same being directed, with the names of the counsel assigned him; which certificate shall be deemed sufficient proof of such prosecution having been directed. Provided, that no such direction or certificate shall be given in evidence upon any trial against any person upon a prosecution so directed. § 3."

In general, the Court will oblige the defendant to plead or demur even to a defective indictment for this offence. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. § 146. They are also very cautious in granting a certiorari to remove it. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 28. And permission has been refused in Chancery to amend an answer, where an indictment for Perjury had only been threatened; even where the party, having no interest, could not he supposed to make the false oath intentionally. 1 Bro. P. C. 419. For it is the province of the Grand Jury to judge of the intention; and what the Grand Jury may find, the Court will never expunge. Hardw. 203.

PERMISSIVE WASTE; See Waste.

PERMIT, from permitto.] A licence or warrant for persons to pass with and sell goods, on having paid the duties of customs or excise for the same. See Customs.

PERMUTATIONE archidiaconatûs et ecclesiæ eidem annexæ cum ecclesiâ et præbendâ. A writ to an Ordinary, commanding him to admit a clerk to a benefice, upon exchange made with another. Reg. Orig. 307.

PER MY ET PER TOUT; See title Joint-tenants.

PERNANCY, from the Fr. prendre.] A taking or receiving; as tithes in Pernancy, are tithes taken, or that may be taken, in kind. So, Pernancy of the profits means the taking the profits. See the next title.

PERNOR OF PROFITS, He who receives the profits of lands, &c. and is all one with cestui que use, 1 Rep. 123. The King has the pernancy of the profits of the lands of an outlaw, in personal actions; and by seizure shall hold against the alienation of such outlaw, &c, Raym. 17: See Co. Litt. 589. b: and 12 R. 2. c. 15.

PERPARS, A part of the inheritance. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 54. par. 19.

PERPETUATING THE TESTIMONY OF WITNESSES. If Witnesses to a disputable fact are old and infirm, it is usual to file a bill in Chancery, to perpetuate the Testimony of those Witnesses, although no suit is depending; for, it may be, a man's antagonist only waits for the death of some of them to commence his suit. 3 Comm. 450. See titles Chancery; Evidence.

PERPETUITY. A Perpetuity is, where, though all who have interest should join in a conveyance, yet they could not bar or pass the estate. But if, by concurrence of all having interest, the estate-tail may be barred, it is no perpetuity. Ch. Cas. 213. and see 3 Ch. Ca. 35.

Perpetuities are absolute or qualified. And estates-tail from the time of the statute De donis, till common recoveries were found out, were looked upon as Perpetuities. 12 Mod. 282.

Various have been the attempts to establish Perpetuities, by controlling the exercise of that right of alienation, which is inseparable from the estate of a tenant in tail. The chief of them are brought together in Taylor d. Atkins v. Horde, 1 Burr. 84; where it is observed, that the power to suffer a common recovery is a privilege inseparably incident to an estate-tail. It is a potestas alienandi, which is not restrained by the statute De donis; and has been so considered ever since Taltarum's case, 12 E. 4, 14. b. p. 16: and this power to suffer a common recovery cannot be restrained by condition, limitation, custom, recognizance, statute, or covenant. Treat. Eq. ii. c. 3. § 5, in n. See this Dictionary, titles Limitation of Estates; Tail and Fee-tail; Conveyance, &c.

A Perpetuity is a thing odious in law, and destructive to the commonwealth; it would put a stop to the commerce, and prevent the circulation of the property of the kingdom. Vern. 164.

Every executory devise is a Perpetuity, as far as it goes, i. e. an estate unalienable, though all mankind join in the conveyance. 1 Salk. 229. See title Executory Devise.

A. seized in fee, gives his lands, after his death without issue male, to B. in tail male, until he or they effectually go about to do any acts to alter or discontinue this estate-tail; and then to D. and the heirs male of his body, with several remainders over; the devisor dies without issue; B. enters; D. dies leaving issue E.; B. levies a fine; E. enters; and the question was, if the entry was good? Resolved, That this was a Perpetuity, and not allowable, being repugnant to law; for by such a limitation an estate-tail cannot be determined and given to another; for by the fine the remainder is discontinued and devested, so as E. cannot enter: for it is no limitation to enter but after the effectual going about to do any acts, &c. and it is is not effectual till the act done; and when it is done, the remainder is discontinued, and then he cannot enter. Cro. Jac. 606. See Vern. 161.

It is absolutely against the constant course of Chancery to decree a Perpetuity, or give any relief in that case. 1 Chan. Rep. 144.

Trustees of a term limited over in tail, remainder in tail, were decreed in Chancery to convey the estate over; for otherwise there would be a Perpetuity. Sid. 37.

The father settles land on his son in tail male, and takes bond from him, that he will not dock the entail; decreed the bond good. Had not the son agreed to give the bond, the father might have made him only tenant for life; and though the alienation is not made by the son, but by his issue, the bill was dismissed with costs. 2 Vern. 233.

An attempt to make a perpetual succession of estates for life is vain and not practicable. 2 Vern. 738.

PERPETUITY OF THE KING; See title King, V. 2.

PER QUÆ SERVITIA, A judicial writ issuing from the note of a fine; and lieth for cognisee of a manor, seigniory, chief rent, or other services, to compel him who is tenant of the land at the time of the note of the fine levied to attorn unto him. West. Symbol. part 2. title Fines, sect. 126. Old Nat. Brev. 155. See 16 Vin. Abr. title Per quæ servitia.

PERQUISITES, Perquisitum.] Any thing gotten by industry, or purchased with money, different from that which descends from a father or ancestor; and so Bracton uses it, when he says, Perquisitum facere, lib. 2. cap. 30. num. 3. and lib. 4. c. 22. See Purchase.

PERQUISITES OF COURTS, Are commonly those profits which arise to lords of manors, from their court baron, above the yearly revenue of the land; as fines of copyholds, heriots, amerciaments, &c. Perk. 20, 21.

PERQUISITES OF OFFICES; See Fees.

PER QUOD, Words made use of by a plaintiff in his declaration, in the averring of particular damage to have happened, without which his action would not have been maintainable. As in slander, to say that such a clergyman is a bastard, he cannot for this bring any action against me, unless he can shew some special loss by it: in which case he may bring his action against me, for saying he was a bastard, by which (per quod) he lost the presentation to such a living. 4 Rep. 17. 1 Leo. 248: 3 Comm. 124. So in a declaration in trespass, for an injury to a wife or servant; the plaintiff states per quod, by which, he lost consortium of the one, or servitium of the other.

PERSON, A man or woman; also the state or condition whereby one man differs from another.

PERSON, Injuries to, are such as relate to life, limb, body, health, or reputation. See 3 Comm. and this Dictionary, title Liberty, &c.

PERSONABLE, personabilis.] Enabled to maintain plea in court: e. g. the defendant was judged personable to maintain this action, Old Nat. Brev. 142. The tenant pleaded that the wife was an alien, born in Portugal, and judgment was demanded whether she should be answered: the plaintiff saith, she was made personable by parliament, i. e. as the civilians would speak it, habere personam standi in judicio. Kitch. 214. Personable also signifies to be of capacity to take any thing granted or given. Plowd. 27.

PERSONAL, personalis.] Being joined with the substantives, things, goods, or chattels, as things personal, goods personal, chattels personal, signifies any moveable thing, quick or dead, West. Symbol. part 2. sect. 58. Thus theft is an unlawful felonious taking away of the moveable personal goods of another. See titles Larceny, Felony.

PERSONAL ACTION; See Action, Personal.

PERSONAL TITHES, Are tithes paid of such profits as come by the labour of a man's person; as by buying and selling, gains of merchandise, and handicrafts, &c. See title Tithes.

PERSONALTY, Personalitas.] An abstract of personal; the action is in the Personalty, i. e. it is brought against the right person, or the person against whom in law it lies. Old Nat. Brev. 92. Or it is to distinguish actions and things personal, from those that are real.

PERSONATE, To represent by a fictitious or assumed character, so as to pass for the person represented. Johns.

If one of my name levies a fine of my land in my name, I may well confess and avoid this fine, by shewing the special matter. But if a stranger, who is not of my name, levies a fine of my land in my name, I shall not be received to aver that I did not levy the fine, but another in my name, for that is merely contrary to the record; and so it is of a recognizance, and other matters of record. But when the fraud appears to the Court, they may enter a vacat on the roll, and so make it no fine, altho' the party cannot avoid it by averment, during the time it remains a record. Cro. Eliz. 531. See title Fine.

B. was taken in execution upon a recognizance of bail, and he made it appear to the Court, that he never acknowledged the recognizance, but was personated by another; and thereupon it was moved, that the bail might be vacated, and he discharged, as was done in Cotton's case. 2 Cro. 256. But the Court said, since the stat. 21 Jac. cap. 26. (see title Bail), by which this offence was made felony without clergy; it is not convenient to vacate it until the offender is convicted; and so it was done in Spicer's case; wherefore it was ordered, that B. should bring the money into Court, and be at large to prosecute the offender. Twisden said it must be tried in Middlesex, though the bail was taken at a Judge's chambers in London, because filed here, and the entry is venit coram Domino Rege, &c. so it differs from a recognizance acknowledged before Lord Hobart, upon stat. 23 H. 8. c. 6. at his chambers, and recorded in Middlesex; there the scire facias may be either in London or Middlesex. Hob. 195, 196: Vent. 301: Mod. 46. Cockerel, who personated Beesley, was hanged at Tyburn, but the rope was immediately cut; and afterwards Beesley on motion had restitution of his goods in the hands of the Sheriff. 2 Jo. 64.

A commission of rebellion was awarded against A. whereupon B. came before the commissioners and affirmed himself to be the person. The commissioners apprehended him by virtue of their commission; but per Hale Ch. B. the commissioners have no warrant to take him by their commission; his affirming himself to be the person will not excuse them in false imprisonment, as has been held on executing a capias. Hard. 323.—See further, titles Bail; Fine of Lands; Forgery; Fraud, &c.

PERSONS, Are divided by law into either natural Persons, or artificial. Natural Persons are such as the God of Nature formed us; artificial are such as are created created and devised by human laws for the purposes of society and government, which are called Corporations, or Bodies Politic. 1 Comm 123; 467.

As to the rights of Persons, see this Dictionary, title Liberty.

PERTICATA TERRÆ, The fourth part of an acre. See Perch.

PERVISE, According to Somner, the Palace-yard at Westminster. Somn. Gloss. See his Gloss. in 10 scriptores, verbo Triforium: and see Wood's Hist. of Oxford, 2 par. fol. 6: and this Dictionary, title Parvise.

PESA, Pensa, Pisa.] A wey or weigh, or certain weight and measure of cheese and wool, &c. containing two hundred and fifty-six pounds. Cowell.

PESAGE, Pesagium.] A custom or duty paid for weighing merchandise, or other goods. Seld. tit. Hon.

PESARIUS, A weigher. Cowell.

PESSONA, Mast of oaks, &c. or money taken for mast, or feeding hogs. Mon. Ang. ii. 213. See Mast.

PESSURABLE, PESTARBLE, or PESTARABLE WARES, Seem to be such wares or merchandise as pester, and take up much room in a ship. See the old stat. 32 H 8. c. 14.

PETER-CORN, Is mentioned in some of the ancient registers of our bishops, particularly in that of St. Leonard de Ebor. which contains a grant thereof by King Athelstane, &c. Collect. Dodsw. MS.

PETER-PENCE, Denarii Sancti Petri.] Otherwise called in the Saxon tongue Romefeoh, the fee of Rome, or due to Rome; also Romescot and Rome-pennyng; was a tribute given by Ina, King of the West Saxons, being in pilgrimage at Rome, in the year of our Lord 720, which was a penny for every house. Lamb. Explication of Saxon Words, verbo Nummus. And the like given by Offa, King of the Mercians, through his dominions, in anno 794, not as a tribute to the Pope, but in sustentation of the English school or college there; and it was called Peter-pence, because collected on the day of St. Peter ad Vincula. Spelm de Concil. tom. i. fol. 2, 3. And see St. Edward's Laws, num. 10: King Edgar's Laws, 78. c. 4: Stow's Annals, p. 67. It amounted to 300 marks and a noble yearly. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 1.

It was first prohibited by Edw. III. and abrogated by stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21. But it was revived by stat. 1 & 2 Ph. & Mar. c. 8. and at length wholly abrogated by stat. 1 Eliz. c. 1.

PETER AD VINCULA; See Gule of August.

PETITION, Petitio.] A supplication made by an inferior to a superior, and especially to one having jurisdiction. S. P. C. c. 15. It is used for that remedy, which the Subject hath to help a wrong done by the King, who hath a prerogative not to be sued by writ: in which sense it is either general, that the King do him right, whereupon follows a general indorsement upon the same, Let right be done the party; or it is special, when the conclusion and indorsement are special, for this or that to be done, &c. Standf. Prærog. c. 22. See title Monstrans de droit.

By statute 13 C. 2. stat. 1. c. 5, the soliciting, labouring, or procuring the putting the hands or consent of above twenty persons to any Petition, to the King or either House of Parliament, for alterations in Church or State; unless by assent of three or more justices of peace of the county, or a majority of the Grand Jury, at the assises or sessions, &c. and repairing to the King or Parliament to deliver such Petition, with above the number of ten persons, is subject to a fine of 100*l.* and three months imprisonment; being proved by two witnesses, within six months, in the court of B. R. or at the assises. See title Liberty.

Care must also be taken that Petitions to the King contain nothing which may be interpreted to reflect on the Administration; for if they do, it may come under the denomination of a libel: and it is remarkable, that the Petition of the City of London, for the sitting of a Parliament was deemed libellous; because it suggested that the King's dissolving a late Parliament was an obstruction of justice. Read. stat. iv. 353. To subscribe a Petition to the King, to frighten him into a change of his measures, intimating that, if it be denied, many thousands of his Subjects will be discontented, &c. is included among the contempts against the King's person and government, tending to weaken the same, and punishable by fine and imprisonment. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 3.

PETITION IN CHANCERY, A request in writing, directed to the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls, shewing some matter whereupon the petitioner prays somewhat to be granted him. Pr. C. 269.

Most things, which may be moved for of course, may be petitioned for.

Sometimes it is upon a collateral matter only, as it has relation to some precedent suit, or to an officer of the court; as to have a clerk or solicitor's bill taxed, or to oblige him to deliver up papers. Pr. C. 270.

The Master of the Rolls is not to be petitioned for rehearings, but the Chancellor; also the Chancellor only is to be petitioned touching pleas, demurrers, or exceptions, or touching decrees or special orders made before the Chancellor. In most cases of Petition, the Master of the Rolls may be applied to. Pr. C. 270. See 16 Vin. Abr. 337, 338: and this Dictionary, title Chancery.

PETITION OF RIGHT. The stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 1, is thus called; by which it was provided, that none should be compelled to make or yield any gift, loan, benevolence, tax, and such like charge, without consent by act of Parliament; nor, upon refusal so to do, be called to make answer, take any oath not warranted by law, give attendance, or be confined, or otherwise molested concerning the same, &c. And that the Subject should not be burdened by the quartering of soldiers or mariners; and all commissions for proceeding by martial law, to be annulled, and none of like nature to be issued, lest the Subject (by colour thereof) be destroyed or put to death, contrary to the laws of the land, &c. See title Liberty.

PETIT CAPE; See Cape.

PETIT LARCENY; see Larceny.

PETIT SERJEANTY, Parva serjeantia.] To hold by Petit Serjeanty is, to hold lands or tenements of the King, yielding him a knife, a buckler, an arrow, a bow without a string, or other like service, at the will of the first feoffor: and there belongs not to it ward, marriage, or relief. None can hold by Grand or Petit Serjeanty, but of the King. But see stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, for the abolition of tenures; and this Dictionary, title Tenures.

PETIT SESSION. In both corporations and counties at large, there is sometimes kept a Special or Petty Sessions, by a few Justices, for dispatching smaller business in the neighbourhood between the times of the General Sessions; as, for licensing alehouses, passing the accounts of parish officers, and the like. See Justices of the Peace; Sessions.

PETIT TREASON, Parva Proditio.] See Treason. Treason of a lesser kind; for as High Treason is an offence against the security of the commonwealth, so is Petit Treason, though not so expresly: Petit Treason is, if a servant kills his master, a wife her husband, a secular or religious man his prelate. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. stat. 5. c. 2. See titles Treason; Homicide III. 4.

PETRA, A stone weight: See Stone. Cowell.

PETRARIA, Is sometimes taken for a quarry of stones, and in other places for a great gun called Petrard: it is often mentioned in old records and historians in both senses. Cowell.

PEWS, In a church, are somewhat in the nature of an heir-loom; and may descend by immemorial custom, without any ecclesiastical concurrence, from the ancestor to the heir. 3 Inst. 202: 12 Rep. 105: 2 Comm. 429.

The right to sit in a particular Pew in the church arises either from prescription as appurtenant to a messuage, or from a faculty or grant from the Ordinary; for he has the disposition of all Pews which are not claimed by prescription. Gibs. Cod. 221.

In an action upon the case for a disturbance of the enjoyment of a Pew; if the plaintiff claims it by prescription, he must state it in the declaration as appurtenant to a messuage in the parish. This prescription may be supported by an enjoyment for 36 years; and perhaps for any time above 20 years. 1 Term Rep. 428. In such an action against the Ordinary, the plaintiff must allege and prove repairs of the Pew. 1 Wils. 326.

PHAROS, from Pharus, a small island in the mouth of the Nile, wherein stood a high watch-tower.] A watch-tower or sea-mark: No man can erect a Pharos, light-house, beacon, &c. without lawful warrant and authority. 3 Inst. 204. See title Beacon.

PHILOSOPHER'S STONE. Henry VI. granted letters patent to certain persons, who undertook to find out the Philosopher's Stone, and to change other metals into gold, &c. to be free from the penalty of the stat. 5 Hen. 4. c. 4; made against the attempts of Chemists of this nature. Pat. 34 Hen. 6: 3 Inst. 74. See Multiplication of Gold and Silver.

PHYSICIANS. No person within London, or seven miles thereof, shall practise as a Physician or surgeon, without licence from the Bishop of London, or Dean of St. Paul's; who are to call to their assistance four doctors of physic, on examination of the persons, before granted: and in the country, without licence from the Bishop of the diocese, on pain of forfeiting 5*l.* a month. Stat. 3 Hen. 8. c. 11.

The charter for incorporating the College of Physicians is confirmed; they have power to choose a president, and have perpetual succession, a common seal, ability to purchase lands, &c. Eight of the chiefs of the College are to be called Elects, who from among themselves shall choose a President yearly: and if any practise physic in the said city, or within seven miles of it, without licence of the College under their seal, he shall forfeit 5*l.* Also persons practising physic in other parts of England, are to have letters testimonial from the President and three Elects, unless they be graduate Physicians of Oxford or Cambridge, &c. Stat. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 5. Confirmed and enlarged by stat. 1 Mary, stat. 2. c. 9.

The stat. 32 H. 8. c. 40. ordains that four Physicians (called Censors) shall be yearly chosen by the College, to search apothecaries' wares, and have an oath given them for that purpose by the president; apothecaries denying them entrance into their houses, &c. incur a forfeiture of 5*l.* And Physicians refusing to make the search are liable to a penalty of 40*s.* And every member of the College of Physicians is authorised to practise surgery.—By stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5, Popish recusants are disabled to practise physic, or to use the trade of an apothecary, &c. under penalties; See title Papist.

In the case of Dr. Bonham, 7 Jac. 1, is shewn the power of the College of Physicians, in punishing persons for practising physic without licence; they imprisoned the Doctor for practising without licence; but it was adjudged that they could not lawfully do it, for in such case they had no power by the statute to commit, but they ought to sue for the penalty of 5*l.* per month, qui tam, &c. But in case of mal-practice, the Censors have power to commit, for they may in such case fine and imprison by their charter, and they are judges of record, and not liable to an action for what they do by virtue of their judicial power. 8 Rep. 107: Carth. 494.

It hath been solemnly resolved, that mala praxis in a Physician, surgeon, or apothecary, is a great misdemeanor and offence at Common Law; whether it be for curiosity or experiment, or by neglect: because it breaks the trust which the party had placed in his Physician, and tends to the patient's destruction. Ld. Raym. 214.

Apothecaries taking upon them to administer physic, without advice of a doctor, has been adjudged practising physic within the statutes; the proper business of an apothecary being to prepare the prescriptions of the doctor: the practice of physic was said to consist in judging of the disease and constitution of the patient; and of the proper remedy for the distemper; and in directing the application of the remedy. And so it was resolved, though no fee was given the apothecary. 2 Salk. 451. But this judgment was afterwards reversed in the House of Lords. Mod. Cas. 44. See Bro. P. C. title Physicians.

It has been holden, that if a person, not duly authorised to be a Physician or surgeon, undertakes a cure, and the patient dies under his hands, he is guilty of felony; but it is said not to be excluded the benefit of clergy. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 62.

If a Physician or surgeon gives his patient a potion or plaster to cure him, which, contrary to expectation, kills him, this is neither murder nor manslaughter, but misadventure; and he shall not be punished criminally, however liable he might formerly have been to a civil action for neglect or ignorance; Mirr. c. 4. § 16: but it hath been holden that if it be not a regular Physician or surgeon who administers the medicine, or performs the operation, it is manslaughter at the least. Britt. c. 5: 4 Inst. 251. Yet Sir Matthew Hale very justly questions the law of this determination. 1 Hal. P. C. 430. See 4 Comm. c. 14. p. 197: and this Dictionary, title Homicide.

One who has taken his degree of Doctor of physic in either of the Universities, may not practise in London, and within seven miles of the same, without licence from the College of Physicians; by reason of the charter of incorporation, confirmed by stat. 14 & 15 Hen. 8. c. 5, penned in very strong and negative words. As to the testimonials granted by the Universities on a person's taking the Doctor's degree, these may have the nature of a recommendation, mendation, and give a man a fair reputation, but confer no right; consequently those statutes which have confirmed the privileges of the Universities would revive or confirm nothing but the reputation that this testimonial might give such graduates. And as to the last clause of this statute, that "none shall practise in the country without licence from the President and three Elects, unless he be a graduate of one of the Universities;" all the inference from that would be, that possibly two licences may be necessary where a person is not a graduate. In the case of Dr. Levet, Lord Ch. J. Holt did not think this question worth being found specially. The College of Physicians, without doubt, are more competent judges of the qualifications of a Physician than the Universities; and there may be many reasons for taking particular care of those who practise physic in London. 10 Mod. 353, 354.

PICARDS, A sort of boats, of fifteen tons or upwards, used on the river Severn, mentioned in an ancient stat. 34 & 35 H. 8 c. 3. Also a fisher-boat, mentioned in stat. 13 Eliz. c. 11.

PICCAGE, piccagium, from the Fr. piquer, i. e. effodere.] A consideration, paid for the breaking up ground to set up booths, stalls, or standings, in fairs; payable to the Lord of the soil.

PICLE, pictellum.] A small parcel of land inclosed with a hedge; a little close: this word seems to come from the Italian picciola, i. e. parvus; and in some parts of England it is called Pightel.

PIE-POWDER COURT; Curia pedis pulverizati, from the French pied, pes, and poudreux, pulverulentus.] A Court held (de hora in horam) in fairs, to administer justice to buyers and sellers, and for redress of disorders committed in them. See Court of Pie-powders; and 7 Vin.

Skene, de verbor. signif., verbo Pes-pulverosus, says, the word signifies a vagabond; especially a pedlar, who hath no dwelling, therefore must have justice summarily administered to him, viz. within three ebbings and three flowings of the sea. Bracton, lib. 5. tract 1. c. 6. num. 6, calleth it Justitiam pepoudrous. Of this Court, read the stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2: 4 Inst. 272: and Cromp. Jur. 221. This, among our old Saxons, was called ceapung gemot, i. e. a court of merchandise, or handling matters of buying and selling. It is mentioned in Doctor and Student, c. 5. which says, it is a court incident to fairs and markets, to be held only during the time that the fairs are kept. Cowell.

The fair of St. Giles, held on the hill of that name, near the city of Winchester, by virtue of letters patent of K. Edw. PIER, Fr. Pierre, saxum; from the materials of which it is composed.] A fortress made against the force of the sea or great rivers, for the better security of ships that lie at harbour in any haven. See title Harbours. Pierage is the duty for maintaining such Piers and harbours.

PIES, Freres pies, Were a sort of monks; so called because they wore black and white garments, like magpies. They are mentioned by Walsingham, p. 124.

PIGEONS. Every person who shall shoot at, kill, or destroy a Pigeon, may be committed to the common gaol for three months, by two or more justices of the peace, or he shall pay 20*s*. to the poor of the parish. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. By stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 29, any person who shall wilfully shoot at, or destroy any house-doves or Pigeons belonging to other persons, shall forfeit on conviction 20*s*. to the prosecutor; and if not forthwith paid, the offender may be committed and kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding three months, nor less than one month, unless the forfeiture be sooner paid: the owners of dove-cotes or other places built for the preservation or breeding of Pigeons, and those appointed by them, excepted. Offender is liable only to one conviction for same offence; and prosecutions are to be commenced and carried on with effect, within two months after the offence; and where persons suffer imprisonment, they are not liable afterwards to pay the penalty.—To steal wild Pigeons in a Pigeon-house, shut up so that the owner may take them, is felony. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 26.

PIGEON-HOUSE, A place for safe keeping Pigeons. A lord of a manor may build a Pigeon-house or Dove-cote upon his land, parcel of the manor; but a tenant of the manor cannot, without the lord's licence. 3 Salk. 248. Formerly none but the lord of the manor, or the parson, might erect a Pigeon-house; though it has been since held, that any freeholder may build a Pigeon-house on his own ground. 5 Rep. 104: Cro Eliz. 548: Cro. Jac. 382, 440: A person may have a Pigeon-house, or Dove-cote, by prescription. See title Nusance I.

PILA, That side of money which was called pile, because it was the side on which there was an impression of a church built on piles.—He who brings an appeal of robbery against another, must shew the certain quantity, quality, price, weight, &c. valorem & pilum, where pilum signifies figuram monetæ. Fleta, lib 1. c 39

PILETTUS, Anciently used for an arrow, which had a round knob, a little above the head, to hinder it from going far into a mark; from the Lat pila, which signifies generally any round thing like a ball.——Et quod forestarii non portabunt sagittas barbatas, sed piletos. Chart. 31 H. 3. Persons might shoot without the bounds of a forest with sharp or pointed arrows; but within the forest, for the preservation of the deer, they were to shoot only with blunts, bolts, or piles; and sagitta pileta was opposed to sagitta barbata; as blunts to sharps, in rapiers. Mat. Paris.

PILEUS SUPPORTATIONIS, A cap of maintenance. Pope Julius sent such a cap, with a sword, to Hen. VIII. anno 1514. Holling. 827. Mention of such a cap is made by Hoveden, p. 656, at the coronation of Richard the First. Cowell.

PILLORY, collistrigium, collum stringens; pilloria from the Fr. pilleur, i. e. depeculator; or pilori derived from the Greek πύλη, janua, a door, because one standing on the pillory, puts his head, as it were, through a door, and ὁράω, video.] An engine made of wood, to punish offenders, by exposing them to public view, and rendering them infamous. By the statute of the Pillory, 51 H. 3 stat. 6, it is appointed for bakers, forestallers, and those who use false weights, perjury, forgery, &c. 3 Inst. 219. Lords of leets are to have a Pillory and tumbrel, or it will be cause of forfeiture of the leet; and a vill may be bound by prescription to provide a Pillory, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 11. § 5.

PILOT, He who hath the government of a ship, under the master. By stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 13, Pilots of ships, taking on them to conduct any ship from Dover, &c. to any place up the river Thames, are first to be examined and approved by the master and wardens of the society of Trinity House, &c. or shall forfeit 10*l.* for the first offence, 20*l.* for the second, and 40*l.* for every other offence; one moiety to the informer, the other to the master and wardens: but any master or mate of a ship may pilot his own vessel up the river; and if any ship be lost through the negligence of any Pilot, he shall be for ever after disabled to act as a Pilot. As to the construction of this statute, see Stra. 249. The Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports may make rules for government of Pilots, and order a sufficient number to ply at sea to conduct ships up the Thames: stat. 7 Geo. 1. stat. 1. c. 21.—No person shall act as a Pilot on the Thames, &c. (except in collier ships), without licence from the master and wardens of Trinity House at Deptford, on pain of forfeiting 20*l.* And Pilots are to be subject to the government of that corporation; and pay ancient dues, not exceeding 1*s.* in the pound out of their wages, for the use of the poor thereof. Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 20.

By the ancient laws of France, no person was to be received as a Pilot, till he had made several voyages, and passed a strict examination; and after that, on his return from long voyages, he was to lodge a copy of his journal in the Admiralty; and if a Pilot occasioned the loss of a ship, he was to pay 100 livres fine, and be for ever deprived of the exercise of pilotage; and if he did it designedly, be punished with death. Lex Mercat. 70, 71.

The laws of Oleron ordain, That if any Pilot designedly misguide a ship, that it may be cast away, he shall be put to a rigorous death, and hung in chains: And if the lord of the place where a ship be thus lost, abet such villains, in order to have a share in the wreck, he shall be apprehended, and all his goods forfeited for the satisfaction of the persons suffering; and his person shall be fastened to a stake in the midst of his own mansion, which being fired on the four corners, shall be burnt to the ground, and he with it. Leg. Ol. c. 15. It hath been said if the fault of a Pilot be so notorious, that the ship's crew see an apparent wreck, they may lead him to the hatches and strike off his head; but the Common Law denies this hasty execution: An ignorant Pilot is sentenced to pass thrice under the ship's keel, by the laws of Denmark. Lex Mercat. 70.

Masters of ships shall not oblige Pilots to pass through dangerous places, or to steer courses against their wills; but if there be a difference in opinions, the master may in such case be governed by the advice of the most expert mariners. Ibid. Before the ship arrives at her place or bed, while she is under the charge of the Pilot, if she or her goods perish, or be spoiled, the Pilot shall make good the same; but after the ship is brought to the harbour, then the Master is to take charge of her, and answer all damages, except that of the act of God, &c. Leg. Ol. cap. 23.

In charter-parties of affreightment, the master generally covenants to find a Pilot, and the merchant to pay him: And in case the ship shall miscarry through the insufficiency of the Pilot, the merchant may charge either the master or the Pilot; and if he charges the master, such master must have his remedy against the Pilot. Lex Mercat. 70: See Lodemanage: 3 Geo. 1. c. 13.

PINNAS BIBERE, or, Ad pinnas bibere. The old custom of drinking brought in by the Danes, was to fix a pin in the side of the wassal bowl, and to drink exactly to the pin; as now is practised in a sealed glass, &c. This kind of drunkenness was forbid the clergy, in the council at London, anno 1102. Cowell.

PIPE, Pipa.] A roll in the Exchequer, otherwise called The Great Roll, anno 37 E. 3. c. 4. See Clerk of the Pipe. A Pipe of wine is a measure, containing two hogsheads, or half a ton, that is one hundred and twenty-six gallons; mentioned in stat. 1 R. 3. c. 13.

PIQUANT, A French word for sharp, made use of to express malice or rancour against any one. Law Fr. Dict.

PIRATES, Piratæ.] Common sea rovers, without any fixed place of residence, who acknowledge no sovereign and no law, and support themselves by pillage and depredations at sea: but there are instances wherein the word pirata has been formerly taken for a sea captain. Spelm.

The offence of PIRACY, by Common Law, consists in committing those acts of robbery and depredation upon the high seas, which, if committed on land, would have amounted to felony there. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 10.

But by statute, some other offences are made Piracy also. Thus the stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7, (made perpetual by stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 19,) enacts, That all Piracies, committed on the sea, or in any haven, &c. where the Admiral hath jurisdiction, may be tried at sea, or on the land, in any of his Majesty's islands, &c. abroad, appointed for that purpose, by commission under the Great Seal, or seal of the Admiralty, directed to such commissioners as the King shall think fit; who may commit the offenders, and call a Court of Admiralty, consisting of seven persons at least, or, for want of seven, any three of the commissioners may call others; and the persons so assembled may proceed according to the course of the Admiralty, pass sentence of death, and order execution, &c. And commissions for trial of offences within the Cinque Ports, shall be directed to the Warden of the Cinque Ports, and the trial to be by the inhabitants of the ports. And if any natural born Subjects, or denizens, shall commit Piracy against any of his Majesty's Subjects at sea, under colour of any commission from any foreign prince, they shall be adjudged Pirates: if any master of a ship, or seamen give up the ship to Pirates, or combine to yield up, or run away with any ship; or any seaman lay violent hands on his commander, or endeavour a revolt in the ship, he shall be adjudged a Pirate, and suffer accordingly; also, if any person discover a combination for running away with a ship, he shall be entitled to a reward of 10*l.* for every vessel of 100 tons, and 15*l.* if above: and all persons who set forth any Pirate, or be assisting to those committing Piracy, or that conceal such Pirates, or receive any vessel or goods piratically taken, shall be deemed accessary to the Piracy, and suffer as principals. And the stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11, expressly excludes the principal from the benefit of clergy; and provides, that offenders under stat. 11 & 12 W. 3, may be tried and judged according to the form of stat. 28 H. 8.

By

By stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 24, (made perpetual by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 28,) the trading with known Pirates, or furnishing them with stores or ammunition, or fitting out any vessel for that purpose, or in anywise consulting, combining, confederating, or corresponding with them, or the forcibly boarding any merchant vessel, though without seizing or carrying her off, and destroying or throwing overboard any of the goods, shall be deemed Piracy; triable according to the stats. 28 H. 8. c. 15: 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7. and such accessaries to Piracy as are described by the stat. 11 & 12 W. 3, are declared to be principal Pirates; and all Pirates, convicted by virtue of this act, are made felons without benefit of clergy.—Ships fitted out with a design to trade with Pirates, and the goods therein, shall be forfeited.—By several statutes (and see stat. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 11, and this Dict. tit. Seamen,) to encourage the defence of merchant vessels against Pirates, the commanders and seamen wounded, and the widows of such seamen as are slain in any piratical engagment, shall be entitled to a bounty, to be divided among them, not exceeding two per cent. or one fiftieth part of the value of the cargo on board; and such wounded seamen shall be entitled to the pension of Greenwich Hospital, which no other seamen are, except such as have served in a ship of war. And if the commander, officers, or mariners shall behave cowardly, by not defending the ship, if she carries guns or arms; or shall discourage the other officers or mariners from fighting, so that the ship falls into the hands of Pirates; such commander, officer, or mariner shall forfeit all his wages, and suffer six months' imprisonment.

By stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 30, any natural-born Subject or denizen, who, during any war, shall commit hostilities on the sea against any of his Majesty's Subjects, by colour of any commission from the enemy, or adhere, or give aid to the enemy upon the sea, may be tried as a Pirate, in the Court of Admiralty, on ship-board or on land, and being convicted shall suffer death, &c. as other Pirates, &c. But persons, convicted on this act, shall not be tried for the same crime as for High Treason; but, if not tried on this act, may be tried for High Treason on the stat. 28 H. 8. c. 15.—The adherence to the King's enemies was thought to make the offence High Treason; this statute was made therefore to remove the doubt. Vide Staundf. P. C. 10: 3 Inst. 112: 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 369, 370: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 21.

The crime of PIRACY, or robbery and depredation upon the HIGH SEAS, is an offence against the universal law of society; a Pirate being, according to Coke, hostis humani generis, 3 Inst. 113. As therefore he hath renounced all the benefits of society and government, and has reduced himself afresh to the savage state of nature, by declaring war against all mankind, all mankind must declare war against him: so that every community hath a right, by the rule of self defence, to inflict that punishment upon him, which every individual would in a state of nature have been otherwise entitled to do for any invasion of his person or personal property. 4 Comm. 71.

Pirates are enemies to all: they are denied succour by the law of nations; and by the Civil Law, a ransom promised to a Pirate, if not complied with, creates no wrong; for the law of arms is not communicated to such; neither are they capable of enjoying that privilege, which lawful enemies are entitled to in the caption of another. Lex Mercat. 183. If a Pirate enters a port or haven, and assaults and robs a merchant ship at anchor there; this is not Piracy, because it is not done upon the High Sea; but it is a robbery at the Common Law, the act being infra corpus comitatûs: and if the crime be committed either super altum mare, or in great rivers within the realm, which are looked upon as common highways, there it is Piracy. Moor 756.

It has been held, that Piracy, being an offence by the Civil Law only, shall not be included in a statute speaking generally of felonies, as to benefit of clergy, &c. which shall be construed only of those felonies which are such by our law; as those Piracies are which are committed in a port or creek, within the body of a county. 2 Hawk P. C. c. 33. § 41. See title Clergy, Benefit of.

If a ship be riding at anchor at sea, and the mariners part in their ship-boat, and the rest on shore, so that none are left in the ship; and a Pirate attack her, and commits a robbery, it is Piracy. 14 Ed. 3. And where a Pirate assaults a ship, and only takes away some of the men, in order to sell them for slaves; this is Piracy: And if a Pirate make an attack on a ship, and the master, for the redemption, is compelled to give his oath to pay a certain sum of money, though there be no taking, the same is Piracy by the Marine Law; but, by the Common Law, there must be an actual taking, as in case of robbery on the highway. Lex Mercat. 185. But the taking by a ship at sea, in great necessity, of victuals, cables, ropes, &c. out of another ship, is no Piracy; if that other ship can spare them, and paying or giving security therefore. Ibid. 183.

A Pirate takes goods upon the sea, and sells them, the property is not altered, no more than if a thief on land had stolen and sold them. See stat. 27 Ed. 3. st. 2. cap. 13: Godb. 193. Yet, by the laws of England, if a man commit Piracy upon the Subjects of any other Prince, (at enmity with England,) and brings the goods into England and sells them in a market-overt, the same shall be binding, and the owners be concluded. Hob. 79.

When goods are taken by a pirate, and afterwards the Pirate, making an attack upon another ship, is conquered and taken by the other, by the Law Marine the Admiral may make restitution of the goods to the owners, if they are Fellow-subjects of the captors, or belong to any State in amity with his Sovereign, on paying the costs and charges, and making the captor an equitable consideration for his service. Lex Mercat. 184. If a Pirate at sea assault a ship, and in the engagement kills a person in the other ship, by the Common Law, all the persons on board the pirate ship are principals in the murder, although none enter the other ship; but, by the Marine Law, they who give the wound only shall be principals, and the rest accessaries, if the parties can be known. Yelv. 135. It has been holden, that there cannot be an accessary in Piracy; but if it happens, that there is an accessary upon the sea, such accessary may be punished by the Civil Law before the Lord Admiral: And it was made a doubt, whether an accessary at land to a felony at sea, was triable by the Admiral, within the purview of stat. 28 H. 8. c. 15. Though this is settled by stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7; which provides that accessaries to Piracy, before or after, shall be inquired of, tried, and adjudged according to the said statute. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. § 46. See post.

In case the Subjects of a Prince, in enmity with the crown of England, enter themselves sailors on board an English Pirate, and a robbery is committed by them, who are afterwards taken; it is felony in the English, but not in the strangers; but in ancient times it was petit treason in the English, and felony in the strangers: And if any Englishman commits Piracy upon the Subjects of any Prince or State in amity with England, they are within the statute 28 H. 8. c. 15. If the Subjects of any nation or kingdom, in amity with England, shall commit a Piracy on the ships or goods of the English, the same is felony, and punishable by this statute: and Piracy committed by the Subjects of France, or any other country in friendship with us, upon the British Seas, is properly punishable by the Crown of England only. Lex Mercat. 186, 187: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 1 in n.

A Piracy is attempted on the ocean, if the Pirates are over-come, the takers may immediately inflict a punishment by hanging them up at the main-yard end; though this is understood where no legal judgment may be obtained; hence if a ship, on a voyage to any part of America, or the Plantations there, on a discovery of those parts, is attacked by a Pirate, but in the attempt the Pirate is overcome; the Pirates may be forthwith executed, without any solemnity of condemnation, by the Marine Law. Lex Mercat. 184.

By the ancient Common Law, Piracy, if committed by a Subject, was held to be a species of treason, being contrary to his natural allegiance; and, by an alien, to be felony only: but now, since the statute of treasons, 25 Ed. 3. c. 2, it is held to be only felony in a Subject. 3 Inst. 113. See ante.

Formerly this crime was only cognizable by the Admiralty Courts, which proceed by the rules of the Civil Law. But, it being inconsistent with the liberties of the nation, that any man's life should be taken away, unless by the judgment of his Peers, or the Common Law of the land, the statute 28 Hen. 8. c. 15, established a new jurisdiction for this purpose; which proceeds according to the course of the Common Law. 4 Comm. 71.

By this stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 15, all felonies, robberies, and murders committed by Pirates, shall be inquired of, heard and determined in any county of England, by the King's commission of oyer and terminer, as if the offences had been committed on land; and such commission shall be directed to the Lord Admiral, and other persons, as shall be named by the Lord Chancellor, who shall determine such offences, after the common course of the laws of the kingdom, used for felonies and robberies, &c. and award judgment and execution as against felons for any felony done on the land; and the offenders shall suffer death, loss of lands and goods, as if they had been attainted of such offence committed on land, &c.

The Commissioners under the above act are the Admiral or his Deputy, and three or four more, among whom two Common-Law Judges are usually appointed: the indictment being first found by a grand jury of 12 men, and afterwards tried by a petty jury: the Judge of the Admiralty presiding. See 4 Comm. c. 19. p. 268. and title Homicide III. 3.

No attainder for this offence corrupts the blood, the statute mentioning only that the offender shall suffer death, loss of lands, &c. as if he were attainted of a felony at Common Law; but says not, that the blood shall be corrupted. 3 Inst. 112. And the offender is to be tried on the statute, to forfeit his lands, &c. which are not forfeited by the Civil Law. 1 Lil. Abr.

In the construction of this stat. 28 H. 8. c. 15, the following opinions have also been holden:

That it does not alter the nature of the offence, so as to make that, which was before a felony only by the Civil Law, now become a felony by the Common Law; for the offence must still be alleged as DONE UPON THE SEA, and is no way cognizable by the Common Law, but only by virtue of this statute; which, by ordaining that in some respects it shall have the like trial and punishment as are used for felony at Common Law, shall not be carried so far as to make it also agree with it in other particulars which are not mentioned; from hence it follows that this offence remains, as before, of a special nature, and that it shall not be included in a general pardon of all felonies. 3 Inst. 112: 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 270: Moor, 756: Co. Litt. 391: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 6.

From the same ground it follows, that no person, in respect of this statute, be construed to be, or punished as accessaries to Piracy before or after, as they might have been, if it had been made felony by the statute; whereby all those would incidentally have been accessaries in the like cases in which they would have been accessaries to a felony at Common Law; therefore accessaries to Piracy, being neither expresly named in the statute, nor by construction included, remain as they were before, and were triable by the Civil Law, if their offences were committed on the sea; but on the land, by no law, until stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7; for stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 24, which provides against accessaries in one county to a felony in another, extends not to accessaries to an offence committed in no county, but on the sea; but by stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7, they are triable in like manner as the principals are by stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 15: 3 Inst. 112: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 7. [But now, as has been already stated, accessaries to Piracy are made principals, by stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 24.]

It has been resolved, that an offender standing mute on an arraignment, by force of this statute, shall have judgment as in other cases; for the words of the statute are, that a commission shall be directed, &c. to hear and determine such offences after the common course of the laws of the land. 3 Inst. 114: Dyer 241. pl. 49, 308. pl. 73.

It hath been holden, that the indictment for this offence must allege the fact to be done at sea, and must have the words felonicè and piraticè; and that no offence is punishable by virtue of this act as Piracy, which would not have been felony if done on the land; consequently, taking an enemy's ship, by an enemy, is not within the statute. 3 Inst. 112: 1 Roll. Rep. 175: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37.

It is agreed, that this statute extends not to offences done in creeks or ports within the body of a county, because they are, and always were, cognizable by the Common Law. Moor 756: 1 Roll. Rep. 175: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 37.

Piracies on the sea are always excepted out of general pardons.

For the more speedy bringing offenders to justice, a statute was passed, appointing that a session of oyer and terminer and gaol-delivery for the trial of offences committed on the high seas, within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, shall be held twice in every year.

PIRATES GOODS. In the patent to the Admiral, he has granted him bona pirator': the proper Goods of Pirates only pass by this grant; and not piratical goods. So it is of a grant de bonis felonum; the grantee shall not have goods stolen, but the true and rightful owner. But the King shall have piratical goods, it the owner be not known. 10 Rep. 109: Dyer 269: Jenk. Cent. 325.

PITCHING-PENCE, Money (commonly a penny) paid for pitching, or setting down every bag of corn, or pack of goods, in a fair or market.

PITTANCE; Pictancia, modicum.] A little repast, or refection of fish or flesh, more than the common allowance; and The Pittancer was the officer who distributed this at certain appointed festivals. Rot. Chart. ad Hospital. S. Salvator. Sancti Edmundi, &c. An. 1 Reg. Johan. p. 2: Lib. stat. Eccl. Sti. Pauli Lond. A. D. 1298.

PLACARD, Fr. plaquart, Dutch placcaert.] Hath several significations: in France, it formerly signified a table, wherein laws, orders, &c. were written and hung up: in Holland, an edict or proclamation: also it signifies a writing of safe conduct; with us it is little used, but is mentioned as a licence to use certain games, &c. in the stat. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 9; and see stat. 33 H. 8. c. 6.

PLACE, Locus.] Where a fact was committed, is to be alleged in appeals of death, indictments, &c. And Place is considerable in pleadings, in some cases: where the law requires a thing to be set down in a certain Place, the party must, in his pleadings, say, it was done there. Co. Lit. 282. When one thing comes in the Place of another, it shall be said to be of the same nature; as in case of an exchange, &c. Shep. Epit. 700. See Local; Pleading.

PLACITA, Pleas, pleadings, or debates and trials at law. Placita is a word often mentioned in our histories, and law books; at first, it signified the public assemblies of all degrees of men where the King presided, and they usually consulted upon the great affairs of the kingdom; and these were called generalia Placita; because generalitas universorum majorum tam clericorum quam laicorum ibidem conveniebat: this was the custom in France, as well as here, as we are told by Bertinian, in his Annals of France, in the year 767. Some of our historians, as Simeon of Durham, and others, who wrote above 300 years afterwards, tell us, that those assemblies were held in the open fields: and that the Placita generalia, and Curia Regis, were what we now call a Parliament: it is true, the lords' courts were so called, viz. Placita generalia, but oftener Curiæ generales; because all their tenants and vassals were bound to appear there. See Parliament.

We also meet with Placitum nominatum; i. e. the day appointed for a criminal to appear and plead, and make his defence. Leg H. 1. cc. 29. 46. 50.—Placitum fractum; i. e. when the day is past. Leg H. 1. c. 59. Lord Coke says, that the word is derived from placendo, quia bene placitare super omnia placet: this seems to be a very fanciful derivation of the word; which appears rather to be derived from the German plats, or from the Latin plateis, i. e. fields or streets, where these assemblies or courts were first held. But this word Placita did sometimes signify penalties, fines, mulcts, or emendations, according to Gervase of Tilbury, or the Black Book in the Exchequer, lib. 2. tit. 13. Placita autem dicimus pœnas pecuniarias in quas incidunt delinquentes. So, in the laws of Hen. 1. cap. 12, 13.—Hence the old rule or custom, Comes habet tertium denarium Placitorum, is to be thus understood; the Earl of the county shall have the third part of the money due upon mulcts, fines, and amerciaments imposed in the assises and county courts. Cowell.

Placita is the stile of the Court at the beginning of the Record of Nisi Prius. Tidd K. B. c. 37. In this sense, pleas, Placita, are divided, into Pleas of the Crown, and Common Pleas; Pleas of the Crown are all suits in the King's name, for offences committed against his crown and dignity, and also against the peace: Common Pleas are those that are agitated between common persons, in civil cases. S. P. C. cap. 1: 4 Inst. 10.

PLACITARE, i.e. Litigare & causas agere.] To plead: And the manner of pleading before the Conquest was, Coram aldermanno & proceribus & coram hundredariis, &c. M.S. in Bibl. Cotton.

PLACITATOR, A pleader: Ralf Flambard is recorded to be totius regni Placitator. Temp. W. 2: See supra; under title Placita.

PLAGUE, See Quarantine.

PLAINT, Fr. plainte; Lat. querela.] The exhibiting any action, in writing; and the party making his Plaint is called the Plaintiff. Kitch. 231. A Plaint in an inferior court is the entry of an action, after this manner: A. B. complains of C. D. of a plea of trespass, &c. and there are pledges of prosecuting, that is to say, John Doe and Richard Roe.

The first process in an inferior court is a Plaint, which is in the nature of an original writ, because therein is briefly set forth the plaintiff's cause of action; and the Judge is bound, of common right, to administer justice therein without any special mandate from the King. 3 Comm. c. 18. p. 273: And on this plaint there may issue a pone, till the return of a nihil, upon which a capias will lie against the body of the defendant. 2 Lill. Abr. 294.

Where a Plaint is levied in an inferior court, the defendant must be first distrained for non appearance, by something of small value; then, if he doth not appear, a farther distress is to be taken to a greater value, and so on; if all his goods are distrained on the first distress, attachment may be issued out of B. R. against the officers, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. A plaintiff in an assise may abridge his Plaint of any part whereupon a bar is pleaded. 21 Hen. 8. c. 3. See further title County Court.

Plaint, in a superior court, is said to be the cause for which the plaintiff complains against the defendant; and for which he obtains the King's writ: For as the King denies his writ to none, if there be cause to grant it; so he grants not his writ to any, without there be cause alleged for it. 2 Lill. 294. See title Original.

PLAISTERERS, Not to exercise the art of a painter in London. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 20. See title Painters.

PLANCHIA, A plank of wood. Cowell.

PLANTATION, Plantatio, Colonia.] A place where people are sent to dwell; or a company of people transplanted from one place to another, with an allowance of land for their tillage. Lit. Dict.

Perhaps it may, more fully, if not accurately, be defined, A District, Settlement, or Colony; frequently a whole island in some foreign part, dependent on a mother country, with whose inhabitants it was originally peopled, or by whom it was conquered or acquired.

In glancing over the settlements on the coast of Africa, the settlements of the East India Company in India, the China trade, Nootka Sound, and many other places, we see lands and territories under very different circumstances, and dependent upon political considerations of infinite variety; respecting some of which it must be extremely difficult to determine whether they are within the statute 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 22, (for regulating the Plantation trade), as Colonies or Plantations; or indeed, which is a further doubt, whether they are within any part of the Act of Navigation, as lands, islands, or territories to his Majesty belonging, or in his possession. These are questions of great importance to the Navigation system, and deserve a serious attention.

As to the terms Colony or Plantation, whatever distinction may, at one time, have been made between them, there seems now to be none at all. The word Plantation first came into use. The Plantations of Ulster, Virginia, Maryland, and other places, all implied the same idea of introducing, instituting, and establishing, where every thing was desert before. Colony did not come much into use till the reign of Charles II. and it seems to have denoted the sort of political relation in which such Plantations stood to this kingdom. Thus the different parts of New England were, in a great measure, voluntary societies planted without the direction or participation of the English government; so that, in the time of Charles II. there were not wanting persons who pretended to doubt of their constitutional dependance upon the crown of England: and it was recommended, in order to put an end to such doubts, that the King should appoint governors, and so make them Colonies. A Colony therefore might be considered as a Plantation, when it had a governor and civil establishment, subordinate to the mother country. All the Plantations in America, except those of New England, had such an establishment; and they were, upon that idea, Colonies as well as Plantations. Those terms seem accordingly to be used without distinction in the stat. 7 & 8 Will. 3; and in those made afterwards. Reeves's Law of Shipping, &c. p. 136-138.—p. 123. et seq. and p. 521:—and see title Navigation Acts in this Dictionary.

Plantations or Colonies, in distant countries, (says Blackstone,) are either such where the lands are claimed by right of occupancy only, by finding them desert and uncultivated, and peopling them from the mother country; or where, when already cultivated, they have been either gained by conquest, or ceded by treaties. And both these rights are founded upon the law of nature, or at least upon that of nations. But there is a difference between these two species of Colonies, with respect to the laws by which they are bound. For it hath been held, that if an uninhabited country be discovered and planted by English Subjects, all the English laws then in being, which are the birth-right of every Subject, are immediately there in force. Salk. 411. 666: 3 Mod. 159: 4 Mod. 225, 6: 2 P. Wms. 75. But this must be understood with very many, and very great, restrictions. Such Colonists carry with them only so much of the English law as is applicable to their own situation and the condition of an infant Colony; such, for instance, as the general rules of inheritance, and of protection from personal injuries. The artificial refinements and distinctions incident to the property of a great and commercial people, the laws of police and revenue, (such especially as are inforced by penalties,) the mode of maintenance for the established clergy, the jurisdiction of spiritual courts, and a multitude of other provisions, are neither necessary nor convenient for them, and therefore are not in force. What shall be admitted and what rejected, at what times, and under what restrictions, must, in case of dispute, be decided in the first instance by their own provincial judicature, subject to the revision and control of the King in Council: the whole of their constitution being also liable to be new-modelled and reformed by the general superintending power of the legislature in the mother country. But in conquered or ceded countries, that have already laws of their own, the King may indeed alter and change those laws: but, till he does actually change them, the ancient laws of the country remain in force; unless such as are against the law of God, as in the case of an infidel country. 7 Rep. 17; Calvin's Case: Show. Parl. C. 31. See also, in the case of Campbell v. Hall, an elaborate argument of Lord Mansfield, to prove the King's legislative authority, by his prerogative alone, over a ceded or conquered country. Cowp. 204. Our American Plantations are principally of this latter sort, being obtained in the last century, either by right of conquest and driving out the natives, or by treaties. And therefore the Common Law of England, as such, has no allowance or authority there; they being no part of the mother country, but distinct (though dependent) dominions. They are subject however to the control of the Parliament; though (like the Isle of Man, and the rest) not bound by any acts of Parliament, unless particularly named. 1 Comm. Introd. § 4. p. 108, 9.

With respect to their interior polity, our Colonies are stated by Blackstone to be properly of three sorts: 1. Provincial Establishments; the constitutions of which depend on the respective commissions issued by the Crown to the governors, and the instructions which usually accompany those commissions; under the authority of which, provincial assemblies are constituted, with the power of making local ordinances, not repugnant to the laws of England. 2. Proprietary Governments; granted out by the Crown to individuals, in the nature of feudatory principalities, with all the inferior regalities, and subordinate powers of legislation, which formerly belonged to the owners of counties-palatine: yet still with these express conditions, that the ends for which the grant was made be substantially pursued, and that nothing be attempted which may derogate from the sovereignty of the mother country. 3. Charter Governments; in the nature of civil corporations, with the power of making bye-laws for their own interior regulation, not contrary to the laws of England; and with such rights and authorities as are specially given them in their several charters of incorporation.

ration. The form of government in most of them is borrowed from that of England. They have a governor named by the King, (or in some proprietary colonies by the proprietor,) who is his representative or deputy. They have courts of justice of their own, from whose decisions an appeal lies to the King and Council here in England. Their general assemblies, which are their House of Commons, together with their Council of State, being their Upper House, with the concurrence of the King or his Representative, the Governor, make laws suited to their own emergencies. But it is particularly declared by stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 22, that all laws, bye-laws, usages, and customs, which shall be in practice in any of the Plantations, repugnant to any law, made or to be made in this kingdom relative to the said Plantations, shall be utterly void and of none effect. And because several of the Colonies had claimed the sole and exclusive right of imposing taxes upon themselves, the statute 6 Geo. 3. c. 12. was passed, expresly declaring, that all his Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in America have been, are, and of right ought to be, subordinate to and dependent upon the Imperial Crown and Parliament of Great Britain; who have full power and authority to make laws and statutes of sufficient validity to bind the Colonies and people of America, Subjects of the crown of Great Britain, in all cases whatsoever. This authority was afterwards enforced, by [illegible] Geo. 3. c. 59, for suspending the legislation of New-[illegible]; and by several subsequent statutes: but in the year 1782, by stat 22 Geo. 3. c. 46, his Majesty was empowered to conclude a truce or peace with the Colonies of New Hampshire, Massachusett's-Bay, Rhode-Island, Connecticut, New-York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, the Three Lower Counties on Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia in North-America; and for that purpose, to repeal, or to suspend, the operation of any acts of Parliament so far as they related to the said Colonies. A peace was soon after concluded, and the independence, which the abovementioned colonies had before declared, was allowed to them, under the title of the United States of America and the stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 39, gives his Majesty certain powers for the better carrying on trade and commerce between England and the United States. See this Dict. tit. Navigation Acts. See also Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 7, as to suits in the Courts of Law and Equity in the Plantations; and the making houses, lands, negroes, and real estates, assets to pay debts—Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 14, as to mortgages of estates in the West India Colonies, and the mode of proceeding to enforce the same.—Stat. 22 Geo 3 c. 75, by which offices in Plantations can only be granted by patent, during the residence of the grantee and quamdiu se bene gesserit; and on absence or misbehaviour, the officer is removable by the Governor and Council, who may also give leave of absence.

PLANTS, destroying. See title Mischief, Malicious; as to stealing plants, see Larceny I. 1.

PLATE, Vessels and utensils of gold and silver. By stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 14, a tax was laid on all persons possessed of Plate; but that statute was repealed by stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 39.

By stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 19. s. 3. Public houses were prohibited from using Plate. After this part of the act had lain dormant many years, a set of informers suddenly arose, and brought a number of actions for the penalties, forfeited by virtue of the act; whereupon many publicans raised a sum of money to pay the expence of a bill to repeal this clause, which they obtained by stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 11. See title Goldsmiths.

PLAYHOUSE. Playhouses were originally instituted with a design of recommending virtue and exposing vice and folly; therefore are not in their own nature nusances: but it hath been holden, that a common Playhouse may be a nusance, if it draw together great numbers of coaches, &c. as to prove generally inconvenient to the places adjacent. 5 Mod. 142. See title Nusance.

If any persons in Plays, &c. jestingly or profanely use the name of God, they forfeit 10*l.* Stat. 3 Jac 1. c. 21. And Players speaking any thing in derogation of the Book of Common Prayer, are liable to forfeitures and imprisonment. Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2. §. 9. Also acting Plays or interludes on a Sunday is subject to penalties, by stat. 1 Car. 1. c. 1. See title Sunday.

By stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 28, No person shall act any new Play or addition to an old one, &c. unless a true copy thereof, signed by the master of the Playhouse, be sent to the Lord Chamberlain fourteen days before acted; who may prohibit the representing any stage Play; and persons acting contrary to such prohibition, forfeit 50*l.* and their licences, &c. And no licence is to be given to act Plays, but in the city and liberties of Westminster, or places of his Majesty's residence: But by stat 28 Geo. 3. c. 30, the General or Quarter Sessions may licence Theatres in country towns and places, for 60 days at a time, under certain restrictions; and, by special Acts of Parliament, Playhouses are permitted to be erected in various places.

By the above stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 28, Every actor for hire, (if he shall have no legal settlement where he acts,) without authority from the King or the Lord Chamberlain, shall be deemed a rogue and a vagabond, and be punished as such, or forfeit 50*l.*; and Plays acted in any place where liquors are sold, shall be deemed to be acted for hire.

Tumbling is not an entertainment of the stage within the meaning of this statute. 6 Term Rep. 286.

PLAYS and GAMES, See this Dict. titles Gaming; Nusance.

PLEA, Placitum.] That which either party alleges for himself in court, in a cause there depending to be tried.

Pleading, in a large sense, contains all the proceedings from the declaration, till issue is joined; but is, in its immediate sense, taken for the defendant's answer to the declaration.

PLEADING.

Pleadings are the mutual altercations between the Plaintiff and Defendant in a suit: which at present are set down and delivered into the proper office in writing; though formerly they were usually put in by their Counsel ore tenus or vivâ voce in open Court, and then minuted down by the chief clerks or prothonotaries; whence, in the old Law French, the Pleadings are frequently denominated the parol. 3 Comm. c. 20.

[For the general principles of Pleadings in Equity, see this Dictionary, titles Chancery; Equity.]

I. 1. In the Declaration, Narratio, or Count, antiently called the tale, the Plaintiff sets forth his cause of complaint at length; being indeed only an amplification or exposition of the original writ upon which his action is founded, with the additional circumstances of time and place when and where the injury was committed.

It is generally usual in actions upon the case to set forth several cases, by different counts, in the same declaration; so that if the plaintiff fails in the proof of one, he may succeed in another. As, in an action on the case, upon an assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, the plaintiff usually counts or declares, first, upon a settled and agreed price between him and the defendant; as that they bargained for twenty pounds: and lest he should fail in the proof of this, he counts likewise upon a quantum valebant; that the defendant bought other goods, and agreed to pay him so much as they were reasonably worth; and then avers that they were worth other twenty pounds: and so on in three or four different shapes; and at last concludes with declaring, that the defendant had refused to fulfil any of these agreements, whereby he is endamaged to such a value. And if he proves the case laid in any one of his counts, though he fails in the rest, he shall recover proportionable damages. This declaration always concludes with these words, "and thereupon he brings suit," &c. "inde producit sectam," &c. By which words, suit or secta (à sequendo), were antiently understood the witnesses or followers of the plaintiff. Seld. on Fortesc. c. 21. For in former times the law would not put the defendant to the trouble of answering the charge, till the plaintiff had made out at least a probable case. Bract. 400: Flet. l. 2. c. 6. But the actual production of the suit, the secta, or followers, is now antiquated; and hath been totally disused, at least ever since the reign of Edw. III. though the form of it still continues. 3 Comm. c. 20.

At the end of the declaration are added also the plaintiff's common pledges of prosecution, John Doe and Richard Roe, which are now mere names of form; though formerly they were of use to answer to the King for the amercement of the plaintiff, in case he were nonsuited, barred of his action, or had a verdict or judgment against him. 3 Bulstr. 275: 4 Inst. 189. But now he is punished by payment of the Costs. See this Dict. titles Costs; Discontinuance of Process; Nonsuit; Pledges.

When the Plaintiff hath stated his case in the declaration, it is incumbent on the Defendant within a reasonable time to make his defence, and to put in a Plea; else the plaintiff will at once recover judgment by default or nihil dicit of the defendant. See title Judgment.

As to the true meaning of this word Defence, and the nature of it in various actions, see this Dict. title Defence.

Before any defence made, however, if at all, cognizance of the suit must be claimed or demanded; when any person or body corporate hath the franchise, not only of holding Pleas within a particular limited jurisdiction, but also of the cognizance of Pleas: and that, either without any words exclusive of other courts, which entitles the lord of the franchise, whenever any suit that belongs to his jurisdiction is commenced in the courts at Westminster, to demand the cognizance thereof; or with such exclusive words, which also entitle the defendant to plead to the jurisdiction of the court. 2 Lord Raym. 836: 10 Mod. 126. Upon this claim of cognizance, if allowed, all proceedings shall cease in the superior court, and the plaintiff is left at liberty to pursue his [illegible] in the special jurisdiction. It must be demanded before full defence is made, or imparlance prayed; for these are a submission to the jurisdiction of the superior court, and the delay is a laches in the lord of the franchise: and it will not be allowed, if it occasions a failure of justice, or if an action be brought against the person himself, who claims the franchise, unless he hath also a power in such case of making another judge. See Rast. Ent. 128: 2 Ventr. 363: Hob. 87; and this Dict. titles Cognizance; Courts of the Universities; and Post. 4.

After defence made, the defendant must put in his Plea. But, before he defends, he is in certain cases entitled to demand one imparlance, or licentia loquendi; and may, before he pleads, have more granted, by consent of the court; to see if he can end the matter amicably without farther suit, by talking with the plaintiff: See this Dict. title Imparlance, and post. 4. There are also many other previous steps which may be taken by a defendant before he puts in his Plea. He may, in real actions, demand a view of the thing in question, in order to ascertain its identity and other circumstances. See title View. He may crave oyer of the writ, or of the bond, or other specialty upon which the action is brought; that is, to hear it read to him. See title Oyer. In real actions also the tenant may pray in aid, or call for assistance of another, to help him to plead, because of the feebleness or imbecillity of his own estate. Thus a tenant for life may pray in aid of him that hath the inheritance in remainder or reversion; and an incumbent may pray in aid of the Patron and Ordinary: that is, that they shall be joined in the action and help to defend the title. See title Aid Prayer. Voucher also is the calling in of some person to answer the action, that hath warranted the title to the tenant or defendant. This is still used in the form of common recoveries which are grounded on a writ of entry; a species of action that relies chiefly on the weakness neſs of the tenant's title, who therefore vouches another perſon to warrant it: See title Recovery. In aſſiſes indeed, where the principal queſtion is, whether the demandant or his anceſtors were or were not in poſſeſſion till the ouſter happened? and the title of the tenant is little (if at all) diſcuſſed, there no voucher is allowed; but the tenant may bring a writ of warrantia chartæ againſt the warrantor, to compel him to aſſiſt him with a good Plea or defence, or elſe to render damages and the value of the land, if recovered againſt the tenant, F. N. B. 135: See title Warrantia Chartæ. In many real actions alſo, brought by or againſt an infant under the age of twenty-one years, and alſo in actions of debt brought againſt him, as heir to any deceaſed anceſtor, either party may ſuggeſt the nonage of the infant, and pray that the proceedings may be deferred till his full age; or (in the legal phraſe) that the infant may have his age, and that the parol may demur; that is, that the pleadings may be ſtaid; and then they ſhall not proceed till his full age, unleſs it be apparent that he cannot be prejudiced thereby. Dy. 137: Finch 1. 360. But, by the ſtat Weſtm. 1. 3 Edw. 1. c. 46; ſtat. Gloc. 6 Edw. 1. c. 2, in writs of entry ſur diſſeiſin in ſome particular caſes, and in actions aunceſtrel brought by an infant, the parol ſhall not demur: otherwiſe he might be deforced of his whole property, and even want a maintenance, till he came of age. So likewiſe in a writ of dower the heir ſhall not have his age; for it is neceſſary that the widow's claim be immediately determined, elſe ſhe may want a preſent ſubſiſtence. 1 Roll. Abr. 137. Nor ſhall an infant patron have it in a quare impedit, ſince the law holding it neceſſary and expedient that the church be immediately filled. 1 Roll. Abr. 138.

2. When the proceedings above particulariſed are over, the defendant muſt then put in his excuſe or Plea. Pleas are of two ſorts; dilatory Pleas, and Pleas to the action. Dilatory Pleas are ſuch as tend merely to delay or put off the ſuit, by queſtioning the propriety of the remedy, rather than by denying the injury: Pleas to the action are ſuch as diſpute the very cauſe of ſuit. The former cannot be pleaded after a general imparlance, which is an acknowledgment of the propriety of the action. See title Imparlance.

Pleas in bar may come after a continuance, or general imparlance; but if ſuch Plea be firſt pleaded, the defendant ſhall not be admitted afterwards to plead in abatement of the writ, which is allowed to be good by pleading in bar to the action; yet matter of record may be ſhewn in arreſt of judgment, and thereby the writ be abated. Hob. 280, 281.

In good order of pleading, a perſon ought to plead,

1ſt, To the Juriſdiction of the Court.

2dly, To the Perſon of the Plaintiff; and next of the Defendant.

3dly, To the Writ.

4thly, To the Action of the Writ.

5thly, To the Count or Declaration.

6thly, To the Action itſelf, in bar thereof.

A Plea to the juriſdiction is called a foreign Plea, becauſe it alleges that the matter ought to be tried in another court, &c.

The Plea to the writ, &c. is for variance between the writ and record, death of parties, miſnomer, joint-tenancy, &c. and may be to the writ and bill, or count together.

Pleas to the count or declaration are variance between the writ and count; ſpecialty or record; incertainty, &c. and all theſe are properly Pleas in abatement. See this Dict. title Abatement.

Plea to the action of the writ is, where one pleadeth ſuch matter which ſheweth the plaintiff had no cauſe to have the writ brought. And a Plea in bar to the action itſelf is, when defendant pleadeth a Plea, which is ſufficient to overthrow the action. Kitch. 95: Lit. 196. Pleas in bar, ſuch as a releaſe, the ſtatute of limitations, agreement with ſatisfaction, &c. deſtroy the plaintiff's action for ever: but Pleas in abatement are temporary and dilatory, and do not deſtroy the action, only ſtop the cauſe for a while, till the defect is removed. 2 Lutw. 1174.

Dilatory Pleas therefore are; To the juriſdiction of the court: alleging, that it ought not to hold Plea of this injury, it ariſing in Wales or beyond ſea; or becauſe the land in queſtion is of antient demeſne, and ought only to be demanded in the lord's court, &c. To the diſability of the plaintiff, by reaſon whereof he is incapable to commence or continue the ſuit; as, that he is an alien enemy, outlawed, excommunicated, attainted of treaſon or felony, under a præmunire, not in rerum naturâ (being only a fictitious perſon), an infant, a feme-covert, or (formerly) a monk profeſſed. In abatement: which abatement is either of the writ, or the count, for ſome defect in one of them; as by miſnomer of the defendant, giving him a wrong addition, or other want of form in any material reſpect. Indeed all dilatory Pleas are called Pleas in abatement, in contradiſtinction to Pleas in bar. Or, it may be, that the plaintiff is dead; for the death of either party is generally an abatement of the ſuit, in perſonal actions. See this Dict. title Action: and further, title Abatement I. 6. c. Alſo he may plead in abatement another action depending of the ſame nature, for the ſame thing, &c. and if a perſon miſtaking his firſt action, bring another action without diſcontinuing the firſt, this Plea may be pleaded. 1 Salk. 392. See title Abatement.

Theſe Pleas in abatement were formerly very often uſed as mere dilatory Pleas, without any foundation of truth, and calculated only for delay; but now by ſtat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, no dilatory Plea is to be admitted, without affidavit made of the truth thereof, or ſome probable matter ſhewn to the court to induce them to believe it true. And with reſpect to the Pleas themſelves, it is a rule, that no exception ſhall be admitted againſt a declaration or writ, unleſs the defendant will in the ſame Plea give the plaintiff a better; that is, ſhew him how it might be amended; that there may not be two objections upon the ſame account. Brownl. 139. Neither, by ſtat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 31, ſhall any Plea in abatement be admitted in any ſuit for partition of lands; nor ſhall the ſame be abated by reaſon of the death of any tenant.

All Pleas to the juriſdiction conclude to the cognizance of the court; praying "judgment, whether the court will have further cognizance of the ſuit:" Pleas to the diſability conclude to the perſon; by praying "judgment, if the ſaid A. (the plaintiff) ought to be anſwered:" and Pleas in abatement begin "That the defendant ought not to anſwer," &c. and (when the ſuit is by original) ginal) conclude to the writ or declaration; by praying "judgment of the writ, or declaration, and that the same may be quashed," cassetur, made void, or abated: but, if the action be by bill, the Plea must pray "judgment of the bill," and not of the declaration; the bill being here the original, and the declaration only a copy of the bill. See title Original.

It has been resolved, That where a Plea is in abatement, if it be of necessity that the defendant must disclose matter of bar, he shall have his election to take it either by way of bar, or abatement. 2 Mod. 65.

When these dilatory Pleas are allowed, the cause is either dismissed from that jurisdiction; or the plaintiff is stayed till his disability be removed; or he is obliged to sue out a new writ, by leave obtained from the Court; or to amend and new-frame his declaration. But when, on the other hand, they are over-ruled as frivolous, the defendant has judgment of respondeat ouster, or to answer over in some better manner.

It is then incumbent on him to plead a Plea to the action; that is, to answer to the merits of the complaint. This is done by confessing or denying it.

A confession of the whole complaint is not very usual, for then the defendant would probably end the matter sooner; or not plead at all, but suffer judgment to go by default. Yet sometimes, after tender and refusal of a debt, if the creditor harasses his debtor with an action, it then becomes necessary for the defendant to acknowlege the debt, and plead the tender; adding that he has always been ready, tout temps prist, and still is ready, uncore prist, to discharge it. See title Tender. But frequently the defendant confesses one part of the complaint, (by a cognovit actionem in respect thereof,) and traverses or denies the rest: in order to avoid the expense of carrying that part to a formal trial, which he has no ground to litigate. A species of this sort of confession is the payment of money into court; which is for the most part necessary upon pleading a tender, and is itself a kind of tender to the plaintiff; by paying into the hands of the proper officer of the court as much as the defendant acknowleges to be due, together with the costs hitherto incurred, in order to prevent the expense of any farther proceedings. See title Money into Court. To this head may also be referred the practice of what is called a Set-off, whereby the defendant acknowleges the justice of the plaintiff's demand on the one hand; but, on the other, sets up a demand of his own, to counterbalance that of the plaintiff either in the whole or in part. See title Set-off.

Pleas, that totally deny the cause of complaint, are either the general issue, or a special Plea, in bar.

The General Issue or general Plea is, what traverses, thwarts, and denies at once the whole declaration; without offering any special matter whereby to evade it. As, in trespass either vi et armis, or on the case, Not guilty in debt upon contract, nihil (nil) debet, "he owes nothing;" in debt on bond, non est factum, "it is not his deed;" on an assumpsit, non assumpsit, "he made no such promise." Or in real actions, nul tort, "no wrong done;" nul disseisin, "no disseisin;" and in a writ of right, the mise or issue is, that the tenant has more right to hold than the demandant has to demand. These Pleas are called the general issue; because, by importing an absolute and general denial of what is alleged in the declaration, they amount at once to an issue; by which is meant a fact affirmed on one side and denied on the other. See further this Dict. title Issue.

Formerly the general issue was seldom pleaded, except when the party meant wholly to deny the charge alleged against him. But when he meant to distinguish away or palliate the charge, it was always usual to set forth the particular facts in what is called a special Plea; which was originally intended to apprize the court and the adverse party of the nature and circumstances of the defence, and to keep the law and the fact distinct. And it is an invariable rule, that every defence, which cannot be thus specially pleaded, may be given in evidence, upon the general issue at the trial. But, special pleading having been frequently perverted to the purposes of chicane and delay, the Courts have in some instances, and the Legislature in many more, permitted the general issue to be pleaded, which leaves every thing open, the fact, the law, and the equity of the case; and have allowed special matter to be given in evidence at the trial. And, though it should seem as if much confusion and uncertainty would follow from so great a relaxation of the strictness antiently observed, yet experience has shewn it to be otherwise; especially with the aid of a new trial, in case either party be unfairly surprized by the other.

Special Pleas in bar of the plaintiff's demand, are very various, according to the circumstances of the defendant's case. As, in real actions, a general release or a fine, both of which may destroy and bar the plaintiff's title: or, in personal actions, an accord, arbitration, conditions performed, nonage of the defendant, or some other fact which precludes the plaintiff from his action. A justification is likewise a special Plea in bar; as in actions of assault and battery, son assault demesne, that it was the plaintiff's own original assault; in trespass that the defendant did the thing complained of in right of some office which warranted him so to do; or, in an action of slander, that the plaintiff is really as bad a man as the defendant said he was. See title Justification.

The statutes of limitation may also be pleaded in bar; that is, the time limited by certain acts of parliament, beyond which no plaintiff can lay his cause of action; as to which see this Dict. title Limitation of Actions.

An Estoppel is likewise a special Plea in bar: which happens where a man hath done some act, or executed some deed, which estops or precludes him from averring any thing to the contrary. As if tenant for years (who hath no freehold) levies a fine to another person. Though this is void as to strangers, yet it shall work as an estoppel to the cognizor; for, if he afterwards brings an action to recover these lands, and his fine is pleaded against him, he shall thereby be estopped from saying that he had no freehold at the time, and therefore was incapable of levying it. See title Estoppel.

The conditions and qualities of a Plea (which, as well as the doctrine of estoppels, will also hold equally, mutatis mutandis, with regard to other parts of pleading) are, 1. That it be single and containing only one matter; for duplicity begets confusion. But by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, a man with leave of Court may plead two or more distinct matters or single Pleas; as in an action of assault and battery, these three; not guilty, son assault demesne, and the statute of limitations. 2. That it be direct and positive, and not argumentative. 3. That it have convenient certainty of time, place, and persons. 4. That it answer the plaintiff's allegations in every material point. 5. That it be so pleaded as to be capable of trial.

Special Pleas are usually in the affirmative, sometimes in the negative, but they always advance some new fact not mentioned in the declaration; and then they must be averred to be true, in the common form:—" and this he is ready to verify."—This is not necessary in Pleas of the general issue; those always containing a total denial of the facts before advanced by the other party, and therefore putting him upon the proof of them.

Each Plea is to have its proper conclusion; and, regularly, all Pleas that are affirmative conclude, " And this he is ready to verify," &c. In a Plea in bar, the defendant in the beginning says, " That the plaintiff ought not to have or maintain his action against him;" and concludes to the action, viz. " He prays judgment if the plaintiff ought to have or maintain his action against him," &c. A Plea of a record ought to conclude, " And this he is ready to verify by the record," &c.

It is said, that the conclusion makes the Plea; for if it begins in bar, and concludes in abatement, it is a Plea in abatement. Ld. Raym. 337.

It is a rule in pleading, that no man be allowed to plead specially such a Plea as amounts only to the general issue, or a total denial of the charge; but in such case he shall be driven to plead the general issue, in terms; whereby the whole question is referred to a jury. But if the defendant, in an assize or action of trespass, be desirous to refer the validity of his title to the Court rather than the Jury, he may state his title specially, and at the same time give colour to the plaintiff, or suppose him to have an appearance or colour of title, bad indeed in point of law, but of which the jury are not competent judges. See this Dict. title Colour.

When the Plea of the defendant is thus put in, if it does not amount to an issue or total contradiction of the declaration, but only evades it, the plaintiff may plead again, and reply to the defendant's Plea: either traversing it, that is, totally denying it: as if on an action of debt upon bond the defendant pleads solvit ad diem, " that he paid the money when due," here the plaintiff in his Replication may totally traverse this Plea, by denying that the defendant paid it: Or he may allege new matter in contradiction to the defendant's Plea; as when the defendant pleads no award made, the plaintiff may reply, and set forth an actual award, and assign a breach: Or the replication may confess and avoid the Plea, by some new matter or distinction, consistent with the plaintiff's former declaration; as, in an action for trespassing upon land whereof the plaintiff is seised, if the defendant shews a title to the land by descent, and that therefore he had a right to enter, and gives colour to the plaintiff, the plaintiff may either traverse and totally deny the fact of the descent; or he may confess and avoid it, by replying, that true it is that such descent happened, but that, since the descent, the defendant himself demised the lands to the plaintiff for term of life. See titles Replication; Traverse. To the replication the defendant may rejoin, or put in an answer called a Rejoinder. The plaintiff may answer the Rejoinder by a Sur-rejoinder; upon which the defendant may rebut; and the plaintiff answer him by a Sur-rebutter. See for further information those titles in this Dict.

The whole of this process is denominated the Pleading; in the several stages of which it must be carefully observed, not to depart or vary from the title or defence, which the party has once insisted on. For this (which is called a Departure, in Pleading) might occasion endless altercation. Therefore the replication must support the declaration, and the rejoinder must support the Plea, without departing out of it. See title Departure.

Yet in many actions the plaintiff, who has alleged in his declaration a general wrong, may in his replication, after an evasive Plea by the defendant, reduce that general wrong to a more particular certainty, by assigning the injury afresh with all its specific circumstances, in such manner as clearly to ascertain and identify it, consistently with his general complaint; which is called a New or Novel Assignment. As, if the plaintiff in trespass declares on a breach of his close in D.; and the defendant pleads that the place, where the injury is said to have happened, is a certain close of pasture in D. which descended to him from B. his father, and so is his own freehold; the plaintiff may reply and assign another close in D. specifying the abuttals and boundaries, as the real place of the injury. Bro. Abr. title Trespass, 205, 284.

It hath already been observed that duplicity in Pleading must be avoided. Every Plea must be simple, entire, connected, and confined to one single point: it must never be entangled with a variety of distinct independent answers to the same matter; which must require as many different replies, and introduce a multitude of issues upon one and the same dispute. For this would often embarrass the jury, and sometimes the Court itself, and at all events would greatly enhance the expense of the parties. Yet it frequently is expedient to plead in such a manner, as to avoid any implied admission of a fact, which cannot with propriety or safety be positively affirmed or denied. And this may be done by what is called a Protestation; whereby the party interposes an oblique allegation or denial of some fact, protesting (protestando), that such a matter does, or does not, exist; and at the same time avoiding a direct affirmation or denial. See title Protestation.

In any stage of the Pleadings, when either side advances or affirms any new matter, he usually (as has been said) avers it to be true; " and this he is ready to verify." On the other hand, when either side traverses or denies the facts pleaded by his antagonist, he usually tenders an Issue, as it is termed; the language of which is different, according to the party by whom the issue is tendered; for if the traverse or denial comes from the defendant, the issue is tendered in this manner, " and of this he puts himself upon the country;" thereby submitting himself to the judgment of his Peers: but if the traverse lies upon the plaintiff, he tenders the issue or prays the judgment of the Peers against the defendant in another form; thus, " and this he prays may be inquired of by the country."

But if either side (as, for instance, the defendant) pleads a special negative Plea, not traversing or denying any thing that was before alleged, but disclosing some new negative matter; as where the suit is on a bond, conditioned to perform an award, and the defendant pleads, negatively, that no award was made, he tenders no issue upon this Plea: because it does not yet appear whether the fact will be disputed, the plaintiff not having yet asserted ſerted the exiſtence of any award: but when the plaintiff replies, and ſets forth an actual ſpecific award, if then the defendant traverſes the replication, and denies the making of any ſuch award, he then, and not before, tenders an iſſue to the plaintiff. For when in the courſe of pleading they come to a point, which is affirmed on one ſide, and denied on the other, they are then ſaid to be at iſſue; all their debates being at laſt contracted into a ſingle point, which muſt then be determined either in favour of the plaintiff or of the defendant. Raym. 199.

Beſides the rules and circumſtances already particulariſed, there are ſeveral general rules laid down in the Books with reſpect to Pleading; of which the following are the moſt obſervable:

All Pleas are to be ſuccinct, without unneceſſary repetitions, and be direct and pertinent to the caſe, not by way of argument or rehearſal; and the Plea of every man ſhall be taken moſt ſtrongly againſt himſelf. 2 Lill. 304. The Plea muſt directly anſwer the charge in the declaration, or it will not be good. 1 Danv. Abr. 235. If it doth not anſwer all the matter contained in the declaration, the plaintiff ſhall have judgment, as for want of a Plea (i.e. as to the part not anſwered). 1 Lev. 16. But when judgment in ejectment is ſigned for want of a Plea, if poſſeſſion be not delivered, a Judge before the aſſiſes, may compel the plaintiff to accept a plea. 2 Salk. 516.

Every affirmative in pleading ought to be anſwered with an expreſs negative; and if a perſon be named to be dwelling at A it is no Plea to ſay, that he is an inhabitant at ſome other place; unleſs it conclude in the negative, and not at A. Co. Lit. 126: 19 H. 6. 1.

When a man pleads ſpecial matter, and concludes generally, he thereby waives the ſpecial matter. 7 Mod. 53. Pleas that are too general are not good. 1 Lutw. 239: 2 Salk. 521. Every Plea ought to be ſingle and certain; and not double, or contain a multitude of diſtinct matters to one and the ſame thing, whereto ſeveral anſwers are required, which will not be allowed: nor may the defendant plead two matters, each being a ſufficient bar to the action, unleſs one depends on the other; or defendant cannot come at the one, without ſhewing the other; when it is good. 11 Rep. 52: 1 Vent. 48, 272: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 1254.

Good matter muſt be pleaded in right form, apt time, and due order; but that which is only inducement or conveyance to the ſubſtance, need not be ſo certainly alleged, as that which is the git of the Plea. Co. Lit. 303: Plow. 65, 81: Cro. Jac. 362.

What is apparent, and appears from a neceſſary implication in the record, need not be averred. Co. Litt. 300: 7 Co. 40.

Every man's Plea ſhall be taken moſt ſtrongly againſt himſelf, as every body is preſumed to make the moſt of his own caſe. Dyer 16: Co. Litt. 303: Hob. 234: Latch. 186.

What the parties have agreed in Pleading ſhall be admitted, tho' the jury find otherwiſe. 2 Mod. 5.

When a man will recover a thing from another, it is not enough for him to deſtroy ſuch perſon's title, but he muſt prove his own a better. Vaugh. 58, 60.

Every man ſhall plead ſuch Pleas as are proper, according to the quality of his caſe, eſtate, or intereſt. Co. Lit. 285, 303.

The law requires, in every Plea, that it be, in matter, ſufficient, and that it be deduced and expreſſed according to the forms of law; and if either be wanting, it is cauſe of demurrer. Hob. 164. But it is ſaid, a man is not bound to one form of pleading, ſo he plead the ſubſtance of the matter. Plowd. 435.

Every Plea in bar, being a confeſſion and avoidance of the plaintiff's action, muſt be ſubſtantive and certain, with an avoidance of plaintiff's demand, which he may traverſe, and thereon go to iſſue; becauſe the declaration ſtands confeſſed, as far as it is not avoided by the defendant. Dyer 66: Godb. 253: 2 Leon. 78.

If a count, avowry, (which is in nature of a count,) replication, &c. want form, or omit circumſtance of time, place, &c. they may be made good by the replication, and the replication by the rejoinder, &c. 7 Co. 25. a: 8 Co. 120 b: Co. Lit. 303: but not if it be inſufficient in matter. 2 Vent. 222.

All Pleas muſt be alleged directly, and not by way of rehearſal; nor is it ſufficient, that what ought to be expreſsly pleaded, may be deduced by argument from what is pleaded. Co. Lit. 303.

In matters triable by law, all things iſſuable ought to be ſpecially alleged, in order to have a convenient trial; but in matters ſpiritual, the law is otherwiſe, becauſe there is no peril in the trial; therefore, if certain enough to ground a certificate, it is ſufficient. 3 Leon. 300.

Where one is authorized to do a thing by Common Law, ſtatute, cuſtom, grant, or commiſſion, he ought to ſhew, that he hath purſued the ſubſtance of it accordingly. Co. Lit. 303.

General eſtates in fee-ſimple may be generally alleged; as that J. S. was ſeiſed in fee; but the commencement of particular eſtates muſt be ſhewn; becauſe they could not originally commence without a conveyance, which muſt be ſhewn, unleſs they be alleged by way of inducement only. Co. Lit. 121. a; 303.

Eſtates in tail, and particular eſtates, muſt be ſhewn. A Plea of conveyance of lands, &c. inter alia, where the conveyance contains more than relates to the matter of the Plea, is good. 1 Roll. Rep. 72.

If a party pleading derives an eſtate to another, under which he doth not claim any thing, there, general Pleading is ſufficient; becauſe he hath no means to know another man's title; but it is otherwiſe where he himſelf claims under it. Carth. 209.

If one comes in by act of law, the general allegation will ſuffice; and things ſpiritual, or where the Plea conſiſts of matter infinite, may be generally pleaded. All neceſſary circumſtances implied by law need not be expreſſed in the Plea; but when any ſpecial or ſubſtantial matter is alleged, it ſhall be ſpecially anſwered; ſo, matters of record, where they are the foundation of the ſuit, or ſubſtance of the Plea. 10 Rep. 94: Cro. Car. 749: Plowd. 65.

If a thing is ſhewn in Pleading, and it is not afterwards traverſed, or averred ſpecially to the contrary, it will be taken to be confeſſed. Though the confeſſion of one defendant in his Plea, ſhall not prejudice another. Plowd. 48: Hob. 64. A releaſe pleaded to an action of treſpaſs without ſhewing when it was made, ſhall be taken to be before the treſpaſs done: And a Plea of diſcharge or giving notice, &c. muſt ſhew how it was given. 10 Rep. 40: Plowd. 128: Dyer 41.

Bonds and deeds are to be pleaded with a profert hic in curiâ, &c. See titles Oyer; Profert.

That

That which is alleged by way of inducement to the substance of the matter, need not be as certainly alleged, as the substance itself. Plowd. 81. He who pleads in the negative, is not bound to plead so exactly as he who pleads in the affirmative. And that which a man cannot have certain knowledge of, he is not bound certainly to plead. Plowd. 33, 80, 126, 129.

Where the matter is indifferent to be well or ill, and the party pleads over, the Court will intend it well. Mod. Cas. 136. If there be a repugnancy in Pleading, it is error. 2 And. 182: Jenk. Cent. 21. And a man shall not take advantage of his own wrong, by pleading, &c. Cro. Jac. 588. A man cannot plead any thing afterwards which he might have pleaded at first. Ibid. 318. Surplusage shall never make the Plea vicious, but where it is contrary to the matter before. Raym. 8.

Every man must plead such Plea as is proper; but that need not be pleaded on one side, which will come properly on the other. Hob. 3, 78, 162.

Where it is doubtful between the parties, whether a Plea be good or not, it cannot be determined by the Court on motion, but there ought to be a demurrer to the Plea; and on arguing thereof, the Court will judge of the Plea, whether good or bad: And no advantage can be had of double Pleading, without special demurrer. But though the Court is to judge of Pleading, they will not direct any person how to plead, notwithstanding the matter be difficult; for the parties must plead at their peril, and Counsel are to advise, &c. Lutw. 422.

A Plea may be amended, if it be but in paper, and not entered, paying costs: If after the defendant hath pleaded, the plaintiff alters his declaration, the defendant may alter his Plea. See title Amendment. Falshood in a Plea, if not hurtful to plaintiff, nor beneficial to defendant, doth no injury; as it doth where detrimental to plaintiff, &c. 2 Lill. 297. Though if an attorney pleads a false Plea by deceit, it is against his oath, and he may be fined. 1 Salk. 515.

3. An Issue upon Matter of Law is called a Demurrer; as to which see this Dictionary under that title.

An Issue of fact is, where the fact only, and not the law, is disputed. And when he that denies or traverses the fact, pleaded by his antagonist, has tendered the issue, thus, "and this he prays may be inquired of by the country;" or, "and of this he puts himself upon the country;" it may immediately be subjoined by the other party, "and the said A. B. doth the like." Which done, the issue is said to be joined; both parties having agreed to rest the fate of the cause upon the truth of the fact in question. And this issue of fact must, generally speaking, be determined, not by the Judges of the Court, but by some other method; the principal of which methods is that by the Country, per pais, (in Latin, per patriam,) that is, by Jury. See titles Trial; Jury.

During the whole of the proceedings, from the time of the defendant's appearance in obedience to the King's writ, it is necessary that both the parties be kept or continued in Court from day to day, till the final determination of the suit. For the Court can determine nothing, unless in the presence of both the parties, in person or by their attornies, or upon default of one of them, after his original appearance, and a time prefixed for his appearance in Court again. Therefore, in the course of Pleading, if either party neglects to put in his declaration, Plea, replication, rejoinder, and the like, within the times allotted by the standing rules of the Court, the plaintiff, if the omission be his, is said to be nonsuit, or not to follow and pursue his complaint, and shall lose the benefit of his writ: or, if the negligence be on the side of the defendant, judgment may be had against him, for such his default. And, after issue or demurrer joined, as well as in some of the previous stages of proceeding, a day is continually given and entered upon the record, for the parties to appear on from time to time, as the exigence of the case may require. The giving of this day is called the Continuance, because thereby the proceedings are continued without interruption from one adjournment to another. If these continuances are omitted, the cause is thereby discontinued, and the defendant is discharged sine die, without a day, for this turn: for by his appearance in Court he has obeyed the command of the King's writ; and, unless he be adjourned over to a day certain, he is no longer bound to attend upon that summons; but he must be warned afresh, and the whole must begin de novo. See title Discontinuance of Process.

Now it may sometimes happen, that after the defendant has pleaded, nay, even after issue or demurrer joined, there may have arisen some new matter, which it is proper for the defendant to plead; as, that the plaintiff, being a feme-sole, is since married, or that she has given the defendant a release, and the like: here, if the defendant takes advantage of this new matter, as early as he possibly can, viz. at the day given for his next appearance, he is permitted to plead it in what is called a Plea, puis darrein continuance, or "since the last adjournment." For it would be unjust to exclude him from the benefit of this new defence, which it was not in his power to make when he pleaded the former. But it is dangerous to rely on such a Plea, without due consideration; for it confesses the matter which was before in dispute between the parties. Cro. Eliz. 49. And it is not allowed to be put in, if any continuance has intervened between the arising of this fresh matter and the pleading of it: for then the defendant is guilty of neglect, and is supposed to rely on the merits of his former Plea. Also it is not allowed after a demurrer is determined, or verdict given; because then relief may be had in another way, namely, by writ of audita querela. Cro. Jac. 646. And these Pleas, puis darrein continuance, when brought to a demurrer in law, or issue of fact, shall be determined in like manner as other Pleas.

Demurrers, or questions concerning the sufficiency of the matters alleged in the Pleadings, are to be determined by the Judges of the Court, upon solemn argument; and to that end a demurrer book is made up, containing all the proceedings at length, which are afterwards entered on record; and copies thereof, called Paper-books, are delivered to the Judges to peruse. The Record is a history of the most material proceedings in the cause, entered on a parchment roll, and continued down to the present time; in which must be stated the original writ and summons, all the Pleadings, the declaration, view or oyer prayed, the imparlances, Plea, replication, rejoinder, continuances, and whatever farther proceedings have been had; all entered verbatim on the roll, and also the issue or demurrer, and joinder therein.

 These

These were formerly all written, as indeed all public proceedings were, in Norman or Law French, and even the arguments of the Counsel, and decisions of the Court, were in the same barbarous dialect. An evident and shameful badge, it must be owned, (says Blackstone,) of tyranny and foreign servitude; being introduced under the auspices of William the Norman, and his sons. This continued till the reign of Edward III.; who, having employed his arms successfully in subduing the Crown of France, thought it unbeseeming the dignity of the victors to use any longer the language of a vanquished country. By the stat. 36 E. 3. c. 15, it was therefore enacted, that, for the future, all Pleas should be pleaded, shewn, defended, answered, debated, and judged in the English tongue, but be entered and enrolled in Latin. The practisers, however, being used to the Norman language, and therefore imagining they could express their thoughts more aptly and more concisely in that than in any other, still continued to take their notes in Law French: and of course when those notes came to be published, under the denomination of Reports, they were printed in that dialect. 3 Comm. c. 21.

The learned Commentator then proceeds to shew the necessity, and in some measure the propriety, of these ancient law languages; and afterwards thus proceeds, in the history of the change of that used in Pleadings and Records:

This technical Latin continued in use from the time of its first introduction, till the subversion of our ancient Constitution under Cromwell; when, among many other innovations in the Law, some for the better and some for the worse, the language of our records was altered and turned into English. But, at the Restoration of K. Charles II., this novelty was no longer countenanced; the practisers finding it very difficult to express themselves so concisely or significantly in any other language but the Latin. And thus it continued, without any sensible inconvenience, till about the year 1730, when it was again thought proper that the proceedings at Law should be done into English; and it was accordingly so ordered by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. This provision was made, according to the preamble of the statute, that the common people might have knowlege and understanding of what was alleged or done for and against them in the process and Pleadings, the judgment and entries in a cause. Which purpose has, it is to be feared, not been very completely answered. On the other hand, these inconveniences have already arisen from the alteration; that now many clerks and attornies are hardly able to read, much less to understand, a record even of so modern a date as the reign of George I. And it has much enhanced the expense of all legal proceedings: for since the practisers are confined (for the sake of the stamp duties, which are thereby considerably increased) to write only a stated number of words in a sheet; and as the English language, through the multitude of it's particles, is much more verbose than the Latin; it follows that the number of sheets must be very much augmented by the change. The translation also of technical phrases, and the names of writs and other process, were found to be so very ridiculous, (a writ of nisi prius, quare impedit, fieri facias, habeas corpus, and the rest, not being capable of an English dress with any degree of seriousness,) that in two years time it was found necessary to make a new act, stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 14; which allows all technical words to continue in the usual language, and has thereby almost defeated every beneficial purpose of the former statute.

What is said of the alteration of language by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26, will hold equally strong with respect to the prohibition of using the antient immutable court-hand, in writing the records or other legal proceedings; whereby the reading of any record that is fifty years old is now become the object of science, and calls for the help of an antiquarian. But that branch of it, which forbids the use of abbreviations, seems to be of more solid advantage, in delivering such proceedings from obscurity.

When the substance of the Record is completed, and copies are delivered to the Judges, the matter of law upon which the Demurrer is grounded is upon solemn argument determined by the Court, and judgment is thereupon accordingly given by them. See title Demurrer.

An issue of Fact takes up more form and preparation to settle it; for here the truth of the matters alleged must be solemnly examined and established by proper evidence in the channel prescribed by law. To which examination of Facts, the name of Trial is usually confined. As to which, see this Dict. titles Trial; Jury, &c.

If, by the misconduct or inadvertence of the Pleaders, the issue be joined on a fact totally immaterial, or insufficient to determine the right; so that the Court, upon the finding, cannot know for whom judgment ought to be given; the Court will award a Repleader; quod partes replacitent. As if, in an action on the case in assumpsit against an executor, he pleads that he himself (instead of the testator) made no such promise. 2 Ventr. 196. So if, in an action of debt on bond, conditioned to pay money on or before a certain day, the defendant pleads payment on the day; which issue, if found for the plaintiff, would be inconclusive, as the money might have been paid before. Stra. 994. Unless it appears, from the whole record, that nothing material can possibly be pleaded in any shape whatsoever, and then a Repleader would be fruitless. 4 Burr. 301, 2. And, whenever a Repleader is granted, the Pleadings must begin de novo at that stage of them, whether it be the Plea, replication, or rejoinder, &c. wherein there appears to have been the first defect, or deviation from the regular course. Raym. 458: Salk. 579: See further title Repleader.

4. It hath been already noticed, (see ante 1,) that after the plaintiff has declared, and the defendant appeared, he may be allowed a certain time by Imparlance to prepare for his defence. The practical effect of such Imparlance, and the time in all cases allowed for the defendant to plead, is here to be noticed; as laid down in Tidd's Pract. K. B. where a vast number of authorities on the subject are collated and digested, in the following short and perspicuous manner:

After a general Imparlance, the defendant can only plead in bar of the action; and cannot regularly plead to the jurisdiction of the Court, in abatement, or a tender and touts temps prist. It is then also too late, as has already been hinted, to claim cognisance, or demand oyer of a deed, &c. After a special Imparlance, the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of

of the Court. And where the defendant pleaded a misnomer in abatement, after an Imparlance, which was entered thus, "And A. B. who was arrested by the name of A. C. comes," &c.; the Court held this to be tantamount to a special imparlance. After a general-special Imparlance, the defendant may not only plead in abatement of the writ, bill, or count, but also privilege, which is a Plea to the person of the defendant, affecting the jurisdiction of the Court. But he cannot plead a tender and touts temps prist, after any kind of Imparlance; for, by craving time, he admits he is not ready, and so falsifies his Plea. A tender must therefore be pleaded before Imparlance, of the same term with the declaration; unless the declaration be delivered or filed so late, that the defendant is not obliged to plead to it that term: and then it may be pleaded, of course, within the first four days inclusive of the next term, or even afterwards, upon motion, as of the preceding term. See Tender.

If the defendant plead in abatement after a general Imparlance, to the jurisdiction of the Court after a special Imparlance, or a tender after any kind of Imparlance, the plaintiff may demur, or allege the Imparlance in his replication, by way of estoppel; but if the plaintiff, instead of demurring, or alleging the estoppel, reply to the special matter of the Plea, the fault is cured.

Formerly, the defendant had always an Imparlance, to the term next after the return of the process, unless the proceedings were by original, upon a habeas corpus, for or against attornies or other privileged persons, or against prisoners in custody of the marshal. On proceedings by original, if the action were laid in London or Middlesex, and the defendant appeared before the last return of the term; or if the action were laid in any other county, and the defendant appeared the first return of Hilary or Trinity term, or before the third return of Michaelmas or Easter term; no Imparlance was allowed, without consent or special rule. So upon a habeas corpus, returnable in Michaelmas or Easter term, if the declaration were delivered before the third return, the defendant was not entitled to an Imparlance. And where the proceedings were for or against attornies or other privileged persons, or against prisoners in custody of the Marshal, the defendant was bound to plead, without any Imparlance, the same term the declaration was delivered, if delivered four days exclusive before the end of the term. Afterwards, when the clause of ac-etiam had been introduced into the bill of Middlesex, and other process in trespass, it became a rule, that where the cause of action was specially expressed in the process, the defendant should not have liberty of imparling, without leave of the Court; but should plead within the time allowed, by the course of the Court, to defendants sued by original writ. Rule, Hil. 2 Geo. 2. And at length it was determined, that even upon a special capias by original, the defendant should not be obliged to plead, sooner than upon a common latitat. The former distinctions upon this subject being thus gradually abolished, it is now settled, that where the defendant has appeared, or filed bail, upon any kind of process, returnable the first or second return of any term, if the plaintiff declare in London or Middlesex, and the defendant live within twenty miles of London, the declaration should be delivered or filed absolutely, with notice to plead within four days; or in case the plaintiff declare in any other county, or the defendant live above twenty miles from London, within eight days exclusive, after the delivery or filing thereof; and the defendant must plead accordingly, without any Imparlance: or in default thereof, the plaintiff may sign judgment. Rule, Trin. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. (a).

Where the defendant has not appeared, or filed bail, the rule is, that "upon all process returnable before the last return of any term, where no affidavit is made and filed of the cause of action, the plaintiff may file or deliver the declaration de bene esse, at the return of such process, with notice to plead in eight days exclusive, after the filing or delivery thereof;" Rule, Trin. 22 Geo. 3: (and see Rule, Mich. 10 Geo. 2:) being the same time as is allowed for the defendant to appear and file common bail: and "if the defendant do not file common bail, and plead within the said eight days, the plaintiff, having filed common bail for him, may sign judgment for want of a Plea." Rule, Trin. 22 Geo. 3. But if the declaration be not filed, until after the return of the process, the defendant has eight days to plead, from the time of filing it, whenever it may be. And "upon all such process, where an affidavit is made and filed of the cause of action, the declaration may be filed or delivered de bene esse, at the return of such process, with notice to plead, in four days after the filing or delivery, if the action be laid in London or Middlesex, and the defendant live within twenty miles of London; and in eight days, if the action be laid in any other county, or the defendant live above twenty miles from London;" Rule, Trin. 22 Geo. 3: being the same time as is allowed for pleading, where the declaration is delivered or filed absolutely. And, "if the defendant put in bail, and do not plead within such times as are respectively before-mentioned, judgment may be signed." Same Rule. But in all the foregoing cases, the declaration should be delivered, or filed, and notice thereof given, four days exclusive before the end of the term; a rule to plead duly entered; and a Plea demanded, when necessary. Rules, Trin. 5 & 6 Geo. 2, b: Mich. 10 Geo. 2. Reg. 2: Trin. 22 Geo. 3.

Where the process is returnable the last return of the term, or where it is returnable before, but the declaration is not delivered, or filed, and notice thereof given, four days exclusive before the end of the term, the defendant is entitled to an Imparlance; and must plead within the first four days of the next term, provided the declaration be delivered, or filed, and notice thereof given, before the essoin-day of that term: otherwise, the defendant will be allowed to imparl to the subsequent term. Rule, Trin. 5 & 6 Geo. 2.

If four terms have elapsed, since the delivery or filing of the declaration, the defendant shall have a whole term's notice to plead, before judgment can be entered against him. Rule, Trin. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. b. Unless the cause have been stayed by injunction or privilege; and the notice in such case must be given before the essoin-day of the term: but it does not extend beyond the term; and therefore a rule to plead may be entered, and judgment signed, in the vacation.

It remains to be observed, within what time the defendant must plead, after changing the venue, demanding oyer, or amending the declaration. After changing the venue, the defendant must plead to the new action, as he should have done in the other, without delay. Rule, Mich. 1654. § 5. After the delivery of oyer, the defendant fendant shall have the same time to plead, as he had when he demanded it. See title Oyer. And if the plaintiff amend his declaration, the defendant shall have two days, exclusive of the day of amendment, to alter his first Plea, or plead de novo. Rule, Tr. 5 & 6 Geo. 2.

If the defendant be not ready to plead, by the expiration of the time allowed him for that purpose, his attorney or agent should take out a summons, and serve it upon the plaintiff's attorney or agent, requiring him to attend a judge, and shew cause why the defendant should not have further time to plead. When the summons is taken out, and made returnable before the expiration of the time for pleading, it is a stay of proceedings, pending the application: but it is otherwise, when taken out, or made returnable, after the expiration of the time for pleading; nor will it operate as a stay of proceedings, where the object of it is collateral to the time for pleading; as, to discharge the defendant out of custody upon common bail, &c.

The plaintiff's attorney or agent, on being served with the summons, either indorses his consent to an order being made upon it, attends the Judge, or makes default. In the latter case, the defendant's attorney or agent, after waiting an hour, should take out a second summons, and after that a third (if necessary), which should be respectively served and attended as the first. And if default be made upon three summonses, the Judge, on affidavit thereof, will make an order ex parte. But if any one of the summonses be attended, the Judge will make an order upon, or discharge it, as he sees cause; and if he make an order for a month's time to plead, it is understood to mean a lunar, and not a calendar, month.

The order of a Judge, for time to plead, must be served in like manner as the summons. And it is either upon, or without, terms. The usual terms are, pleading issuably, rejoining gratis, and taking short notice of trial or inquiry. And where the defendant is an executor or administrator, he must undertake not to plead any judgment obtained against him, since his time for pleading was out; for otherwise he might confess judgments in the mean time, and plead them in bar to the plaintiff's demand.

An issuable Plea is a Plea in chief to the merits, upon which the plaintiff may take issue, and go to trial. Therefore, a Plea in abatement is not an issuable Plea; nor a false Plea of judgment recovered, or other Plea which does not go to the merits. But a Plea of tender has been deemed an issuable Plea, and also a Plea of the statute of limitations, or that a bail-bond was taken for ease and favour. As to demurrers, there is a distinction between a real and fair demurrer, and a demurrer without good cause: The former is an issuable Plea, within the meaning of a Judge's order; the latter is not, but only an evasion of it. By rejoining gratis is meant, rejoining without the common four-day rule to rejoin. Short notice of trial, in country causes, must be given at least four days before the commission-day; one day exclusive, and the other inclusive. Rule, East. 30 Geo. 3. In town causes, two days notice seems to be sufficient: But it is usual to give as much more as the time will admit of. The defendant, however, is not precluded, by these terms, from demurring to the replication, if there be good cause. Rule, Trin. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. b.

Where the defendant is under a Judge's order to plead issuably, and pleads a Plea which is not issuable, the plaintiff may consider it as a mere nullity, and sign judgment: and where several Pleas are pleaded, one of which is not issuable, it will vitiate all the others. But where it is doubtful whether the Plea be issuable, the better way, in term-time, is to move the Court to set it aside.

Of the Rule to plead, and Demand of a Plea.

If a defendant be bound by rule of Court, or order of a Judge, to plead by a time therein limited, it is incumbent on him to do so; although the plaintiff do not enter any rule to plead, or call for a Plea. Rule, Trin. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. With this exception, the plaintiff must in all cases enter a rule to plead, whether the defendant have appeared or not; and where the defendant has appeared, he must also demand a Plea, before he can sign judgment.

The Rule to plead is the order of the Court; and may be entered, at any time after the delivery, or filing and notice of the declaration, in term, or within four days after; and Sunday is a day within this rule, unless it be the first or last. Anciently, there were two rules given, of four days each; the first, ad respondendum; the second, ad respondendum peremptorie. These were afterwards converted into one eight-day rule; but now, "four days only shall be allowed the defendant, from the time of giving any rule to plead:" Rule, Trin. 1 Geo. 2: which four days expire before, with, or after the time for pleading. If they expire before, the plaintiff must wait till the expiration of the time for pleading, before he can sign judgment for want of a Plea: But if they expire with or after that time, "the plaintiff is at liberty to sign his judgment, the day after the rule for pleading is out; the declaration having been regularly delivered or filed, and the defendant or his agent being called upon for a Plea." Rule, Hil. 2 Geo. 2. Reg. 3.

When a rule to plead has been once entered, and the cause stands over to another term, without any further proceeding, a new rule to plead should regularly be entered in that term, to entitle the plaintiff to sign judgment; for all judgments must be entered the same term in which rules are given. Where the declaration is amended, if a rule to plead be entered the same term the amendment is made, though before such amendment, it is sufficient; otherwise a new rule to plead must be entered. And where the plaintiff, after giving a rule to plead, has been delayed by injunction, he may sign judgment after the injunction is dissolved, without a new rule.

The Demand of Plea is a notice in writing from the plaintiff's attorney; and, except where the defendant is in custody of the sheriff, &c. must be made in every case where the defendant has appeared. But before the defendant has appeared, or after the plaintiff has entered an appearance, or filed common bail for him, according to the statute, or where the defendant is in custody of the sheriff, &c. the demand of a Plea is unnecessary. It is usually made pending the time for pleading; and the plaintiff cannot sign judgment, till the expiration of twenty-four hours from the time of making it. But if the time for pleading be out, judgment may be signed at any time after the twenty-four hours are expired; and therefore if the Plea be demanded in the morning, the plaintiff plaintiff is not obliged to wait until the opening of the office, in the afternoon of the following day.

II. When a Criminal is indicted of felony, &c. he ought not to be allowed to plead to the indictment till he holds up his hand at the bar, which is in nature of an appearance. See title Trial.

The Plea of a prisoner, or defensive matter alleged by him on his arraignment, if he does not confess or stand mute, may be either a Plea to the Jurisdiction; a Demurrer; a Plea in Abatement; a special Plea in Bar; or the General Issue. See 4 Comm. c. 26.

Formerly there was another Plea, that of Sanctuary, now abrogated; and as to which, see this Dict. title Sanctuary.

The Benefit of Clergy used also formerly to be pleaded before trial or conviction, and was called a Declinatory Plea; which was the name also given to that of Sanctuary. 2 Hal. P. C. 236. But as the prisoner upon a trial has a chance to be acquitted and totally discharged; and, if convicted of a clergyable felony, is entitled equally to his clergy after, as before conviction, this course is extremely disadvantageous, and therefore the Benefit of Clergy is now very rarely pleaded; but if found requisite, is prayed by the Convict before judgment is passed upon him. See titles Judgment (Criminal); Clergy, Benefit of.

A Plea to the Jurisdiction is, where an Indictment is taken before a Court that hath no cognizance of the offence; as if a man be indicted for a rape at the Sheriff's tourn; or for treason at the Quarter-sessions: in these or similar cases, he may except to the Jurisdiction of the Court, without answering at all to the crime alleged. 2 Hal. P. C. 256.

A Demurrer is incident to criminal cases as well as to civil, see this Dict. title Demurrer to Indictments.

A Plea in Abatement is principally for a misnomer, a wrong name, or a false addition to the prisoner. As if James Allen, Gentleman, is indicted by the name of John Allen, Esquire; he may plead that he has the name of James and not of John, and that he is a Gentleman and not an Esquire; and if either fact is found by a Jury, then the indictment shall be abated, as writs or declarations may be in civil actions. See ante, I. 2. and this Dict. titles Abatement; Misnomer.

But, in the end, there is little advantage accruing to the prisoner by means of these dilatory Pleas; because, if the exception be allowed, a new bill of indictment may be framed, according to what the prisoner in his Plea avers to be his true name and addition. For it is a rule, upon all Pleas in Abatement, that he, who takes advantage of a flaw, must at the same time shew how it may be amended.

Special Pleas in Bar go to the merits of the indictment; and give a reason why the prisoner ought not to answer it at all, nor put himself upon his trial for the crime alleged. These are of four kinds: A former Acquittal; A former Conviction; A former Attainder, or A Pardon. There are many other Pleas, which may be pleaded in bar of an appeal; but these are applicable as well to appeals as indictments. See title Appeal I.

First, the Plea of auterfoits acquit, or a former acquittal, is grounded on this universal maxim of the common law of England; that no man is to be brought into jeopardy of his life, more than once, for the same offence. And hence it is allowed as a consequence, that when a man is once fairly found not guilty upon any indictment, or other prosecution, before any Court, having competent jurisdiction of the offence, he may plead such acquittal in bar of any subsequent accusation for the same crime. Therefore an acquittal, on an appeal, is a good bar to an indictment on the same offence. And so also was an acquittal on an indictment a good bar to an appeal, by the Common Law: and therefore, in favour of appeals, a general practice was introduced, not to try any person on an indictment of homicide, till after the year and day, within which appeals may be brought, were past; by which time it often happened that the witnesses died, or the whole was forgotten. To remedy which inconvenience, the statute 3 Hen. 7. c. 1, enacts, that indictments shall be proceeded on, immediately, at the king's suit, for the death of a man, without waiting for bringing an appeal; and that the Plea of auterfoits acquit, on an indictment, shall be no bar to the prosecuting of any Appeal. See title Appeal I, and, at large, 2 Hawk P. C. c. 35.

Secondly, the Plea of auterfoits convict, or a former conviction, for the same identical crime, though no judgment was ever given, or perhaps will be, (being suspended by the Benefit of Clergy or other causes,) is a good Plea in bar to an indictment. And this depends upon the same principle as the former; that no man ought to be twice brought in danger of his life for one and the same crime. Hereupon it has been held, that a conviction of manslaughter, on an appeal or an indictment is a bar even in another appeal, and much more in an indictment, of murder; for the fact prosecuted is the same in both, though the offences differ in colouring and in degree. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 36. § 10, &c.

It is to be observed, that the Pleas of auterfoits acquit and auterfoits convict, or a former acquittal, and former conviction, must be upon a prosecution for the same identical act and crime.

But the case is otherwise, in the Plea of auterfoits attaint, or a former attainder; which is a good Plea in bar, whether it be for the same or any other felony. For whenever a man is attainted of felony, by judgment of death, either upon a verdict or confession, by outlawry, or, heretofore, by abjuration; and whether upon an appeal or an indictment; he may plead such attainder in bar to any subsequent indictment or appeal, for the same or for any other felony. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 36. § 1. And this, because, generally, such proceeding on a second prosecution cannot be to any purpose: for the prisoner is dead in law by the first attainder, his blood is already corrupted, and he hath forfeited all that he had: so that it is absurd and superfluous to endeavour to attaint him a second time. But to this general rule however, as to all others, there are some exceptions; wherein, cessante ratione, cessat et ipsa lex. As, where the former attainder is reversed for error, for then it is the same as if it had never been. And the same reason holds, where the attainder is reversed by Parliament, or the judgment vacated by the King's pardon, with regard to felonies committed afterwards.—Where the attainder was upon indictment, such attainder is no bar to an appeal: for the prior sentence is pardonable by the King; and if that might be pleaded in bar of the appeal, the King might in the end defeat the suit of the Subject, by suffering the prior sentence to stop the prosecution of a second; and then, when the time of appealing is elapsed, granting the delinquent delinquent a pardon.—An attainder in felony is no bar to an indictment of treason: because not only the judgment and manner of death are different, but the forfeiture is more extensive, and the land goes to different persons.—Where a person, attainted of one felony, is afterwards indicted as principal in another, to which there are also accessaries, prosecuted at the same time; in this case it is held, that the Plea of auterfoits attaint is no bar, but he shall be compelled to take his trial, for the sake of public justice: because the accessaries to such second felony cannot be convicted till after the conviction of the principal. Poph. 107. But see title Accessary. And from these instances it may be collected, that the Plea of auterfoits attaint is never good, but when a second trial would be quite superfluous. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 36. § 1—10.

Lastly, a Pardon may be pleaded in bar; as at once destroying the end and purpose of the indictment, by remitting that punishment, which the prosecution is calculated to inflict. See this Dict. title Pardon.

Though in civil actions, when a man has his election what Plea in bar to make, he is concluded by that Plea, and cannot resort to another if that be determined against him: (as if, on an action of debt the defendant pleads a general release, and no such release can be proved, he cannot afterwards plead the general issue, nil debet, as he might at first; for he has made his election what Plea to abide by, and it was his own folly to chuse a rotten defence:) yet in criminal prosecutions, in favorem vitæ, as well upon appeal as indictment, when a prisoner's Plea in bar is found against him upon issue tried by a jury, or adjudged against him in point of law by the Court; still he shall not be concluded or convicted thereon, but shall have judgment of respondeat ouster, and may plead over to the felony the general issue, not guilty. 2 Hal. P. C. 239. For the law allows many Pleas, by which a prisoner may escape death; but only one Plea, in consequence whereof it can be inflicted; viz. on the general issue, after an impartial examination and decision of the facts, by the unanimous verdict of a jury.

The general issue, or Plea of Not-Guilty, then, is the only Plea upon which the prisoner can receive his final judgment of death. In case of an indictment of felony or treason, there can be no special justification put in by way of Plea. As, on an indictment for murder, a man cannot plead that it was in his own defence against a robber on the highway, or a burglar; but he must plead the general issue, Not guilty, and give this special matter in evidence. For (besides that these Pleas do in effect amount to the general issue, since, if true, the prisoner is most clearly not guilty,) as the facts in Treason are laid to be done proditoriè et contra ligeantiæ suæ debitum; and, in felony, that the killing was done felonicè; these charges, of a traiterous or felonious intent, are the points and very gist of the indictment, and must be answered directly, by the general negative, Not Guilty; and the jury upon the evidence will take notice of any defensive matter, and give their verdict accordingly, as effectually as if it were, or could be, specially pleaded. So that this is, upon all accounts, the most advantageous Plea for the prisoner. 2 Hal. P. C. 258. Thus also, in an indictment for an assault, if the prosecutor struck first, the defendant, is not, as in civil suits, to plead son assault demesne, but the general issue, Not-Guilty, and give the special matter in evidence.

When the prisoner hath thus pleaded not guilty, non culpabilis, or nient culpable; which was formerly used to be abbreviated upon the minutes, thus, "non (or nient) cul." the clerk of the assise, or clerk of the arraigns, on behalf of the Crown, replies, that the prisoner is guilty, and that he is ready to prove him so. This is done by two monosyllables "cul. prit." which signifies first, that the prisoner is guilty, (cul. culpable, or culpabilis,) and then that the King is ready to prove him so; prit præsto sum, or paratus verificare. By this replication, the King and the prisoner are therefore at issue. 4 Comm. 339.

Mr. Christian, in his note on the passage in the Commentaries, from whence the foregoing is abridged, remarks, that the explanation of prit from præsto sum, or paratus verificare, however ingenious, is inconsistent both with the principles and practice of Special Pleading. After the general issue, or the Plea of Not guilty, there could be no replication; the words paratus verificare could not therefore possibly have been used. This Plea in Latin was entered thus upon the record. Non inde est culpabilis, et pro bono et malo ponit se super patriam. After this the Attorney-General, the King's Coroner, or Clerk of Assize, could only join issue by facit similiter, i. e. he doth the like. See the Appendix § 1. p. iii. at the end of 4 Comm.

Mr. Christian suggests that prit was an easy corruption of pnt, written for ponit (se super patriam) by the clerk; as a minute that issue was joined; or pnt se might be converted into prist or prest, as it is sometimes written.

In confirmation of the conjecture that prist is a corruption of pnt, it is observable that the Clerk of the Arraigns, immediately after the Arraignment, writes upon the indictment, over the name of the prisoner, puts.

But however it may have arisen, the joining of issue, (which, though now usually entered on the record, is no otherwise joined in any part of the proceedings,) seems to be clearly the meaning of this obscure expression; which has puzzled our most ingenious etymologists, and is commonly understood as if the Clerk of the Arraigns, immediately on Plea pleaded, had fixed an opprobrious name on the prisoner, by asking him, "Culprit! how wilt thou be tried?" for immediately upon issue joined, it is inquired of the prisoner, by what trial he will make his innocence appear. This form has at present reference to appeals and approvements only, wherein the appellee has his choice, either to try the accusation by battel or by jury. But upon indictments, since the abolition of ordeal, there can be no other trial but by jury, per pais, or by the country: and therefore, if the prisoner refuses to put himself upon the inquest in the usual form, that is, to answer that he will be tried by God and the Country, if a Commoner; and, if a Peer, by God and his Peers; (Kel. 57: St. Tr. passim;) the indictment, if in treason, is taken pro confesso: and the prisoner, in cases of felony, is adjudged to stand mute, and, if he perseveres in his obstinacy, shall be convicted of the felony. See title Mute.

When the prisoner has thus put himself upon his trial, the clerk answers, in the humane language of the Law, which always hopes that the party's innocence, rather than his guilt, may appear, "God send thee a good deliverance." And then they proceed, as soon as conveniently may be, to the trial; as to which, see titles Jury; Trial; and the references there.

PLEAS OF THE SWORD, Placita ad gladium.] Ranulph, the third Earl of Chester, in the second year of King Henry III. granted to his Barons of Cheshire an ample charter of liberties; Exceptis placitis ad gladium meum pertinentibus. Rot. Pat. in Archivis Regis infra castellum Cestriæ. 3 E. 4. m. 9.—The reason was, because William the Conqueror gave the Earldom of Chester to his kinsman Hugh, commonly called Lupus, ancestor to this Earl Ranulph, tenere ita liberè per gladium, sicut ipse Rex Willielmus tenuit Angliam per coronam. And consonant thereto in all indictments for felony, murder, &c. in that county palatine, the form was anciently, Contra pacem Domini comitis, gladium, & dignitates suas, or Contra dignitatem gladii Cestriæ. These were the Pleas of the dignity of the Earl of Chester. Sir Peter Leicester's Hist. Antiq. 164. Cowell.

PLEBANIA, Plebanalis ecclesia.] A mother church, which has one or more subordinate chapels. Cowell.

PLEBANUS, A Rural Dean; because the deaneries were commonly affixed to the Plebaniæ, or chief mother church within such a district, at first commonly of ten parishes: but it is inferred from divers authorities, that Plebanus was not the usual title of every rural dean; but only of such a parish priest in a large mother church, exempt from the jurisdiction of the Ordinary, who had the authority of a rural dean committed to him by the Archbishop, to whom the church was immediately subject. Whartoni Ang. Sacr. Pa. 1. 569: Reg. Eccl. Christ. Cantuar. MS. See title Dean.

PLEDGE, plegius, may be derived from the Fr. pleige, fidejussor.] As pleiger aucun, i. e. fide jubere pro aliquo, to be surety for a person; in the same signification is plegius used by Glanvil, lib. 10. c. 5, and plegiatio for the act of suretiship, in the interpreter of the Grand Customary of Normandy, c. 60, 89, 90: Charta de Foresta. This word plegius is used also for frankpledge sometimes, as in the end of William the Conqueror's laws, set out by Lambard in his Archaionom. 125, and these are called capital pledges. Kitch. 10. See 4 Inst. 180.

When writs were delivered to the Sheriff to be by him returned into C. B. he was obliged, before the return, to take Pledges of prosecution, which, when the fines and amercements were considerable, were real and responsible persons, and answerable for those amercements. But they being now so inconsiderable, there are only formal Pledges entered, viz. John Doe and Richard Roe. But there is a difference in debt and in trespass; for in trespass the attachment of the goods is the first process, and because the defendant is thereby hurt, therefore the writ commands the Sheriff to take Pledges, before he executes the process. But in debt, they begin with a summons, and so the defendant is not hurt in the first instance, therefore there is no command in the writ to the Sheriff to take Pledges, but unless he does, there is not a sufficient authority from the return to warrant further Process, unless Pledges are put in above, as in B. R. they always do on the bill. The reason why Pledges were not taken in Chancery, but committed to the Sheriff, was, that he, living in the county, was supposed to know who were sufficient security, and being to levy the amerciament afterward, they were to take ample security for them. Gilb. Hist. of C. B. 6, 7. See tit. Process.

The plaintiff's Pledges, that he shall prosecute his suit, may be entered at any time pending the action; and the putting in of Pledges is now a mere form. See the stats. 16 & 17 C. 2. c. 8; 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16; 5 Geo. 1. c. 13; under title Amendment in this Dictionary.

PLEDGES OF GOODS for money, &c. See titles Pawn; Bailment. There is also a Pledge in law; where the law, without any special agreement between parties, doth enable a man to keep goods in nature of a distress. &c. 2 Comm. 452. See title Distress.

PLEDGERY or PLEGGERY, Fr. plegerie, Lat. plegiagium.] Suretiship, an undertaking or answering for. "Also the appellant shall require the constable and mareschal to deliver his pledges, and to discharge them of their Pledgery; and the constable and mareschal shall ask leave of the King to acquit his pledges, after the appellant is come into his lists," &c. Cowell.

PLEDGING; See Pawn; Bailment.

PLEGIIS ACQUIETANDIS, A writ that anciently lay for a Surety, against him for whom he was surety, if he payed not the money at the day. F. N. B. 137. If the party who becomes surety be compelled to pay the money, &c. he shall have his writ against the person who ought to have paid the same. And if a man be surety for another, to pay a sum of money, so long as the principal debtor hath any thing, and is sufficient, his sureties shall not be distrained, by the statute of Magna Charta: if they are distrained, they shall have a special writ on the statute to discharge them. Magna Charta 9 H. 3. c. 8. But if the plaintiff sue the sureties in C. B. where the principal is sufficient to pay the debt, whether the sureties may plead that, and aver that the principal debtor is sufficient to pay it; or whether they shall have a writ to the Sheriff not to distrain in such a case, hath been made a question. New Nat. Br. 306. It was adjudged, (Pasch. 43 Ed. 3,) that the writ de Plegiis acquietandis lieth without any specialty shewed thereof; as it has been held, that a man shall have an action of debt against him who becometh pledge for another, upon his promise to pay the money, without any writing made of it. New Nat. Br. 270, 304. But notwithstanding these old Authorities, there seems now little doubt, that a man may maintain his action against the surety, as soon as the cause of action accrues, without any regard to the circumstances of the principal. And it hath been determined, that if a surety in a bond pays the debt of the principal, he may recover it back from the principal, in an action of assumpsit for so much money paid and advanced to his use. 2 Term Rep. 105.

PLENA FORISFACTURA, A forfeiture of all that one hath, &c. See Forfeiture.

PLENARTY, The abstract of the adjective plenus; and is used in Common Law in matters of benefices, where a church is full of an incumbent; Plenarty and vacation, or avoidance, being direct contraries. Staundf. Prærog. c. 8. f. 32: Stat. Westm. 2. c. 5. A clerk inducted may plead his patron's title; and, being instituted by the space of six months, his patron may plead Plenarty against all common persons. Plowd. 501. Institution by six months, before a writ of quare impedit brought, is a good Plenarty against a common person; but Plenarty is no plea against the King, till six months after induction. Co. Litt. 119, 344. Plenarty for six months is not generally pleadable against the King, because he may bring quare impedit at any time, and nullum tempus occurrit regi: though, if a title devolves to the King by lapse, and the patron presents his clerk by usurpation, who is instituted and inducted, and enjoys the benefice for six months, this is such a Plenarty as deprives the King of his presentation. 2 Inst. 361. And Plenarty by six months after institution is a good plea against the Queen Consort; although she claims the benefice, of the King's endowment. Wood's Inst. 160. Upon collation of a Bishop by lapse, Plenarty is not pleadable; for the collation doth not make a Plenarty, by reason the Bishop would be judge in his own cause: the bishop must certify whether the church is full, or not; and his collation is interpreted to be no more than to supply the cure till the patron doth present; and it is for this cause a Plenarty by collation cannot be pleaded against the right patron: but, by collation, Plenarty may be a bar to any lapse of the Archbishop, and to the King, though it is no bar to the right patron. 6 Rep. 50: Co. Litt. 344: Cro. Jac. 207. Plenarty or not shall be tried by the Bishop's certificate, being acquired by institution, which is a spiritual act; but in a quare impedit, the Plenarty must be tried by a jury. 6 Rep. 49.

By the Common Law, where a person is presented, instituted, and inducted to a church, the church is full, though the person presented be a layman; and shall not be void, but from the time of the deprivation of the incumbent for his incapacity. Count. Pars. Compan. 99. See titles Advowson; Parson; Quare Impedit.

PLENE ADMINISTRAVIT. A plea pleaded by an executor or administrator, where they have administered the deceased's estate faithfully and justly before the action brought against them. See title Executor VI. 1. 2.

On Plene Administravit pleaded by an executor, if it be proved that he hath goods in his hands which were the testator's, he may give in evidence that he hath paid to the value of his own money, and need not plead it specially; for when an executor, before the action, hath paid the money for a debt in equal degree with that demanded by plaintiff, he may plead fully administered generally, and give the special matter in evidence. 2 Lil. Abr. 330. And where a testator, or intestate, was indebted to the executor or administrator, upon bond, they may plead Plene Administravit, and give their own bonds in evidence against any other bond; so likewise upon an indebitatus; having the privilege of paying themselves first. Ibid. Plene Administravit is no plea, where an executor, &c. is sued in the debet and detinet; because he is charged for his own occupation 1 Mod. 185. And if Plene Administravit be pleaded, omitting the words, And that he hath not goods or chattels of the testator, nor had on the day of exhibiting the bill aforesaid, or at any time after, &c. it is bad, on a demurrer, and not helped by verdict. Cro. Jac. 132: 3 Lev. 28. Where the executor, &c is to shew specially, how he hath administered the goods; vide Aleyn 48.

PLIGHT, An old English word, signifying sometimes the estate, with the habit and quality of the land; and extends to rent-charge, and to a possibility of dower. Co. Litt. 221, b.

PLONKETS, A kind of coarse woollen cloth. See stat. 1 R. 3. c. 8.

PLOW-ALMS, Eleemosyna aratrales.] Anciently 1*d.* paid to the church for every plow-land. Mon. Angl. 1. 256.

PLOW-BOTE, A right of tenants to take wood to repair ploughs, carts, and harrows; and for making rakes, forks, &c. See 2 Comm. 35.

PLOW-LAND, Is the same with a hide of land; and a hide or Plow-land, it is said, do not contain any certain quantity of acres: but a Plough-land, in respect of repairing the highway was settled at 50*l.* a year, by the statute 7 & 8 W 3. c. 29.

PLOW-SILVER, In former times, was money paid by some tenants, in lieu of service to plough the lord's lands. W. Jones 280. See titles Socage; Tenure.

PLURALITY, Pluralitas] Signifies the plural number; mostly applied to such clergymen who have more benefices than one: and Selden mentions trialities and quadralities, where one person hath three or four livings. Seld. Tit. Hon. 687.

Plurality of livings is, where the same person claims two or more spiritual preferments, with cure of souls; in which case the first is void ipso facto, and the patron may present to it, if the clerk be not qualified by dispensation, &c.; for the law enjoins residence, and it is impossible that the same person can reside in two places at the same time. Count. Pars. Compan. 94.

By the Canon Law, no ecclesiastical person can hold two benefices with cure simul & semel; but that upon taking the second benefice, the first is void: but the Pope, by usurpation, did dispense with that law; and, at first, every Bishop had power to grant dispensations for Pluralities, till it was abrogated by a general Council, held anno 1273, and this constitution was received till the statute 21 H. 8. c. 13. Moor 119.

The stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13, ordains, that if any parson having one benefice with cure, of the yearly value of 8*l.* or above, in the King's books, accepts of another's benefice with cure, and is instituted and inducted, then the first shall be void: so that there may be a plurality within the statute; and a Plurality by the Canon Law. 2 Lutw. 1306.

The power of granting dispensations to hold two benefices with cure, &c. is vested in the King by the aforesaid statute: and it has been adjudged, that a dispensation is not necessary for a Plurality, where the King presents his chaplain to a second benefice; for such a presentment imports a dispensation, which the King hath power to grant, as supreme Ordinary; but if such a chaplain be presented to a second benefice by a Subject, he must have a dispensation, before he is instituted to it. 1 Salk. 161.

The Archbishop's dispensation and King's confirmation regularly are necessary to hold Pluralities: and the statute 21 H. 8. c. 13, ought to be construed strictly, because it introduces non-residence, and Plurality of benefices, against the Common Law. Jenk. Cent. 272.

A man, by dispensation, may hold as many benefices, without cure, as he can get; and likewise so many, with cure, as he can get, all of them, or all but the last, being under the value of 8*l.* per annum in the King's books; if the person to be dispensed withal, be not incapable thereof. Yet if a dispensation is made to hold three benefices with cure, whereof the first is of the yearly value of 8*l.* the dispensation is void, unless it be in case of the King's chaplains, &c. who may hold three benefices with cure, above the value of 8*l.* a year, where one of them is in the King's gift. Hob. 148.

If there be two parsons of one church, and each parson hath the intire cure of the parish, and their benefices be severally of the value of 8*l.* per annum, if one dies and the other succeeds, this is a Plurality within the statute. Cro. Car. 456. And though the act mentions instituted and inducted, when one is instituted into the second church, the dispensation to hold two benefices comes too late; though he be afterwards inducted; for, by institution, the church is full of the incumbent. 4 Rep. 79.

By the statute, if the first benefice be of the value of 8*l.* a year, or more, by the acceptance of a second, it is actually void, to all intents: but benefices under that value, being not within the statute, are only avoidable by accepting a second, and not void on such Plurality, without a declaratory sentence, &c. Mallor. Q. Imped. 104. In these cases it hath been held, that the value of livings, to make Pluralities, shall be determined by the King's books in the first-fruits office: though the Court hath been divided, whether the value should be taken as it was in the King's books, or according to the true value of the living. 2 Lutw. 1301.

No deanery shall be taken, by our law, to be a benefice with cure, to need dispensation on having another benefice, &c. 1 Leon. 316. And a parsonage and vicarage make not a Plurality, but are only one cure; the vicarage being endowed out of the parsonage. Cro. Jac. 691. See further this Dictionary, titles Parson; Chaplain; Advowson.

PLURIES, A writ that issues in the third place, after two former writs have been disobeyed. See title Capias.

POCKET SHERIFF, A person appointed by the King himself to be Sheriff who is not one of the three nominated in the Exchequer. See title Sheriff.

POCKET OF WOOL. A quantity of wool, containing half a sack. 3 Inst. 96.

POISON. The killing a person by poisoning was, heretofore, held more criminal than any other murder, because of its secrecy, which prevents all defence against it; whereas most open murders give the party killed some opportunity of resistance. For this reason offenders, guilty of poisoning any person, were anciently judged to a severer punishment than other offenders. See 3 Nels. Abr. 363.

Richard Cole was attainted of High Treason, for putting Poison into a pot of pottage boiling in the Bishop of Rochester's kitchen, by which two persons were poisoned; and there was a particular statute made for his punishment, viz. by the statute 22 H. 8. c. 9, it was enacted, That he should be boiled to death. Anno 22 H. 8. Richard Cole's case. Dict. see title Homicide III. 3.

If a man persuade another to drink a poisonous liquor, under the notion of a medicine, who afterwards drinks it in his absence; or if A. intending to poison B. put Poison into a thing, and deliver it to D. who knows nothing of the matter, to be by him delivered to B. and D. innocently delivers it accordingly, in the absence of A.; in this case the procurer of the felony is as much a principal, as if he had been present when it was done. And so likewise all those seem to be, who are present when the Poison was infused, and privy and consenting to the design; but persons, who only abet their crime by command, counsel, &c. and are absent when the Poison was infused, are accessaries only. 2 Hawk. P. C c. 29. § 11. See titles Accessary; Homicide.

POLE; see Perch.

POLEIN, Was a shoe, sharp or picked, and turned up at the toe; it first came in use in the reign of William Rufus, and by degrees became of that length, that in Richard the Second's time they were tied up to the knees with gold or silver chains: they were restrained Anno 4 Ed. 4, but not wholly laid aside till the reign of Hen. VIII. See Malms. in Vit. Wil. 2.

POLICE, not improbably from Πόλις, a city.] The term public Police and Œconomy is applied by Blackstone to signify the due regulation and domestic order of the kingdom: but is more generally applied to the internal regulations of large cities and towns, particularly of the Metropolis; whereby the individuals of the State, generally speaking, or of any town or city within itself, like members of a well governed family, are bound to conform their general behaviour to the rules of propriety, good neighbourhood, and good manners; and to be decent, industrious, and inoffensive in their respective situations. See 4 Comm. c. 13. p. 162.

The Police of the Metropolis (says an Author who has written on this subject with great accuracy and after much research) is a system highly interesting to be understood: but a vast proportion of those who reside in the capital, as well as the multitude of strangers who resort to it, have no accurate idea of the principles of organisation, which move so complicated a machine: establishing those conveniences and accommodations, and preserving that regularity which prevails, in the particular branches of Police, which may be denominated Municipal Regulations. These relate to paving, watching, lighting, cleansing, and removing nusances; furnishing water; the mode of building houses; the system established for extinguishing fires; and for regulating coaches, carts, and carriages; with a variety of other useful improvements tending to the comfort and convenience of the inhabitants. See A Treatise on the Police of the Metropolis, 8vo. 1796.

To administer that branch of the Police which is connected with the prevention and suppression of crimes twenty-six Magistrates, namely, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, sit in rotation every forenoon, and take cognizance of all complaints within the ancient jurisdiction of the city of London. See this Dictionary, title London.

For every other part of the Metropolis, twenty-four stipendiary Magistrates are appointed; three at Bow-street, under a jurisdiction long established; and twenty-one, by stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 53. (generally called the Police-Act). These twenty-one have seven different offices or Courts of Justice assigned them, at convenient distances, in Westminster, Middlesex, and Surry; where they sit every day, (Sundays excepted,) both in the morning and evening, for the purpose of executing those multifarious duties connected with the office of a Justice of Peace, which occur in large societies. This institution was suggested to the Legislature in consequence of the pressure felt by the public from the want of some regular tribunals, where the system should be uniform, and where the purity of Magistrates, and their regular attendance, might insure to the lower orders of the People, the adjustment of their differences, at the least possible expence; and the assistance of gratuitous advice in every difficulty, as well as official aid, in all cases within the sphere of the Magistrate.

The duty of these stipendiary Magistrates (in conjunction with the county Magistrates) extends also to several judicial proceedings, where, in various instances, they are empowered and required to hear and determine offences in a summary way; particularly in cases relating to the customs and excise; game-laws; pawnbrokers; labourers; and apprentices, &c. They act ministerially in licensing and regulating public-houses; punishing vagrants; removing the poor, &c. &c. And examine into complaints in criminal cases, capital and others, for the purpose of sending them to superior tribunals for trial.

These extensive duties, and others, which it is to be wished these Magistrates could perform towards the prevention of crimes, the Author of the above Treatise thinks would be much facilitated, by the establishment of a fund, from whence to bestow rewards on constables and others for detecting, and on accomplices for discovering, offenders.

The following abstract of the Civil Municipal Regulations of the Police of the Metropolis above alluded to, and the various statutes by which they are regulated, is extracted, and corrected from the same Author:

The Metropolis having by degrees been extended so far beyond its ancient limits, every parish, hamlet, liberty, or precinct, now contiguous to the cities of London and Westminster, may be considered as a separate municipality; where the inhabitants regulate the Police of their respective districts, raise money for paving the streets, and assess the householders for the interest thereof, as well as for the annual expence of watching, cleansing, and removing nusances and annoyances. These funds, as well as the execution of the powers of the different statutes creating them, (excepting where the interference of Magistrates is necessary,) are placed in the hands of trustees; of whom, in many instances, the Churchwardens or parish officers, for the time being, are members ex officio; and, by these different bodies, all matters relating to the immediate safety, comfort, and convenience of the Inhabitants, are managed and regulated; under the provisions of statutes made in the last and present reign, as well public as private, applicable to the Metropolis in general, and to the various parishes, hamlets, and liberties in particular; former statutes for these purposes having been found inadequate.

The stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 22, established a system for paving, lighting, cleansing, and watching the city of London; but the statute which removed signs and sign-posts, balconies, spouts, gutters, and those other encroachments and annoyances which were felt as grievances by the Inhabitants, did not pass till the year 1771. The stat. 11 Geo. 3. c. 29, contains a complete and masterly system of that branch of the Police which is connected with Municipal Regulations; and may be considered as a model for every large city in the Empire. This statute extends to every obstruction by carts and carriages, and provides a remedy for all nusances which can prove, in any respect, offensive to the inhabitants; and special Commissioners, called Commissioners of Sewers, are appointed to ensure a regular execution. This statute is improved by stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 75; by which the power of the Commissioners is increased, and some nusances, arising from butchers, dustmen, &c. further provided against.

In the city and liberty of Westminster also many new and useful Municipal Regulations have been made within the present century. The stats. 27 Eliz. and 16 Car. 1, (private acts,) divided the city and liberties into twelve wards, and appointed twelve burgesses to regulate the Police of each ward; who, with the Dean or High Steward of Westminster, were authorized to govern this district of the Metropolis.

The stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 25, enabled the Dean or his High Steward to choose eighty constables in a court-leet; and the same act authorized the appointment of an Annoyance-Jury of forty-eight Inhabitants, to examine weights and measures, and to make presentments of every public nusance either in the city or liberty. The stat. 31 Geo. 2. cc. 17, 25, improved the former statute, and allowed a free market to be held in Westminster. The stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 21, amended by stat 3 Geo 3. c. 23, extended and improved the System for paving, cleansing, lighting, and watching the city and liberty, by including six other adjoining parishes and liberties in Middlesex. The stats. 5 Geo. 3 cc. 13, 50; 11 Geo. 3. c. 22; and particularly 14 Geo. 3. c. 90, for regulating the nightly watch and constables, made further improvements in the general System; by which those branches of Police in Westminster are at present regulated.

In the Borough of Southwark also, the same System has been pursued: the stats. 23 Geo. 2. c. 9; 6 Geo 3. c. 24, having established a System of Regulation applicable to this district of the Metropolis; relative to markets, hackney coach stands, paving, cleansing, lighting, watching, marking streets, and numbering houses; and placing the whole under the management of Commissioners.

In contemplating the great leading features of Municipal Regulation, nothing places England in a situation so superior to most others, with regard to cleanliness, as the System of the Sewers; under the management of special Commissioners in different parts of the kingdom; introduced so early as by stat. 6 H. 6. c. 5, and organized by stats. 6 H. 8. c. 10: 23 H. 8 c. 5: 25 H. 8. c. 10; afterwards improved by stats. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 8: 1 Mary st. 3. c. 11: 13 Eliz. c. 9: 3 Jac. 1. c. 14: 7 Ann. c. 10. See this Dictionary, title Sewers.

Sewers being early introduced into the Metropolis, as well as other cities and towns, in consequence of the general System, every offensive nusance was removed through this medium; and the Inhabitants early accustomed to the advantages and comforts of cleanliness.

Another feature, strongly marking the wisdom and attention of our ancestors, was the introduction of water, for the supply of the Metropolis, in the reign of King James I. in 1604. The improvements which have been since made, in extending the supplies, by means of the New River, and also by the accession of the Thames water, through the medium of the London-bridge, Chelsea, York-Buildings, Shadwell, and other water-works, it is not necessary to detail.

The stat. 9 Ann. c. 23, first established the regulations with regard to hackney-coaches and chairs, which have been improved and extended by several subsequent statutes; see title Coach: and stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 75. § 15—19, which enlarges the power of the Magistrates of the the city of London, to compel the appearance of hackney coachmen residing out of their immediate jurisdiction.

Carts and other carriages have also been regulated by different statutes, viz. stats. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 57: 18 Geo. 1. c. 33: 24 Geo. 1. c. 43: 30 Geo. 2. c. 22: 7 Geo. 3. c. 44: 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 27; which contain a very complete System relative to this branch of Police: by virtue of which, all complaints arising from offences under these acts are cognizable by the Magistrates in a summary way.

The stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 65, established an improved System with regard to watermen plying on the river Thames. The Lord Mayor and Aldermen are empowered to make rules and orders for their government; and, with the Recorder of the city, and Justices of the Peace of the respective counties and places next adjoining to the Thames, between Gravesend and Windsor, have power, within those districts, to put in execution not only the laws, but also the rules and orders, relative to such watermen: such rules and orders to be from time to time sent to the public office in the Metropolis, and to the clerks of the peace of the counties joining the Thames, within thirty days after they are made or altered. The Magistrates have power given them to fine watermen for extortion and misbehaviour; and persons refusing to pay the legal fares may be compelled so to do with all charges, or be imprisoned for a month; and persons giving watermen a fictitious name or place of abode shall forfeit 5*l*.

Offences relative to the driving of cattle improperly, usually termed Bullock-hunting, are also determinable by the Magistrates in the same summary way, under the authority of stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 67; by which every person is authorized to seize delinquents guilty of this very dangerous offence.

The last great feature of useful Police to be here mentioned, consists in the excellent Regulations relative to buildings, projections, and fires: first adopted after the fire of London in 1666; and extended and improved by several statutes from that time down to the stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 78. This statute repeals all former acts, and besides regulating the mode of building houses in future, so as to render them ornamental, commodious, and secure against the accidents of fire, established other useful rules for the prevention of this dreadful calamity; by rendering it incumbent on the churchwardens to provide engines and ladders; to fix fire plugs at convenient distances on all the main pipes in the parish; to fix a mark in the street where they are to be found, and where there is a key ready to open the plugs: rewards are also payable to persons bringing the engines to a fire. See this Dictionary, title Fire.

These outlines will explain, in some measure, by what means the System of the Police, in most of its great features, is conducted in the Metropolis: to which it may be necessary to add, that the Beadles of each parish are the proper persons to convey informations, in case of any inconvenience or nusance, by which a stranger may have it removed. The City and Police Magistrates, in their respective Courts, if not immediately authorized to remedy the wrong complained of, will point out how it may be effected.

It is however earnestly to be wished, that one general act, comprehending the whole of the Regulations made for the city of London, so far as they will apply, could be extended to every part of the Metropolis and its suburbs; that a perfect uniformity might prevail in the penalties and punishments for the several offences, against the comfort and convenience of the Inhabitants.

POLICY OF ASSURANCE, or Insurance, from the Ital. Poliza, i. e. schedulo & assecuratio.] An instrument entered into by insurers of ships and merchandise, &c. to merchants, obligatory, for the payment of the sum insured, in case of loss. Merch. Dict. See title Insurance.

POLLARDS, or Pollengers. Such trees as have been usually cropped, therefore distinguished from timber-trees. Plowd. 469.

POLL. A deed poll is distinguished from one indented, the latter being polled or shaved quite even. See Deed.

POLLS. Where one or more jurors are excepted against, it is called a challenge to the Polls. Co. Lit. 156. See title Jury.

POLYGAMY, Polygamia.] The having a plurality of wives or husbands at once. See title Bigamy; To which is here to be added, that by stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 67, persons convicted of Bigamy, are made subject to the penalty inflicted on Larceny, i. e. transportation, &c.

PONDUS, Poundage; which duty, with that of tonnage, was anciently paid to the King according to the weight and measure of merchants goods. Cowell.

PONDUS REGIS, The standard weight appointed by our ancient Kings. And what we now call Troy Weight, was this Pondus Regis, or Le Roy Weight, with the scales in equilibrio: whereas the aver du pois was the fuller weight, with a declining scale. Cowell. See titles Troy Weight; Weights.

PONE, A writ whereby a cause depending in the county, or other inferior Court, is removed into the Common Pleas; and sometimes into the King's Bench: as when a replevin is sued by writ out of Chancery, &c. then if the plaintiff or defendant will remove that plea out of the county-court into C. B. or K. B. it is done by Pone. F. N. B. 4, 69: 2 Inst. 339 The writ Pone lies to remove actions of debt, and of detinue, writ of right, of nusance, &c. New Nat. B. R.

A Pone to remove causes is of this form: Put at the petition of A. B. before our Justices at Westminster, the day &c. the plea which is in your Court by our writ, between the said A. B. and C. D. of, &c. and summon the said C. that he be then there to answer the said A. &c. This form is only applicable to the Common Pleas; but if the writ of Pone be to remove a cause into K. B. it should be worded thus: Put at the petition of, &c. before us, wheresoever, &c. the plea, &c.

Pone is also a writ willing the Sheriff to summon the defendant to appear and answer the plaintiff's suit on his putting in sureties to prosecute: it is so called from the words of the writ, Pone per vadium & salvos plegios; "Put, by gage and safe pledges, A. B. the defendant." This is a writ not issuing out of Chancery, but out of the Court of Common Pleas, being grounded on the non-appearance of the defendant, at the return of the original writ: and thereby the Sheriff is commanded to attach him, by taking gage, that is, certain of his goods, which he shall forfeit if he doth not appear; or by making him find safe pledges or sureties, who shall be amerced amerced in case of his non-appearance. Finch, L. 345: Ld Raym. 278: Dalt. Sher. c. 32. See title Process.

This is also the first and immediate process, without any previous summons, upon actions of trespass vi et armis, or for other injuries which, though not forcible, are yet trespasses against the peace, as deceit and conspiracy; where the violence of the wrong requires a more speedy remedy; and therefore the original writ commands the defendant to be at once attached without any precedent warning. 3 Comm. c. 19. p. 280, cites Finch. L. 305, 351. See title Original.

PONENDIS IN ASSISIS, A writ granted by the statute of Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 38; which statute shews what persons sheriffs ought to impanel upon assises and juries. Reg. Orig. 175: F. N. B. 165. See title Jury.

PONENDUM IN BALLIUM, A writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in cases bailable. Reg. Orig. 133.

PONENDUM SIGILLUM AD EXCEPTIONEM, A writ by which justices are required to put their seals to exceptions, exhibited by defendant against the plaintiff's evidence, verdict, or other proceedings before them, according to the statute Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 31. See title Bill of Exceptions.

PONE PER VADIUM; See Pone.

PONTAGE, Pontagium] A contribution towards the maintenance, or re-edifying bridges. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 25. It may also signify toll taken to this purpose of those who pass over bridges. Stats. 1 Hen. 8. c. 9: 22 Hen. 8. c. 5: 39 Eliz. c. 25. See Trinoda Necessitas.

PONTIBUS REPARANDIS. A writ directed to the Sheriff, &c. requiring him to charge one or more, to repair a bridge, to whom it belongeth. Reg. Orig. 153. See Pontage.

POOR.

PAUPER] A poor person, who is a burden and charge upon a parish.

The Poor our Law takes notice of are, 1st, Poor by impotency and defect; as the aged or decrepid fatherless or motherless; Poor under sickness; and persons who are Idiots, Lunaticks, lame, blind, &c. these the Overseers of the Poor are to provide for.

2dly, Poor by casualty; such as House-keepers, decayed or ruined by unavoidable misfortunes: poor persons overcharged with children; labourers disabled; and these, having ability, are to be set to work; but if not able to work, they are to be relieved with money.

3dly, Poor by prodigality and debauchery, also called thriftless Poor; as idle slothful persons, pilferers, vagabonds, strumpets, &c. who are to be sent to the House of Correction, and be put to hard labour, to maintain themselves; or work is to be provided for them, that they do not perish for want; and if they become impotent by sickness, or if their work will not maintain them, there must be an allowance by the Overseers of the Poor for their support. Dalt. c. 73. s. 35.

The Law not only regards life and member, and protects every man in the enjoyment of them, but also furnishes him with every thing necessary for their support. For there is no man so indigent or wretched, but he may demand a supply sufficient to all the necessities of life, from the more opulent part of the community, by means of the several statutes enacted for relief of the Poor. 1 Comm. 131.

The Poor of England, till the time of Henry-VIII. subsisted entirely upon private benevolence and the charity of well-disposed Christians: and the Poor in Ireland have, to this day, no relief except from private charity.—By an ancient statute, 23 E. 3. c. 7, it was enacted, that none should give alms to a beggar able to work.—It appears by the Mirror, that at the Common Law the Poor were to be "sustained by parsons, rectors of the church, and the parishioners; so that none of them die for default of sustenance." Mirr. c. 1 § 3.—And by stats. 15 R. 2. c. 6: 4 H. 4. c. 12, impropriators were obliged to distribute a yearly sum to the poor parishioners: and to keep hospitality. (See titles Parson; Appropriators.)—By stats. 12 R. 2. c. 7: 19 H. 7. c. 12, the Poor were directed to abide in the cities and towns wherein they were born, or such wherein they had dwelt for three years: which seems to be the first rudiment of parish settlements.

No compulsory method, however, was marked out for the relief of the Poor, till the stat 27 H. 8. c. 25; under which, provision was ordered to be made for the impotent Poor.—Before that time, the Monasteries were their principal resource; and among other bad effects, which attended these institutions, it was not perhaps one of the least, (though frequently esteemed quite otherwise,) that they supported and fed a very numerous and very idle Poor; whose sustenance depended upon what was daily distributed in alms at the gates of the Religious Houses. But, upon the total dissolution of these, the inconvenience of thus encouraging the Poor in habits of indolence and beggary, was quickly felt throughout the kingdom; and abundance of statutes were made in the reign of King Henry VIII. and his children, for providing for the Poor and impotent; which, the preambles to some of them recite, had of late years greatly increased. These Poor were principally of two sorts; sick and impotent, and therefore unable to work; idle and sturdy, and therefore able, but not willing to exercise any honest employment. To provide, in some measure, for both of these, in and about the Metropolis, Edward VI. founded three Royal Hospitals; Christ's and St. Thomas's, for relief of the impotent, through infancy or sickness; and Bridewell, for the punishment and employment of the vigorous and idle. But these were far from being sufficient for the care of the Poor throughout the Kingdom at large: and therefore, after many other fruitless experiments, by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, Overseers of the Poor were appointed in every parish: whose office and duty are principally these: first, to raise competent sums for the necessary relief of the Poor, impotent, old, blind, and such other being poor, and not able to work, and them only; and, secondly, to provide work for such as are able and cannot otherwise get employment: but this latter part of their duty, which, according to the wise regulations of that salutary statute, should go hand in hand with the other, is now most shamefully neglected. 1 Comm. c. 9. pp. 359, 360.

The Learned Commentator then proceeds to state the evils arising from what, he considers as, a deviation from the original purpose of the Poor Laws, by accumulating all the Poor in one Workhouse; a practice which he condemns condemns as destructive of the industry and domestic happiness of the Poor. He also reprobates the sub-division of parishes; the plan of confining the Poor to their respective districts; and the laws passed since the Restoration, as having given birth to the intricacy of our Poor Laws, by multiplying and rendering more easy the methods of gaining settlements: and, in consequence, creating an infinity of expensive Law-suits between contending neighbourhoods, concerning those settlements and removals. He then proceeds to state the general heads of the Law relative to the settlement of the Poor; which, he truly observes, by the resolutions of the Courts of Justice thereon, within a century past, are branched into a great variety. "And yet, he concludes, notwithstanding the pains that have been taken about these Laws, they still remain very imperfect, and inadequate to the purposes they are designed for: a fate that has generally attended most of our statute Laws, where they have not the foundation of the Common Law to build upon. When the Shires, the Hundreds, and the Tithings were kept in the same admirable order in which they were disposed by the great Alfred, there were no persons idle, consequently, none but the impotent that needed relief: and the stat 43 Eliz. c. 2, seems entirely founded on the same principle. But when this excellent scheme was neglected and departed from, we cannot but observe, with concern, what miserable shifts and lame expedients have from time to time been adopted, in order to patch up the flaws occasioned by this neglect. There is not a more necessary or certain maxim, in the frame and constitution of Society, than that every individual must contribute his share, in order to the well being of the Community: and surely they must be very deficient in sound policy, who suffer one half of a parish to continue idle, dissolute, and unemployed; and, at length, are amazed to find that the industry of the other half is not able to maintain the whole." 1 Comm. c. 9 ad finem.

After reading the foregoing observations, it may seem a hopeless, and almost an useless, task, to enter into any detail of the Poor Laws. This has, however, been here attempted: the source from which the following Abridgment has been chiefly drawn, is Mr. Const's enlarged and valuable edition of Bott's Poor Laws; to which, and Burn's Justice, title Poor, the studious Inquirer into particulars should refer. Since the publication of those works, two statutes have been passed, which, in some measure, obviate several objections of the Learned Commentator, and of other writers, to the policy of some parts of this Law.—These are introduced under the proper divisions of the Subject; which seems most conveniently to arrange itself in the following manner:

I. Of OVERSEERS OF THE POOR.
- 1. Their Appointment.
- 2. Their Accounts.
- 3. Their Indemnity and Punishment.

II. Of POOR-RATES.
- 1. What Persons and Property are liable to.
- 2. The Manner and Purpose of raising them.
- 3. Of Appeals against them.
- 4. How to be levied; and of rating in Aid.

III. 1. Of relieving and maintaining the Poor.
- 2. Of Relations maintaining each other.

IV. Of the SETTLEMENTS of Poor People.
- 1. By Birth.
- 2. By Parentage.
- 3. By Marriage.
- 4. By Residence, in particular Cases.
- 5. By renting a Tenement.
- 6. By Payment of public Taxes.
- 7. By serving an Office.
- 8. By Hiring and Service.
- 9. By Apprenticeship.
- 10. By Estate.

V. Of Certificates.

VI. Of the Removal of Poor Persons.

I. 1. THE CHURCHWARDENS of every parish, and four, three, or two substantial householders there, shall be nominated yearly in Easter-Week, or within a month after Easter, under the hands and seals of two Justices of the County, to be Overseers of the Poor of that parish. Stat. 43 Eliz c. 2 § 1.

In the counties of Lancashire, and others specified, and many (any) other counties, where, by reason of the largeness of the parishes, they (the parishes) cannot reap the benefit of the said stat 43 Eliz. c. 2, two, or more Overseers shall be yearly chosen and appointed, according to the directions of the said stat. 43 Eliz. within every township or village within such county. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c 12. § 21.—This statute extends to towns and villages, in extra parochial places, as well as within parishes; and, by an equitable construction, to all counties, though not named in the statute.

If any Overseer so appointed shall die, or remove from the place, or become insolvent before the expiration of his office, two Justices, on oath made thereof, may appoint another in his stead, until new Overseers are appointed. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 3.

The Mayor and Magistrates of every city, being Justices of the Peace, shall have the same authority, within their respective jurisdictions, as is given to two or more Justices of the Peace. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 8.—If any parish happen to extend into more counties than one, or part to lie within a city, and part without, the Magistrates of the city and Justices of the County shall only intermeddle in so much of the parish as lies within their several jurisdictions respectively; but the Churchwardens and Overseers of such parish shall nevertheless duly execute their office, without dividing themselves, in all places within the said parish. § 9.—If, in any place, there be no nomination of Overseers, every Magistrate in the division, and every Mayor, Alderman, and head officer of the Corporation, where the default shall happen, shall forfeit 5*l.* § 10.

In stating the determinations which have been made by the Courts, in explanation of the above statutes, and the several others hereafter referred to, it would be too minute a labour to quote every authority. Mr. Const, as well as Mr. Justice Burn, and his Continuators, having so carefully and accurately gone over the whole subject, an abridgment of the decisions related by them must, in the first instance, be considered as sufficient. When it is necessary to examine more minutely, recourse must be had to those Authors; and to the cases which they have given so much at length, as generally to preclude the necessity of consulting any other Reports.

The Appointment must expressly state, that the persons named in it are appointed "Overseers of the Poor." It must also state, that they are "substantial householders there," that is, within the parish; and the county in which the parish lies must be named. An appointment to a precinct is not good; but an appointment to a hamlet is: the appointment need not state the Justices to be of the division; or that one of the Justices is of the Quorum. Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 27.

All persons, of whatever age or sex, are primâ facie liable to serve, unless they can shew some legal exemption to except them out of it. Thus it is said, that all Peers of the Realm, by reason of their dignity; Clergymen, by reason of their order; Members of Parliament, by reason of the privileges of Parliament; and Attornies, by reason of the necessity of their attendance at Westminster-Hall; are exempted from being chosen Overseers, even where there is a special custom in the parish for every inhabitant to serve: it is admitted that practising Barristers also have the same privilege, for the like reason. It has also been held, that an Alderman of London ought to be discharged from serving parish offices, on account of his necessary attendance on the duties of the Corporation. Persons also of particular professions and descriptions are exempted, by divers statutes, from serving the office of Overseer. The President and Members of the Colleges of Physicians, in London. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 40. Surgeons, being freemen of the Corporation of Surgeons, in London, for so long a time as they shall practise. Stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 15. And it is said, that Surgeons in general are exempted, by special custom, at Common Law. Apothecaries, free of the Apothecaries' Company, and every person using and exercising the said art, who has served as an apprentice to it for seven years, while they practise. Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 4. Dissenting Ministers, who shall conform to the directions of the Toleration Act, stat. 1 W. & M. c. 18; and Dissenters in general, are allowed to serve the office by deputy. See title Dissenter. Prosecutors of felons, to conviction, who shall apprehend and take any person guilty of burglary, or privately stealing from the shop. Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. See title Reward. Soldiers, serving in the militia during the time of service. Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 107. § 103.—And, perhaps, it may be considered, that those who are exempted from serving the office of Churchwarden, are also exempted from serving the office of Overseer: See this Dictionary, title Churchwarden. It has also been said, that persons, who are only occasional residents in a parish, ought not to be appointed; and it seems clear, that absentees, or persons who do not reside, but only hold land, in the parish, cannot be chosen. But it is settled that a Woman, or a Justice of the Peace, or an Officer upon half-pay, may be appointed, if there are no other more substantial or proper persons in the parish, who are eligible to the office. But, unless there is a positive exemption, the Justices have a discretionary power, to appoint such persons in the parish, as they think most proper, to execute the office.

The appointment of Overseers must be under the hands and seals of two Justices, pursuant to the direction of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2; and, therefore, it cannot be made by the Sessions, nor by the Mayor of a Corporation, conjointly with the Justice of a County; but, if there should happen to be only one Justice in a county, perhaps he alone may appoint. It is, however, completely determined, that the two Justices must sign and seal the appointment in the presence of each other, for it is not merely a ministerial, but a judicial, act, wherein the Justices are to exercise their discretion.

The appointment, though made on a Sunday, is good, provided it be within Easter week, or within a month after; but if the Sunday be Easter Sunday, the Court will take it to be primâ facie clandestine and bad, but it will be good unless the collusion be made to appear; although Sunday is considered as an improper day for making an appointment of Overseers: an order also, appointing Overseers, in obedience to a mandamus, is good, although made above a month after Easter; so also an appointment of an Overseer for the year next ensuing will be understood to be for the Overseer's year.

The Justices cannot appoint more than four Overseers for any parish, unless the parish be divided into two or more divisions or townships, each separately maintaining its own Poor; but the Court will not quash an order appointing one Overseer; especially if it do not appear that other Overseers were not appointed by other orders.

It seems to be settled, that no Overseers can be appointed for any place that is not, in contemplation of Law, a Vill; and, therefore, if a place that is extra-parochial come within the notion of a vill, Overseers may be appointed for the purpose of obliging the Inhabitants to provide for their own Poor. But it is a subject that has been much litigated what kind of place shall be so considered. Coke describes a vill thus: "Villa est ex pluribus mansionibus vicinata;" and it seems to be taken generally, that wherever there is a constable, the place over which he presides shall be considered a township. It has been determined, that a place consisting of two houses, or of a castle and an alehouse, or of a capital mansion house, and three keepers' lodges in the parish adjoining, though the lodges were converted into farms, were not vills. The number of houses, however, or the size of the place is not the only distinguishing feature of a vill; for where a place, consisted of a capital mansion house, and a large farm-house thereto belonging, of the yearly value of 200*l.* and also of three other large farm houses, with three other farms; the Court refused to grant a mandamus to appoint Overseers, because it did not appear that the place had ever had a constable, or even been reputed to be a vill. So also it has been determined, that the scites of ancient Cathedrals, Colleges, and Inns of Courts, are extra-parochial; and not being vills, either legally or by reputation, cannot have Overseers appointed to them. But if an extra-parochial place be a vill by reputation, it may have Overseers appointed, although it consist only of a mansion-house and a farm-house, occupied by different persons, and the property of one: and where the Sessions, on an appeal from an appointment of Overseers, adjudge the place to be a vill, this is conclusive; for then it is perfectly immaterial of what number of houses or persons it consists: but if the Sessions set forth the facts upon which which their judgment is founded, the Court of King's Bench will consider whether they have rightly concluded the place to be a vill.

The Justices ought not to appoint separate Overseers for distinct parts of a parish, under stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12, unless such separate appointments are necessary; and this necessity can only be evinced by the inability of a parish, to reap the benefit of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2; of which inability, the circumstances of a township having, for sixty or seventy years, had separate Overseers, and maintained its own Poor, independently of the parish at large, is pregnant evidence; and, therefore, where a parish consists of several townships, some of which have immemorially maintained their own Poor, the Court will grant a mandamus for the appointment of separate Overseers for the remaining townships. And when a parish is thus divided into separate townships, each township is to be considered as a distinct parish. But it is decided, that a parish shall not be thus divided, unless the Sessions find it as a fact that the parish could not reap the benefit of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2: and this in a case where the parish had immemorially been divided into two separate districts, making separate rates which were afterwards blended together, and divided in certain proportions; and there had been more than four Overseers; and a Constable for the hamlet part of the parish.

Persons aggrieved by any thing done or omitted by the Churchwardens or Overseers, or the two Justices, may, on giving reasonable notice to the Churchwardens, &c. appeal to the next General or Quarter Sessions; and if it shall appear to the Sessions that reasonable notice were not given, they shall adjourn it to the next Quarter Sessions, and then and there finally determine the same, giving reasonable costs, &c. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 4. See title Sessions.

The appointment cannot be removed into the Court of K. B. before the time for appealing is expired, for it would deprive the party of this right of appeal. This appeal may be made as well by the parishioners as by the persons who are appointed Overseers.

2. It is provided, that Overseers shall, within four days after the end of their year, and after other Overseers nominated, make and yield up to two Justices, true and perfect accounts of all monies by them received, or rated and assessed, and not received; and also such stock as shall be in their hands, or in the hands of the Poor to work, and of all other things concerning their office; and pay over the balance to the succeeding Overseers. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 2.—The succeeding Overseers may, by distress, levy the sums of money or stock which shall be behind, upon any account so made; in defect of distress, the offender may be committed to the common gaol until payment of the arrears: two Justices may commit Overseers, who shall refuse to account, until they make a true account, and pay over the balance in their hands. § 4.

The Overseers shall not bring into their account any money, given to the relief of a poor person, not registered in the parish books, as a person entitled to receive collections, on pain of 5*l*. Stat. 19 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 2.

The Overseers shall, within fourteen days after other Overseers are appointed, deliver in, to such succeeding Overseers, a true and just account, in writing, fairly entered in a book or books to be kept for that purpose, and signed by the Overseers; such account to be verified on oath before one Justice, who shall sign and attest the caption of the same at the foot of the account; and the Overseers shall deliver over all the stock, and pay the balance, remaining in their hands, to their successors; these books of account to be carefully preserved in some public place; and to be open at all seasonable times to the inspection of any person assessed, and copies thereof delivered, if required. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 1. If any Overseer shall refuse or neglect to account and pay the balance, as aforesaid, two Justices may commit such Overseer until he complies. § 2.—If an Overseer shall remove, he shall previously deliver accounts and papers, and pay the balance aforesaid to the Churchwarden or other Overseer; and if any Overseer shall die, his executors or administrators shall, within forty days after his decease, deliver all things, concerning his office, to the Churchwarden or other Overseer, and pay the balance out of assets, before any of the other debts are paid and satisfied. § 3.—The succeeding Overseers may levy arrears of rates due to their predecessors; and, out of the money, reimburse, to their predecessors, sums expended for the use of the Poor, and which are allowed to be due to them upon their accounts. § 11.

The authority given by the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, to commit, upon the non-delivery of the account within the time limited, extends only to Overseers, and not to Churchwardens; and if the latter are committed for a default, as Overseers, they must be so named. The power of stating and allowing the accounts at the end of the year, must be executed by the Justices themselves; for they cannot delegate any other person to perform this office. The account delivered must be a particular account, and not merely what the Overseer has received and paid in gross; but the Justices cannot commit if an account be actually delivered, though it is objectionable; they must go into it, hear the objections, strike out what is amiss, and balance the account; and if, after the accounts are passed, they appear to be fraudulent, the remedy is to indict the Overseers. After the Justices have examined, they are to allow the account; and if they refuse to administer the oath prescribed by stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38, in verification of the account, the Overseer may have a Mandamus to compel them. A Mandamus will also lie, on behalf of the new Overseers, to compel the old Overseers to deliver over the book of Poor's-rates, and all other public books and papers in their custody relating to the office. Overseers must account yearly, although they may be appointed for several years successively.

If any person shall find themselves aggrieved by any act done by the Churchwardens and Overseers, or by the two Justices, they may, by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 4. appeal to the General Quarter Sessions. And also by stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 4. (See ante I. 1.) If any person shall have any material objection to such account or any part thereof, such person giving reasonable notice to the Churchwardens, &c. may appeal to the next General or Quarter Sessions, and the Justices there assembled shall receive such appeal, and finally determine the same.

The Sessions, upon an appeal against the allowance of Overseers' accounts, may, if they see reason, disallow of the accounts, and order the Overseers to pay over such balances as they shall adjudge to be due to the parish; but if they refuse so to do, the Sessions cannot commit, but must levy the arrears pursuant to the direction section of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 4. So also the Sessions may, upon an appeal, set aside the allowed account, and order a re-examination of the account by two Justices; but the accounts must be previously allowed by two Justices, or the Sessions cannot receive an appeal, and this allowance must appear on the face of the order; but objections may be made to the accounts before the appeal, for the inhabitants are aggrieved as soon as the money is assessed. Great doubts have been entertained as to the time when the appeal is to be brought; and it has been said, that if the accounts are passed before one Justice, under 17 Geo. 2. c. 38, that the appeal must be to the next Sessions; but that if they are passed before two Justices, under the 43 Eliz. c. 2, the appeal may be at any distance of time; but with respect to a Poor's-rate, it has been determined, that the latter statute repeals the former, and therefore the appeal must be in all such cases to the next Sessions, after the publication of the rate.

It seems that if Overseers have laid out their money upon the maintenance of the Poor, they may, previously to their going out of office, make a rate for the relief of [illegible] and reimburse themselves out of it; but they cannot be reimbursed after they are out of office; for even the Sessions cannot order the succeeding Overseers to pay any sums omitted to be charged in the ac[illegible] although such sums are found to be due to the [illegible], and consented to be paid by a vestry of the [illegible]; but they may order one Overseer to reimburse [illegible] of money already raised.

The balance must be paid over to the succeeding Overseers, notwithstanding a vestry may be willing to let the old Overseers retain it, in order to discharge the expences of a law suit, or a surgeon's bill incurred on account of the Poor; nor can they take credit in their accounts for money paid, as a salary to an assistant Overseer, although such assistant Overseer be appointed with such salary at a vestry meeting.

As Overseers are not compellable, under stat. 17 G. 2. c. 38, to give in their accounts until fourteen days after Easter, the sums of money they may receive in their official capacity, are not due until that time is expired; and therefore, if an Overseer become bankrupt, such money cannot be proved against his estate before his accounts are delivered in.

If any action of trespass or other suit shall be brought against any person taking a distress, making of any sale, or any other thing done by authority of the act, they may plead that it was done by virtue of the act; and if a verdict be for the defendant, or the plaintiff be nonsuit, [illegible] appearance, the defendant shall recover [illegible] costs. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 19.

If any action upon the case, trespass, battery, or false imprisonment, shall be brought against any Overseer, or any in aid of him, for any thing touching and concerning his office, the action shall be laid in the county where the fact was done; and he may plead generally; and, on a verdict in his favour, or if the plaintiff be nonsuit, or suffer any discontinuance, or the fact is not proved to be committed within the county, the defendant shall have double costs. Stats. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5: 21 Jac. 1. c. 12.

When any distress shall be made for a Poor's-rate, the distress itself shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the parties making it deemed trespassers, on account of any defect or want of form in the warrant for the appointment of such Overseers; or in the rate of assessment; or in the warrant of distress thereon; nor shall the party distraining be deemed a trespasser ab initio, on account of any subsequent irregularity; but the parties injured may have their action of trespass, or on the case, at their election; and, if the plaintiffs recover, they shall have full costs; provided no such plaintiffs shall have any action for such irregularity, if tender of amends hath been made before action brought. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 8.

No action shall be brought against any constable or other officer, (and it has been decided that Overseers are officers within this statute,) or person acting under his authority, for any thing done under a warrant, under the hand and seal of any Justice, until demand made, and left at the usual place of his abode, signed by the party demanding, of a perusal and copy of the warrant, and the same has been refused for six days: and after complying with such demand, if any action be brought, without making the Justice who signed it defendant, on producing and proving the warrant at the trial, the Jury shall find for the defendant, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction: and if the action be brought jointly against the Justice and the officer, then, on proof of such warrant, the Jury shall find for such officer, notwithstanding such defect of jurisdiction: and if a verdict shall be given against the Justice, the plaintiff shall recover against him the costs which he is liable to pay to the officer acquitted. Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. § 6.—And where in such case the plaintiff shall obtain a verdict against a Justice, and the Judge shall certify, that the injury complained of was wilfully and maliciously committed, he shall have double costs. § 7.—But no such action shall be brought, unless commenced within six calendar months after the act committed. § 8.

It has been decided that the stats. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5: 21 Jac. 1. c. 12, giving double costs, do not extend to ecclesiastical matters; as, if a Churchwarden present a man upon a pretended crime of incontinency; or a constable present a person as an inhabitant of a parish, when he is only an occupier of lands therein, for non-payment of charges towards the repair of the church: and to entitle an Overseer to the double costs, it must be certified, by the Judge who tries the cause, that the Overseer was acting in the execution of his office: if, however, there is a special verdict in a case where an Overseer is defendant; and it appears by the facts found in such verdict, that the act for which the action is brought, was done by virtue or reason of his office, the master must tax double costs, though there is no certificate or allowance by the Judge who tries the cause.

As the law hath provided these protections to Overseers, acting properly in their office, so also it has inflicted punishments on them for misbehaviour; besides those already noticed on their failing to deliver their accounts, and hereafter as to the removal of the Poor.

The Churchwardens and Overseers shall meet together at least once a month in the church, upon a Sunday in the afternoon, after divine service, to consider of business respecting the Poor; upon pain of forfeiting twenty shillings for every neglect. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 2.

The Justice, before whom any idle and disorderly person shall be convicted, may order the Overseer to pay 5*s.* to the person who apprehended the offender; and, if he he shall refuse or neglect so to do, it may be levied by distress. Stat. 17 Geo 2. c. 5. § 1.

If any Overseer (or other officer of any parish) shall neglect, or refuse to obey and perform the several orders and directions in the statute particularized, or any of them, if no penalty is specifically provided, he shall forfeit, not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 20*s.* Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 14.

If any Overseer, intrusted to make payments for the use of the Poor, shall make such payments in base or counterfeit coin, the offence may be heard in a summary way; and, on conviction, he shall forfeit from 10*s.* to 20*s.* for each offence Stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 37. § 7.

Overseers also may be indicted for refusing to accept of and undertake the office, or for refusing to make a rate to reimburse constables for the apprehending of vagrants, under stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 1. § 1; or for refusing to account, within the time limited, for the monies they have received for the relief of the Poor; or for not relieving the Poor, or for relieving them unnecessarily; or for disobeying a legal order of Justices; or for not receiving a pauper when sent to their parish under an order of removal; or for cruelty in the removal of poor women with child: so also the Court will grant an information against an Overseer, for fraudulently contriving to remove a poor person in order to prevent him from becoming chargeable to the Parish; or for contriving to marry a pauper, or for giving a man money to marry a woman who was with child, in order to prevent the child from being a burden to the parish; but the Court will not grant an information against an Overseer, for making an alteration in a Poor's-rate, after it had been allowed by two Justices, if the alteration appear to have been made with the approbation of the Justices. Nor can an Overseer be adjudged guilty of absenting himself from the monthly meetings appointed by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, until he has had personal notice of his appointment; and if he be appointed, under stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12, an Overseer in an extra-parochial place, he is not liable to this penalty.

An information, in nature of a Quo Warranto, will not lie against Overseers; nor can the Justices in Sessions award an Attachment against those officers.

II. 1. The Churchwardens and Overseers, or the greater part of them, shall take order, from time to time, with the consent of two Justices, to raise, weekly or otherwise, (by taxation of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and every other occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, propriations of tithes, coal-mines, or saleable underwood in the parish, in such competent sums as they shall think fit): 1. A sufficient stock of materials to set the Poor on work. 2. Competent sums of money to relieve the lame, impotent, old, blind, and indigent. 3. To put out poor children apprentices. And, 4. For doing and executing all other things concerning the premises, as to the Overseers shall seem convenient. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 1.—The Mayors, or other Head Officers of Corporations, shall have the same authority within their respective jurisdictions, both in and out of Sessions, as is given to county Justices; and every Alderman of London, within his ward. § 8.

As this latter clause restrains the Magistrates and Justices, to the limits of their respective jurisdictions, the Justices for a county cannot allow a rate made by the Overseer of a borough. 2 Const 62.

The Justices of the counties, in which separate Overseers shall be appointed for particular townships and villages, shall have the like authority to raise and levy monies, and to do and execute every thing in such townships and villages, as is given them in any parish where the Overseers are appointed, under stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. Stat. 13 & 14 C. 2. c. 12. § 22.

The Justices and parish officers of a distinct jurisdiction, as of the precinct of the cathedral church at Norwich, may, therefore, be compelled, by a Mandamus, to make a rate for the relief of the Poor. 1 Const 61.

Public notice in the church shall be given, by the Overseers, of every Poor's-rate allowed by the Justices, the next Sunday after such allowance; and no rate shall be valid, to collect and raise the same, unless such notice shall have been given. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 3. § 1.

In trespass, on a distress for non-payment of a Poor's-rate, the publication of the rate must be proved; and the Court of K. B. will not grant a Mandamus to compel Justices to sign a warrant of distress under a Poor's-rate, if it has not been duly published. But a special case, respecting the legality of a rate, is good, though it does not appear therein that that rate was duly published.

The Overseers shall permit the inhabitants of the parish, &c. to inspect every such rate at all seasonable times, paying 1*s.*; and shall give copies at the rate of 6*d.* for every twenty-four names; or, on refusal or neglect, forfeit 20*l.* Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 3. § 2, 3.

True copies of all Poor's-rates shall be entered in a book, within fourteen days after the determination of all appeals; to be attested by the Overseers, and kept for public perusal, under penalty of from 5*l.* to 20*s.* where no other penalty is provided. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 13, 14. Overseers, where there are no Churchwardens, may do, perform, and execute, and shall be liable as to all matters relating to the Poor. § 15.

The rate which the Churchwardens and Overseers are, by these statutes, authorised to make, must be assessed only on the visible property, both real and personal, which the occupier or owner may have within the parish; and not according to the amount of the property which a person, rated as an inhabitant, may have out of the parish.

The general rule seems to be, that every species of property, lying within the parish, which has an occupier, and from which an annual profit arises, is rateable to the Poor.

Land; is to be rated according to its value, of which the improved rents may be taken as evidence. Therefore, if a person rent a quantity of land, together with a mineral spring thereout arising, at a gross yearly rent, it is rateable to the Poor in respect of the whole of such rent; for the value of the land is improved by the profits of the spring. But, as the improved rent is supposed to be in proportion to the quantity of stock it keeps or furnishes, the value of the stock ought not to be assessed; unless, indeed, a farmer, under colour of keeping stock for the purposes of husbandry, or as the produce of his farm, do buy and sell articles, such as hay, corn, straw, horses, in the way of trade. So also lands, though given to an hospital, are still rateable to the Poor; for a man cannot, by appropriating his land to charitable these purposes, exempt them from taxes to which they were before liable. See post.

Tithes; are, in contemplation of law, a tenement, and are holden by the parson as an occupier; and, therefore, the parson is rateable for the amount of his tithes to the Poor; but the assessment must be made personally on him, although he has leased them to one or more of the parishioners. So (b), if a sum of money be paid annually in lieu of tithes, it is rateable to the Poor; although the amount of such money be settled under a composition between the parson and the parish, and confirmed by act of Parliament. But if an act of Parliament say, that the inhabitants of such a place shall pay tithes to the vicar, and give an option to the parishioners, either to pay such tithes personally, or to raise such a sum as will pay it to the vicar, "clear [illegible] deduction or charges, whether parochial or parliamentary, in lieu of his tithes," this payment is not liable to the Poor's-rate. Tithes which are payable by custom only, as on fish, are liable to be rated to the Poor.

Rents; Quit-rents, it has been said, are rateable to the Poor; but this opinion may be doubted; for it is positively laid down in one case, that the quit-rents and casual profits of a manor are not rateable to the Poor's tax; for the property, though permanent, does not produce a regular annual profit, but is merely accidental: but Ground-rents are certainly liable.

Waste lands; By stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 37, waste and barren lands, when improved, and adjudged assessable by the Sessions, shall be assessed to the Poor's rate of the nearest parish: and the Justices, in General Quarter Sessions, may hear and determine disputes concerning the same. And it has been adjudged, that if a waste be inclosed in the parish of A. on which the landholders of the parish of B. have right of common appurtenant, the allotment given in lieu of that right, shall be assessed to the Poor of the parish of A.

Tolls; which a corporation is entitled to, and which yield a certain annual profit, are rateable to the Poor. So also, it has been determined, that the grantee of the right of navigation of the river Ouse, between Erith and Bedford, is rateable to the Poor in each of those parishes, in which a sluice is erected; and for the passing of which certain tolls are established, although the grantee live, and tolls are collected in a different parish. So also, where, by a navigation-act, the proprietor was entitled to a toll of [illegible] per ton, for goods carried up the river Kennet, from Reading to Newbury, or down the river from Newbury to Reading, and to a proportionable sum for any less distance; and was also enabled to appoint any place of collection; it was held, that the tolls for goods, carried the whole voyage from Reading to Newbury, were rateable in Newbury, though in fact they were collected at [illegible] lock, in the parish of Padworth, about midway between Newbury and Reading, by the agent of the proprietor. So also, where a person is entitled to a dish or measure, by way of toll, of all the gotten in certain lands, he is rateable to the Poor in respect of the profits produced by his right of toll. So also, it has been determined, that the barge-way in the hamlet of Hampton Wick, purchased by the city of London, for the more effectually completing the navigation of the Thames, is rateable to the Poor in respect of the tolls and duties [illegible] thereon collected. But where the right of using a certain path or way is a mere easement; or if A. has an exclusive right of using a way-leave over lands which he holds in common with B. paying B. certain sums yearly, and has the privilege of using another way-leave, occupied by C. paying to C. so much a ton for the goods carried over it; A. is not liable to be rated to the Poor in respect of either of such way leaves: nor are the tolls collected at a light-house, of all ships passing or coming into the harbour, rateable, unless it be found as a fact, that the person rated is the occupier of the house.

Conventicles; a house converted into a conventicle, if not used for any other purpose than that of public worship, is not rateable to the Poor; nor is the preacher of the sect, unless he be permitted by his congregation to dwell therein, rateable as the occupier thereof: but if a private building used, and, by covenant, always to be used, as a Chapel, for religious purposes, be let out so as to produce an annual profit, either by the rent of the pews, or by any other means, such a building is then rateable to the Poor.

An alms-house; wholly occupied by objects of the charity, and from which no profits arise, is not rateable to the Poor; and if lands be given to a charitable purpose, as for building a school or alms-house, by a private act of Parliament, in which it is expressed, that such lands shall be free from "all public taxes," they are not liable to be rated to the Poor. But the master of a free school, appointed by the minister and inhabitants, under a charitable trust, whereby a house, garden, &c. were assigned for his habitation, for the teaching of ten poor boys, is rateable for his occupation of the same. 6 Term Rep. 332.

Market and fair; the lessee of a stall in a market town, to which the lessee resorts every market-day weekly, to sell his wares, is not liable to be rated to the Poor in respect thereof; nor is a person liable to be assessed for the profits of a fair.

Palaces; A Bishop is liable to be rated to the Poor in respect of his palace; for there can be no prescription against this rate. So also, where the scite of a royal palace is demised to a Subject, for a certain permanent interest, the grantees that occupy it are rateable for such property to the Poor. So also, though Royal palaces, in the hands of the Crown, are not rateable; yet, if they, or the respective apartments in them, are separately occupied, the occupiers are liable to be rated, whether they pay for such occupation by rent or services.

Army; stables rented by a Colonel of a regiment, by order of the Crown, for the use of the regiment, are not liable to be rated to the Poor. So also, the battery-house, at Seaford, which is the property of the Crown, is not liable to be rated, although the master-gunner live in the house; for, being removable at pleasure, he has no permanent occupation; but if the Session find the fact positively, that he is the occupier, and rate him, such rate is good. But the owner of stables in the parish of Marylebone, rented by a Colonel of a troop of horse, by the authority of the King, for the use of the troop, is liable to be assessed for them, to the rates collected in that parish, under stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 23.

Parks; the Ranger of a Royal park is rateable, as such, to the Poor, for all the inclosed lands therein, in the parish.

parish, yielding certain profits: and so also is the herbage and pannage of a park, if it yields a certain profit; but if they yield no profit, they are not rateable.

Chambers; in the Inns of Court and Chancery, are not liable to be rated to the Poor.

Hospitals; the officers belonging to and lodging in Chelsea Hospital are rateable to the Poor; but neither the trustees nor the servants attending St. Luke's Hospital; nor the Governors of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, are liable to be rated.

Mines; the lessees of lead-mines, who pay no rent, but only a certain part of the ore raised, are not rateable to the Poor: but the lessee of lead-mines, though held of the Crown, is rateable for the profits arising from lot and cope; which are duties paid him by the adventurer, without any risk on his part.

Corporation; a corporation is liable to be rated to the Poor, for profits arising from tolls; see ante: but a corporation established for the purposes of a public charity, such as the Governors of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, are not rateable with respect to the hospital; for they cannot be considered as occupiers. A Corporation, however, seised of lands in fee for its own profit, are inhabitants and occupiers, within the meaning of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2; and are, in respect thereof, liable to be rated, in their corporate capacity, to the relief of the Poor. So also, lands purchased by a Company, not incorporated, and converted into a dock under an act of Parliament, declaring that the shares of the proprietors shall be considered as personal property, are rateable to the Poor in proportion to the annual profits.

Woods; consisting of timber trees, where the underwood is left for standards, are not rateable to the Poor.

Offices; an officer of the salt office is not liable to be rated to the Poor in respect of his salary.

Machines; the profits of a weighing machine, on a turnpike road, are liable to be rated to the Poor. So, a building called, "The engine-house," in which is a carding machine for manufacturing cotton, is rateable to the Poor, on its increased value by the working of the machine; although this engine is not fixed to the premises, but capable of being moved at pleasure; but the profits of a light-house are not rateable. See ante; Tolls.

Prisons; the Warden of the Fleet prison is liable to the Poor's-rates in respect of those profits which he derives from letting lodgings to prisoners, in the prison and the Rules thereof.

Stock in trade; the general question, how far personal property is rateable to the Poor, is not fully determined; and therefore whether stock in trade be liable, must depend, in a great measure, upon the particular circumstances of each case; for although there are not wanting authorities, of a recent as well as more early date, to shew that stock in trade, in general, is rateable to the Poor; yet there is no clear and express authority, either of more ancient or modern times, in the instance of any one trade, adjudging the stock of that particular trade to be liable, except in those places in which an usage to assess such stock has been proved; though, in many boroughs, the stock in all trades has, immemorially, and even from the very date of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, been, in point of fact, rated. It seems, on the whole, to be decided, that stock in trade, if it be the property of the person in possession, and productive, is rateable: the circumstance of its having been rated once, is prima facie evidence, that it is productive the next year, and, if not contradicted by other evidence, is sufficient to warrant the Justices to decide, that it should be then rated. See 6 Term Rep. 468.

A farmer shall be taxed for his stock in hand, in case it is more than necessary for the carrying on his farm and paying his rent; for then it is like a stock in trade; but, for stock necessary for his farming, he shall not be taxed. Vin. Abr. title Poor, xvi. p. 426. See ante; Lands.

2. The Poor's rate must be made by the Overseers, and allowed by the Justices; for the Sessions have no original power to order an assessment to be made. The Overseers, with the concurrence of the Justices, may make the rate without the consent of the Churchwardens; and when made, the Justices must allow it; for this is merely a ministerial act; and if either the Overseers neglect to make, or the Justices to allow, a rate, they may be compelled by Mandamus.

The time for which a Poor's-rate ought to be made, seems to be left to the discretion of the Overseers. The statute of the 43 Eliz. c. 2, says, "Weekly or otherwise." In one case, it is said, that it ought to be monthly, because the possessors are to pay, and possessions frequently change; this rule is confirmed by Burrow, but denied by Bott, who states a dictum of Lord Mansfield, that a Poor's-rate might as well be made for three months as for one month; and Holt, Chief Justice, assigned as a reason against making Poor's-rates quarterly, that by this means a man cannot move in the middle of the quarter, but he must be twice charged. The Legislature, however, has provided against this by stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 12, which enacts, "That when any person shall come into, or occupy any premises, from which any person assessed shall be removed, or which, at the time of making the rate, were empty, every person, so removing or coming in, shall pay the rate, in proportion to their respective occupations."

The purposes also for which a Poor's-rate is made, must be conformable to the direction of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2; and therefore a rate cannot be made to reimburse former Overseers, for monies expended to the use of the Poor, or to defray law charges; for an Overseer is not bound to lay out the money until he has it: nor can a rate be made to repay money borrowed to build a workhouse: but if the monies, on any rate made by preceding Overseers, be not raised at the expiration of their offices, the successors may, by stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 11, raise it and reimburse them; and Overseers, before their office expires, may make a rate to reimburse themselves monies laid out in proceedings at law, provided such expence be not incurred wantonly and unnecessarily. And by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. § 18, a rate may be made for reimbursing Constables such monies as they shall have expended in relieving the Poor, in conveying them with passes; and in carrying rogues, vagabonds, and sturdy beggars to Houses of Correction.

The rate also must be made in equal proportion, on all the persons assessed, according to their respective properties; and therefore, a pound rate on the rent of lands and houses, and the amount of the interest of personal property, is said to be the most fair and reasonable assessment: but this is denied to be the rule; for the circumstances of a man of landed property may differ in proportion portion as his family is large or ſmall, and perſonal property is in a continual ſtate of fluctuation; and therefore, neither rent nor land tax ought to be conſidered in the making of a rate; but the Overſeers, taking their former aſſeſſments as their beſt guide, are to proportion rates according to their beſt diſcretion; and if they make it unequal, the Seſſions, on appeal, will correct it; for the Seſſions are the ultimate Judges of the proportion and equality of the rate. A Poor's-rate made upon three-fourths of the yearly value of land, and upon one moiety of the yearly value of houſes, is not diſproportionate or unequal. A rate made on one half of the full yearly value or net rent of farms, and taking one-twentieth part of all ſtock, perſonal eſtate, and money out at intereſt, valuing the intereſt of ſuch twentieth part at 4 per cent. and then rating one moiety of ſuch twentieth part, varying the proportion as circumſtances require, (for the Overſeers cannot make a ſtanding rate,) is a good and equal rate. A rate on lands and houſes, at one penny in the pound, without making any diſtinction between farm dwelling houſes and cottages, although they had been before rated in different proportions, is not an unequal rate; for whether houſes are to be rated to the Poor, in a different proportion from land, muſt depend on local circumſtances. But of thoſe equalities and proportions, the Seſſions are ultimately to judge; and therefore, the Court of King's Bench, preſuming primâ facie that the inferior juriſdiction will not violate its duty, will not grant a Mandamus to make an equal rate, or quaſh a rate, unleſs it evidently appear unequal on the face of it.

3. The appeal to the Seſſions may, by 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 4, be to any General Quarter Seſſions; but by 17 G. 2. c. 38. § 4, it muſt be on reaſonable notice given to the next Seſſions, General or Quarter: ſee ante I. 1, 2: for it is by making the rate that the party is aggrieved, and the publication ſhall be taken from the time it is allowed; and if an appeal be lodged and diſmiſſed for informality, the party cannot have a ſecond appeal; but if it appears, that reaſonable notice has not been given, they may adjourn the appeal to the next Quarter Seſſions, and there finally determine the ſame, and award the party, in whoſe favour it is determined, coſts.

In all Corporations which have not four Juſtices, perſons grieved may appeal againſt a Poor's-rate to the next Seſſions for the county or diviſion. Stat. 17 Geo 2. c. 38. § 5.—The Overſeer's book, in which all appeals from Poor's-rate are directed to be entered, ſhall be produced at the Seſſions when any appeal is heard. § 13.

Upon all appeals from rates, the Seſſions may, by ſtat. 17 G. 2. c. 38, amend the rate, without altering it with reſpect to other perſons. Upon an appeal from the whole rate, if it ſhall be found neceſſary, the Seſſions may, in their diſcretion, quaſh the rate, and direct the Overſeers to make a new equal rate. The Seſſions cannot ſtrike out the name of a perſon from the Poor's-rate; ſo if the name of any perſon be omitted, the Seſſion muſt quaſh the rate, and cannot amend it by inſerting his name. But it ſeems agreed, that where a perſon is overcharged in a Poor's-rate, the Seſſions may relieve him, on appeal, by leſſening the ſum aſſeſſed on him. A pariſhioner, who is liable to be rated, but who in fact is not rated, is a competent witneſs to prove that the perſon, whoſe name is omitted, is liable to be rated.

The Juſtices in Seſſions ſhall cauſe defects of form in appeals to be amended without coſts; and determine the appeal on the merits of the caſe, Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 1.

4. The preſent, as well as the ſubſequent Overſeers may, by warrant from two Juſtices, levy the ſums of money aſſeſſed for the Poors' rates, and all arrears thereof, of every one that ſhall refuſe to contribute according as they ſhall be aſſeſſed, by diſtreſs and ſale of the offender's goods, rendering the party the overplus; and in defect of ſuch diſtreſs, two Juſtices may commit the defaulter till payment. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 4.

The goods of any perſon aſſeſſed, and refuſing to pay, may be diſtrained, not only in the place for which the aſſeſſment is made, but in any other place within the ſame county or precinct; and if ſufficient diſtreſs cannot be found there, on oath before a Juſtice of any other county or precinct, goods in ſuch other county or precinct may be diſtrained. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 7.—In caſe any perſon refuſe to pay the preſent Overſeers, the ſucceeding Overſeers may levy arrears, and reimburſe their predeceſſors. § 11.—But perſons ſucceeding tenants rated, or coming into houſes empty, at the time of the rate, ſhall only pay in proportion to the time they have occupied the premiſes; which proportion ſhall be ſettled by two Juſtices. § 12.

Juſtices granting diſtreſs-warrants ſhall therein order the goods diſtrained to be ſold within a certain time limited in the ſaid warrant, not leſs than four nor more than eight days; unleſs the penalty and charges of diſtreſs be ſooner paid. Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 20. § 1.—The officer making ſuch diſtreſs may deduct his reaſonable charges out of the money ariſing by the ſame, and alſo the penalty or ſum diſtrained for; and ſhall, if required, ſhow the warrant of diſtreſs, and ſuffer a copy thereof to be taken by the perſon whoſe goods are diſtrained. § 2.

Juſtices acting for adjoining counties, and perſonally reſident in one of them, may grant diſtreſs-warrants: and the acts of any conſtable or other officer, in obedience thereto, ſhall be as valid as if they had been granted by Juſtices acting for the proper county only; but ſuch warrants muſt be directed and given, in the firſt inſtance, to the conſtable or other officer of the county, to which the ſame particularly relate; and the conſtable may take perſons apprehended before Juſtices of the adjoining county. Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 49. See this Dictionary, title Juſtices.

Juſtices may act in all matters relating to the Poor Laws, notwithſtanding they are rated to or chargeable with taxes or rates, within the pariſh or place affected by the acts of ſuch Juſtices. Stat. 16 Geo. 2. c. 18. § 1.

A Poor's-rate, after it is demanded, and the party ſummoned, may be diſtrained for, before the time for which the rate is made is expired; but if the landlord of the premiſes tender the rate, the Overſeers are bound to receive it, although the tenant is not rated; and if they make an exceſſive diſtreſs, they are liable to a ſpecial action on the caſe.

Pariſhes alſo may be rated in aid; for, by the ſaid ſtat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, if the Juſtices perceive that the inhabitants of any pariſh are not able to levy, among themſelves, ſufficient ſums of money for the purpoſes of the act, the ſaid two Juſtices may rate any other (inhabitants) of other pariſhes, or out of any pariſh within the hundred, dred, where the said parish is, to pay such sum or sums of money to the Churchwardens and Overseers of the poor parish as the said Justices shall think fit: and if such parish, so rated, is not able to pay the sum assessed, then the Sessions may rate any other (inhabitants) of other parishes, in or out of any parish within the county, for the purposes aforesaid. § 3.

The two Justices, or the Sessions, as the case may happen to be, are under this clause of the act, to order the quantum of money, which they think ought to be raised, in aid of the poor parish; but the Overseer must make the rate on those who are to pay it. They may make the order either on particular persons, or on the whole parish, for the relief of a year; but the order must state that it was made by the Justices, if the parish charged be within the hundred, and by the Sessions, if the parish be within the county: but both these jurisdictions are original, and independent of each other; and therefore it is not necessary, that the Justices should adjudge the parish within the hundred incapable, before the Sessions can rate a parish out of the hundred in aid. An extra-parochial place may be taxed in aid of a poor parish, and one vill may be ordered to contribute to the relief of another vill in the same parish, or any division of a county that is equivalent to the name of hundred. It is also said, that the next able parish to the poor parish should be first rated; but one parish in a city cannot be made contributory to another parish in the same city, if not locally situated within a hundred or a county.

III. 1. The Overseers are to set to work all such children whose parents shall not be thought able to maintain them; and all such persons, married or unmarried, who have no means to maintain themselves, and use no ordinary and daily trade to get their living by; to relieve (as has been already noticed) the lame, impotent, old, blind, and such other among them, being poor and not able to work; and to put out poor children apprentices. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 1.—The Overseers shall meet once a month in the church on Sunday afternoon, after divine service, to take some good course in the premises, on pain of 20*s.* § 2. [This clause does not extend to Overseers of extra-parochial places. 8 Mod 40.]—The Justices, or any one of them, may send to the House of Correction, or common gaol, such poor persons as shall not employ themselves according to the direction of the Overseers. § 4.—The majority of the Churchwardens and Overseers, by leave of the Lord of the Manor, whereof any waste or common within the parish shall be parcel, and by order of Sessions may build on such waste or common, at the charge of the parish, convenient houses for the impotent Poor. § 5.

The Overseers, with the consent of two Justices, may set up any trade or manufactory for the employment and relief of the Poor. Stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 4. § 22.

The Sessions may set poor Prisoners on work, and expend the profit arising from their labour, towards their relief; but no parish shall be rated above 6*d.* a week on this account. Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 4. Other provisions are also made by the same statute, for the relief and removal of sick prisoners.

There shall be kept in every parish, at the charge of the parish, a book or books wherein the name of all such persons who do or may receive collection, shall be registered, with the day and year when they were first admitted to have relief, and the occasion which brought them under that necessity. Yearly, in Easter week, or as often as it shall be thought convenient, the parishioners of every parish shall meet in vestry, before whom the said book shall be produced; and all persons receiving collections shall be called over, and the reasons of their taking relief examined, and a new list made and entered as shall be thought fit, to receive collection: and no other person shall be allowed to have or receive parish collection, but by authority under the hand of a Justice residing in the parish, or if none be there dwelling, in the parts near or next adjoining, or by order of Quarter Sessions, except in cases of pestilential diseases, and then only such families as are infected. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. § 11.

Every person who shall be upon the collection-books, and receive relief, and the wife and children of such person cohabiting in the same house, shall wear a badge, as described in the act, on pain of losing the usual allowance; and if any parish officer shall relieve any person, not having such badge, he shall forfeit 20*s.* Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c 30. § 2.

No Justice shall order relief to any poor person, until oath be made before him of some matter which he shall judge a reasonable cause or ground for having such relief, and that the same person had applied to the parish for relief, and was refused: and until such Justice has summoned two of the Overseers to show cause why such relief should not be given Stat. 9 Geo 1. c. 7. § 1—The person, whom the Justice shall order to be relieved, shall be entered in the books, as a person entitled to receive collections, as long as the cause of such relief continues, and no longer. § 2.

For the greater ease of parishes in the relief of the Poor, the Churchwardens and Overseers, [or the major part of them,] with the consent of the major part of the parishioners, may purchase houses, or contract with persons for the maintenance of the Poor; and such persons shall have the benefit of their work and labour: and when any parish shall be too small to purchase or hire such workhouse, two or more such parishes, with the consent of the majority of their respective parishioners, may unite in purchasing or hiring such workhouse: and the Churchwardens and Overseers of a parish, where a workhouse is situated, may contract with the Churchwardens and Overseers of any other Parish, for the maintenance of any of the Poor of such other Parish. But no poor person so removed from one parish to the other, shall gain a settlement thereby. Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 4.

The above section of this act is repealed, with respect to any parish, township, or place, which shall adopt the provisions continued in stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 83, (explained by stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 35,) for the establishment of Houses of Industry, and Incorporated Societies, for the maintenance of the Poor. That act lays down many excellent regulations for the furthering the wholesome purpose of protecting and relieving the Poor; by appointing Guardians of the Poor, and Governors and Visitors of the Poor-houses; under restrictions which, if adopted, would probably remedy many evils now attendant on the Poor Laws. But, it is believed, the act is not enforced or attended to, except in a very few parishes, which [illegible] which have reaped the most important benefits from pursuing the plan suggested by the Legislature in that act. The act itself is too long to be here particularized, [illegible] may be carried into effect at any time, in any parish, by the consent of two thirds of those rated to the Poor; who must then consult the act, to profit by its directions.

The said stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 4. also contained a clause, enacting, that poor persons who refused to be maintained and lodged in such Workhouses, should be struck out of the book, and not entitled to any relief from the [illegible]. But by the stat. 36 Geo. 3. c. 23, after reciting [illegible], and that it had been found to be inconvenient and oppressive, "inasmuch as it often prevents an industrious poor person from receiving such occasional relief, as is best suited to their peculiar case; and, in certain [illegible], holds out conditions of relief injurious to the domestic comfort and happiness of the Poor;" it is enacted, that Overseers may, with the approbation of the parishioners in vestry assembled, or of any Justice of the district, relieve any industrious poor person at their own home, under circumstances of temporary illness or distress, and, in certain other discretionary cases; although such poor person shall refuse to be lodged and maintained in the Poor-house. § 1.—And a Justice of the district may, at his discretion, make an order for the relief of such poor persons at their own houses; which the Overseers must obey. But the special cause of such relief must be assigned on the face of the Justice's order; which order is only to remain in force for one month, but is then renewable from month to month; and an oath of the necessity of such relief is to be administered to the poor person applying, and the Overseer is to be summoned to show cause, if any there be, against it. § 2. This act does not extend to any places where Houses of Industry are provided, under the stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 83, [illegible] mentioned, or under any special act.

[illegible] of Peace, and Physicians, Apothecaries, or [illegible] authorized by them, may visit Parish Workhouses, and two Justices may make order for relieving [illegible] therein. Stat. 30 Geo. 3. c. [illegible]

[illegible] as well as the single Justices, may make [illegible] for the relief of the Poor; for in this [illegible] they have a concurrent jurisdiction. The order must be for the relief of the person in whose favour it is [illegible]; and therefore no order can be made to pay a surgeon's bill, or to pay a bill for the [illegible] for attending a pauper, or to pay [illegible] a pauper sick in gaol; nor unless the oath required by stat. [illegible] be first made. The order of [illegible] must state, that the party is poor and impotent. [illegible] materials are required to set the Poor on work, [illegible] cannot be made for that purpose, under stat. [illegible] and stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 4; for as they are [illegible] there must be distinct and several [illegible], to pay a person so much [illegible] and every week [illegible] and the money is due at the beginning of every week. It was also settled [illegible] that when an order [illegible] person only, and not any [illegible] to go into the Workhouse [illegible] child is born in a parish, and the [illegible] for its sustenance, the parish [illegible] there is no order [illegible] purpose.

Militia men and their substitutes are relieved according to the provisions of the several Militia Acts, and other acts of Parliament, viz. stats. 19 Geo. 3. c. 72: 33 Geo. 3. c. 8. § 34. 34 Geo. 3. c. 47: and particularly stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 81.

2. The father and grandfather, and the mother and grandmother, and the children, of every poor old, blind, lame, and impotent person, or other person not able to work, being of sufficient ability, shall, at their own charges, relieve and maintain every such poor person, at the rate the Justices in Sessions shall assess, on pain of 20*s.* a month. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 7.—The penalties levied, for disobeying such order of maintenance, shall go to the relief of the Poor. § 11.

The Justices of the county or place in which the rich relation, and not where the poor relation, dwells, have alone authority to make this order, and to assess the rate of maintenance. The order must be made at a Quarter, and not at a General, Session; in which it must be alleged, that the person to be relieved is Poor, unable to work, and liable to become chargeable to the parish; and the person to relieve is of sufficient ability, and within the jurisdiction of the Session. The Session have, in this case, an original jurisdiction; but they make it as well upon the complaint of the Overseers, as upon the complaint of the poor relation; but they must order a sum of money to be paid; for they cannot order generally the rich person to relieve his poor relation.

This statute extends only to natural relations, and not to relations in law; and it seems that, in default of one relation, another may be compelled to relieve the pauper; as in the case of grandfather, father, and child; the father being incapable of maintaining the child, the grandfather may be compelled, if of sufficient ability; and therefore, a man is not obliged to maintain his son's wife, nor his wife's son, nor his wife's mother, nor his wife's daughter. And it seems to be now settled, that it makes no difference whether the wife be alive or dead at the time her poor relations require relief, contrary to some former determinations on this subject. It is said also, that a wife cannot be ordered to maintain her grandchild, nor the husband of a grandmother to maintain her grandchild; but if an order of maintenance be made on a grandmother, and she afterwards marries, the husband shall be liable (during her life) to the maintenance. It is also clear, that the reputed grandfather of a poor orphan cannot be ordered to maintain it, for no order can, in this respect, be made for the maintenance of a bastard. See title Bastard.—But where this species of order is well and properly made, the party may be indicted for disobeying it; and the money ordered to be paid becomes due the at beginning of each week.

By stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4, the Protestant children of Popish parents may obtain relief by application to the Court of Chancery; and by stat. 1 Ann. c. 30, the same is enacted with respect to the Protestant children of Jews.

As to relieving Deserted Families—Persons running away from their families, and leaving them on the parish, are declared to be incorrigible rogues; and if either man or woman shall threaten to run away, and leave their families on the parish, the same being proved by two two witnesses, on oath before two Justices, they shall be sent to the House of Correction, unless they give security to the parish. Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4. § 8.

The Churchwardens and Overseers, where any wife, child, or children, shall be so left, on application to, and by warrant of, or order from, two Justices, shall seise so much of the goods and chattels, and receive so much of the rents and profits of the lands and tenements of the husband, father, or mother, as the two Justices shall direct, for and towards the discharge of the parish, and relief of the family; and, on the order being confirmed at Sessions, the goods may be disposed of, and the rents received, as the Court shall direct. Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 8.

All persons, who threaten to run away and leave their wives or children to the parish, are declared idle and disorderly persons; by stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. § 1.—And all persons, who run away and leave their wives or children so chargeable, are declared rogues and vagabonds. § 2.

See further, title Vagrants; and the Militia and Mutiny Acts.

IV. The state of the Poor, in ancient times, has been slightly mentioned at the beginning of this long Article: at present, there are ten modes whereby persons may gain A Settlement: which entitles them to claim and receive relief from the parish in which they are settled, whenever such relief is necessary; and if this happens while the pauper resides in a parish, where he or she is not settled, they are to be removed to their place of settlement; under the regulations noticed in this and the two subsequent divisions.

1. The place of Birth is the place of settlement of all illegitimate children; for a bastard, not having any legal parents, cannot be referred to their settlements, as a legitimate child may be: but this general rule is subject to the following exceptions: 1st. Where the mother is conveyed collusively and by fraud into the parish where the bastard is born.—2dly. Where a bastard is born in a house of industry, hospital, county gaol, or house of correction. See stats. 13 Geo. 3. c. 82: 20 Geo. 3. c. 36: and see stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 29, as to the Foundling Hospital.—3dly. Where born while the mother is under an illegal order of removal.—4thly. Where born pending an appeal against an order of removal, which is afterwards reversed.—5thly. Where born, in transitu, while the mother is passing under an order of removal; or remaining under the suspension of such order. See post VI. But a bastard, born on the road, while the mother is endeavouring to reach her own parish, without fraud, is settled where born.—6thly. Where born after an order of removal is made out, but before actual removal.—7thly. Where the mother returns to the place from which she was removed.—8thly. Where born in the streets while the mother is wandering in a state of vagrancy. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. § 25.—In all other cases the birth decides the settlement.

This rule also, that a bastard is settled where born, extends to the illegitimate offspring of persons certificated; see post V; although the certificate is in force at the time of the birth, and undertakes to provide for the mother and her child; but not if it expressly undertake to provide for the child she is then pregnant with; for then the child, though born a bastard, shall be settled in the certifying parish: and where a child is born a bastard, and its parents afterwards intermarry, and the father procures a certificate for himself, his wife, and his child, such bastard shall have his father's settlement. Under stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30, (see post V.) the legitimate children of certificated persons shall not gain a settlement by birth in the certificated parish.

The parish where born is also primâ facie the settlement of all legitimate children; but this, though the primary place of settlement, is only so until the settlement, to which such child is entitled by parentage, can be discovered. So also, the place, where a legitimate child is first found, is the place of its legal settlement, until the place of its birth, or its derivative settlement, can be known.

2. All legitimate children are settled in the parish, in which their father is last settled, wherever else he may have resided, or they may have been born; or if the father have no settlement, or if that cannot be traced, then in the place in which their mother is settled; until they are emancipated, or gain a new and distinct settlement for themselves. Foreigners, who have gained no settlement in England, cannot, of course, communicate this species of settlement to their children; and if the children are not born here, they cannot resort to that primary settlement which is gained by birth; but they (and their parents, if necessary) must be maintained where found. The father's settlement is communicated to his legitimate child, though born after his death, or though it is an idiot; and this right, which children have to the father's settlement, is not taken away after his death, by their mother gaining a new settlement, in her own right, by marriage; nor can she, during the life of her husband, gain a different settlement, for her children, than that which they inherit from their father: but if a child, above the age of nineteen, who possesses a derivative settlement from its father, go, after his death, with its mother into a different parish, and live there with her upon her own estate, they, both of them, gain a new settlement by their residence. See post 10.

But children, after the age of seven years, (or perhaps before,) may become emancipated, and gain settlement for themselves. Thus, where a child, on the removal of his father into another parish, was left behind, and continued distinct from his father's family, maintaining himself by his own industry, he was held to be emancipated. So also, where a son, nineteen years of age, left his father's family, and went into another parish, where he married and had children. So also, where a son, after he was one-and-twenty years of age, married and lived with his wife and family separately, and distinct from his father's family, though in the same parish, he was held to be emancipated: but a child cannot be emancipated from its parents, either by marriage or living apart in a distinct habitation, unless such child has gained a settlement in its own right. A son, therefore, who, at fifteen years of age, bound himself apprentice, served out part of his time, and worked about the country in the way of his business; but went to his father's house, whenever it was convenient, was held not to be emancipated. So also, where a son resided nine or ten years, by his father's direction, at the house of a friend, by whom he was supported, this was held not an emancipation. So also, where a boy was hired out for seven years successively, but his father received ceived the wages, and maintained him. So, where a child was separated from its family by being maintained several years in a Workhouse; or where a child leaves its father's family when only five years old, and lives with different relations, till ten; or where a son, sixteen years of age, was bound apprentice for five years, and afterwards returned to his father's family, the indentures being void for want of a stamp; or where the son of a certificated person, at nineteen years of age, leaves his father's family, and serves a year under a hiring in an extra-parochial place, and then returns unmarried, and under age, to his father's family: for in all these cases the child, not being of age, nor having married, nor gained a settlement in his own right, nor contracted any relationship inconsistent with the idea of being part of his father's family, cannot be considered as emancipated, so as to lose the benefit of any settlement which his father may gain. It has, however, been held, that if a son enlist himself as a soldier, he thereby emancipates himself from his father's family; and cannot, therefore, change his original derivative settlement, by parentage, for a new settlement gained by his father.

3. SETTLEMENT by Marriage is acquired by construction of Law, independently of any statute; and, therefore, the moment a legal settlement takes place, the settlement of the husband is ipso facto transferred to the wife. It must, however, be a legal marriage, conformable to the direction of the Marriage-Act, stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33; and therefore, where a woman under age was married without the consent of parents, it was held, that the children born under such a connection, were illegitimate, and, as such, could not gain a derivative settlement from their parents. So also, where a marriage was celebrated in a chapel, in which banns had not been usually published, according to the direction of the Marriage-Act, it was held, previous to the stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 53, (see title Marriage,) that the wife gained no settlement by virtue of this union; and it is necessary that the marriage should be with all the legal forms, though both the parties are illegitimate: (see title Marriage:) but a marriage in Scotland is a legal marriage, for the purposes of gaining a settlement. So also, is a marriage, though procured by a third person by fraud; and a cohabitation, as man and wife, for 30 years, is such a presumptive proof of marriage as will entitle the children of the parties to the settlement of their parents; nor is the validity of marriage, as to the purposes of settlement, affected by the entry, in the parish register, not being signed by the minister, or some other person in his presence, as directed by stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33. Indeed, the Law, favouring settlements as much as possible, has, in many instances, precluded the fact of marriage from being controverted: thus, after an order of removal, stating the parties to be husband and wife, the fact of marriage can only be controverted upon appeal to the Sessions. So also, if a man and woman be certificated as husband and wife, the legality of their marriage cannot be controverted by the certifying parish: and it is not necessary for this purpose to prove a marriage in fact; evidence of cohabitation, reputation, and other circumstantial proof, is sufficient.

But although the husband's settlement is, if known, communicated to the wife, and retained after the husband's death, till she gain a new one, notwithstanding she never lived with him at the place in which he is settled; yet her own settlement, in certain cases, is not extinguished, but only suspended, during the coverture; and if her husband have no settlement, her own remains even during the coverture; or if he have a settlement, but it cannot be discovered, her settlement returns. The removal of a wife, therefore, imports, that it is to her husband's settlement; for it is incumbent on the parish, to which she is removed, to prove a different settlement, even though she be not removed as a wife.

4. To prevent improper persons from gaining a settlement by Residence, it was enacted, by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. § 1, "That it shall be lawful, upon complaint made by the Churchwardens and Overseers of the Poor of any parish, to any Justice of the Peace, within 40 days after any poor person shall come to settle in any tenement, under the yearly value of 10*l.* for any two Justices of the Peace, of the division where any person likely to be chargeable to the parish shall come to inhabit, by their warrant to remove and convey such person to such parish, where he or she were last legally settled, either as a native, householder, sojourner, apprentice, or servant, for the space of 40 days at the least, unless he or she give sufficient security for the discharge of the said parish, to be allowed by the said Justices."

By stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. § 3, "the 40 days' continuance, intended by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12, to make a settlement, was to be accounted from the time of his or her delivery of notice, in writing, of the house of his or her abode, and the number of his or her family, to one of the Churchwardens or Overseers of the Poor of the parish to which they shall so remove."

By stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, "the 40 days were to be accounted from the publication of the notice, in writing; which the Churchwardens or Overseers were required to cause to be read publicly, immediately after divine service, in the church or chapel of the said parish or town, on the next Lord's Day, when there should be divine service in the same; which notice was to be registered and kept in the book of the Poor's accounts; and, if they neglected to read or register such notice, they were to forfeit 40*s.* No soldier, seaman, shipwright, &c. were to gain any settlement in any parish, by delivery and publication of such notice, unless after the dismission of such person from the service. § 4.

By the same statute it is provided, that if any person shall execute an annual office, or, being properly rated, shall pay the public taxes; or shall be lawfully hired as a servant, and serve for a year; or shall be bound an apprentice in any parish; they shall respectively gain settlements thereby: though no such notice, in writing, was delivered or published, as the statutes, above recited, require. §§ 6, 7, 8.

It is apparent, from these statutes, that the Legislature was anxious to prevent a settlement being gained by constructive notices; it was therefore settled, by various determinations of the Courts, that nothing could be equivalent to notice, except those acts for which the statutes provide: and now, by stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 101. § 3, it is expressly provided, "that no person shall, in future, be enabled to gain any settlement in any parish, township, or place into which they shall come, by delivery and publication of any notice in writing."

The

POOR IV. 5.

The 40 days' residence, which is required to gain this species of settlement, need not be in the tenement which the party occupies; and therefore, when a person took a windmill of above 10*l.* a year, but resided in a distant cottage under 10*l.* a year, within the same parish, he thereby gained a settlement; nor need the residence be for 40 days successively: but if, during his occupation of the tenement, he resided at different times any where within the parish for more than 40 days, it is sufficient; and if he occupy two tenements, in different parishes, and reside alternately in each parish above 40 days in the whole, his settlement shall be in that parish in which he lodged the last night of the first 40 days; but the occupation must be legal; for if he has obtained possession of the tenement by fraud, a residence will not gain a settlement; and it is a general rule, seemingly without a single exception, that no person can be removed from residing upon his own estate, whatever likelihood there may be of his, or any part of his family, becoming chargeable. See post 10. It is also expresly enacted, by stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84, that gatekeepers, on turnpike roads, shall not be removed from their respective toll-houses: and, by other statutes, that officers, mariners, soldiers, marines, (and militia-men, being married,) shall not be removed from those parishes, in which they set up and exercise any trade, until they become actually chargeable. See post VI.

5. By the construction of stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. § 1, noticed in the preceding division, it is implied, that whoever shall rent a tenement above the yearly value of 10*l.* in the parish, in which he shall come to inhabit, for the space of 40 days, shall thereby gain a settlement.

But by stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 30. § 11, it is moved, that no certificate person (see post V,) shall be adjudged to gain a settlement by residence, unless he shall really and bonâ fide take a lease of a tenement, of the value of 10*l.*

In the construction of this part of the statute, 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 30, it has been held, that where a certificate-man agreed with the lessee of a mill, that he would occupy the mill; and, in pursuance of the agreement, occupied it for two years, this was a sufficient taking, to avoid the certificate, though there was no under-lease or assignment; for the rent being reserved for a year, it is an absolute demise for a year: and if not, it is a lease at will, which is sufficient. And where it was stated, that a certificate-man took a lease for seven years, the Court said, they would intend that it was by deed, for otherwise it would be no lease at all.—And it is not material, though the greatest part of the premises lies in a different parish, if the tenant reside on that part which is in the certificated parish.—And renting a tenement of 10*l.* a year, with a residence of 40 days, will avoid a certificate, although the certificate be granted, after the taking, and before the expiration of the 40 days.

As to the kind of Tenement; it has been held, that the renting of a water mill, a coney warren, a piece of pasture ground, a house within the rules of the Fleet-prison, a windmill, a dairy of cows with privilege of pasture for them, a potatoe ground, a first and second floor unfurnished, a shop occupied separately from the house to which it belongs, a furnished room hired for a particular purpose though the landlord is to find fire and have the use of it at other times, a land-sale colliery, a cattlegate, the fishery of a pond with the spear-sedge flags and rushes in and about the same, the hay grass and aftermeath of meadow land, a rabbit warren though the party has no interest in the soil, except that of entering on the soil to kill the rabbits, the fogs and after-grass of meadow land, the hiring of twenty cows at 3*l.* 10*s* per annum each with privilege to feed them in particular fields for a certain part of the year during which time no other cattle were to depasture there; are all of them Tenements within the meaning of the statutes: and will, if above the value of 10*l.* a year gain the party, who resides on them for 40 days, a settlement in the parish in which each respectively lies. But no gatekeeper, or person renting the tolls of turnpikes, and residing in any toll-house, belonging to the trustees, shall thereby gain a settlement. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 56.

The tenement must be entire; but it is not necessary to this purpose that the tenement should be taken all of the same landlord, or that it should lie entirely in the same parish. Therefore a house rented at 5*l.* a year of one landlord, and a piece of land of 6*l.* a year of another landlord; or a house of 6*l.* a year rented of one man, and stables of 50*s.* a quarter of another; are tenements sufficiently entire to give a settlement. So also, an entire tenement of house and lands of the value of 12*l.* a year, lying in different parishes, although in neither parish the value amounts to 10*l.* a year, will gain a settlement; and so, though the taking be at different times, and the tenement is afterwards underlet in part, or in the whole, to, and occupied jointly with, another person; and, in these cases, the settlement will be in that parish in which the tenant lodges the last 40 days.

The tenement also must be of the value of 10*l.* a year; and the value does not depend upon the rent, but on the real worth it may be of at any one time during the occupation of the tenant; for though no rent be reserved, yet if it be worth 10*l.* a year, it will gain a settlement. The rent, however, is good primâ facie evidence of its value, and shall be conclusive, if no other evidence of value appear. It hath accordingly been adjudged, that a house of the value only of 6*l.* 10*s.* a year, taken at the rent of 10*l.* a year, under a covenant that the landlord shall make new buildings, is not of sufficient value, if those new buildings are never made. So, a sole tenancy in a house of 8*l.* a year, and a joint-tenancy in land of 3*l.* 15*s.* a year, hath been adjudged not of sufficient value. So also, a house of 16*l.* a year, occupied jointly by two persons, or a farm of 14*l.* a year, rented by two persons, jointly, although the rent be paid, the stock stinted, and the profits taken separately by each, is not of sufficient value to gain either of them a settlement; but a farm of 52*l.* a year rented, occupied, and managed jointly by two tenants, is a tenement of sufficient value to each of them. A tenement of 10*l.* a year, taken without fraud, will gain a settlement, although the tenant live only in one part of it, and underlet the remainder to different tenants; and therefore, where a man took a tenement, consisting of a cottage and an acre of land of the value of 7*l* a year, and let the whole of it at the same rent to another person, and afterwards took another tenement of 3*l.* a year, these two takings were held sufficient to gain a settlement; for he continued tenant of the cottage and the land, though they were underlet. A cottage of 6*l.* 17*s.* a year, held for the remainder of 99 years, on a lease determinable on the life of the tenant, is a tenement of the value of 10*l.* a year. So also, where a person was appointed to be Herd to several persons, who had a right of common upon a large extensive common or waste, and resided in a house situated on the common, and was allowed, as a reward for his fidelity and service, the exclusive enjoyment of the house and parcel of meadow adjoining thereto, of the value of 20*l.* a year; this was held to be a sufficient renting, and of sufficient value to gain a settlement: but if the renting be fraudulent, as taking a farm without being able to stock it, it will not gain a settlement, although its value is more than 10*l.* a year.

3 O 2 were

As to the time of renting; the tenement need not be taken for a whole year, and therefore a taking and occupying from the first of June to the Lady Day following, has been held sufficient to gain a settlement.

To complete this species of settlement, there must be a Residence of 40 days; either on the tenement, or in the parish where it lies; for a residence in one parish, and occupying a tenement in another, is not sufficient.

6. IF any person shall come into any town or parish to inhabit, and shall, for himself, and on his own account, be charged with, and pay, his share towards the public Taxes, or levies, of the said town or parish, he shall be adjudged and deemed to have a legal settlement in the same. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. § 6.—But no person shall gain such settlement by paying taxes for any tenement of less than 10*l.* yearly value. Stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 101. § 4.

As to the kind of taxes; the Land-tax and the Poor's-tax are public taxes within the meaning of this statute; but a tax, assessed for the repair of a county bridge; or towards the repairs of the highways; or for the scavenger, stat 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 6; or the duties on houses and windows, stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 10. § 13; or the stoppage raised on the persons belonging to Sheerness yard, for the relief of the poor; are neither public taxes, or levies, within the meaning of the Legislature; and therefore, the paying them will not entitle the person to a settlement under this statute.

The party must be both assessed to and pay the tax to gain a settlement; and payment of an assessment, which, as to other purposes, is illegal and void, will gain a settlement: so also, if it be made upon the house, and not upon the person, or on the occupier of such a house, or the farmer of such lands; and if the assessment continue in the rate book in the name of a former tenant deceased, payment by the occupier is sufficient; for it is not necessary that the tenant should be rated by name; if he is virtually rated and paid, it is sufficient. If the tenant be assessed, and he pay, he will thereby gain a settlement, although it is repaid to him by his landlord, or allowed in his rent; but if the landlord be assessed, payment by the tenant is not sufficient, although the tax is demanded of him by the officer who made the rate. So also, where a father occupied a house, and was rated to the Poor, but gave up the occupation to his son with whom he continued to live merely as an inmate; a payment by the son, under this rating, will not gain him a settlement; but if the father had continued in the occupation, and the son being the visible manager of his concerns, had been rated instead of his father, and had paid, he would have gained a settlement.

The rate books are generally divided into different columns, and distinguished,—"Landlords rated,"—"Names of occupiers;"—and therefore, if different persons be named in each, payment by the one will not gain a settlement; because in the one case he is not rated, and in the other has not paid; as where the landlord is assessed, and tenant pays; but in general where there is no name mentioned, or if both the names of landlord and tenant are inserted, but it does not appear which of them is rated; or if the tenant's name has been once introduced upon the rate book, though taken off in consequence of his poverty, and at his own request, and no other name inserted; it shall be considered, in all these cases, as an assessment upon the tenant; for the land tax is the tenant's tax, as between him and the public, and shall be so taken, unless it expressly appear, that the landlord is rated; but whether landlord or tenant be rated, is a question of fact for the Justices at Session to decide.

A landlord cannot pay the tax for the tenant; and therefore where a farm was rated by a particular name, and neither the name of the landlord or tenant on the rate, and the landlord paid the tax and received it again from the tenant, it was held, that this did not give the tenant a settlement: but if a tenant be rated and abscond, and his landlord desire the Collectors to levy it by distress, lest he should lose the money; and on their going to the premises, a friend of the tenant's pays it to him; this is equal to payment by the tenant himself, and he thereby gains a settlement. So also, if the Collectors of the Land-tax demand payment of the tenant, and on his refusing to pay, they shew him a paper-writing and read it, and tell him the sum he is to pay, and on his refusal levy the money by distress, and he afterwards pays such sum as an assessment on him, it shall be intended that he was in fact assessed, unless the contrary clearly appear.

7. IF any person, who shall come to inhabit in any town or parish, shall for himself, and on his own account, execute any public annual Office, or charge, in the said town or parish during one whole year, he shall have a legal settlement in the same. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. § 6.

If a certificate person shall serve an annual office in such parish, being legally placed in such office, he shall thereby gain a settlement. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 11.

The kind of office; the office need not to be what is generally called a parish office, for if it be an annual office, and served in the parish, it is sufficient; and therefore, it has been held, that serving the office of warden of a borough; or the office of parish clerk, though chosen by the parson, and not by the parishioners, and although he has no licence from the Ordinary, for the office is annual; or the office of collector of the land-tax; or the office of collector of the duties on births and burials; or the office of tithingman; or the office of constable of a city, although the election is not in the parishioners; or the office of petty constable, if sworn in at the leet, though served by deputy; or the office of bailiff or ale-conner; or the office of sexton; or the office of hog-ringer, being annual offices, will gain a settlement:—but

POOR IV. 8.

—but the office of deputy constable; or the office of school-master to a charity school, established by private donation; or the office of deputy tithingman; or the office of curate under a sequestration; are not annual offices, and therefore the serving them will not gain a settlement.

The party also must be regularly and legally appointed to the office; or the serving it will not be sufficient; and therefore, although an inhabitant of a parish has a tally left at his house, signifying that he is chosen borsholder or tithingman, yet if he is not presented and admitted in the Court leet, he is not legally placed in the office, and cannot gain a settlement by serving it. So also, where a man was chosen constable, and even sworn in, yet not being presented at the leet, it was held that he gained no settlement by serving the office: but when a person was appointed a tithingman by the steward of the leet, and served the office for a whole year, it was held; that he thereby gained a settlement, although he was not sworn in until half the year was expired.

The office must be completely served for a year; and therefore, if the party become chargeable before the year expires, this is an interruption to the service, and will prevent his gaining a settlement, although no other person is appointed in his stead, until the year expires: and so strictly has this part of the statute been construed, that when a tithingman served two half years at different times, it was held, that they could not be joined so as to make a service for a year, although there was a custom in the parish not to serve the office longer than half a year at a time; for the very custom proved that in this parish the office of tithingman was not an annual office. If, however, two parishes use the same church, and the sexton live in that parish, in which neither the church nor the burial part of the church-yard lies; yet, by serving this office, he shall gain a settlement in that parish where he resides.

8. THE class of Settlements, by Hiring and Service, is, perhaps, above all others, obscured by an innumerable variety of cases; the determinations in which, unless very minutely attended to, will frequently appear contradictory. The following summary is intended to contain a statement, of the general rules on this head, as concise as possible; without entering into exceptions, caused, for the most part, rather by the particular circumstances of the cases, than by any uncertainty in the Law.

If any unmarried person, not having child or children, shall be lawfully hired into any parish or town, for one year, such service shall be adjudged and deemed a good settlement therein. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. § 6. But no person, so hired as aforesaid, shall be deemed to have a good settlement in any such parish or township, unless such person shall continue and abide in the same service during the space of one whole year. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30. § 4.

Under stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 11, Certificated persons cannot gain a settlement by hiring and service: And by stat. 12 Ann. st. 1. c. 18. § 2, it is expressly provided, that no hired servant to a certificated person shall gain a settlement, by such hiring and service.

No child, nurse, or servant, received into, maintained, or employed within the Foundling Hospital, shall gain any settlement in the parish where such hospital is situated, by virtue of being so received, employed, or maintained. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 29. § 7.

No person, who shall be admitted into the Magdalen Hospital as a penitent prostitute, or who shall be employed in the said hospital as a hired servant, shall, by reason of such admittance, or service, gain a settlement in the parish in which the said hospital is or shall be situate. Stat. 9 Geo. 3 c. 31. § 8.

Who shall gain such settlement:—The clause in the stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, which prevents married persons, having children, from gaining settlements by hiring and service, was made merely for the protection of parishes; and therefore, a widower, although he has children, if such children are emancipated, and have gained settlements for themselves, may gain a settlement by hiring and service; for, in such case, there is no danger of the parish being burdened with the children, by settlement derivatively from their father; and, upon this principle, it has been settled, that a daughter, who is emancipated, may gain a new settlement, by hiring and service with her father. And, indeed, this clause has always been considered as favourably as possible to settlements; and therefore, if a wife, where the husband is abroad, is hired as a servant, and, before the year expires, her husband dies, a continued service for a year, from the time of his death, will gain a settlement, although, at the time of the hiring, she was a married person. So also, if a servant be unmarried at the time when he is hired, he gains a settlement by a year's service, although he marry before the service commences: So also, if a married man hire himself conditionally, and, before the condition performed, his wife dies without issue, he is an unmarried person within the statute; and shall gain a settlement, if the hiring takes place, and he serves a year from the time the condition was performed.

To complete this species of settlement, there must be such a Contract, between the master and servant, as will amount to what the Law considers as a hiring; for a hiring cannot be intended, where no contract appears: and therefore, where a gentleman, wishing to have his footboy instructed in the art of shaving, sent him to a barber to learn to shave, where he staid three years, and afterwards became chargeable to the parish: the Court held, that there was not such a contract in this case as would amount to a hiring and service; for there was no implied agreement, much less a positive contract, between the boy and the barber: so also, where a Captain brought a female negro slave from America to England, who lived with him here in the capacity of a servant, but there was no hiring; it was held, that the service, under this circumstance, would not entitle her to a settlement, because there was no contract appeared: so also, where a boy worked for several years with his uncle, who allowed him board, lodging, clothes, and pocket money; yet, because there was no contract between them for a hiring, it was held, that the boy did not gain any settlement under this service: so also, where the waiter of an inn being ill, procured another waiter of his acquaintance to assist him, who continued, with the knowledge of the master of the inn, boarding and lodging in the inn for the course of nineteen months, when the waiter went away, and the assistant continued to serve for more than twelve months afterwards, as he had done before, without making any agreement with the master; it was held, he did not gain any settlement by this service; because there was no contract for such service with the master.

And

And when a contract of hiring does appear, or can, from the circumstances, be inferred; yet it must also appear that the hiring was for a year. If, however, there be a hiring in general terms without any designation of time, it is always understood that such general hiring is for a year. Therefore, where a boy went into a service without any express contract being made, and his master told him, that if he staid a year, and behaved himself well, he would give him, the next year, a livery and full wages; the Court held, that although there were no express hiring, yet, as it was clearly a general hiring, it amounted, by construction of Law, to a hiring for a year; for a general hiring shall always be construed into a hiring for a year: of which, it would be needless here to multiply examples.

But a hiring at weekly wages, for so long time as the master should want a servant, is not a hiring for a year; for the contract is at the will of the master, and is so far from being for a year, that the servant may be turned away at the end of the week. And the same principle seems to apply to all cases where, by the express contract, the hiring may be determined either by the master or the servant before the year expired: and to make a hiring such as will gain a settlement, there must be, in the original agreement, something by which it appears to be a hiring for a year; as that the party should have so much a week the year round, or so much a week both summer and winter.

A hiring at eight shillings a month, with liberty to let himself out in harvest time, and depart at a month's wages, or a month's warning, is not a hiring for a year: and the distinction in this species of hiring seems to be, that where the liberty either to work for another master, or not to work for the master hiring, forms part of the contract, that such hiring is not a hiring for a year, and, of course, a service under it will not gain a settlement; for, to gain a settlement, the servant must continue and abide in a state of servitude, all the time, during a whole year. But where the exception does not form any part of the original agreement or contract, then an exemption from service, during part of the year, particularly if it arise from usage, will not vitiate the hiring. And even where the hiring is accompanied with an agreement to be absent; yet if it be for the purpose of a duty, which the Law would have compelled the master to permit the servat to perform, it will not vitiate the contract; as where a man was hired to serve a year, with an express exception to be absent for a month on the duty of a militia-man. In all cases, if the contract be legal at the time of the hiring, a new agreement, during the service, will not avoid a settlement under it; as where a man hired himself to a turner for a year for board, lodging, pocket money, and clothes, but in the middle of the year it was agreed, that instead of these, he should work by the piece, and have what he could earn.

As to customary and retrospective Hirings:—A hiring from May-day to Lady-day, and from Lady-day to May-day; or from the 3d of October to the Michaelmas following; or from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, with liberty of absence during sheep-shearing or harvest month, will not gain a settlement; although in all these cases it is the custom of the country to consider such hiring as a hiring for a year, but a hiring from Whitsuntide to Whitsuntide, if it be the custom of the country to consider such hiring as a hiring for a year, will gain a settlement, although it fall short of 365 days: So also, a hiring at a statute fair, held the day after Michaelmas-day, from that time till the Michaelmas following; or from the second day of one year until the first day of the next year, are hiring, for one year; for the days shall be taken inclusively: But where such a number of days intervene, as to prevent the principle of there being no fraction of a day, by analogy to the rule of Law in other cases, from applying; or where such terms as will warrant a construction of intent between the parties, are wanting; in such case no custom of the country shall avail to control the Law, and give a retrospect; therefore, where there was a hiring at a statute fair held three days after Martinmas to serve till the Martinmas following; the Court held it was not a hiring for a year, although it was so considered by the custom of the country: So also, a hiring three days after Michaelmas till the Michaelmas following, is not a hiring for a year, although, by its happening to be leap year, the number of days amounted to 365. It seems, therefore, to be most clearly settled, that a retrospective hiring will in no case be considered as a hiring for a year; as where Michaelmas was on Thursday, and upon the Saturday following, a man was hired from the said Michaelmas day to Michaelmas following: But a conditional hiring may be a good hiring for a year; as where a woman agreed to live with a man as a servant for three months, at the rate of 3 l. a year; and if he and she liked one another, that then she would continue his servant for the remainder of the year, and continued without any other agreement to serve the whole year; the opinion of the Court uno ore was, that the woman, by this hiring and service, had gained a settlement: So, where a person, in the common case, is hired upon a month's liking, and to go away on a month's wages, or a month's warning, to be at any time paid or given on either side, and the servant continues to serve a year under this hiring, it is held, that he or she thereby gains a settlement.

The Courts of Justice lean so much in favour of settlements, that if, from the circumstances, a contract for a year appears, it is considered as good, although it was not made by one, but by several hirings: therefore, where a person was hired from three weeks after Michaelmas to the Michaelmas following, and on the expiration of this hiring, was hired again for a year, and there was a service for a year under both hirings; it was held, that the party gained a settlement, although the service, under the second hiring, was only for 40 days: So also, where a servant was hired from Christmas to Michaelmas, and served accordingly, and at the said Michaelmas was hired again by the same master for a year, but served only till Midsummer following; it was held, that these several hirings might be joined so as to form a hiring for a year. The general principle in these causes is, that though the service must be immediately continued, yet the hiring, under which such service is performed, need not be by one and the same contract; for if there be a continuation of the same service of 40 days, after a hiring for a year, such hiring will connect itself with any former hiring, by which the service was continued, so as to make a service for a year. The question, therefore, in this species of settlement, always is, whether the former service was discontinued?

discontinued? therefore, where a person was hired from Ash Wednesday until Christmas, and, after serving that time, left his master, and went home to his father, where he staid about a week; this was held a discontinuance, and that it could not be connected with a subsequent hiring for a year, and service under it for eleven months, so as to gain a settlement; But the mere absence of a day between two hirings, or increase of wages on the second hiring, or the former hiring's being from week to week, or absence on account of ill-health, or an omission during service to make a new agreement at the expiration of the first hiring, will not make a discontinuance. But the servant must, at the time of the second hiring, be in a capacity to gain a settlement by hiring and service; and therefore, if a servant be unmarried at the first hiring, and married at the second hiring, they cannot be so connected as to gain a settlement under him by any length of service.

Of service in different places; at different times; and to different masters:—It is not necessary that the whole year's service, under any hiring for a year, should be performed in the parish where the hiring is made; and therefore if, under a hiring for a year, the servant serves half a year in one parish, and then removes with his master, and serves the other half of the year in another parish, he gains a settlement, where he serves the last 40 days; even although the master went into the other parish merely on a visit, or for his health, as to a watering-place. It is not necessary that the service should be performed in the place where the servant lives, or where the master dwells: therefore, where a house stood in two parishes, the part of the house in which the master lived, and in which the servant constantly worked, stood in one parish; but that part in which the servant lodged stood in another, and the settlement was held to be in that parish where the servant lodged: So also, where a groom was hired for a year to a Nobleman who resided at Weybridge, to look after his running horses, which stood in the parish of Barrowbrook; it was held, that a residence in this last parish for 40 days gained a settlement, although the master had neither house, nor land, nor settlement in the parish.

The 40 days' residence need not be 40 successive days; for if a servant serves more than 40 days in the whole, he gains a settlement; and where the last 40 days are in a place where no settlement can be gained, the settlement shall be in the place where the last preceding 40 days were served. In the case of alternate residence, the settlement shall be in that parish where the servant sleeps the last night of the last 40 days. There must, however, be a residence of 40 days in some one parish; and therefore, where a person who was hired to a waterman, served a year by navigating a boat to and from London, and it did not appear, that he had, during the year, slept for 40 days in any one parish at different times, either in going to or returning from London, he having in general lived and slept in the boat; it was held, that he did not gain a settlement in either place.

The Service may not only be performed in different places, but with different masters, provided there be no dissolution of the original hiring; and the servant be unmarried at the time such original hiring took place; for marriage, during the service, as has already been said, will not vacate the settlement, or entitle the master to turn the servant away.—Service with the executor of the master for the remainder of a year, though in a different parish from that in which the hiring for a year was made, is good: for the death of the master does not dissolve the contract: and the servant, by such service, gains a settlement in the second parish.

Of absence from service:—The year's service must be performed; and therefore, if the servant voluntarily and without sufficient cause go away, or absent himself from the service, at any period previous to the expiration of the year,* this absence operates as a dissolution of the contract; and this, though done by collusion between the master and servant, for the purpose of avoiding a settlement; if a discharge is procured under the order of a Justice, and no actual fraud be positively found:—So also, an absence in the servant, arising from his criminal conduct, or even though involuntary on his part, will, under certain circumstances, prevent a settlement: thus, where a maid servant served till within three weeks of the end of the year, when her master discovering her to be with child, turned her away, and paid her her year's wages, and half a crown over; it was held an insufficient service, and no settlement gained under it; for this was a good cause to discharge her: So, where a man servant is turned away by his master before the expiration of the year, on the fact of his being the reputed father of a bastard child, he thereby loses his settlement; for the being taken into custody, and detained for this offence, renders him incapable to perform his service, and gives the master a right to discharge him.

The contract, if once dissolved by any species of absence on the part of the servant, cannot be set up again or renewed between the parties by the return of the servant, and subsequent agreement; but an absence created by the default, or fraudulent contrivance, of the master, shall not impede a settlement; as if he turn a servant away or remove him, on his falling sick; or he goes away on being disabled by accident, though he be thereby prevented from returning to his service during the remainder of the year: So also, an absence procured by the fraud of others will not prevent the party from a settlement; as where the parish officers give a servant money to leave the parish, in order to prevent his becoming chargeable when the year expires; or if the servant, before the year expires, declare to his master that he does not wish to be settled in that parish, and goes away with his master's consent, merely to avoid the gaining of a settlement: An express, or even an implied consent of the master to the absence of the servant, will prevent such absence from dissolving the contract; and the taking the servant again into his service, during the year, is evidence of his implied consent to such absence. Thus, where a man, hired from Martinmas to Martinmas, for a year, about the middle of the year absented himself from his master's service, without his consent, for above three weeks together, but, on the demand of his master, returned, and served out the remainder of the year; it was held, that the absence of the servant was purged by the master's receiving him again: So also, where the servant served till within three weeks of the end of the year, when he asked his master leave to go to the herring fishery, and his master consented he should go, if he would get a man to do the work in the mean time, to his master's liking, which he did, and then received part of his his wages, and went away, and returned after the year expired, and received the residue; this was held an absence with the master's consent, and therefore a good service: So also, on a hiring from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, if the servant tell his master, at the time of hiring, that he cannot come till the day after Michaelmas, and the master says he will shift till that time; this is a permission of absence till the time, and will gain a settlement, although the servant quit his service the day before the ensuing Michaelmas-day, if he so quit by the leave of his master; and where the dispensation of service, at the end of the year, is bonâ fide, the absence does not dissolve the contract, though a new service is entered on before the first year actually expires; and indeed, absence with consent is always good, unless where, as has been before observed, it is an exception in the original contract of hiring.

9. If any person shall be bound an apprentice by indenture, and inhabit in any town or parish, such binding and inhabitation shall be adjudged a good settlement. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. § 8.

Certificate persons, under stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 11, cannot gain a settlement by apprenticeship. And by stat. 12 Ann. c. 18. § 2, Apprentices to any person, residing in any parish under a certificate, and who shall not have gained a legal settlement, shall not gain any settlement in such parish, by reason of such apprenticeship or binding: But an apprentice to a certificate-man may gain a settlement by serving him in another parish, or even in the certified parish, if his master purchase an estate there; or if he serves 40 days before the master is certificated; or if the master is certificated to another parish, and the apprentice serves the last 40 days in the parish first certified.

No person, bound apprentice by any deed, writing, or contract not indented, being first legally stamped, shall be liable to be removed from any parish, &c. where he shall have been so bound an apprentice, and has resided 40 days, on account of such deed, writing, or contract not being indented only. Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 11.

An apprentice, by being bound and inhabiting in the parish where his master lives, or where his servitude is performed under the indenture, thereby gains a settlement, although it be to a master who has no right to take an apprentice; and although the apprentice, at the time he binds himself, is an infant; and though the binding is for a less term than seven years, if not avoided, on this account, by the parties themselves during the time: So also, although the apprentice-fee is not inserted in the indentures, pursuant to stat. 8 Ann. c. 9. § 39: or though the indenture, or its counterpart, is not executed by the master, or the apprentice: or although the master be an infant. But there must be a binding as an apprentice, either by indenture or by deed properly stamped; and if the indentures are absolutely void, he cannot gain a settlement as a servant, by his servitude under them: So also, where a contract or agreement was made to serve for [illegible] years, it was held not to amount to a sufficient binding as an apprentice, for a hiring as a servant, and an agreement to bind as an apprentice, are distinct and independent contracts, and never can be converted one into another. Thus, where a written agreement was made between the parents of a boy and his intended master, to bind him apprentice for seven years; but no indenture of apprenticeship was executed, pursuant to the agreement; the Court held, that although an apprenticeship was intended between the parties, yet he could not gain a settlement as a hired servant, by serving under this agreement as an apprentice, nor could he gain a settlement as an apprentice, because no indenture of apprenticeship was executed.

There must also be a residence of 40 days under the indenture, to give a settlement to an apprentice; but the 40 days may be at different times; and though, in the interval of these times, the apprentice gain a new settlement, yet they will connect so as to form a 40 days' residence under the indenture, and give him a settlement in the parish where he lodges the last night, although the master himself has no settlement in the parish. This species of settlement arises from the binding and inhabiting, and not, as in the case of a servant, from hiring and service; and, therefore, the apprentice gains his settlement in that place where he inhabits, and not where his service is performed: therefore, an apprentice who serves his master in one parish, and boards and lodges with his father in another, although such board and lodging is paid for by the master pursuant to a covenant in the indenture, does not gain a settlement in the master's parish: So also, where a boy was bound apprentice to a mariner, and served his master in the day-time for a quarter of a year at his house on shore, but lay every night on board his master's ship at her moorings in the Thames; it was held, that he gained no lodging in the master's parish on shore; although, if it had appeared, that he slept on board in his master's service, he might thereby have gained a settlement in the parish within which the ship lay; for although the service relates to one place and the inhabitancy is in another, yet that is sufficient: and therefore, an apprentice to a Captain of a ship, who served and lodged the last 40 days on board the ship, while lying in the harbour, gained a settlement in the parish within which the harbour lay; the said harbour being considered by the Captain and Sailors as the proper home of the ship. So also, where an apprentice married during his apprenticeship, and served his master by day in one parish, and slept with his wife and family in a different parish, he gained a settlement in the parish where he slept; for that was the parish of his habitation: So, where a boy was bound an apprentice for three years, and after a service of more than 40 days with his master, his master died, and he, with the consent of his mistress, and before administration taken out, went from his master's house to his father's, there being no work for him to do, and continued with his father till his time expired; yet it was held, that he gained a settlement in the master's parish: So, where an apprentice, after a residence with his master of forty days, fell sick, and, on account thereof, went home into a different parish with his master's consent, and remained ill until his time expired, he gained a settlement in the master's parish.

An apprentice, while the indentures subsist, is not sui juris, and therefore cannot serve another person without his master's consent: but if the original master consent, such service is a service under the indenture, and he gains a settlement in the parish where he lives with such second master; although the hiring out by the first to the second master is by parol, or the agreement be made by the widow of the first master before administration taken out. As to what shall be considered as a consent on the part of the first master, it must always depend on the particular circumstances of each case. For further matter relating to parish apprentices, see further this Dict. title Apprentice, 1, 2.

10. By the Common Law, founded on Magna Charta, no person can be removed from his own landed estate, however inconsiderable its value may be; and this Law still continues, provided such estate come to him by operation of Law: but by stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 5, it is enacted, that "no person shall acquire any settlement, in any parish or place, for or by virtue of any purchase of any estate or interest in such parish or place, where the consideration for such purchase doth not amount to the sum of 30*l.* bona fide paid, for any longer or further time than such person shall inhabit such estate."

An estate by operation of Law is, that estate which the party gains without any act of his own. Thus, a husband may gain a settlement by residing on an estate vested in trustees for the [illegible] use of his wife, or on an estate to be purchased [illegible] previous to the marriage, though of the value of less than 30*l.* [illegible] the husband of an administratrix, who is entitled as a trustee to a lease for years, has the [illegible] estate by operation of Law [illegible] a residence thereon for 40 days will [illegible] a settlement: but it seems, that the 40 days' [illegible] ought to be subsequent to his obtaining letters of administration; for it hath been adjudged, that [illegible] next of kin, who, after his father's death, lives [illegible] during the remainder of the [illegible] tion until [illegible] by his residence [illegible] a [illegible] entitled [illegible] use, [illegible] by [illegible] without [illegible] dence of 40 days [illegible] a settlement; and therefore [illegible] tees to be sold to pay debts, and [illegible] divide the surplus, if any, between A., B., and C., [illegible] by operation of Law, as will gain a [illegible] a person, entitled as executor to the [illegible] of a term of 99 years, of a [illegible] gains a settlement by residing on such estate 40 [illegible] So also, where a man built a cottage upon [illegible] lands of a nobleman, and lived on it and [illegible] more than 20 years, and it descended to his daughter: it was held, that the daughter, or, if married, her husband, gained a settlement by a residence of 40 days upon this estate: for although her father had not originally any right to the land on which the cottage was built, yet the [illegible] having been permitted so many years, and a descent [illegible], the right of entry on the land is taken away; and having thereby gained the right of possession, it is sufficient to render her irremoveable: and it makes no difference, though the possession for more than 20 years was not an adverse possession; and even although the ground and cottage was originally obtained by fraud. An estate in fee, belonging to a married woman, and enjoyed by her husband as tenant by the curtesy, will, after his death, give his son and heir a settlement, although under the value of 10*l.* a year: So, the widow of a man, who dies seized of a house, gains a settlement by residence therein for 40 days in right of her dower; but this species of estate will not give a settlement to the widow, where the husband was certificated; nor can she communicate a settlement thereby to any future husband, unless her dower be assigned. A conveyance from a father to his daughter, in consideration of natural love and affection, of the residue of a term determinable upon lives, is an estate by operation of Law; and a residence thereon, of 40 days, will give such daughter a settlement, although the original consideration paid for such estate, by the father, was only 10*s.* So also, a conveyance after marriage, by the wife's father to the husband only, if it appear to be grounded on natural affection, and intended for the use both of husband and wife, is an estate by operation of Law, which will give a settlement, though under the value, of 30*l.* and à fortiori, an estate of whatever value, conveyed from a father to his son, in consideration of natural affection, although it is also expressed to be in consideration of 10*l.* paid by the son to the father: So also, where a woman, on her marriage with the copyholder of a manor, where the widows are entitled to free bench, gave a bond, that the son of her intended husband, by a former wife, should have possession of part of the copyhold estate after the death of her husband, on condition of his repairing the part of the house reserved for her, and, after the death of her husband, delivered up the possession to the son, according to the bond; it was held, that the son gained a settlement by residing 40 days on this estate: So also, the surrender of an old lease, which had been many years in the family, and the taking a new one, is an estate by operation of Law: So also, a married daughter, who resides with her family on the estate of her mother, for 40 days after her mother's death, gains a settlement, although the estate was devised to the mother only during her life, and then to be sold for the benefit of her children. But residence on leasehold premises, determinable on the death of the mother, and from the profits of which the daughter is entitled to an annuity, will not gain her a settlement; neither can a remainder-man gain a settlement by residing on the estate during the life of the tenant for life; nor a mortgagor, who, after the mortgagee has recovered possession in ejectment, is permitted to reside thereon for a particular purpose; for he is not in possession as mortgagor; nor a man who, having conveyed over his estate in trust for the benefit of his creditors, afterwards gets fraudulently into possession; nor can a wife, in any case, gain a settlement in her own right by residing, either on her own estate, or the estate of her husband, during his life.

An estate by purchase is, in contemplation of Law, that estate which a man acquires by his own act and agreement; and it has been held, that a copyhold estate, surrendered by a father to his son, and to which the son is admitted, is an estate acquired by purchase, within the meaning of the statute 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. § 5; and therefore, will not gain a settlement by a residence thereon of 40 days, unless it be of the value of 30*l.* So also, is a grant of a copyhold, with a fine, heriot, and rent.

As to what purchase shall be considered as amounting to the value of 30*l.* it has been held, that an acre of land purchased for 25*l.* on which the purchaser erects a tenement, and makes other improvements, so as so to enable him to sell the whole for more than 30*l.* is an estate of sufficient value: So also, a lease of 50 years of a cottage worth 5*l.* a year, at sixpence a year rent, and which, after 20 years, sold for 30*l.* is an estate of sufficient value: So also, where a man purchased a house and curtilage for 39*l.* but paid only 9*l.* the remainder being paid for him by a friend, to whom he mortgaged the premises as a security, and who, after the expiration of four years, entered under his mortgage and turned out the purchaser; this was held an estate of sufficient value: So also, the mortgagee of a term for 15*l.* to whom 30*s.* were due, and 18*l.* 10*s.* more by bond and simple contract, who, on the death of the mortgagor, takes out administration as a principal creditor, thereby acquires an estate of sufficient value to gain a settlement: Parol evidence may be given of the value, though the consideration is expressed in the deed

The residence must be in the parish, but need not be on the estate; nor need the 40 days be all at one time, although the estate is held in common between the pauper, his mother, and his sisters.

V. Any person may go into any parish to work in time of harvest, or at any other time, so that he carry with him a Certificate from the Minister of the parish, and one of the Churchwardens, and one of the Overseers, that he hath a dwelling, and hath left his family, and is declared an inhabitant there; and such certificate-person shall not gain a settlement in the parish in which he goes to work. Stat. 13 & 14 C. 2. c. 12. § 3.

If any person whatever shall come into any parish to inhabit, and shall bring and deliver to the Churchwardens or Overseers a Certificate, under the hands and seals of the Churchwardens and Overseers of any other parish, or the major part of them, or under the hands and seals of the Overseers only of any place where there are no Churchwardens, to be attested respectively by two or more credible witnesses, thereby owning and acknowledging the person or persons, mentioned in the said certificate, to be inhabitants legally settled in that parish; every such certificate, having been allowed of and subscribed by two or more Justices of the Peace within the parish or place from whence any such certificate shall come, shall oblige the said parish or place to receive and provide for the person mentioned in the said certificate, together with his or her family, as inhabitants of that parish; whenever he, she, or they shall happen to become chargeable to, or be forced to ask relief of, the parish, to which such certificate was given: And then, and not before, it shall be lawful for any such person, and his or her children, though born in that parish, (see ante IV. 1.) not having otherwise acquired a legal settlement there, to be removed, conveyed, and settled in the parish or place, from whence such certificate was brought. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30.

No person whatever, who shall come into any parish by such certificate, shall gain any settlement therein, unless he shall take a lease of a tenement of the value of 10*l.*; (see ante IV. 6.) or shall execute some annual office, being legally placed therein. See ante IV. 7.—See also ante IV. 8 & 9.

The Witnesses, who attest the execution of such certificates, or one of them, shall make oath before the Justices who allow the same, that he saw the Parish-Officers sign and seal the certificate, and that the names of the Witnesses, attesting the same, are of their own proper hand-writing; and the said Justices shall also certify, that such oath was made before them; and then such certificate shall be taken to be fully proved; and shall be evidence without further proof. Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 29. § 8.—The Overseers, or other persons removing back any certificated persons, shall be reimbursed such reasonable charges as they may have been put to, in maintaining and removing such persons, by the Parish Officers of the parish or place to which they are removed; the said charges being first ascertained by a Justice of the Peace of the county or place to which such removal shall be made; to be levied by distress, &c. § 9.

The Parish Officers cannot be compelled to grant a certificate; and, if granted, it is not binding, unless signed by the majority of them; and parol evidence may be given, that those who signed were not Officers of the parish; but if signed by the majority, a mistake in its direction is not material. And if a certificate be lost, and the Parish Officers refuse to grant another, yet the pauper cannot, on that account, be removed, though actually chargeable. The Justices may attest a certificate as witnesses, as well as allow it as Justices; and if it appear to have been legally allowed, it shall be intended to have been well attested; but unless the allowance, which is discretionary in the Justices, be signed, the certificate is invalid: if, however, a certificate be above 30 years old, the allowance thereof, written in the margin and signed, is sufficient, although there is no certificate of one of the witnesses; and one of the witnesses may attest the signing of the other.

A Certificate, after its delivery to the Parish Officers as the statute requires, virtually includes all the legitimate children of the persons certified, who are born while the certificate continues in force; and if it promise to provide for the parties as man and wife, the certifying parish cannot afterwards controvert the fact of their marriage. See ante IV. 3. So, if it be given to a woman, stating, that she is unmarried and with child, and promise to provide for the child she then goes with, they cannot object that such child is not settled in their parish because born a bastard in another. See ante IV. 1.—Persons residing under a certificate cannot be removed until some one or more of them become actually chargeable; and therefore, that one of the family is likely to become chargeable is no cause of removing them; and it is only the individual person who receives relief that shall be removed; but relief afforded by a parishioner is not sufficient, although he is reimbursed by the Parish Officers.

A Certificate is only conclusive upon the parish granting it, with respect to that parish to which it is granted, although it is primâ facie evidence as to others; and it is only conclusive as between them as to the facts stated in it.

A Certificate is discharged by the removal of the pauper to the parish that gave the certificate; or by the pauper's voluntary return to the certifying parish; or by quitting the parish to which he was certified, if it appear that he meant to abandon the certificate; or by an order of removal from a third parish to the certifying parish; or by a second certificate: The Court, however, will not presume a certificate to be discharged; and, therefore, a clear ground of discharge must be shewn.

VI. It

VI. It has already been been noticed, (see ante IV. 4;) that by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. § 1, upon complaint by the Churchwardens and Overseers to one Justice within 40 days, of a person coming to reside in a tenement under 10*l.* a year, any two Justices of the division might, on his being likely to become chargeable to the parish, remove such person to the place of his last legal settlement. And, by § 3, of the said act, if such person refused to go, or returned back, when sent, he might be committed to the House of Correction as a vagabond; and if the Parish Officers of his own parish refused to receive him, they might be indicted for their default.

This provision had long been considered as equally cruel and impolitic: see 1 Comm. c. 9, and the Notes there: and has at length been remedied by the interference of the Legislature.

By stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 101, the first (and consequently the third) section of this stat. 13 & 14 C. 2, is repealed; and the reason assigned in the preamble of the stat. 35 Geo. 3, is, that, "many industrious poor persons chargeable to the parish, &c. where they live, merely from want of work there, would, in any other place where sufficient employment is to be had, maintain themselves and families, without being burdensome to any parish; and that such poor persons are, for the most part, compelled to live in their own parish, and not permitted to inhabit elsewhere, under pretence that they are likely to become chargeable to the parish where they go for employment; although their labour might, in many instances, be very beneficial to such parish."—This preamble also states, that the remedy intended to be applied by the granting of certificates, under stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30, (see ante V,) hath been found very ineffectual:—The statute then enacts, "That no poor person shall, in future, be removed, by virtue of any order of removal, from the parish or place where such poor person shall be inhabiting, to their last settlement, until such person shall have become actually chargeable to the parish or place in which they shall inhabit; when they may be removed by two Justices; in the same manner, and subject to the same appeal, and with the same powers, as might have been formerly done, with respect to persons likely to become chargeable."

This provision had been previously made as to members of Friendly Societies, (see that title,) by stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 54.

Persons convicted of larceny or other felony, rogues, vagabonds, idle and disorderly persons, and reputed thieves; as also unmarried women with child; shall be considered as actually chargeable. Stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 101. § 5, 6.

By the same statute, Justices are empowered to suspend the removal of sick persons; the charges incurred by such suspension to be born by the parish to which they are removable. § 2.—And any Bastard, born during such suspension, on behalf of its mother, shall belong to the mother's settlement. § 3. See ante IV. 1, 2.

Officers refusing to receive a pauper, removed by warrant of two Justices, shall forfeit 5*l.* to the use of the Poor; to be levied by distress. Stat. 3 W. 3. c. 11. § 10.

Persons, who shall unlawfully return to the parish from whence they are legally removed, shall be deemed idle and disorderly persons, and may be committed to the House of Correction for one month. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5.

It seems, that nearly all the determinations, as to orders for removal of persons likely to become chargeable, now apply, mutatis mutandis, to the removal of those who are actually so.

The first step which the Parish Officers are to take, in order to procure the removal of a pauper, chargeable to their parish, is, to make a Complaint to a Justice of the Peace; for the complaint is the foundation of the Justice's jurisdiction. The order of removal, therefore, must state not only a complaint, but that it is upon complaint of the Parish Officers, and shew in certain the persons, with their names, who are become chargeable; and the order cannot remove more persons than the Officers have complained of.

The next proceeding is The Examination; for this order must state, that the removal was made, on due examination; it need not, however, state, that the examination was on oath; but ought to shew that the pauper was summoned and heard; but even this is not, in all cases, absolutely necessary. The examination must be taken before two Justices, and it must be by the same two Justices who signed the order; and therefore, an order stating it, in the alternative, to have been taken "before us or one of us," is bad. The two Justices also must sign the order in the presence of each other; and the Justices of one county cannot make an order of removal on an examination taken and transmitted to them by Justices of another county, although such examination be verified by oath. An order signed by two Justices separately, and in different counties, is not void, but only voidable on appeal.

The next proceeding is the Adjudication; for an order of removal cannot be good, if it omit to adjudge that the persons complained of actually became chargeable to the parish complaining, and that they are last legally settled in the parish to which they are intended to be removed. An order, removing nurse children to their derivative settlement, is good, without stating the death of the parent, or adjudging the place, to which they are removed, to be the settlement of their parents. The order must state, that the Justices are Justices of the Peace for, and not in, the county; but it need not state that they were of the division where the pauper lives; and it is enough to name the county in the margin of the order; for the margin of an order of removal is part of the order itself: if, however, two counties are named, and it state them to be Justices of the Counties aforesaid, it is bad.

The power given to a Justice, on a pauper's returning to the parish from whence he was removed, cannot be exercised, unless a previous charge be made on oath against the pauper who returns; and it seems that, previous to the repeal of stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12, this offence must have been proceeded against, under stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5, only; for an order of removal does nothing more than prevent the party thereby removed from returning in a state of vagrancy.

If an order of removal be made, and the parish, to which the pauper is thereby removed, neglect to appeal to the next General or Quarter Session, pursuant to stats. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12: 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. § 10, such order becomes conclusive, and no new settlement can can be gained but by some act subsequent to such removal; but it is only conclusive between those two parishes, and the persons who are mentioned in the order. To render an order thus final, for want of an appeal, it must not only be a legal order, but it must be subsisting; for if it be deserted or made to an improper place, the neglect to appeal will have no effect.

If an order of removal be appealed against, and reversed, two Justices may remove the pauper back to the parish from whence he was sent; but if the order be confirmed, it is then conclusive that the appellant parish is the place of the pauper's last legal settlement; and of course he cannot be removed to any other parish, on any settlement gained previous to the confirmation of the order. But if an order of removal be reversed on appeal, the respondent parish may remove the pauper to a third parish on a settlement gained previous to the former removal; for an order reversed is only conclusive as to the appellant parish; and a bad order reversed, not on the merits, but merely for want of form, is not conclusive on either parish.

POPE, Papa.] A term anciently applied to some clergymen in the Greek church; but by usage particularly appropriated in the Latin church to the Bishop of Rome, and who formerly had great authority in these kingdoms. As to the encroachments of the See of Rome, it is said to be the general opinion, that Christianity was first planted in this island by some of the Eastern church; which is very probable, from the ancient Britons observing Easter always on the fourteenth day of the month, according to the custom of the East: but the Saxons, being converted about the year 600, by persons sent from Rome, and wholly devoted to the interest thereof, it could not be expected that such an opportunity, of enlarging the jurisdiction of that See, should be wholly neglected; and yet there are few instances of the Papal power in England before the Norman conquest; though four or five persons were made Bishops by the Pope at the first conversion, and there was an instance or two of appeals to Rome, &c. But Pope Alexander II. having favoured and supported William the First, in his invasion of this kingdom, made that a handle for enlarging his encroachments; and, in this King's reign, began to send his legates hither. Ermenfroy, Bishop of Sion, was the first who had ever appeared with that character in any of the British Islands. And afterwards Paschal II. prevailed with Henry I. to give up the donation of bishopricks. In the reign of Stephen, the pontifical authority was permitted to make farther encroachments: appeals to the Pope, which had been always strictly prohibited, became now common in every ecclesiastical controversy. And in the reign of Hen. II. Pope Alexander III. exempted all clerks from the secular power; indeed, this King at first strenuously withstood those innovations; but on the death of Becket, who, for having violently opposed the King, was slain by some of his servants, the Pope got such an advantage over him, that he was never able to execute the Constitutions of Clarendon. And not long after this, by a general excommunication of the King and People, for several years, because they would not suffer an Archbishop to be imposed on them, John was reduced to such straits, that he surrendered his kingdoms to Pope Innocent III. to receive them again, and hold them of him under the rent of a thousand marks. And in the reign of Hen. III. partly from the profits of our best church benefices, which were generally given to Italians, and others residing at the Court of Rome, and partly from the taxes imposed by the Pope, there went yearly out of the kingdom seventy thousand pounds sterling; a great sum in those days: the nation, being thus burdened and under necessity, was obliged to provide for the prerogative of the Prince, and the liberties of the People, by many strict laws. And hence, in the reign of Edw. I. it was declared in Parliament, that the Pope's taking upon him to dispose of English benefices to aliens, was an encroachment not to be endured; and this was followed with the stat. 25 Ed. 3. st 6, called the Statute of Provisors, against Popish bulls, and disturbing any patron to present to a benefice, &c. See also the stats. 12 R. 2. c. 15: 16 R. 2. c. 5: 2 H. 4. c. 3, 4: 7 H. 4. c. 8: 3 H. 5. c. 4: 25 H. 8. c. 21: 28 H. 8 c. 16—The maintaining by writing, preaching, &c. the Pope's power here in England, is made a præmunire upon the first conviction; and High Treason on the second. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 1. In the construction of which statute, it has been held, that he who, knowing the contents of a Popish book, written beyond sea, brings it over, and secretly sells, or conveys it to a friend; or having read the book, or heard of its contents, doth after in discourse allow it to be good, &c. is in danger of the statute; but not he who, having heard thereof, buys and reads the same. Selden's Janus Anglor ;: Davis, 90, &c.: Dyer 282: 2 Inst. 580: See this Dictionary, titles Papists; Bull; Præmunire.

POPULAR ACTION, An action given by statute to any one who will sue for a penalty. See titles Action; Information; Limitation of Actions.

PORT, Portus.] A harbour or place of shelter, where ships arrive with their freight, and customs for goods are taken. The Ports in England are London, Ipswich, Yarmouth, Lynn, Boston, Hull, Newcastle, Berwick, Carlisle, Chester, Milford, Cardiff, Gloucester, Bristol, Bridgwater, Plymouth, Exeter, Poole, Southampton, Chichester, and Sandwich; all which are declared lawful Ports, & infra corpus comitatus: to these Ports there are certain members belonging, and a number of creeks, where commonly officers are placed, by way of prevention of frauds in the customs; but these are not lawful places of exportation or importation, without particular licence from the Port or Member under which they are placed. Lex Mercat. 132. See further, titles Harbours and Havens.

PORTER, In the circuit of Justices; An officer who carries a white rod before the Justices in eyre, so called à portando virgam. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 41. See Vergers. There is also a Porter bearing a verge before the Justices of either Bench, Cowell.

PORTER of the door in the Parliament-house. An officer belonging to that high and honourable Court, and enjoys privileges accordingly. Crom. Juris. 11.

PORTERAGE, A kind of duty paid at the Custom-house to those who attend the water-side, and belong to the package office; and these porters have tables set up ascertaining their dues for landing of strangers' goods, and for shipping out the same. Merch. Dict.

PORTGREVE, or PORTREVE, Portgreuius; Sax. portgerefa; urbis vel portûs præfectus.] A Magistrate in certain sea-coast towns; and as Camden, in his Britannia, says.

says, the Chief Magistrate of London was anciently so called, as appears by a charter of King William the Conqueror to the City.

Instead of the Portgreve, Richard the First ordained two bailiffs, but presently after him King John granted them a Mayor for their yearly Magistrate. See title London.

PORTION. That part of a person's estate which is given or left to a child.

If a term of years settled to raise a daughter's Portion is so short, that the ordinary profits of the land are not sufficient, the Court of Chancery may order timber to be felled, &c. to make up the money at the time appointed. Prec. Ch. 27.

A sale of lands has been also decreed, for payment of Portions devised to be paid at a certain time out of the rents and profits, where they were not judged sufficient for raising the money; although the land subject to the Portions was given to others in remainder. Ibid. 396. See Treat. of Equity, lib. 1. c. 6. § 18: lib. 2. c. 8. § 6, 7: Vin. Abr. title Portions: and this Dictionary, titles Marriage; Trustees; Uses; Will, &c.

PORTIONER, Portionarius.] Where a parsonage is served by different ministers alternately, the ministers are called Portioners; because they have but their Portion, or proportion, of the tithes or profits of the living: the term Portion is also applied to that allowance which a Vicar commonly has out of a rectory or impropriation. See stat. 27 H. 8. c. 28.

PORTMEN. The burgesses of Ipswich are so called. So also are the inhabitants of the Cinque Ports, according to Camden.

PORTMOTE, from portus & gemote, conventus.] A Court kept in haven-towns, or ports; and is called the Portmote Court. 43 Eliz. c. 15. The Portmote, or portmannimote, i. e. Portmen's Court, is said to be held not only in port towns, as generally rendered, but in inland towns—the word port in Saxon signifying the same with city.

PORTSALE, A public sale of goods to the highest bidder; or of fish presently on its arrival in the port or haven. See stat. antiq. 35 H. 8. c. 7.

PORTSOKA, or PORTSOKNE, The suburbs of a city, or any place within its jurisdiction; from the Saxon port, civitas, and soca, jurisdictio. Somner's Gavelkind. 135.---Hen. III. granted by charter to the City of London---Quietantiam murdri, &c. infra urbem & in Portsokne, viz. within the walls of the city, and the liberties without the walls. Placit. Temp. Ed. 1.

PORTUAS, mentioned in stat. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 10; and reckoned amongst books prohibited by that statute;] A breviary. Cowell. It is also, by some, called portuos or porthose.

POSITIVE PROOF; See title Evidence.

POSSE, An infinitive mood, used substantively, to signify a possibility; such a thing is in posse, that is, such a thing may possibly be; but, of a thing in being, we say it is in esse.

POSSE COMITATUS, The power of the County; according to Lambard, includes the aid and attendance of all knights, and other men above the age of fifteen, within the county; because all of that age are bound to have harness, by the statute of Winchester: but ecclesiastical persons, and such as labour under any infirmity, are not compellable to attend. Persons able to travel are required to be assistant in this service. It is used where a riot is committed, a possession is kept on a forcible entry, or any force or rescue made contrary to the commandment of the King's writ, or in opposition to the execution of justice. Stat 2 H. 5. c. 8.

But with respect to writs that issue, in the first instance, to arrest in civil suits, such as bailable latitat, bill of Middlesex, or capias, &c. the Sheriff is not bound to take the Posse Comitatus, to assist him in the execution of them. See title Escape. Though he may, if he pleases, on forcible resistance to the execution of the process. See 2 Inst. 193: 3 Inst. 161.

Sheriffs are to be assisting to Justices of Peace in suppressing riots, &c. and raise the Posse Comitatus, by charging any number of men to attend for that purpose, who may take with them such weapons as shall be necessary; and they may justify the beating, and even killing such rioters as resist, or refuse to surrender; and persons, refusing to assist herein, may be fined and imprisoned. See stats. 17 R. 2 c. 8: 13 Hen. 4. c. 7: 2 Hen 5. c. 8: Lamb. 313, 318: Cromp. 62: Dalt. c. 46: 2 Inst 193.

Justices of Peace, having a just cause to fear a violent resistance, may raise the Posse in order to remove a force, in making an entry into or detaining lands: and a Sheriff, if need be, may raise the power of the county to assist him in the execution of a precept of restitution; therefore, if he make a return thereto, that he could not make a restitution by reason of resistance, he shall be amerced. See titles Forcible Entry; Sheriff.

Also it is the duty of a Sheriff, or other minister of Justice, having the execution of the King's writs, and being resisted in endeavouring to execute the same, to raise such a power as may effectually enable them to quell such resistance; though it is said not to be lawful for them to raise a force for the execution of a civil process, unless they find resistance. 2 Inst. 193: 3 Inst. 161.

It is lawful for a Peace Officer, or a private person, to assemble a competent number of people, and sufficient power to suppress rebels, enemies, rioters; but there must be great caution, lest, under a pretence of keeping the peace, they cause a greater breach of it; and Sheriffs, &c. are punishable for using heedless violence, or alarming the country in these cases, without just grounds. See further, titles Sheriff; Riot; Contempt.

POSSESSIO FRATRIS, Where a man hath a son and a daughter by one venter, (i. e. wife,) and a son by another venter, and dies; if the first son enters and dies without issue, the daughter shall have the land, as heir to her brother; although the second son, by the second venter is heir, to the father. But if the eldest son dies without issue, not having made an actual entry and seisin, the younger brother by the second wife, as heir to the father, shall enjoy the estate; not the sister. Co. Litt. 11, 15.

Lands are settled on a man and the heirs of his body, and he hath issue a son and daughter by one woman, and a son by another, and dieth; and then the eldest son dies, before any entry made on the lands either by his own act, or by the possession of another; the younger brother shall inherit, he claiming as heir of the body of the father, and not generally, as heir to his brother; yet, if the eldest brother enter, and by his own act gained the possession; or if the lands were leased for years, or in hands of a guardian, there the possession of the lessee or guardian doth vest the fee in the elder brother, and then on his death the sister shall inherit, as heir to her brother, for there is Possessio Fratris 3 Rep 42 There can be no Possessio Fratris of a dignity; in such case the younger brother is haeres natus: Lord Grey, being created a Baron to him and his heirs, had issue a son and a daughter by one venter, and a son by another; and after his death, the elder being possessed of the barony, and dying without issue, it was adjudged, that the younger brother, and not the sister, should have it. Cro. Car. 437: See title Descent.

POSSESSION, Possessio, quasi pedis positio.] Is either actual, where a person actually enters into lands or tenements descended or conveyed to him: or, in Law, when lands, &c are descended to a man, and he hath not actually entered into them. So before, or till an office is found of lands escheated to the King by attainder, he hath only a Possession in Law. Bract. lib. 2. c. 17.

Possession, beyond the memory of man, establishes a right; but if by the knowledge of man, or proof of record, &c. the contrary is made out, though it exceeds the memory of man, this shall be construed within memory. Co. Litt. 115. A long Possession the Law favours, as an argument of right, although no deed can be shewn; rather than an ancient deed, without Possession. Co. Litt. 6. Continued quiet Possession is a violent presumption of a good title; and where two persons enter into and claim the same land, the Possession will always be adjudged in him who has right, &c. 2 Inst. 256, 323.

He who is out of Possession, if he brings his action, must make a good title: and to recover any thing from another, it is not sufficient to destroy the title of him in Possession; but you must prove your own better than his. Vaugh. 8, 58, 60.

In an action against a person for digging of coney-boroughs in a common, &c. it was held, that the action, being grounded on the Possession of the tenement, to which the common belonged, the plaintiff need not shew a title; and in this case the defendant may be a stranger; besides the title is not traversable, but ought to be given in evidence upon the trial of the issue, 3 Salk. 12.

A defendant in trespass, &c. for taking cattle damage feasant, has been allowed to justify the taking on his Possession, without shewing his title; the matter of justification being collateral to the title of the land, 2 Mod. 70: 3 Salk. 220. See title Trespass.

In replevin, if defendant had the Possession, it is a good bar against the plaintiff if he has no title; but there cannot be a return, unless he shews a property in the goods. See title Replevin.

Action of the case lies for shooting at and frighting away ducks from a decoy pond, which is in the plaintiff's Possession, without shewing that he had any property in them. 3 Salk, 9.

A man on a lease and release of lands, &c. is in Possession to all intents, except bringing trespass, which cannot be without actual entry, pedis positio. 2 Lil. Abr. [illegible]. And to make Possession good on entry, the former possessor and his servants, &c. are to be removed from the land; and if Possession be lost by entry of another, it must be regained by re-entry. Hil. Pasch. 1650.

A person in Possession may bring an action, for loss of his shade, shelter, fruit, when trees are injured; and he in reversion for spoiling the trees. 3 Lev. 209 One, in defence of his lawful Possession, may assemble his friends to resist those who threaten to make an unlawful entry into a house, &c. 5 Rep. 91. There is an unity of Possession, when by purchase the seigniory and tenancy become in one man's Possession. Kitch 134. See 16 Vin. Abr. 454, 460: 3 Comm c. 10; and this Dictionary, titles Ejectment; Entry; Writ of Right; and other appropriate titles.

The Possession of lands in fee simple uninterruptedly for 60 years, is at present a sufficient title against all the world: and cannot be impeached by any dormant claim whatsoever. 3 Comm. c 10. p. 196. This being the term of limitation in a writ of right. See this Dictionary, title Limitation of Actions II. 1.

Mr. Christian, apparently not adverting correctly to the terms of the above sentence of Blackstone, says, the position there laid down is far from being universally true. His subsequent explanation is correct, but does not impeach the rule stated by the Learned Commentator. An uninterrupted Possession for 60 years, (says Mr. C.) will not create a title, where the claimant or demandant had no right to enter within that time; as where an estate in tail, for life, or for years, continues above 60 years, still the reversioner may enter and recover the estate, the Possession must be adverse: and Coke says, it has been resolved, that though a man has been out of Possession of land for 60 years; yet, if his entry is not tolled, he may enter and bring any action of his own Possession; and if his entry be congeable, and he enter, he may have an action of his own Possession. 4 Co. 11. b.

POSSIBILITAS, Is taken from an act wilfully done, and Impossibilitas for a thing done against our will. Leg. Alfred. cap. 38: Ll. Canuti, c. 66: Leg. Sax Edw. senior. c. 88.

POSSIBILITY, Is defined to be an uncertain thing, which may or may not happen. 2 Lil. Abr. 336. And it is either near or remote; as for instance: Where an estate is limited to one, after the death of another, this is a near Possibility; but that one man shall be married to a woman, and then that she shall die, and he be married to another; this is a remote or extraordinary Possibility: And the Law doth not regard a remote Possibility, that is never like to be. 15 H. 7. 10: Hardr. 417: 2 Rep. 50. At Common Law, a Possibility could not be granted or assigned; but where such Possibilities are real interest, they will be attended to accordingly in equity: Thus, a covenant for a valuable consideration, to settle or convey a Possibility, when it arises, will be enforced. See Treat. Eq. 202: and this Dictionary, titles Assignment; Release.

If husband and wife are tenants in special tail, and the husband only levies a fine of the lands, &c. the wife's estate is turned into a Possibility, and only reducible by entry, if she survive. Hob. 257.

Where a lease is made for life, the remainder to the right heirs of J. S. this is good; for by common Possibility J. S. may die during the life of tenant for life. 2 H. 7. 13: 3 Shep. Abr. 56.

A man made a lease to his brother for life, and that if he married, and his wife should survive, then she should have it for her life; the lessee, before he married, made a feoffment of the lands to another, and afterwards the lessor lessor levied a fine to him; then the lessee married, and died, and his wife survived: And it was held, that the remainder to the wife for life was gone by this feoffment, and the Possibility of her having it was included in the fine, which was likewise barred. Moor 554. See title Fine of Lands.

A testator, possessed of a lease for years, devised the profits thereof to W. R. for life, remainder to another; and afterwards the devisee for life entered with the assent of the executor, and then he in remainder for life assigned all his interest to another, and after the devisee for life died; it was resolved, that this assignment was void, because, whilst the devisee for life was living, he in remainder had only a Possibility to have the term; for the devisee for life had an interest in it sub modo, and might have survived the whole term. 4 Rep. 64.

The devise of the Possibility of a term is void; as where a term is devised to A for life, remainder to B., and B. devises this remainder to C. and dies; and then A. dies; this devise to C. is void, and the executors of B. shall have it. 3 Lev. 427. See titles Will; Remainder.

A Possibility founded on a trust, differs from a mere Possibility; the first may be devised, but the other cannot. Moor 808.

POST, A swift or speedy messenger to carry letters.

POST-OFFICE.—The Office for the conveyance of letters through the Kingdom, as well from foreign parts, as from place to place within Great Britain.—This was attempted by the Parliament in 1643; an office was erected first in 1657, during the Usurpation, and after the Restoration established by stat. 12. Car. 2. c. 35. See 1 Comm. 321.

The rates of letters have been from time to time altered, and some further regulations added by stats. 9 An. c. 10: 6 Geo. 1. c. 21: 26 Geo. 2. c. 13: 5 Geo. 3. c. 25: 7 Geo. 3. c. 50: and 28 Geo. 3. c. 9; and penalties are imposed in order to confine the carriage of letters to the public office only; except in some few cases.

The privilege of letters coming free of postage to and from Members of Parliament was claimed by the House of Commons in 1660, but dropped, on a private assurance that it should be allowed—And accordingly a warrant used to be issued to the Postmaster-General to allow the same; till at length it was expresly confirmed by stat. 4 Geo. 3. c. 24; which, and stats. 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 37: 35 Geo. 3. c. 53, add many new regulations; rendered necessary by the great abuses crept into the practice of franking.

The preamble of the ordinance made in 1657, states that the establishing one General Post-Office, besides the benefit to commerce, and the convenience of conveying public despatches, "will be the best means to discover and prevent many dangerous and wicked designs against the Commonwealth." The policy of having the correspondence of the Kingdom under the inspection of Government is still continued; for by a warrant from one of the Principal Secretaries of State, letters may be detained and opened. 1 Comm. 322. edit. 1793, n. 28. But by stat. 9 Ann. c. 10, § 40, if any person shall, without such authority, wilfully detain or open any letter or packet delivered to the Post-Office, he shall forfeit 20*l.* and be incapable of future employment in the Post-Office.—It has been decided, that no person is subject to this penalty but those who are employed in the Post-Office. 5 Term. Rep. 101. And see stat. 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 37. § 4, 5, as to opening foreign letters suspected to contain prohibited goods; and stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 62, enabling the Postmaster-General to open and return certain letters to Holland; when the communication with that country was stopped, on account of the Revolution which had taken place there by the arts and intrigues of the French.

It was determined so long ago as 13 Will. 3. in the case of Lane v. Cotton, by three Judges of the Court of K. B. though contrary to Lord C. J. Holt's opinion, that no action could be maintained against the Postmaster-General, for the loss of bills or articles sent in letters by the Post. 1 Ld. Raym. 646: 1 Com. Rep. 100. A similar action was brought against Lord Le Despencer, and Mr. Carteret Postmaster-General in 1778, to recover a bank note of 100*l.* which had been sent by the Post and was lost. Lord Mansfield delivered the opinion of the Court, that there was no resemblance, or analogy, between the Postmasters and a common Carrier; and that no action for any loss in the Post-Office could be brought against any person, except him, by whose actual negligence the loss accrued. Cowp. 754—765. For this reason, it is recommended by the Secretary of the Post-Office, to cut bank notes, and to send one half at a time. This is the only safe method, of sending bank notes; as the Bank would never pay the holder of that half which had been fraudulently obtained.

Sir Wm. Jones in his excellent Treatise on the Law of Bailments, published in 1781, does not advert to the case in Cowper, and expresses his coincidence in opinion with Lord C. J. Holt.

Many attempts have been made by Postmasters in country towns, to charge ½*d.* and 1*d.* a letter on delivery, at the houses in the town, above the Parliamentary rates; under the pretence, that they were not obliged to carry the letters out of the Office gratis. But it has been repeatedly decided, that such a demand is illegal, and that they are bound to deliver the letters to the inhabitants, within the usual and established limits of the town, without any addition to the rate of postage. 5 Burr. 2709: 2 Rol. Rep. 906: Cowp. 182.

PENNY-POST. Letters or parcels, not exceeding sixteen ounces weight, or ten pounds value, are conveyed daily by the Penny-post, to and from all places within the Bills of Mortality, and ten miles (or more, by stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 17,) distance from the General Post-Office, for 1*d.* each packet, letter, &c. See stat. 9 Ann. c. 10. Several general offices are kept at convenient distances, to receive Penny-post letters every day, Sundays excepted: Also letters that come from all parts by the General Post, directed to persons in any country towns to which the Penny-post goes, are delivered the same day they come to London: And the answers are carried every post night to the General Post Office in Lombard-street, being left at the receiving houses.

Penny-post men, carrying letters out of the Cities of London and Westminster, or Borough of Southwark, and the suburbs thereof, may demand and take 1*d.* at delivery for every letter, above the penny paid on putting the letters into the Penny-post Office. See stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 17, which enlarges the limits of the Penny-post; and contains several other beneficial regulations.

POST.

POST, writ of entry in. A writ given by the statute of Marlbridge, (52 Hen. 3.) c. 30; which provides, that when the number of alienations or descents exceed the usual degrees, a new writ shall be allowed, without any mention of degrees at all. And accordingly, this writ has been framed, which only alleges the injury of the wrong-doer, without deducing all the intermediate titles from him to the tenant: stating it in this manner; that the tenant had no legal entry unless after, or subsequent to, the ouster or injury done by the original dispossessor; "non habuit ingressum nisi post intrusionem quam Gulielmus in illud fecit;" 3 Comm. 182. and see this Dictionary title Entry.

POST CONQUESTUM, after the Conquest: Words inserted in the King's title, by King Edw. I. and constantly used in the time of Edw. III. Claus. 1 Edw. 3. indorf. m. 33.

POST DIEM, Where a writ is returned after the day assigned, the custos brevium hath a fee of 4*d.* whereas he hath nothing if it be returned at the day.

POST-DISSEISIN, Is a writ that lies for him who, having recovered lands or tenements by a force of novel disseisin is again disseised by the former desseisor. See title Assise of Novel Disseisin.

POSTEA, The return of the Judge, before whom a cause was tried, after a verdict, of what was done in the cause; and is endorsed on the back of the Nisi Prius record: It began thus in Latin, Postea, die & loco, &c. in English, Afterwards (i. e. after joining issue and awarding the trial), on the day named, the plaintiff and defendant appear at the place of trial, &c. See titles Pleading; Record; Practice; Trial.

POSTERIORITY, Posterioritas.] Signifies the being or coming after, and is a word of comparison and relation in tenures, the correlative whereof is Priority: As a man holding lands or tenements of two lords, holds of his ancienter lord by priority, and of his latter lord by Posteriority. Staundf. Prærog. 10, 11: 2 Inst. 392. See titles Priority; Tenure.

POST-FINE, A duty to the King for a fine formerly acknowledged in his Court, paid by the cognisee after the fine is fully passed. See title Fine of Lands, I.

POST-HORSES, See titles Horses, Taxes.

POSTHUMOUS Child, A child born after his father's death, &c. By stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 16, Posthumous children are enabled to take estates by remainder, in settlements, in the same manner as if born in their father's lifetime, though no estate be limited to trustees to preserve them till they come in esse. See titles Infant, II; Remainder.

POST-MAN, See Pre-audience.

POST-NATUS, The second son, or one born afterwards; often mentioned in Bracton, Glanvile, Fleta, and other ancient writers. In another sense it is distinguished from ante natus in the case of aliens, becoming subjects; and as to Post-nati and ante nati, it was solemnly adjudged, that those who after the descent of the Crown of England to King James I. were born in Scotland, were not aliens here in England: But the ante-nati, or those born in Scotland before the descent, were aliens here, in respect of the time of their birth. Calvin's case. Children of persons attainted of Treason, born after the King's pardon, may inherit lands; though not those born before, &c. Co. Lit. 391. See this Dictionary, titles Descent, I. VI; Alien; Attainder, &c.

POST-TERMINUM, The return of a writ, not only after the return thereof, but after the term; on which the custos brevium takes a fee. It is also used for the fee so taken.

POSTULATION, Postulatio.] A petition. Formerly when a Bishop was translated from one bishopric to another, he was not elected to the new see; for the Canon Law is electus non potest elegi; and the pretence was, that he was married to the first church, which marriage could not be dissolved but by the Pope; thereupon, he was petitioned, and consenting to the petition, the Bishop was translated, and this was said to be by Postulation: But this was restrained by stat. 16 R. 2. c. 5. See titles Pope; Papists; Bishops.

Postulations were made on the unanimous voting any person to a dignity or office; of which he was not capable by the ordinary canons or statutes, without special dispensation: And by the ancient customs, an election could be made by a majority of votes; but a Postulation must have been nemine contradicente.

POUND, Parcus.] Generally any place inclosed, to keep in beasts; but especially a place of strength to keep cattle which are distrained, or put in for any trespass done by them, until they are replevied or redeemed. In this signification, it is called Pound overt and Pound covert; a Pound overt is an open Pound, usually built on the lord's waste, and which he provides for the use of himself and tenants, and is also called the lord's or the common Pound; and a backside, yard, &c. whereto the owner of beasts impounded may come to give them meat, without offence, is a Pound overt: A Pound covert is a close place, which the owner of the cattle cannot come to, without giving offence; such as a house, &c. Kitch. 144: Terms de Ley: Co. Lit. 96.

There is a difference between a common Pound, an open Pound, and a close Pound, as to cattle impounded: For where cattle are kept in a common Pound, no notice is necessary to the owner to feed them; but if they are put into any other open place, notice is to be given; and he is then also bound to feed them; and if beasts are impounded in a Pound close, as in part of the distrainer's house, stable, &c. he is to feed them at his peril. Co. Lit. 47. A distress of household goods, or dead chattels, which are liable to be stolen, or damaged by the weather, ought to be impounded in a Pound covert; else the distrainer must answer for the consequences; and for this purpose, under stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, any person distraining for rent may turn any part of the premises upon which a distress is taken into a Pound, pro hac vice for securing such distress. See title Distress, II.

A common Pound belongs to a township, lordship, or village; and ought to be in every parish, kept in repair by them who have used to do it time out of mind: The oversight whereof is to be by the Steward in the Leet, where any default herein is punishable. Dyer 288: Noy 52.

POUNDAGE, A subsidy to the value of twelvepence in the pound, anciently granted to the King, of all merchandize exported or imported. See this Dictionary, title Customs on Merchandize.

POUND-BREACH. If a distress be taken and impounded, though without just cause, the owner cannot break the pound, and take away the distress; if he doth, the party destrained may have his action, and retake the distress wherever he finds it: And for Pound-breaches, &c. action of the case lies, whereon treble damages may be recovered. Co. Lit. 261: stat. 2 W. & M. st. 1. c. 5. Also Pound-breaches may be inquired of in the Sheriff's turn; as they are common grievances, in contempt of the authority of the Law. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. § 56.

POUND IN MONEY, from the Sax. pund, i. e. pondus.] Twenty shillings: In the time of the Saxons it consisted of 240 pence, as it doth now: and 240 of those (silver) pence weighed a pound, but 720 scarce weigh so much at this day. Lambard 219.

POUR FAIR PROCLAIMER, que null inject Fimes ou Ordures en Fosses, ou Rivers, pres Cities, &c.] An ancient writ directed to the Mayor or Bailiff of a city or town, requiring them to make proclamation, That none cast filth into places near such city or town, to the nusance thereof: and if any be cast there already, to remove the same; founded on the stat. 12 R. 2. c. 13. F. N. B. 176. Indictments for nusances now supply the place of this writ. See title Nusance.

POURPARTY, Propars, propartis, propartia, Fr. pourpart: pro parte.] That part or share of an estate, first held in common by parceners, which is by partition allotted to them. Thus it is contrary to pro indiviso: For to make Pourparty is, to divide the lands that fall to parceners, which, before partition, they hold jointly and pro indiviso. Old Nat. Brev. 11. See title Parceners.

POURPRESTURE, Pourprestura, from the Fr. pourpris, conseptum, an inclosure.] Any thing done to the nusance or hurt of the King's demesnes or the highways, &c. by inclosure or buildings; endeavouring to make that private which ought to be public. Glanv. l. 9. c. 11: 1 Inst. 38, 272. See this Dictionary title Nusance I.

Crompton in his Jurisd. 152, defines it thus: Pourpresture is properly when a man taketh unto himself, or incroacheth any thing he ought not, whether it be in any jurisdiction, land, or franchise; and generally when any thing is done to the nusance of the King's tenants. See Kitchen 10; Manwood's Forest Laws, cap. 10; Glanville, lib. 9. c. 11.

Skene de verbor. signif. verbo Pourpresture, makes three sorts of this offence; one against the King, a second against the lord of the fee, the third against a neighbour by a neighbour. See 2 Inst. 38 & 272. Et lib. niger in scac. 37 & 38. That against the King happens by the negligence of the Sheriff or deputy, or by the long continuance of wars, inasmuch as those, who have lands near the crown lands, take or inclose a part of them, and it to their own.

Pourpresture against the Lord is, when the tenant neglects to perform what he is bound to do for the Chief Lord, or in any wise deprives him of his right. Cowell.

Pourpresture against a neighbour is of the same nature: It is mentioned in the Monast. 1 tom. 843; and in Thorn. 2623.

POUR SEISIR TERRES la fame que tient en dower, &c.] An ancient writ whereby the King seized the land which the wife of his tenant, who held in capite, deceased, had for her dowry if she married without his leave; it was grounded on the statute of the King's prerogative, cap. 3. See F. N. B. 174. This writ does not now lie. See stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, abolishing these and other feudal effects of tenures.

POURSUIVANT, from the Fr. poursuivant, i. e. persequi.] The King's messenger attending him, to be sent on any occasion or message; as for the apprehending a person accused or suspected of any offence: Those employed in martial causes are called Pursuivants at Arms. See Herald.

The rest are used upon other messages in time of peace, and especially in matters touching jurisdiction. Nicholas Upton, in his book De militari Officio, lib. 1. c. 11, mentions the ancient form of making these Pursuivants; and tells us, that they were called milites linguares; because their chief honour was in custodia linguae, and he divides them into cursores equitantes and prosecutores. Cowell.

POURVEYANCE, or PURVEYANCE; The providing necessaries for the King's house.

The profitable prerogative of Purveyance and Preemption, was a right enjoyed by the Crown, of buying up provisions and other necessaries, by the intervention of the King's Purveyors, for the use of his royal household, at an appraised valuation, in preference to all others, and even without consent of the owner; and also, of forcibly impressing the carriages and horses of the Subject, to do the King's business on the public roads, in the conveyance of timber, baggage, and the like, however inconvenient to the proprietor, upon paying him a settled price.

This prerogative prevailed pretty generally throughout Europe, during the scarcity of gold and silver, and the high nominal valuation of money consequential thereupon. In those early times, the King's household (as well as those of inferior Lords) was supported by specific renders of corn, and other victuals, from the tenants of the respective demesnes; and there was also a continual market kept at the palace gate to furnish viands for the Royal use. 4 Inst. 273. And this answered all purposes, in those ages of simplicity, so long as the King's Court continued in any certain place. But when it removed from one part of the kingdom to another, (as was formerly very frequently done,) it was found necessary to send Purveyors beforehand, to get together a sufficient quantity of provisions and other necessaries for the household: And, lest the unusual demand should raise them to an exorbitant price, the powers before-mentioned were vested in these Purveyors; who, in process of time, greatly abused their authority, and became a great oppression to the Subject, though of little advantage to the Crown; ready money, in open market, (when the Royal residence was more permanent, and specie began to be plenty,) being found upon experience to be the best proveditor of any. Wherefore, by degrees, the powers of Purveyance have declined, in foreign countries as well as our own; and having fallen into disuse here during the suspension of Monarchy, King Charles II. at his Restoration consented, by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, to resign intirely these branches of his revenue and power: And the Parliament, in part of recompence, settled on him, his heirs and successors, for ever, the hereditary excise of fifteen pence per barrel on all beer and ale sold in the kingdom, and a proportionable sum for certain other liquors. 1 Comm. 287.

By this stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. it is provided, "That no person, by colour of buying or making provision or Purveyance, shall take any thing of any Subject, without the full and free consent of the owner, obtained without menace or force," &c.

Temporary acts have been passed suspending this statute in favour of the King's Royal progresses, viz. Stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 1. c. 8; 1 Jac. 2. c. 10; and in favour of the Navy and Ordnance. Stat. 13 & 14 C. 2. c. 20. See further, title Purveyance.

POURVEYOR or PURVEYOR, Provisor, derived from the Fr. pourvoir, i. e. providere.] The officer of the King or Queen, or other great Personage, who provided corn and other victual for their house. See Magna Charta, c. 22: stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 7 & 31. & anno 28. ejusdem, Articuli super chartas, 28 E. 1. st. 3, c. 2. and other statutes. The name of Purveyor was so odious in times past, that by stat. 36 Edw. 3. c. 2, the heinous name of Purveyor was changed into buyer; but the office is restrained by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. See ante Pourveyance.

POW-DIKE. To perversely and maliciously cut down or destroy the Pow-dike, in the fens of Norfolk and Ely, is felony, by stat. 22 Hen. 8. c. 11.

POWER.

An Authority which one man gives another to act for him; a term commonly applied to a reservation made in a conveyance for persons to do some certain acts; as to make leases, raise portions, or the like. 2 Lill. Abr. 339.

1. Upon what Estate, and by what Words, a Power shall be raised.
2. How a Power shall be expounded and executed.

1. In conveyances to an use, a man may direct or model the use, as he pleases, and the stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10, executes the possession to the use: therefore he may annex Powers to estates, which cannot be annexed to them by a conveyance at the Common Law. Co. Litt. 237. a: Mo. 610. And therefore, to the limitation of an use for life, he may annex a power to make leases for years, or lives, or to make a jointure to a wife. Mo. 381: 2 Lev. 58: Or to grant annuities, raise portions, &c. Mo. 381: Or to make a jointure, and also a lease to commence after his death, for portions, &c. Hard. 413. So, he may annex a power of revocation of all uses limited, and to make a limitation of new uses; and this will not be repugnant. Co. Litt. 237. a.

So, a Power may be annexed to an estate by another deed, executed at the same time, though it be not in the same conveyance by which the estate is conveyed. 2 Vern. 279. So, a man may give a Power or authority by will, which is a naked authority, not annexed to an estate; as, if he devises to A. for life, and afterwards that it shall be at his disposal to any of his children then living; he hath but an estate for life, with a naked Power to dispose, in the manner directed by the will. 1 Salk. 24: 3 Salk. 276. So, he may give a Power to a stranger, which is a naked collateral Power, and annexed to an estate. Or a Power in gross, which takes effect after his estate is determined. Hard. 415.

If a Power be to A. or his assigns, to make leases, &c. the Power runs with the estate to the assignee in deed, or in law. 1 Vent. 340: 2 Jon. 210. So, in all cases a Power coupled with an interest may be assigned: as, a Power to a lessor, and his assigns, to cut down trees. 2 Mod. 317.

Powers which are given to mere strangers, that is, to persons who have neither a present nor future estate or interest in the land, are said to be collateral to the land; those which are reserved to a person, who has either a present or future estate or interest in the land, are said to be relating to the land; and these again are subdivided into two classes, Powers annexed to the estate in the land; and Powers in gross. Powers annexed are, where a person has an estate in the land, and the estate to be created by the Power, is to take effect in possession during the continuance of the estate to which the Power is annexed; such is the Power usually given in settlements to tenants for life, when respectively in possession, to make leases. Powers in gross are, where the person to whom they are given has an estate in the land; but the estate to be created under or by virtue of the Power, is not to take its effect till after the determination of the estate to which it relates; such are the Powers usually inserted in settlements, to jointure an after-taken wife. 1 Inst. 342, b. in n.

If a man, seised in fee, covenant to stand seised to the use of himself for life, with Power to make leases, remainder to another in fee, the Power is not well raised. Ch. Ca. 161. If the consideration of the covenant does not extend to the Power to make leases. Mo. 145: 1 Co. 175: Raym. 148. So, upon such covenant, he cannot reserve a Power to make leases, jointures, or for preferment of younger children, &c. Mo. 381, 383.

Words, which shew the intent of the party, are sufficient to create a Power; as if a Power be to demise or lease, though the intent is, that he declare the uses of the first settlement for life or years; for the lease does not take effect by demise, but by declaration of the uses. Mo. 611. So, if a man expresses the Power only by implication, it is well; as, provided, that he shall not have Power to alien, &c. otherwise than to make a jointure, and leases for 21 years, it is a good Power to make a jointure and leases. 1 Leo. 148. So, if a devise be to A. for life, to set, let, and make estates out of it as I might, and afterwards to his daughter in tail; A. has power to make leases, it being the custom of the country where the land lies, to let for lives or years. 2 Rol. 261. l. 35.

But a Power, being executory, may be restrained or enlarged by a subsequent deed: as, if a Power be general, to revoke; by a covenant afterwards, that he will not revoke without the consent of B. the Power is restrained. Jon. 412. So, if the consideration, upon which the Power was founded, does not extend to the person to whom the lease is made, the lease shall be void; as, if a man covenant, in consideration of natural affection, to stand seised to the use of himself for life, &c. with Power to make leases, &c. a lease to a stranger is void; for he is not within the consideration. 2 Rol. 260. l. 30. So, if a Power at its creation be, to make leases to a person, to whom the consideration does not extend, it will be void, though the lease be executed to a person within the consideration. 2 Rol. 260. l. 35.—But a man cannot annex a Power of revocation to a feoffment or grant, for that will be void. 1 Inst. 237. a: Mo. 610.

Powers of revocation of uses of lands are very frequent in merely voluntary conveyances, but have of late been disused in marriage-settlements; doubts having arisen arisen whether such settlements are not fraudulent within the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4: T. Jones 94, 95. Powers of revocation in their creation are to be construed favourably; and therefore no express or technical words are necessary to the creating of such Powers; but any expression which denotes an intent to reserve such Power, will be sufficient. 2 Vern. 376: 3 Keb. 26. But if such Power be once executed, that is, the old uses over the whole estate revoked, and new uses limited, such new uses cannot be revoked, without an express reservation of a Power for such purpose. Pre. Ch. 474: 2 Burr. 1136: 2 Vef. 211. A Power of revocation may extend to all the limitations, or be restricted to a particular estate, limited by the conveyance; as where the use is to A. for life, remainder over, with Power to revoke the estate for life only, this seems to be a good Power. 2 Rol. Ab. 262. pl. 1. See further, Fonblanque Treat. Eq. lib. 2. c. 6. § 6, 7, and the notes there.

2. A POWER shall be expounded strictly; therefore if a man has Power to make leases generally, this extends to make leases in possession only, and not in reversion. 2 Roll. 261. c. 5: Cro. Jac. 318: Yelv. 222: Ray. 248: 1 Ld. Raym. 267: 2 Salk. 537: 1 Lev. 168: 6 Co. 33. a: Mo. 199: 1 Leo. 35: 3 Leo. 131. Nor a lease to commence in futuro. Raym. 248: 1 Leo. 35: Yel. 222: Cro. Jac. 318: Mo. 494. So, if the Power be to make leases for two or three lives, he cannot make a lease to one not in esse; as to the son of B. not born, &c. Raym. 163. So, if the Power be to make leases in possession, he cannot make a lease of land in reversion, though it be to commence in presenti, 1 Sid. 101: Ch. Ca. 18.

So, if part of a lease be in reversion, the whole lease shall be void. 3 Salk. 276. So, if the Power be to make leases in possession, or in reversion, he cannot make a lease in possession, and another lease of the same land in reversion; but his Power to lease in reversion extends only to make leases of the land, which was not then in possession. 1 Ld. Raym. 269: 2 Salk. 537. So a Power to make a lease of three lives or three years in possession, or for two lives or thirty years in reversion, warrants only a concurrent lease for two lives; for a lease for lives cannot commence at a future day. 1 Ld. Raym. 269: 2 Salk. 537.

But if a Power be annexed to the estate of him in reversion, to make leases generally, he may make a lease in presenti of the reversion. 1 Lev. 168. Though the Power be to make leases in possession. Ch. Ca. 18: 1 Lev. 168: 1 Sid. 260, 261. So, if a fine be to the conusee for 15 years, afterwards to B. for life, &c. with Power to lease for three lives, or 21 years in possession; he may make a lease during the 15 years of land in lease at the time of the fine, when such lease expires. 2 Rol. 260. l. 50: Cro. Jac. 347: 1 Rol. 12: 2 Rol. 216. So if husband and wife lease pursuant to the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28; and then, by act of Parliament, the estate is settled to the husband for life, with Power to lease for three lives, or 21 years; he may make leases of the reversion during the first lease by the husband and wife. 2 Rol. 261. l. 15: 1 Lev. 36: cont. Dyer 357. a. So, if a Power be to make leases in reversion for three lives, &c. he may lease for three lives, when there is another life in esse, though the Power does not say, to make leases of the reversion; for there is no prejudice. 2 Rol. 261. l. 30. So, he may make a lease for years determinable upon three lives, to commence after the end of the former lease in esse. 8 Co. 70. See title Lease I. 2.

Whatever is an equitable, ought to be deemed a legal, execution of a Power; and the reason is obvious; for Powers were originally in their nature equitable, but are, by the Statute of Uses, transferred to Common Law. See 2 Burr. 1147: 1 Cowp. 266.

There is a distinction between the Non-execution of a Power, and a defective execution of a Power: for though a Court of Equity will, under certain circumstances, help the latter, it will never aid the former; because so to do would be repugnant to the nature of a Power, which always leaves it to the free will and election of the party to whom the Power is given, to execute it, or not; for which reason Equity will not compel the execution of a Power, or construe the act as done when there is no evidence of the intention of the party to do it. 2 P. Wms. 490: and see Powell on Powers.—The declaration of such intent is, however, a sufficient ground for the interference of a Court of Equity, 2 Vern. 69. A covenant in a marriage settlement, referring to a Power, or to the estate on which the Power attaches, is, in respect of the consideration, a sufficient indication of an intent to execute such Power. 2 Freem. 256: 2 Vern. 379: See 2 P. Wms. 222: Gilb. Rep. 166: Ambl. 3.

The interference of Courts of Equity, in cases of a defective execution of a Power, proceeds upon the same principles as those on which those Courts will supply any defect in the surrender of a copyhold estate, and is therefore bound by the same considerations. Treat. Eq. i. 314. n. See this Dictionary, title Copyhold.

In Bath and Montague's Case, (3 Ch. Ca. 69, 93,) it is said, by the two Chief Justices, that if the party appear to have intended to execute his Power, and is prevented by death, Equity shall interpose to effectuate his intent, for it is an impediment by the act of God; and the case of Smith v. Ashton, (1 Ch. Ca. 264: Finch. Rep. 273.) is relied on as an authority to such an effect; but this not being an original opinion of the learned Chief Justices, and founded only on the case cited, can be carried no farther than that case warrants; upon reference to the circumstances, it will be found to afford an authority rather against, than in support of the notion, that where a man is only preparing to execute a Power, and dies before he does execute it, the preparatory steps amount to such an execution as Equity will make effectual; for it is observable, that the Court, in Smith v. Ashton, directed an issue to try whether the notes or instructions for the will, from which the intent of the donee of the Power was inferred, were part of his will; which issue would have been unnecessary, if the Court could have relieved on the ground of preparatory measures only: the relief afforded in that case must therefore be referred to the result of the issue, which was, that the notes or instructions were part of the will. Treat. Eq. i. 315. in n.

It is said, that Equity will relieve the defective execution of a Power to make leases; but this must be understood of such leases as are not derived under Powers limited in their nature to a particular mode of execution: for in the construction of Powers, originally in their nature were legal, Courts of Equity must follow the law, be the consideration ever so meritorious; for instance, in the case of Powers by tenant in tail, to make leases under the statute, if not executed in the requisite form, no consideration, however meritorious, will avail. So, with respect to defective executions of Powers under the Civil-List Act, Powers under particular family entails, Equity can no more relieve from them than it can from defects in a common recovery. The principle upon which the rule of construction is founded, in these cases is, that there is nothing to affect the conscience of the remainder-man. Cowp. 267.

In the case of defective execution of Powers, it is not necessary, in order to induce the interference of a Court of Equity, that the consideration should be strictly valuable; but it is sufficient that it be meritorious; i.e. founded on some moral obligation. Tr Eq. l. 316. in n.

Though equity will not, even in favour of creditors, execute a Power which the party himself has omitted to execute; yet, if a Power be executed in favour of a volunteer, though a child, it seems agreed by all the cases, that the money shall be assets for the benefit of creditors. 2 Vern. 319: 1 Atk 495: 2 Ves. 1. Nor can a Power be so framed as to protect an appointment, under it, from payment of the debts of the person appointing. 2 Ves 640. See title Executor V. 6.

It is agreed in the Books, that a wife may, without her husband, execute a naked authority, whether given before or after coverture, and though no special words are used to dispense with the disability of coverture; and the rule is the same where both an interest and an authority pass to the wife, if the authority is collateral to, and doth not flow from, the interest; because then the two are as unconnected, as if they were vested in different persons. Finch. Rep. 346. As too, a feme covert may, without her husband, convey lands in execution of a mere Power or authority, so may she with equal effect in performance of a condition, where land is vested in her on condition to convey to others. W. Jones 137, 8. The reason why, in these instances, the wife may convey without her husband, seems to be, that he can receive no prejudice from her act, but a great one might arise to others, if his concurrence should be essential. 1 Inst. 112. a in n. See title Baron and Feme.

PRACTICE. This term is sometimes applied in an unfavourable sense, to signify fraud, or bad practice; Thus clandestine proceedings are said to be by Practice.

PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

By this is understood the form and manner of conducting and carrying on suits or prosecutions, at Law or in Equity, civil or criminal, through their various stages, from the commencement of the process to final judgment and execution; according to the principles of Law, and the rules laid down by the several Courts.

Though the knowledge of this Practice is to be acquired chiefly by experience, it is founded on the original structure and progressive improvements of our Laws. Several modern treatises have been written on the Practice of the several Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, Chancery, and Exchequer; some of which are by no means liable to the censure passed on former productions of that nature, by the learned and ingenious writer, from whom the following abridgment is extracted. The nature of this Dictionary precludes the possibility of entering into any thing like a general detail on so complicated a subject: the various points of which are incidentally noticed, under the several heads to which they apply.

Some idea of the Visible Practice of the Courts is given under title Motion in Court; and which the following summary may serve further to illustrate. It is taken from a work, which would probably have secured to its author a fame more adequate to his deserts; had not the splendour of the Commentaries obscured all inferior exertions of ingenuity and elegance. See Eunomus, Dial. 2. § 23—40.

It must be owned, (says that writer,) that the knowledge of Practice can be acquired only by Practice: though, as its rules depend on principles, it is as much a science, as any other part of the Law. It is impossible even to recollect those rules, and often difficult to investigate them. The very few books of any credit that have been written on this subject, are written on a loose and unconnected plan, and, after all, speak only to the learned. This branch of Law is more than any other destitute of any elementary treatise.

But this defect has since been very much supplied by Crompton's Book of Practice in the Courts of K. B. and C. P. since enlarged by Sellon; Impey's Practice in the same Courts; Tidd's Practice in the Court of K. B.; and perhaps others which might be named, if not as of equal merit, yet of considerable utility.

The following idea of Practice, given by the author of Eunomus, is new, and, it is believed, accurate as far as it goes: it may afford a pleasing view of the rationale of Practice, even to adepts; but it is chiefly adapted to the instruction of those who are first setting out in the Profession; who, either from lectures in the University, or in their own private studies, have a tolerable notion of the general principles of Law: though they may have barely set foot in Westminster Hall, and consequently have but little idea of the Practice of a Court. It arises on the following case:

A person who has a cause of complaint, either for a right detained, or an injury done, is determined to bring his Action: and by his attorney takes out Process against the party complained of; in consequence of which, the latter (who is called the defendant) puts in Bail; either common or special, as the case requires. The defendant being thus secured, the plaintiff declares in proper form the nature of his cause; the defendant answers this declaration; and the charge and defence, by due course of Pleading, (in the course of which may be introduced a Demurrer on either side,) are brought to one or more plain simple facts: these facts, arising out of the pleadings, and thence called Issues, come next to Trial by a Jury; who, having heard the Evidence on an issue before them, find (let it be supposed) a Verdict for the plaintiff; on which verdict Judgment is afterwards entered. The plaintiff's costs of suit are then taxed by the Officer of the Court; and the judgment is put in Execution, by levying on the defendant's effects the Damages given by the Jury, and the Costs allowed by the Court; which being done, there is an end of the suit, and both parties are once more out of Court. [By referring to the titles in this Dictionary, distinguished by Italic words, in the above sentence, further information on each head will be obtained.]

But the Practice of a Court in civil suits arises, in a great measure, from the interruption in the above regular stages, and course of a cause. Those regular stages (as to the time and manner of carrying them on) are themselves the legitimate offspring of the established Practice of the Court where the cause is brought: when they are pursued, the course of the proceeding runs on smooth and silent, transacted by the Attornies in the cause, and the Officers of the Court, without ever being heard of in open Court: and the method of transacting this business is that Practice, the knowledge of which more immediately concerns the Attornies and Officers. The irregularities and informalities, that push a cause out of its course, must be redressed by the interposition of the Court; and it is this kind of business that furnishes and makes up a great part of the visible Practice of the Courts of Law in Term time.

It was above stated, that the Attorney first takes out process against the defendant, in order to make him appear. But this process may be irregular, and then it will produce motions to set it aside; as for instance, where the defendant is a privileged person. It may not only be irregular, but highly oppressive; and then it grounds a motion for an attachment, against the parties executing the process, as for a constructive contempt of the Court. This is a general motion, and may, as the oppression which produces it, arise in any stage of the cause. The suit itself, as well as the process, may be irregular, and then it will occasion a motion to stay proceedings in a cause; as where the parties have agreed to compromise the matters in difference, and a release is not executed; for the release when executed may be pleaded in bar of the action. The first process may be regular, and the Bail may not, and thence arise various motions, either to discharge the defendant on common bail, where it appears from the affidavit that he is not liable to give special bail; or where the affidavit to hold to bail is defective. —To set aside a Judge's order, made at his chambers, relating to the bail: which kind of motion may be made on other grounds. If the bail is regular in the manner of putting it in, but suspicious as to the competency of the bail, the plaintiff gives notice, and the defendant moves to justify bail in open Court.

The Declaration may furnish several motions; as to the delivery of it; its frame and structure; or the neglect of it by the defendant. Perhaps it cannot be delivered in the common form, the party absconding to avoid it; and then the plaintiff moves that some other service of the declaration may be sufficient. The declaration being delivered, the defendant may apprehend it to be immoderately prolix and impertinent; in which case he will move to strike out some counts in the declaration. The Court usually upon this order it to be referred to the Master of the Plea Office, and the Master's report is the ground of the rule afterwards made. A motion for the Master's Report is another motion, that may arise in various parts of a cause. In an action, that is in its nature transitory, if the declaration lays the cause of action in one county, and it did in reality arise in another, the defendant may avail himself of that circumstance; and upon affidavit apply to the Court for the plaintiff to change the Venue, (that is, the place where the cause of action is declared to have happened,) from the first county to the latter. The venue may likewise be changed from any county in England, wherever the cause of action arose, to that of Middlesex, where the Court sits, if the defendant is privileged as attendant on that Court. Where the Jury, and not the venue, is to be changed, as where the material evidence arises in the place laid, but no Jury, common or special can be had, disinterested, (as in case of a county cause about a bridge, or the like,) it is usual to move for a trial in the adjoining county, upon entering a suggestion on the roll. See this Dictionary, titles Venue; Trial.—A suggestion on the roll is sometimes entered for other purposes; as where the Sheriff, who regularly returns the process, is partial. See titles Jury; Sheriff; Coroner.

If a declaration is substantially defective, the defendant, instead of answering, demurs to it. See title Demurrer. If, on the other hand, the declaration is delivered, and is unexceptionable, and the defendant neglects to answer it in due time, the plaintiff has his judgment by default; but if the plaintiff is over-hasty in signing this judgment, the Court will interpose on a motion to set it aside; in consequence of which, the defendant will be at liberty to plead. The motion to set aside a judgment, obtains, in other instances; and the motion for judgment, as in case of a nonsuit, arises on another ground, as will be shewn hereafter; and see title Nonsuit.

When the defendant comes to plead to the declaration, instead of making, in due time, a plain denial of the charge, called the General Issue, he may find it necessary to vary the common course, either by enlarging the time, or the manner of pleading: he may, therefore, move for time to plead, which being a matter of indulgence, the Court, on the equity of the case, may refuse or grant; and grant without or upon terms. At Common Law a defendant could only plead a single matter; but this is now remedied by statute; (see title Pleading;) and, if necessary, the defendant accordingly moves the Court for leave to plead several matters, which he mentions. Sometimes this expedient is an afterthought, and then, as it tends to delay the plaintiff, the defendant moves for leave to withdraw the general issue, and to be at liberty to plead specially; sometimes he moves the contrary.

The

The plea, replication, rejoinder, &c. are at length settled on record, and come to an issue; which remains to be settled by a Jury; in order to which all the record down to the issue, which it includes, is transcribed from what is called the plea-roll, and which is only part of a large bundle, comprehending the cases of many other persons; and never stirs out of the custody of the Court: That manuscript is called the Nisi Prius Roll, as the Nisi-Prius roll, after it is returned from the trial, assumes the name of the Postea. See titles Pleading; Nisi Prius; Postea; Record.

Between the issue and the trial, several motions may happen, which may either put off the trial or not; of the latter kind, and at this stage, is a motion by the defendant for leave to pay money into Court. See title Money into Court.

Many circumstances may make it necessary to postpone a trial, or vary the common forms of examination. The necessary witnesses in the cause may reside altogether abroad, or being there for a time, may not be likely to return at the regular time of the trial: In the first case, the Court is moved for a commission, to examine witnesses on interrogatories; which are settled here, sent over, and with their answers properly attested, are sent back and read in evidence at the trial. See title Depositions. In the latter case, the trial is delayed on motion, to put it off for the absence of a material witness. But if, by this delay, the other party is likely to lose evidence that is ready at the time; either in case a witness is so old and infirm, as not to be likely to survive the arrival of the evidence on the other side, or in case his necessary business obliges him to leave England before the trial can come on; in this case, a motion is made by the party affected, to examine such witness de bene esse, that is, to admit the depositions, so taken, as evidence, if the person cannot afterwards be examined at the trial. If a witness, under none of these capacities, being duly summoned, neglect to attend, he is liable to an action on the statute (5 Eliz. c. 9) for damages; or the Court will punish him criminally for the contempt on a motion for an Attachment. See title Evidence II. 2. Motions may also arise, respecting written evidence, as for leave to inspect and take copies of Corporation books, or for an order to produce them at the trial.

Not only the Witnesses in a cause, but the Jury, may occasion particular applications to the Court: so may the nature of the cause in question, and so may the course of Judicature itself. The nature of the cause sometimes requires the Jury to see the very spot where the matter in dispute arises; in which case, after issue joined, the Court is moved for a view. See titles Jury I; View. In cases also, where the cause is either of a nature to exceed the apprehension, or to inflame the passions, of a Common Jury, a Special Jury will be moved for. See title Jury I. Sometimes the cause is apparently likely to be very long, intricate, and important, either in its value, or its consequences; from whence arises a motion for a Trial at Bar. See title Trial.

When the cause is brought to the Assises, the Jury sworn, and the Witnesses examined; the trial goes on, or it does not; if it goes on, either a verdict is given, or it is not: if a verdict is given, it is either for the plaintiff or the defendant. The Jury may be sworn, and the witnesses may be in part examined; and yet the trial may stop; because the parties may then, or at any time, compromise the matter in difference, or agree to refer it to arbitrators; in either case, a rule is made at the Assises, (called an order of Nisi Prius,) and motion is afterwards made, to make the order of Nisi Prius a Rule of Court. See title Award VI.

But the cause may go on, and yet not get to a verdict; for if the plaintiff does not prove his case, the defendant calls no evidence; and, instead of a verdict on either side, there is a Nonsuit. Wherever a verdict is given, the plaintiff at least must give evidence to maintain his declaration. Where evidence is produced on both sides, the verdict is given for the plaintiff or defendant, according to the superior weight of evidence. See title Jury III.

Here closes the trial; and from this period it is that the record assumes the name of the Postea; and if the trial is decisive, neither the Law nor the fact being afterwards controverted, the postea is delivered by the proper officer to the Attorney of the victorious party, to sign his judgment. but in many cases, after a verdict given, there is room to question its validity; in which case, the postea remains in the custody of the Court. The verdict may be exceptionable, either from misdirection of a Judge in point of Law, or the misbehaviour of the Jury; in which case, a motion may be made to set it aside. as it may on other grounds; as, from its being clearly contrary to evidence, or in the damages given greatly exceeding the injury sustained; on both which accounts, a new trial may be moved for. See title Trial. If the verdict itself stands unimpeached, yet some original defect may appear on the face of the record, which shows that no verdict ought to have been given; or, though given, no judgment can be had on it; and when this happens, the motion is in Arrest of Judgment. See title Judgment III.

Supposing the verdict and record to stand clear of all objections, the judgment follows of course; and, after judgment, Execution, the purpose of which execution is, to levy the damages assessed by the Jury, and the costs allowed by the Court. The execution however may for a short time be interrupted, in case any objection arises to the taxation of costs, and then a motion may be made, for the Master to review his taxation: this, and every act of the Master, being liable to be reviewed on appeal to the Court; though in judging of ordinary stages of Practice, he is invested with original, and competent jurisdiction. If the Sheriff, or his Officers, misbehave in respect to the execution, (as in any other service of a writ,) this may produce a motion for an Attachment against them.

When execution is over, the cause is over: but a cause may, on many occasions, come much sooner to an end, and in a direction very different from what has been mentioned; it may come sooner to a trial, or it may come to execution without a trial.

In the case put at setting out, and, in the general exposition of the case, it has been supposed that the defendant pleaded to the declaration: but it was intimated, that, if he neglected to plead, judgment would be had against him by default; in consequence of this default of a plea, the truth of the fact is confessed, and cannot be afterwards litigated, as on a trial; but this judgment, though it operates so as to preclude the defendant from controverting the fact, which is the cause of action, does not go to a confession of the damages laid in the declaration; which must be ascertained on a Writ of Inquiry. See title Judgment I.—In this course of proceeding, motions may arise to set aside the judgment, and writ of inquiry issued thereon, as irregular;—to execute a writ of Inquiry before a Judge, instead of a Sheriff, where it is a matter of importance;—and sometimes for a new Writ of Inquiry, for excessive damages, in the same manner as for a new trial on those grounds. See title Trial.

There are two cases however, where the admission of the defendant silences all future inquiry, either as to the truth of the fact, or the quantity of the damages; that of a direct confession of the action; and a warrant of attorney, to confess a judgment: this latter occasions a motion very often; for where it is above a year standing, motion must be made for leave to file the Warrant of Attorney, on affidavit of the defendant being still alive, and the debt unpaid: And motions may be made to set aside the Warrant of Attorney, if not regularly executed. See title Judgments acknowledged for Debts.

A matter may come sooner to a trial, by means of an Issue directed by the Court; which obtains, in a Court of Law, principally where a question of civil right is involved in a criminal prosecution for a misdemeanor; in which case, it is the usual lenity of the Court, to suspend the latter till the former has been tried: Or where a Court of Equity directs facts to be inquired of at Law, and does not rest the case on depositions. See title Feigned Issue.

What has been said relates merely to the Practice of the Courts in civil Suits: and, in general, concerns the trial of a cause. To give a full or general idea of Practice, it may be necessary to establish a distinction between such motions, as are in their nature previous to the trial itself or subsequent to it: Of the former sort, are motions to stay proceedings in a cause; motions relating to bail; to declarations; to the time and manner of pleading; for changing venues; Special Juries; and many others above particularised: Of the latter sort necessarily, are motions; to set aside verdicts; for new trials; in arrest of judgment; on writs of inquiry; and others, that are easily classed according to this division. There are some motions that, in the abstract, are of an ambiguous nature, and may arise in any part of the cause, either before or after a trial; as, Motions for an Attachment; for a Master's report; and others.

Every motion hitherto has been supposed to have some relation to the trial of a cause: there are some few entirely independent of it; as, a Motion for a Prohibition; applications for summary relief, under various statutes, relating to articles of Clerks; to Attornies; Insolvent debtors; and others of that stamp. See further title Motion in Court.

Part of the visible Practice of the Court also arises from Cases directed out of Chancery; Special Verdicts; and Writs of Error; all of which are argued at the bar, and determined by the Judges.

The Practice of Courts of Equity may be deduced in a manner similar to the above, by attending to the several stages, from the filing of the bill to the execution of the decree. See title Chancery.

The Crown-business, or Criminal Practice, of which the Court of K. B. has exclusive jurisdiction, does not admit of the application of the same idea; much the greatest part of it is independent of any solemn trial; and the trials themselves are too simple to endure much interruption, or branch out into many points of Practice. This Crown Practice may be divided into such matters as originally commence in that Court; and such as are removed into it, from other inferior jurisdictions: Of both which kinds, taken together, are, motions for an Habeas Corpus; Mandamus; (though this and the motion for a Quo Warranto, in cases relating to Corporations, partake also of a civil as well as a criminal nature;) to exhibit Articles of the Peace; motions relating to the discharge of Recognisances; to remove Indictments, orders of Sessions, Convictions, made by Justices, &c. from their common ordinary course of proceeding, by writ of Certiorari into this Court, on some foundation of complaint against them. The visible Practice, that occasions this removal, and that arises from it, may be resolved into these few motions, very simple in their kind, though infinitely diversified as to their objects. viz. The general Motion to remove the indictment, order or conviction by Certiorari; Motion to quash the indictment, &c. when it is removed. In the case of an indictment, removed, either on a demurrer, it is set down to be argued; or motion is made to quash it before trial; or Motion in Arrest of Judgment; or Motion for Judgment after the trial.

But the most extensive Jurisdiction is involved in matters of original cognisance, whether it regards indictments or informations; or such matters as are entirely independent of either, or any solemn trial; such as begin and end on motions.

There is little or no difference between an indictment commenced in this Court, or removed from another Jurisdiction, as to motions concerning them. As to Informations, though altogether the Creature of this Court, they admit but of three motions; the application to the Court to grant it: when granted, and tried, a casual motion, in arrest of judgment, on grounds arising from the record itself: or, where the charge, in the information and the verdict are both incontestable, the motion for judgment.

To recapitulate all in a few words:—Practice in general, it appears, is either in civil or Crown causes. In civil causes, it is either independent of a trial, or relative to it; if relative to it, it arises from something applied for either before or after a trial. In Crown causes, the only distinction made was, either as it concerned the original jurisdiction of the Court, or such as is exercised, as it were, on appeal. "And unless (concludes the Writer, from whom the foregoing sketch has been extracted and abridged) I was to read over to you a hundred (he might have added or more) rules of Court, and the several cases and books on this subject, (which, by the bye, I would not wish any enemy I have to do,) I cannot undertake to be more explicit on this subject."

PRÆCEPTORIES, Præceptoria.] A kind of benefices, having their name from being possessed by the more eminent Templars, whom the Chief Master by his authority, created and called Præceptores Templi. And of these Præceptories there are recorded sixteen, as belonging to the Templars in England, viz. Cressing Temple, Balshal, Shengay, Newland, Yeveley, Witham, Temple-bruere, Willington, Roibeley, Ovenington, Temple Combe, Trebigh, Ribstane, Mount St. John, Temple Nusum, and Temple

Temple Harst. Mon. Angl. ii. 543. But some Authors say, these places were cells only, subordinate to their principal mansion in the Temple in London. See stat. antiq. 32 Hen. 8. c. 24.

PRÆCIPE; See title Original.

PRÆCIPE IN CAPITE, The writ of right for the King's immediate tenants in capite, when they are deforced of lands or tenements. 3 Comm. c. 10. p. 195. See title Writ of Right.

PRÆCIPE QUOD REDDAT; See titles Fine of Lands; Recovery.

PRÆCIPITIUM, A punishment inflicted on criminals, by casting them from some high place. Malmsf. lib. 5. p. 155.

PRÆFECTUS VILLÆ, Is the same as præpositus villæ, i. e. the Mayor of a town. Leg. Ed. Confess. c. 28.

PRÆFINE, That fine, which on suing out the writ of covenant, on levying fines, is paid before the fine is passed. See title Fine of Lands.

PRÆMUNIRE,

[Corrupted from, or apparently synonimous with, Præmoneri, "to be forewarned;" and therefore, according to the proverb, fore-armed: see Du Cange in v.] The writ so called, or the offence whereon the writ is granted; the one may be understood by the other. The offence is of a nature highly criminal, though not capital, and more immediately affecting the King or his Government. It is named, from the words of the writ, preparatory to the prosecution thereof, "Præmunire facias A. B.—Cause A. B. to be forewarned—that he appear before us to answer the contempt wherewith he stands charged;" which contempt is particularly recited in the preamble to the writ. It took its original from the exorbitant power claimed and exercised in England by the Pope; and was originally ranked as an offence immediately against the King; because it consisted in introducing a foreign power into this land, and creating imperium in imperio, by paying that obedience to papal process, which constitutionally belonged to the King alone, long before the Reformation in the Reign of Henry VIII. See 4 Comm. c. 8.

The church of Rome, under pretence of her supremacy, and the dignity of St. Peter's chair, took on her to bestow most of the ecclesiastical livings, of any worth in England, by mandates, before they were void; pretending therein great care to see the Church provided of a successor before it needed. Whence these mandates or bulls were called gratiæ expectativæ or provisiones, whereof see a learned discourse in Duarenus de Beneficiis, lib. 3. c. 1.—These provisions were so common, that at last it was necessary to restrain them by the Laws of the Land.

In the 35th year of Edw. I. was made the first statute against papal provisions, stat. 35 E, 1. st. 1; being, according to Coke, the foundation of all the subsequent statutes of Præmunire. It recites, that the abbots, priors, and governors, had, at their own pleasure, set divers impositions upon the monasteries and houses in their subjection; to remedy which, it was enacted, that in future, religious persons should send nothing to their superiors beyond the sea; and that no imposition whatever should be taxed by priors-aliens. By stat. 25 E. 3. st. 5. c. 22, it was enacted, that if any one purchased a provision of an abbey or priory, he should be out of the King's protection. And by stat. 25 E. 3. st. 6. (c. 2): 27 E. 3. st. 1. c. 1: 38 E. 3. st. 1, c. 4: and stat. 2. cc. 1, 2, 3, 4, it was enacted, that the Court of Rome should not present or collate to any Bishopric or living in England: and that whoever disturbed any patron in the presentation to a living, by virtue of a papal provision, such person should pay fine and ransom to the King, at his will; and be imprisoned till he renounced such provision. The same punishment was inflicted on such as should cite the King, or any of his Subjects, to answer in the Court of Rome. By stats. 3 R. 2. c. 3: 7 R. 2. c. 12, it was enacted, that no alien should be capable of letting his benefice to farm; in order to compel such as had crept in, at least to reside on their preferments: and that no alien should be capable of being presented to any ecclesiastical preferment, under the penalty of the statutes of Provisors. By stat. 12 R. 2. c. 15, all liegemen of the King, accepting of a living by any foreign provision, were put out of the King's protection, and the benefice made void; to which stat. 13 R. 2. st. 2. c. 2, adds banishment and forfeiture of lands and goods; and by c. 3, of the same statute, it was enacted, that any person bringing over any citation or excommunication from beyond sea, on account of the execution of the foregoing statutes of Provisors, should be imprisoned, forfeit his lands and goods, and moreover suffer pain of life and member.

In the writ for the execution of these statutes, the words Præmunire facias being used, to command a citation from the party, have denominated, in common speech, not only the writ, but the offence itself, of maintaining the papal power by the name of Præmunire. The stat. 16 R. 2. c. 5, which is the statute generally referred to by all subsequent statutes, is, accordingly, usually called the Statute of Præmunire. It enacts, that whoever procures, at Rome, or elsewhere, any translations, processes, excommunications, bulls, instruments, or other things, which touch the King, against him, his Crown and Realm, and all persons aiding and assisting therein, shall be put out of the King's protection; their lands and goods forfeited to the King's use; and they shall be attached by their bodies to answer to the King and his Council; or process of Præmunire facias shall be made out against them as in other cases of Provisors. By stat. 2 H. 4. c. 3, all persons who accept any provision from the Pope, to be exempt from canonical obedience to their proper Ordinary, were also subjected to the penalties of Præmunire. This is said to be the last ancient statute concerning this offence till the Reformation.

But by stat. 2 Hen. 4. c. 4, whoever shall put in execution bulls purchased by those of the order of Cisteaux, to be discharged of tithes, shall incur the like penalty: they were also further restrained by stats. 6 Hen. 4. c. 1: 7 Hen. 4. c. 8: 9 Hen. 4. c. 8: and 3 Hen. 5. cap. 4; by which, the statutes abovementioned are enforced and explained. And by stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 2. § 22, whoever shall sue for or execute any licence, dispensation, or faculty from the See of Rome; and by stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 16, (by which all bulls, briefs, &c. obtained from Rome, are made void,) whoever shall use, allege, or plead the same in any Court, unless they were confirmed by by this statute, or afterwards by the King, shall incur the like penalty. Vide Reg. 54: 3 Inst. 127.

The penalties of Præmunire have been since applied to other offences, some of which bear more, some less, and some no relation to this original offence, as shall be hereafter noticed.

Whenever it is said, that a person, by any act, incurs a Præmunire, it is meant to express, that he thereby incurs the penalties which, by the different statutes above mentioned, are inflicted for the offences therein described. See 4 Comm. c. 8: 1 Inst. 391. in n. 2.

Prosecutions on a Præmunire, it is remarkable, are unheard of in our Courts: there is only one instance of such a Prosecution in the State Trials: in which case, the penalties of a Præmunire were inflicted upon some persons, for refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance (see post I.) in the reign of King Charles II. Harg. St. Tr. ii. 263.

Having said thus much generally, we may proceed further to consider the subject under the following heads:

I. What Offences, besides those already specified, come under the Notion of a Præmunire.

II. Of the Punishment in a Præmunire.

I. At the time of the Reformation, the penalties of Præmunire were extended to more papal abuses than before; as the kingdom then entirely renounced the authority of the See of Rome, though not all the doctrines of the Roman Church. And therefore, by the several statutes 24 Hen. 8. c. 12: 25 Hen. 8. cc. 19, 21, to appeal to Rome from any of the King's Courts, which (though illegal before) had at times been connived at; to sue to Rome for any licence or dispensation; or to obey any process from thence; are made liable to the pains of Præmunire. And, in order to restore to the King, in effect, the nomination of vacant bishoprics, and yet keep up the established forms, it is enacted by stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 20, that if the Dean and Chapter refuse to elect the person named by the King, or any Archbishop or Bishop to confirm or consecrate him, they shall fall within the penalties of the statutes of Præmunire.

Exercising the jurisdiction of a Suffragan, without the appointment of the Bishop of the diocese, is also made a Præmunire: by stat. 26 H. 8. c. 14; which sets forth at large how Suffragans are to be nominated, &c. See title Bishops.

Also by stat. 5 Eliz. c. 1, to refuse the Oath of Supremacy will incur the pains of Præmunire; and to defend the Pope's jurisdiction in this realm, is a Præmunire for the first offence, and High Treason for the second. So too, by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2, any person importing any Agnus Dei, crosses, beads, or other superstitious things pretended to be hallowed by the Bishop of Rome, and tendering the same to be used; or receiving the same with such intent, and not discovering the offender; or a Justice of the Peace, who, knowing thereof, shall not within 14 days declare it to a Privy Counsellor; all incur a Præmunire. Lastly, to contribute to the maintenance of a Jesuit's college, or any popish seminary whatever, beyond sea; or any person in the same; or to contribute to the maintenance of any Jesuit or popish priest in England, is by stat. 27 Eliz. c. 2, made liable to the penalties of Præmunire.

Thus far the penalties of Præmunire seem to have kept within the proper bounds of their original institution,—the depressing the power of the Pope: but they being pains of no inconsiderable consequence, it has been thought fit to apply the same, as already hinted, to other heinous offences.

Derogating from the King's Common Law Courts, is said to have been an high offence at Common Law, and is made a Præmunire by many antient statutes; for, by the stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 1, of Provisors, If any Subject draw any out of the realm in plea, whereof the cognizance pertains to the King's Court, or of things whereof judgments be given in the King's Courts, or sue in any other Court to defeat or impeach the judgments given in the King's Courts, he shall be warned to appear, &c. in proper person, at a day, containing the space of two months, at which if he appear not, he and his proctors, &c. shall be put out of the King's protection, his lands and chattels forfeited, his body imprisoned, and ransomed at the King's will, &c. See also stat. 16 R. 2. c. 5.

In the construction of these statutes it hath been held, that certain Commissioners of Sewers, for summoning one before them who had got a judgment at law, and imprisoning him till he would release it, were guilty of a Præmunire. 2 Bulst. 299: 3 Inst. 125: Cro. Jac. 336.

Also suits in the Admiralty or Ecclesiastical Courts within the Realm, for matters which, upon the face of the libel itself, appear to belong only to the cognizance of the temporal Courts, are said to be within stat. 16 Rich. 2. by force of the words, "or elsewhere." 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. § 14—19.

And it hath been formerly holden, that even suits in a Court of Equity, to relieve against a judgment at Law, were within the danger of these statutes; especially if they tended to controvert the very point determined at Law, or to relieve in a matter relievable at Law. 4 New Abr. 146.

By stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8. § 40, to molest the possessors of abbey lands, granted by Parliament to Hen. VIII. and Edw. VI. is a Præmunire.—So likewise is the offence of acting as a broker or agent in any usurious contract, where above 10 per cent. interest is taken; by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 8.—To obtain any stay of proceedings, other than by arrest of judgment or writ of error, in any suit for a monopoly, is likewise a Præmunire; by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 3. § 4.—To obtain an exclusive patent for the sole making or importation of gunpowder or arms, or to hinder others from importing them, is also a Præmunire by two statutes: the one, stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 21, the other, stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 8.—On the abolition, by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, of purveyance, and the prerogative of pre-emption, or taking any victual, beasts, or goods for the King's use, at a stated price, without consent of the proprietor, the exertion of any such power for the future was declared to incur the penalties of Præmunire. See title Pourveyance.—To assert, maliciously and advisedly, by speaking or writing, that both or either House of Parliament have a legislative authority without the King, is declared a Præmunire by stat. 13 Car. 2. stat. 1. c. 1.—So, to conspire to avoid the seizure or forfeiture, upon the importation of cattle, as mentioned in stat. 20 Car. 2. c. 7.—By the Habeas-Corpus Act also, stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2, it is a Præmunire, and incapable of the King's pardon, besides other heavy penalties, to send any Subject of this this Realm a prisoner into parts beyond the seas. See title Habeas Corpus.—By stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 8, persons of eighteen years of age, refusing to take the new Oaths of Allegiance, (and formerly of Supremacy, see title Nonjurors; Oaths,) upon tender by the proper Magistrate, are subject to the penalties of a Præmunire: and, by stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 4, Serjeants, Counsellors, Proctors, Attornies, and all Officers of Courts, practising without having taken the Oaths of Allegiance, (and formerly of Supremacy, and subscribed the declaration against Popery,) are guilty of a Præmunire, whether the oaths be tendered or not. See title Oaths.—By stat. 6 Ann. c. 7, to assert maliciously and directly, by preaching, teaching, or advised speaking, that the then pretended Prince of Wales, or any person other than according to the Acts of Settlement and Union, hath any right to the throne of these kingdoms; or that the King and Parliament cannot make Laws to limit the descent of the Crown; such preaching, teaching, or advised speaking, is a Præmunire: as writing, printing, or publishing the same doctrines amount to High Treason.—By stat. 6 Ann. c. 23, if the Assembly of Peers of Scotland, convened to elect their sixteen representatives in the British Parliament, shall presume to treat of any other matter, save only the election, they incur the penalties of a Præmunire.—The stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18, (enacted in the year after the infamous South Sea project had beggared half the nation,) makes all unwarrantable undertakings by unlawful subscriptions, then commonly known by the name of Bubbles, subject to the penalties of a Præmunire: with power to the Court to moderate the judgment.—The stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 11, subjects to the penalties of the statute of Præmunire all such as knowingly and willingly solemnize, assist, or are present at, any forbidden marriage, of such of the descendants of the body the King George II, as are by that act prohibited to contract matrimony, without the consent of the Crown. See titles Marriage; King.

II. The Punishment of this offence may be learned from the foregoing statutes, which are thus mostly summed up by Coke: "That, from the conviction, the defendant shall be out of the King's protection, and his lands and tenements, goods and chattels, forfeited to the King; and that his body shall remain in prison at the King's pleasure; 1 Inst. 129; or (as other authorities have it) during life;" 1 Bulst. 199: both which amount to the same thing; as the King, by his prerogative, may any time remit the whole, or any part, of the punishment 2 Bulst. 209; except in the case of transgressing the statute of Habeas Corpus. These forfeitures, here inflicted, do not (by the way) bring this offence within the general definition of felony; being inflicted by particular statutes, and not by the Common Law. But so odious, Sir Edw. Coke adds, was this offence of Præmunire, that a man, who was attainted of the same, might have been slain by any other man, without danger of Law; because it was provided, by stat. 25 Edw. 3. st. 6. c. 22, that any man might do to him as to the King's enemy; and any man may lawfully kill an enemy. However, the position itself, that it is at any time lawful to kill an enemy, is by no means tenable: it is only lawful, by the laws of nature and nations, to kill him in the heat of battle, or for necessary self-defence. And to obviate such savage and mistaken notions, the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 1, provides, that it shall not be lawful to kill any person attainted in a Præmunire; any law, statute, opinion, or exposition of Law to the contrary notwithstanding. But still such delinquent, though protected, as a part of the Public, from public wrongs, can bring no action for any private injury, how atrocious soever; being so far out of the protection of the Law, that it will not guard his civil rights, nor remedy any grievance which he, as an individual, may suffer. 1 Inst. 130. And no man, knowing him to be guilty, can with safety give him comfort, aid, or relief. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. See 4 Comm. c. 8.

If the defendant be condemned on his default of not appearing, whether at the suit of the King or party, the same judgment shall be given as to the being out of the King's protection and the forfeiture; but instead of the clause, that the body shall remain in prison, there shall be awarded a capiatur. Co. Litt. 129. b: 3 Inst. 125, 218.

A statute, by appointing that an offender shall incur the penalty and danger mentioned in stat. 16 Ric. 2. c. 5, does not confine the prosecution for the offence to the particular process thereby given. 1 Vent. 173.

It is holden, that the statute of Præmunire, which gives a general forfeiture of all the lands and tenements of the offender, extends not to lands in tail. Co. Litt. 130.

It is said, the statute of Præmunire doth not extend to the forfeiture of rents, annuities, fairs, &c. or any other hereditaments that are not within the word terræ. 3 Inst. 126.

This suit need not be by original in B. R. for if defendant be in custodiâ Mareschalli, the suit may be against him by bill; and defendants cannot be sued in any other Court when they are in custodiâ Mareschal'. And if a defendant come not at the day, &c. or if he appears and pleads, and the issue be found against him, or he demurs in law, &c. judgment shall be given, that he shall be out of protection, &c. 3 Inst. 124.

Tenant in tail is attainted in a Præmunire, he shall forfeit his lands only during life; and afterwards the issue in tail shall inherit. 11 Rep. 56.

A person, being seised in fee of lands, was indicted for a Præmunire upon stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2; but before conviction he made an entail of his lands; and it was adjudged, that the attainder should relate to the time of the offence, and that was before he entailed the lands, and not the time of the judgment which was afterwards; and the freehold being in him at the time of the attainder, shall not be divested without an inquisition under the Great Seal. Cro. Car. 123, 172.

It hath been adjudged, that a pardon of all misprisions, trespasses, offences, and contempts, will pardon a Præmunire, Cro. Jac. 336: 2 Bulst. 299.

The defendant in a Præmunire must regularly appear in person, whether he be a Peer or Commoner, unless he is dispensed with by some writ or grant for that purpose; but in the case of Sir Anthony Mildmay, he was allowed to plead a pardon to a Præmunire by Attorney; but it has been thought, that there was some clause to this effect in the pardon. 3 Inst. 125: 1 Roll. Rep. 190: 2 Bulst. 290.

On an indictment of a Præmunire, a Peer of the Realm shall not be tried by his Peers, 12 Co. 92.

On

On an information on the stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18, for setting up a bubble called the South Sea, it was determined that the Court was not obliged by that act to give the whole judgment, as in case of a Præmunire against a defendant, but only such parts of it as in their discretions they should think fit; and accordingly, a fine of 5*l.* was set on the party convicted, and judgment that he should remain in prison during the King's pleasure. 2 Ld. Raym. 361.

PRÆPOSITUS ECCLESIÆ, A Church reeve, or Church-warden; See that title.

PRÆPOSITUS VILLÆ, Sometimes is used for the constable of a town, or petit constable. Cromp. Jurisd. 205. Yet the same author, 194, seems to apply it otherwise; for there quatuor homines præpositi are those four men, who must appear for every town, before the Justices of the forest in their circuit. It is sometimes used for an head or chief Officer of the King, in a town, manor, or village, or a reeve. See Reeve. Animalia & res inventæ coram ipso (præposito) & sacerdote ducendæ erant. LL. Edw. Confessor. cap. 28. Thus Præpositus Villæ, in our old records, does not answer to our present constable, or head-borough of a town; but was no more than the reeve, or bailiff, of the Lord of the Manor, sometimes called Serviens Villæ.

By the Laws of Henry I. the Lord answered for the town where he was resident; where he was not, his dapifer, or seneschal, if he were a Baron: but if neither of them could be present, then Præpositus & quatuor de unaquâque villa, i. e. the reeve and four of the most substantial inhabitants were summoned. See Brady's Glossary to Introduction to English History, pag. 57. in voc. Præpositus.

PRÆROGATIVE; See Prerogative.

PRAYER; See Service and Sacraments.

PRAYERS OF THE CHURCH; See Common Prayer.

PREACHING. Every beneficed Preacher, residing on his benefice, and having no lawful impediment, shall in his own cure, or some neighbouring church, preach one sermon every Sunday of the year: And if any beneficed person be not allowed to be a Preacher, he shall procure sermons to be preached in his cure by licensed Preachers; and every Sunday, whereon there shall not be a sermon, he or his curate is to read one of the homilies: No person, not examined and approved by the Bishop, or not licensed to preach, shall expound the Scripture, &c.: nor shall any be permitted to preach in any Church, but such as appear to be authorised thereto, by shewing their licence; and Churchwardens are to note in a book the names of all strange clergymen who preach in their parish; to which book every Preacher is to subscribe his name, the day he preached, and the name of the Bishop of whom he had licence to preach. Can. 44, 45, 49.

If any person, licensed to preach, refuses to conform to the Ecclesiastical Laws, after admonition, the licence of every such Preacher shall be void: And if any Parson preach doctrine contrary to the word of God, or the Articles of Religion, notice is to be given of it to the Bishop by the Churchwardens, &c. So likewise of matters of contention and impugning the doctrine of other Preachers in the same Church; in which case, the Preacher is not to be suffered to preach, except he faithfully promise to forbear all such matter of contention in the Church, until the Bishop hath taken further order therein. Can. 53, 54.

No Minister shall preach or administer the sacrament in any private house, unless in times of necessity, as in case of sickness, &c. on pain of suspension for the first offence, and excommunication for the second; which last punishment is also inflicted on such Ministers as meet in private houses, to consult on any matter tending to impeach the doctrine of the Church of England. Can. 71, &c.

PREAMBLE, Proœmium, from the preposition præ, before, and ambulo, to walk.] The begining of a statute is called the Preamble; which is a key to the intent of the makers of the act, and the mischiefs which they would remedy by the same. See title Statute.

PRE-AUDIENCE, In the Courts, is of considerable consequence; the following short table of the precedence, which usually obtains among the practisers, is taken from 3 Comm c. 3. p 97. in n.

1. The King's premier Serjeant; (so constituted by special patent).
2. The King's ancient Serjeant, or the eldest among the King's Serjeants.
3. The King's Advocate-General.
4. The King's Attorney-General.
5. The King's Solicitor-General.
6. The King's Serjeants.
7. The King's Counsel, with the Queen's Attorney and Solicitor, and those who have patents of precedence. See title Barrister.
8. Serjeants at Law.
9. The Recorder of London.
10. Advocates of the Civil Law.
11. Barristers.

In the Court of Exchequer, two of the most experienced Barristers, called the Post-man and the Tub-man, (from the places in which they sit,) have also a precedence in motions. See title Motion in Court.

PREBEND, Prebenda.] The portion which every Prebendary of a Cathedral Church receives, in right of his place, as one of the Chapter of the Dean, for his maintenance; as canonica portio is properly used for that share, which every canon receiveth yearly out of the common stock of the Church. And Præbenda is a several benefice rising from some temporal land, or some Church appropriated towards the maintenance of a Clerk, or Member of a Collegiate Church; and is commonly named of the place where the profit arises.

Prebenda, strictly taken, is that maintenance which daily præbetur to another; but now it signifies the profits belonging to the Church, divided into those portions called Præbendæ, and is a right of receiving the profits for the duty performed in the Church, sufficient for the support of the Parson in that divine office where he resides. Decret. title De Præbend.

The Spiritualty and Temporalty make a Prebend, but the Spiritualty is the highest and most worthy; and a person is not a complete Prebendary, to make any grant, &c. before installation and induction. Dyer 221.

Prebends are simple and dignitary:

A simple Prebend hath no more than the revenue for its support; but a Prebend with dignity hath always a jurisdiction annexed; and for this reason the Prebendary is stiled a dignitary, and his jurisdiction is gained by prescription.

Prebends are some of them donative; and some are in the gift of laymen; but in such case they must present the Prebendary to the Bishop, and the Dean and Chapter inducts him, and places him in a Stall in the Cathedral Church, and then he is said to have locum in choro: At Westminster, the King collates by patent, and, by virtue thereof, the Prebendary takes possession without institution or induction. 2 Rol. Abr. 356.

As a Prebend is a benefice without cure, &c. a Prebend and a parochial benefice are not incompatible promotions; for one man may have both without any avoidance of the first: For though Prebendaries are such as have no cure of souls, yet there is a sacred charge incumbent on them in those Cathedrals where they are resident, and they are obliged to preach by the canons of the Church; and it is not lawful for a Prebendary to possess two Prebends in one and the same Collegiate Church. Rol. Abr. 361.

Prebendaries are said to have an estate in fee-simple in right of their Churches, as well as Bishops of their Bishoprics, Deans of their Deaneries, &c.

Corpus Præbendæ, is that which is received by a Prebendary above the profits which are always for his daily maintenance. See further titles Chapter; Clergy; Dean.

PRÆBENDA and PROBANDA were also in old deeds used for provisions, provand or provender. Pro equo suo unum bushel avenarum pro Præbenda capienda. Coucher Book in Dutchy Office, i. 45; Cowell.

PREBENDARY, Prebendarius.] He who hath a prebend; so called, not a præbenda auxilium & consilium episcopo, &c. but from receiving the prebend: And if a manor be the body of a prebend, and is evicted by title paramount; yet the Prebend is not destroyed. 3 Rep. 75.

There is a golden Prebendary of Hereford, otherwise termed Prebendarius Episcopi, who is one of the twenty-eight minor Prebendaries there, and has, ex officio, the first canon's place that falls; he was anciently confessarius of the Cathedral Church, and to the Bishop, and had the offerings at the altar; whereby, in respect of the gold commonly given there, he had the name of Golden Prebendary. Blount.

PRECARIÆ, Days-works, which tenants of some manors were bound, by reason of their tenure, to do for their Lord in harvest; and, in divers places, are still vulgarly called Bind days, for biden-days, which, in the Saxon, dies Precarias sonat: For bidden is to pray or intreat. This custom is plainly set forth in the great book of the Customs of the Monastery of Battel, title Appelderham, fol. 60. Cowell.

PRECEDENCE. The Commonalty of the Realm, like the Nobility, are divided into several degrees: and as the Lords, though different in rank, yet all of them are Peers in respect of their Nobility; so the Commoners, though some are greatly superior to others, yet all are in Law Peers, in respect of their want of Nobility. 2 Inst 29. See 1 Comm. c. 12.

The rules of Precedence in England are reduced by Blackstone to the following table: in which those marked * are entitled to the rank here allotted them, by stat. 31 Hen. 8. c. 10.—those marked †, by stat. 1 W. & M. c. 21.—those marked ‖, by letters patent 9, 10, and 14 Jac. I. which see in Seld. tit. of Hon. II. 5. 46. and II. 11. 3.—those marked ‡, by ancient usage and established custom; for which see (among others) Camden's Britannia, title Ordines; Milles's Catalogue of Hon. edit. 1610; and Chamberlayne's present State of England, b. 3. c. 3.

PRECEDENT CONDITIONS; See Condition IV.

PRECEDENTS, Authorities to follow in determinations in Courts of Justice.

Precedents have always been greatly regarded by the Sages of the Law: The Precedents of the Courts are said to be the Laws of the Courts, and the Court will not reverse a judgment, contrary to many Precedents. 4 Rep. 93: Cro Eliz 65: 2 Lil Abr. 344. But new Precedents are not considerable; Precedents without judicial decision on argument are of no moment: and an extra-judicial opinion given in or out of our Court, is no good Precedent. Vaugh. 169, 382, 399, 429.

It has been held, that there can be no Precedent in matters of Equity, as Equity is universal truth but, according to Lord Keeper Bridgman, Precedents are necessary in Equity to find out the reasons thereof for a guide; and, besides the authority of those who made them, it is to be supposed they did it on great consideration, and it would be strange to set aside what has been the course for a long series of time. 1 Mod. 307. If a man doubt whether a case be equitable, or no, in prudence he will determine as the Precedents have been; especially if made by men of good authority and learning. Ibid. See titles Chancery; Equity.

Precedents must be shewn by the plaintiff for the Court to go against what is generally held. 1 Keb. 47. And where Precedents are alleged, contrary to the opinion of the Court, a day may be given to produce them. Mod. Cas. 199.

Precedents in some cases may make an act good, which otherwise would be void in strictness of Law: And though the forms of writs ought not to be altered, yet Precedents and constant usage must be observed. Jenk. Cent. 162, 172.

If there be cause to alter an ancient Precedent of a writ, by reason of any new statute, &c. the Cursitors are not to keep to the old form, but to alter it as the case requires; to prevent abatement of writs, and vexation to the People. Trin. 1630. See titles Writ; Action.

Lord C. Talbot said, He thought it much better to stick to the known general rules, than to follow any one particular Precedent, which may be founded on reasons unknown to us. Such a proceeding would confound all property. Cases in Chan. in Ld. Talbot's Time, 26, 27, 196. See 16 Vin. Abr. title Precedents.

PRECE PARTIUM, When a suit is continued by the prayer, assent, or agreement of both parties. See stat. 13 Ed. 1. st. 1. c. 27.

PRECEPT, Praeceptum.] Is diversly taken in Law; as sometimes for a command in writing, by a Justice of Peace, or other Officer, for bringing a person or records before him; of which there are many examples in the table of the Register Judicial. And in this sense it seems to be borrowed from the customs of Lombardy, where Praeceptum signifieth scriptura vel instrumentum. Hotom. in verb. Feudal, & lib. 3: Commentar in libros feudor' in praefatione.—Sometimes it is taken for the provocation, whereby one man incites another to commit a felony, as theft, murder, &c. Staundf. Pl Cor. 105: Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 9. calls it praeceptum or mandatum. Whence we may observe three divisions of offending in murder, praeceptum, fortia, consilium; praeceptum being the instigation used beforehand; fortia the assistance in the fact, as to help to bind the party murdered or robbed; consilium, advice either before or in the fact. The Civilians use mandatum in this case. Cowell.

PRE-CONTRACT, mentioned in stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 23.] A contract made before another contract; the term hath relation especially to marriage. See Marriage.

PREDIAL TITHES, Decimae praediales] Are those which are paid of things arising and growing from the ground only, as corn, hay, fruit of trees, and such like. See stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13: 2 Inst. 649: 2 Comm. c. 3: and this Dictionary, title Tithes.

PRE EMPTION, Prae-emptio] The first buying of a thing; it was a privilege heretofore allowed the King's Purveyor, but abolished by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24: See title Pourveyance.

PREGNANCY (Plea of). Where a woman is capitally convicted, and pleads her pregnancy, though this is no cause to stay the judgment, yet it is to respite the execution, till she is delivered. See title Execution of Criminals.

PREMISES, (or PREMISSES.) That part in the beginning of a deed, the office of which is to express the grantor and grantee, and the land, or thing granted or conveyed. 5 Rep. 55. See title Deed II.

No person, not named in the Premises, can take any thing by the deed, though he be afterwards named in the habendum, because the Premises of the deed make the gift; therefore, when the lands are given to one in the Premises, the habendum cannot give any share of them to another, because that would be to retract the gift made, and, consequently, to make a deed repugnant in itself. Thus, for instance; If a charter of feoffment be made between A. of the one part, and B. and D. of the other part, and A. gives land to B. habendum to B. and D. and their heirs; D. takes nothing by the habendum, because all the lands were given to B. consequently D. cannot hold those lands which are given before to another; but in this case, if the habendum had been to B. and D. and their heirs, to the use of B. and D.; this had been a good limitation of a use; consequently, the statute of uses would carry the possession to the use, and B. and D. thereby become joint-tenants. Co. Lit. 6. a: 9 Co. 47. b: Hob. 275, 313: 2 Rol. Abr. 65: Cro. Jac. 564: Cro. Eliz. 58: 13 Co. 54: Poph. 126.

If lands be given to a husband, habendum to him and his wife, and to the heirs of their two bodies, the wife takes nothing, because she was not mentioned in the Premises; therefore shall take nothing of that which was before given entirely to her husband. 2 Rol. Abr. 67.

But there are four exceptions to this rule: 1. If the lands be given in frank-marriage, the woman, who is the cause of the gift, may take by the habendum, though she be not named in the Premises; as if lands be given to J. S. habendum maritagium unà cum the woman who is daughter of the donor; this is a good estate in frank-marriage to them both; because the gift being totally on her account, it is necessary to the creation of the estate in the husband that the wife should take. Co. Litt. 21: Plowd. 158: Cro. Jac. 454: Poph. 126: 2 Roll Abr. 67.

2. In grants of copy of Court-roll; as If a copyholder surrenders to his Lord, without limiting any use, and then the Lord grants it in this manner; J. S. cepit de Domino, habendum to the said J. S. and his wife, and the heirs of their bodies begotten, this is a good estate-tail in the wife; for these customary grants, that are made in pursuance of a former surrender, are construed according to the intention of the parties, as wills are; besides, the custom of the manor is the rule for the exposition of such sorts of grants, and, in many manors, such form is usual. Poph. 125. 126: Cro. Jac. 434: 2 Rol. Abr. 67: Cro. Eliz. 323.

3. A man not named in the Premises may take an estate in remainder by limitation in the habendum. 2 Rol. Abr. 68: Hob. 313: Cro. Jac. 564.

4. In wills; for if a man devises lands to J. S. habendum to him and his wife, this is a good devise to the wife; because, in construction of wills, the intention of the devisor is chiefly regarded; and wherever that discovers itself it shall take place, though it be not expressed in those legal forms that are required in conveyances executed in a man's lifetime. Plowd. 158, 414: 2 Rol. Abr. 68.

PREMIUM, Præmium] A reward: Among merchants it is used for the money the Insured gives the Insurer for insuring the safe return of any ship or merchandize. See title Insurance.

PRENDER, The power or right of taking a thing before it is offered; from the French prendre, i. e. accipere: hence the phrase of Law, it lies in render, but not in Prender. Rep. 1:

PRENDER DE BARON, To take an husband.] It is used for an exception to disable a woman from pursuing an appeal of murder, against one who killed her former husband. St. P. C. lib. 3. c. 59.

PREPENSED, Præpensus] Forethought; as prepensed Malice is Malitia Præcogitata: which makes killing, murder: and when a man is slain on a sudden quarrel, if there were malice Prepensed formerly between the parties, it is murder, or as it is called by the statute, Prepensed murder. See title Homicide III. 3.

PREROGATIVE, from præ and rogo, to ask or demand, before or above others] A word of large extent including all the rights, which, by Law, the King hath as Chief of the Kingdom; and as intrusted with the execution of the Laws. See this Dictionary, title King V.

PREROGATIVE COURT, Curia Prærogativa Archiepiscopi Cantuariensis.] The Court wherein all wills are proved, and all administrations taken which belong to the Archbishop by his Prerogative; that is, in case where the deceased had goods of any considerable value out of the diocese wherein he died; and that value is ordinarily 5*l.* except it be otherwise by composition between the Archbishop, and some other Bishop, as in the diocese of London it is 10*l.* and if any contention grow between two or more, touching such will or administration, the cause is properly decided in this Court: The Judge whereof is termed Judex curiæ Prærogativæ Cantuariensis, the Judge of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. See titles Courts Ecclesiastical; Will.

The Archbishop of York hath also the like Court, which is termed his Exchequer, but inferior to this in power and profit. 4 Inst. 335. As to the Prerogative of the Archbishop of Canterbury or York, see the book intitled, De Antiquitate Brittannicæ Ecclesiæ Cantuariensis Historia, especially the eighth chapter, pag. 2: Cowell.

PRESBYTER, A priest, elder, or honourable person. Isidore, lib. 7.

PRESBYTERIUM, A Presbytery; that part of the church where divine offices are performed, applied to the choir, or chancel; because it was the place appropriated to the Bishop, priests, and other clergy, while the laity were confined to the body of the church. Mon. Ang. i. 243.

PRESBYTERIAN, A sectarist, or dissenter from the church. See titles Nonconformists; Dissenters.

PRESCRIPTION,

Præscriptio.] A title acquired by use and time, and allowed by Law; as when a man claims any thing, because he, his ancestors, or they whose estate he hath, have had or used it all the time, whereof no memory is to the contrary: or it is, where for continuance of time, ultra memoriam hominis, a particular person hath a particular right against another. Kitch. 104: Co. Litt. 114: 4 Rep. 32.

Blackstone classes Title by Prescription among the methods of acquiring real property by purchase; as when a man can shew no other title to what he claims, than that he, and those under whom he claims, have immemorially used to enjoy it. As to customs, or immemorial usages, in general, with the several requisites and rules to be observed, in order to prove their existence and validity, see this Dictionary, title Custom.

I. Of the Distinction between a Prescription and a Custom or Usage; and who may prescribe.

II. What Sort of Things may be prescribed for.

I. Custom is properly a local usage, and not annexed to any person; such as a custom in the manor of Dale, that lands shall descend to the youngest son: Prescription is merely a personal usage; as, that such an one and his ancestors, or those whose estate he hath, have used time out of mind to have such an advantage or privilege. 1 Inst. 113.--As for example: If there be a usage in the parish of Dale, that all the inhabitants of that parish may dance on a certain close, at all times, for their recreation; (which is held to be a lawful usage, 1 Lev. 176. See post. II.;) this is strictly a custom, for it is applied to the place in general, and not to any particular persons: but if the tenant, who is seised of the manor of Dale in fee, alleges that he and his ancestors, or all those whose estate he hath in the said manor, have used time out of mind to have common of pasture in such a close, this is properly called a Prescription; for this is an usage annexed to the person of the owner of his estate. 2 Comm. c. 17.

The difference between Prescription, custom, and usage, is also thus stated: Prescription hath respect to a certain person, who by intendment may have continuance for ever; as for instance, he and all they whose estate he hath in such a thing, this is a Prescription.

Custom is local, and always applied to a certain place; as, time out of mind there has been such a custom in such a place, &c. And Prescription belongeth to one or a few only; but custom is common to all.—Usage differs from both, for it may be either to persons or places; as, to inhabitants of a town, to have a way. &c. 2 Nels. Abr. 1277.

A custom and Prescription are in the right; usage is in possession; and a Prescription that is good for the matter and substance, may be bad by the manner of setting it forth; but where that which is claimed as a custom, in or for many, will be good, that regularly will be so when claimed by Prescription for one. Godb. 54.

Prescription is to be time out of mind; though it is not the length of time that begets the right of Prescription, nothing being done by time, although every thing is done in time; but it is a presumption in Law that a possession cannot continue so long quiet, if it was against right, or injurious to another. 3 Salk. 278.

All Prescription must be either in a man and his ancestors, or in a man and those whose estate he hath; which last is called prescribing in a que estate. 4 Rep. 32. And formerly a man might, by the Common Law, have prescribed for a right which had been enjoyed by his ancestors or predecessors at any distance of time, though his or their enjoyment of it had been suspended for an indefinite series of years. Co. Litt. 113. But by the statute of Limitation, 32 Hen. 8. c. 2, it is enacted, that no persons shall make any prescription by the seisin or possession of his ancestor or predecessor, unless such seisin or possession hath been within threescore years next before such Prescription made. See title Limitation of Actions, II. 1.

Prescriptions are properly personal, therefore are always alleged in the person of him who prescribes, viz. That he, his ancestors, or all those whose estate he hath, &c. or of a body politic or corporation, they and their predecessors, &c. Also a parson may prescribe, quod ipse & prædecessores sui, and all they whose estate, &c. for there is a perpetual estate, and a perpetual succession, and the successor hath the very same estate which his predecessor had, which continues, though the person alters, like the case of ancestor and heir. 3 Salk. 279.

A Prescription must always be laid in him that is tenant of the fee. A tenant for life, for years, at will, or a copyholder, cannot prescribe, by reason of the imbecility of their estates. 4 Rep. 31, 32. For as Prescription is usage beyond time of memory, it is absurd that they should pretend to prescribe for any thing, whose estates commenced within the remembrance of man. And therefore the copyholder must prescribe, under cover of his Lord's estate, and the tenant for life under cover of the tenant in fee-simple. As, if tenant for life of a manor would prescribe for a right of common as appurtenant to the same, he must prescribe under cover of the tenant in fee-simple; and must plead that John Stiles and his ancestors had immemorially used to have this right of common, appurtenant to the said manor, and that John Stiles demised the said manor, with its appurtenances, to him the said tenant for life. 2 Comm. c. 17.

Tenants in fee-simple are to prescribe in their own names, and tenants for life or years, &c. though they may not prescribe in their own names, yet they may in the name of him who hath fee: and where a person would have a thing that lies in grant by Prescription, he must prescribe in himself and his ancestors, whose heir he is by descent; not in himself, and those whose estate, &c.; (unless the que estate is but a conveyance to the thing claimed by Prescription;) for he cannot have their estate that lies in grant without deed, which ought to be shewn to the Court. Co. Litt. 113.

Parishioners cannot generally prescribe, but they may allege a custom; and inhabitants may prescribe in a matter of easement, way to a Church, burying place, &c. 2 Saund. 325: 1 Lev. 253: Cro. Eliz. 441: Cro. Car. 419; 2 Rol. 290.

A custom for all the inhabitants of a parish to play at all kinds of lawful games, sports, and pastimes in a certain close, at all seasonable times of the year, at their free will and pleasure, is good. But a similar custom for all persons, for the time being, in the said parish is bad. 2 H. Black. Rep. 393. See post II.

A Prescription may be laid in several persons, where it tends only to matters of easement or discharge; though not where it goes to matter of interest or profit in alieno solo, for that is a title, and the title of one doth not concern the other; therefore several men, having several estates, cannot join in making a Prescription. 1 Mod. 74: 3 Mod. 250.

Where a man prescribes for a way to such a close, he must shew what interest he hath in the close: Aliter, if he prescribes for a way to such a field; because that may be a common field by intendment. Latch. 160.

Plaintiff declared, that the occupiers of the adjoining field, have, time out of mind, repaired the fences, which being out of repair, his beasts escaped out of his own ground, and fell into a pit; it is good without shewing any estate in the occupiers; but it had not been so if the defendant had prescribed. 1 Ventr. 264.

It should seem that a Prescription by the owner of land, adjoining to a wood, to take underwood there-growing, to repair the fence belonging to the wood, is not good: for of common right the making of the hedge doth appertain to the owner of the wood: and the Prescription is no more than to take wood in the lands of another, to make the hedges of the same land in which the wood groweth, which cannot be a good Prescription, for it sounds only in charge, and not to the profit of him who prescribes. 1 Leon. 313.

Estates gained by Prescription are not, of course, descendible to the heirs general, like other purchased estates, but are an exception to the rule. For, properly speaking, the Prescription is rather to be considered as an evidence of a former acquisition, than as an acquisition de novo: and therefore, if a man prescribes for a right right of way in himself and his ancestors, it will descend only to the blood of that line of ancestors in whom he so prescribes; the Prescription in this case being indeed a species of descent. But, if he prescribes for it in a que estate, it will follow the nature of that estate in which the Prescription is laid, and be inheritable in the same manner, whether that were acquired by descent or purchase: for every accessory followeth the nature of its principal. 2 Comm. c. 17. p. 266.

II. NOTHING but incorporeal hereditaments can be claimed by Prescription; as a right of way, a common, &c.; but no Prescription can give a title to lands, and other corporeal substances, of which more certain evidence may be had. Dr. & St. Dial. 1. c. 8: Finch. 132.—For a man shall not be said to prescribe, that he and his ancestors have immemorially used to hold the castle of Arundel: for this is clearly another sort of title; a title by corporal seisin and inheritance, which is more permanent, and therefore more capable of proof, than that of Prescription. But as to a right of way, a common, or the like, a man may be allowed to prescribe; for of these there is no corporal seisin, the enjoyment will be frequently by intervals, and therefore the right to enjoy them can depend on nothing else but immemorial usage.

A Prescription cannot be for a thing which cannot be raised by grant. For the Law allows Prescription only in supply of the loss of a grant, and therefore every Prescription presupposes a grant to have existed. Thus, the Lord of a Manor cannot prescribe to raise a tax or toll upon strangers; for, as such claim could never have been good by any grant, it shall not be good by Prescription. 1 Ventr. 387.

What is to arise by matter of record cannot be prescribed for, but must be claimed by grant, entered on record; such as, for instance, the Royal franchises of deodands, felons' goods, and the like. These, not being forfeited till the matter on which they arise is found by the inquisition of a Jury, and so made a matter of record, the forfeiture itself cannot be claimed by any inferior title. But the franchises of treasure-trove, waifs, estrays, and the like, may be claimed by Prescription; for they arise from private contingencies, and not from any matter of record. Co. Litt. 114. See title Franchise.

Among things incorporeal, which may be claimed by Prescription, a distinction must be made with regard to the manner of prescribing; that is, whether a man shall prescribe in a que estate, or in himself and his ancestors. For, if a man prescribes in a que estate, (that is, in himself and those whose estate he holds,) nothing is claimable by this Prescription, but such things as are incident, appendant, or appurtenant to lands; for it would be absurd to claim any thing as the consequence, or appendix, of an estate, with which the thing claimed has no connexion: but, if he prescribes in himself and his ancestors, he may prescribe for any thing whatsoever that lies in grant; not only things that are appurtenant, but also such as may be in gross. Litt. § 183: Finch. L. 104.—Therefore a man may prescribe, that he, and those whose estate he hath in the manor of Dale, have used to hold the advowson of Dale, as appendant to that manor: but, if the advowson be a distinct inheritance, and not appendant, then he can only prescribe in his ancestors. So also, a man may prescribe in a que estate for a common appurtenant to a manor; but if he would prescribe for a common in gross, he must prescribe in himself and his ancestors. 2 Comm. c. 17.

A person may make title by Prescription, to an office, a fair, market, toll, way, water, rent, common, park, warren, franchise, Court-leet, waifs, estrays, &c. But no person can prescribe against an Act of Parliament, or against the King, where he hath a certain estate and interest; against the public good, religion, &c. Nor can one Prescription be pleaded against another, unless the first is answered or traversed; or where one may stand with the other. Lutw. 381: Raym. 232: 2 Rol. Abr. 264: 2 Inst. 167: 7 Rep. 28: Cro. Car. 432: 1 Bulst. 115: 2 Lil. 346.

The word easement is a genus to several species of liberties, which one may have in the soil of another, without claiming any interest in the land itself; but where the thing set forth in a Prescription, was to catch fish in the water of another, &c. and no instance could be given of a Prescription for such a liberty by the word easement, a rule was made to set the Prescription right, and to try the merits. 4 Mod. 362. See title Easement.

In trespass for breaking the plaintiff's close, the defendant prescribed, that the inhabitants of such a place, time out of mind, had used to dance there, at all times of the year, for their recreation, and so justified; issue being taken on this Prescription, defendant had a verdict; it was objected against it, that a Prescription to dance in the freehold of another, and spoil his grass, was ill, especially as laid in the defendant's plea, viz. at all times of the year, and not at seasonable times, and for all the inhabitants; who, though they may prescribe in easements which are necessary, as a way to a Church, &c. they cannot in easements for pleasure only: but adjudged, that the Prescription is good, issue being taken on it, and found for the defendant; although it might have been ill on demurrer. 1 Lev 175. See ante I.

A custom that the farmers of such a farm have always found ale, &c. to such a value, at perambulations, was held naught; because it is no more than a Prescription in occupiers, which is not good in matter to charge the land. 2 Lev 164.

Prescription by the inhabitants of a parish to dig gravel in such a pit, the soil of W. R., it was doubted whether this was good or not, though it was to repair the highway; but the inhabitants may prescribe for a way, and, by consequence, for necessary materials to repair it. 2 Lutw. 1346. Sed. q.? and see Gateward's case, 6 Co. 60: where Prescription for common, for every inhabitant of an ancient messuage in a parish, is held not to be good.

Defendant pleaded, that within such a parish, all occupiers of a certain close habent, & habere consueverent, a way leading over the plaintiff's close, to the defendant's house; this was held ill, for it is not like a Prescription to a way to the Church or market, which are necessary, et pro bono publico. 2 Ventr. 186.

A man may claim a fold-course, and exclude the owner of the soil by Prescription. 1 Saund. 153.—But a diversity hath been taken where a Prescription takes away the whole interest of the owner of the land; and where a particular profit is restrained: in one case it is good; in the other void. 1 Leon. 11.

If a person prescribes for common appurtenant, it is ill, unless it be for cattle levant & couchant, &c. And the the reason is, because by such a Prescription the party claims only some part of the pasture, and the quantum is ascertained by the levancy and couchancy, the rest being left for the owner of the soil; therefore, if he who thus prescribes, should put in more cattle than are levant and couchant on his tenement, he is a trespasser. Noy 145: 2 Saund. 324.

In a Prescription to have Common, the Jury found it to be, paying every year a penny. Here the Prescription is entire, whereof the payment of one penny is parcel; which ought to be entirely alleged in the Prescription in the plea, or it will not be good. Cro. Eliz. 563, 564. But where the payment is collateral from the Prescription, a Prescription may be good without alleging it. Cro. Eliz. 405.

It was a question, whether a toll, independent of markets and fairs, might be claimed by Prescription, without shewing that the Subject hath some benefit; and some arguments were brought for it, from an authority in Dyer 352. Though by Holt, this Prescription cannot be good, because there was no recompence for it; and every Prescription to charge the Subject with a duty, must import some benefit to him who pays it; or else some reason must be shewn why the duty is claimed. 4 Mod. 319.

A Court-leet is derived out of the hundred; and if a man claims a title to the leet, he may prescribe that he and his ancestors, and all those whose estate he hath in the hundred, time out of mind, had a leet. Co. Litt. 125.

There may be a Prescription for a Court to hold pleas of all actions, and for any sum or damage; and it will be good. Jenk. Cent. 327. If a Court held by Prescription is granted and confirmed by letters patent, this doth not destroy the Prescription; but it is said the Court may be held by Prescription as before. 2 Rol. Abr. 271.

A grant may enure as a confirmation of a Prescription; and the Prescription continue unaltered by a new charter, &c. where the charter is not contrary to the Prescription. Moor 818, 830 But in some cases it is intended, that a Prescription shall begin by grant; and as to Prescriptions in general, the Law supposes a grant, or purchase originally. Cro. Eliz. 709: Co. Litt. 113.

Every Prescription is taken strictly: and a man ought not to prescribe to that which the Law, of common right, gives. 3 Leon. 13: Noy 20.

A Prescription must have a lawful commencement, and peaceable possession and time are inseparably incident to it. Co. Litt. 113. Though a title gained by custom or Prescription, will not be lost by interruption of the possession for ten or twenty years; but it may be lost by interruption in the right. Co. Litt. 114: 2 Inst. 653.

PRESCRIPTIONS against Actions and Statutes; See title Limitation of Actions II. 2.

PRESCRIPTIONS by the Ecclesiastical Law, as to tithes, &c. See Modus Decimandi; Tithes.

PRESENCE. Sometimes the Presence of a superior Magistrate takes away the power of an inferior. 9 Rep. 118. And the Presence of one may serve for all the feoffees or grantees, &c. 3 Rep. 26. When the Presence of a man, in the place where an offence is done, may make him guilty, vide Accessary.

PRESENTATION, Presentatio.] The act of a patron, offering his clerk to the Bishop of the diocese, to be instituted in a church or benefice of his gift, which has become void. See titles Advowson; Parson.

PRESENTEE, The clerk presented to a church by the patron. In stat. 13 R. 2. st. 1. c. 1, there is mention of the King's Presentee, that is, he whom the King presents to a benefice.

PRESENTMENT, A mere denunciation of Jurors, or some officers, &c. (without any information) of an offence, inquirable in the Court where it is presented. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4. c. 5. Or it may be defined to be an Information made by the Jury in a Court, before a Judge who hath authority to punish an offence. 2 Inst. 739.

The Presentment is drawn up in English by the Jury, in a short note, for instructions to draw the indictment by; and differs from an indictment, in that an indictment is drawn up at large, and brought ingrossed to the Grand Jury to find. 2 Lill. Abr. 353.

There are also Presentments of Justices of Peace in their Sessions, of offences against statutes, in order to their punishment in superior Courts; and Presentments taken before Commissioners of Sewers, &c. Presentments are made in Courts-leet and Courts-baron, before stewards; and, in the latter, of surrenders, grants, &c. Also, by constables, churchwardens, surveyors of the highways, &c. of things belonging to their offices. See this Dictionary, titles Copyhold; Surrender.

A Presentment, generally taken, is a very comprehensive term; including not only Presentments, properly so called, but also inquisitions of office, and indictments by a grand Jury. A Presentment, properly speaking, is the notice taken by a Grand Jury of any offence from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill of indictment laid before them, at the suit of the King. Lamb. Eiren. l. 4. c. 5.—As the Presentment of a nusance, a libel, and the like; upon which the officer of the Court must afterwards frame an indictment, before the party presented can be put to answer it. 2 Inst. 739. An inquisition of office is the act of a Jury, summoned by the proper officer to inquire of matters relating to the Crown, upon evidence laid before them. See title Inquest. Some of these are in themselves Convictions, and cannot afterwards be traversed or denied; and therefore the Inquest or Jury ought to hear all that can be alleged on both sides. Of this nature are all Inquisitions of felo de se; of flight in persons accused of felony; of deodands, and the like; and Presentments of petty officers in the Sheriff's-tourn or Court-leet, whereupon the presiding officer may set a fine. Other Inquisitions may be afterwards traversed or examined; as particularly the Coroner's inquisition of the death of a man, when he finds any one guilty of homicide: for in such cases the offender so presented must be arraigned upon this inquest, and may dispute the truth of it, which brings it to a kind of indictment. See further title Indictment.

PRESIDENT, Præses.] The King's lieutenant in any province; as, President of Wales, &c.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL, Is the fourth great officer of State. See title Precedence. He is as ancient as the reign of King John; and hath sometimes been called Principalis Consiliarius, and other times Capitalis Consiliarius.—During the reign of Q. Elizabeth, the the office remained dormant. It appears to have been exercised in the reign of Jac. I. and was revived by Charles II. See title Privy Council.

The office of President of the Council hath been always granted by letters patent under the Great Seal durante bene placito; and this officer is to attend on the King, to propose business at the Council-table, and report to his Majesty the transactions there: also he may associate the Lord Chancellor, Treasurer, and Privy Seal, at naming of Sheriffs; and all other acts limited by any statute, to be done by them. 21 Hen. 8. c. 20. See 1 Comm. 230.

PRESS, Liberty of the; See Libel IV; Jury.

PRESSING, for the Sea-service; See this Dictionary, title Impressing Seamen.

PRESSING TO DEATH; See Mute.

PREST, A duty in money, to be paid by the Sheriff on his account, in the Exchequer, or for money left, or remaining in his hands. See stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 4.

PRESTATION-MONEY, Præstatio, a paying or performing.] Is a sum of money paid by Archdeacons yearly to their Bishop pro exteriore jurisdictione—Et sint quieti à Præstatione muragii. Chart. H. 7. Burgens. Mount-Gomer. Præstatio was also anciently used for Purveyance. See Philips's book on that subject, p. 222.

PREST-MONEY, from the French prest, promptus, expeditus; for that it binds those who receive, to be ready at all times appointed, being meant commonly of soldiers. See stats. 18 H. 6. c. 19: 7 H. 7. c. 1: 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 2.

PRESUMPTIO, Was anciently taken for intrusion, or the unlawful seizing of any thing. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 11.

PRESUMPTION, Presumptio.] A supposition, opinion, or belief previously formed. Co. Lit. 6, 375: Wood's Inst. 599.

Where many houses are let by one lease, the Court will presume that the lessee is in possession of them all, if he be in possession of any one of them, and the contrary doth not appear to the Court. See title Lease. I. 1. So in other cases, though Presumption is what may be doubted of, yet it shall be accounted truth, if the contrary be not proved. 2 Lill. Abr. 354. But no Presumptions ought to be admitted against the Presumptions of Law, and wrong shall never be presumed. Co. Litt. 232, 273.

If the eldest son be beyond sea at the death of the ancestor, and the youngest enters into the land, he is not accounted in Law a disseisor; because the Law presumes, that he preserves the possession for his brother; but if on his brother's return he keeps him out of possession, then the Law looks on him as a disseisor. Latch. 68. See titles Evidence; Life Estate.

Where the Law intrusts persons with the execution of a power, the Court ought to give credit to them in the execution of that power; though if they make a false return whereby the party and Justice are abused, they may be punished. 12 Mod. 382.

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE OF FELONY; See titles Evidence; Felony; Homicide, &c.

PRESUMPTIVE HEIRS, Such persons who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would, in the present circumstances of things, be his heirs; but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born. See title Descent I.

PRETENDED TITLES, Buying or selling; See titles Champerty; Maintenance.

PRETENSED RIGHT, Jus Prætensum] Where one is in possession of land, and another who is out of possession claims and sues for it; here the Pretensed Right or title is said to be in him who so claims and sues for the same. See Mod Cas. 302.

PRETIUM SEPULCHRI; See title Mortuary.

PRICE; See titles Consideration; Agreement, &c.

PRIDE GAVEL, from prid, the last syllable of lamprid, and gavel, a rent or tribute] In the manor of Rodeley in the county of Gloucester, is a rent paid to the Lord, by certain tenants, in duty and acknowledgment to him for the privilege of fishing for lampreys or lamprids in the river Severn. Tayl. Hist. Gavelk. 112.

PRIESTS, In general signification, are any ministers of a church; but in our Law, this word is particularly used for ministers of the church of Rome. See title Papists.

PRIMAGE, A duty at the water-side, due to the master and mariners of a ship; to the master for the use of his cables and ropes, to discharge the goods of the merchant; and to the mariners for lading and unlading in any port or haven; it is usually about 12*d. per* ton, or six pence per pack or bale, according to custom. Merch. Dict. See Stat. Antiq. 32 H. 8. c. 14.

PRIMER-FINE, On suing out the writ or præcipe, called a writ of covenant, there is due to the King, by ancient prerogative, a Primer Fine, or a Noble for every five marks of land sued for; that is, one tenth of the annual value. See title Fine of Lands I. 1.

PRIMICERIUS, The first of any degree of men; sometimes it signifies the nobility. Primicerios totius Angliæ, the Nobility of England. Mon. Angl. i. 838.

PRIMIER SEISIN, Prima seisina.] The first possession, or seisin; heretofore used as a branch of the King's prerogative whereby he had the first possession, that is, the entire profits for a year of all the lands and tenements, whereof his tenant (who held of him in capite) died seised in his demesne as of fee, his heir being then at full age, until he did homage, or, if under, until he were of age. Staundf. Prærog. cap. 3. and Bracton, l. 4. tr. 3. c. 1. But all the charges arising by Primier Seisins are taken away by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. See title Tenures.

PRIMIER SERGEANT, The King's first Serjeant at Law. See title Precedence.

PRIMO BENEFICIO, The first Benefice in the King's gift, &c. See Beneficio primo, &c.

PRIMOGENITURE, Primogenitura.] The title of an elder son or brother in right of his birth: the reason of which Coke says, is, Qui prior est tempore, potior est jure; affirming moreover, That, in King Alfred's time, knights' fees descended to the eldest son; because, by the division of such fees between males, the defence of the realm might be weakened. And Doderidge, in his treatise of Nobility, saith, (pag. 119.) it was anciently ordained, That all knights' fees should come unto the eldest son by succession of heritage; whereby he, succeeding his ancestors in the whole inheritance, might be the better enabled to maintain the wars against the King's enemies, or his Lord's: and that the socage should be partible among the male children, to enable them to increase into many families, for the better furtherance in,

ing and increase of, husbandry. Cowell, and Leg. Alfred: Dodd. Treat. Nobil. 119. See title Descent.

PRINCE, Princeps.] Sometimes taken at large for the King himself; but more properly for the King's eldest son, who is called PRINCE OF WALES. See title King II.

It is said by some writers, that the King's eldest son is Prince of Wales by Nativity; but others say, that he is born Duke of Cornwall, and afterwards created Prince of Wales, though from the day of his birth he is stiled Prince of Wales, a title originally given by Edward I. to his son. His titles are, Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall, and Earl of Chester.

Before Edward II. who was the first Prince of Wales, and born at Caernarvon in that Principality, (his mother being sent there big with child by Edward I. to appease the tumultuous spirit of the Welch,) the eldest son of the King was called Lord Prince; but Prince was a name of dignity long before that time in England. Staundf. Prærog. c. 22, 75. See stats. 27 H. 8. c. 26: 28 H. 8. c. 3. And Stow's Annals, p. 303. In a charter of King Offa, after the Bishops had subscribed their names, we read, Brordanus Patritius, Binnanus Princeps; and afterwards the Dukes subscribed their names. And in a charter of King Edgar, in Mon. Angl. tom. 3. p. 302; Ego Edgarus Rex rogatus ab episcopo meo Deorivolfe, & Principe meo Alfredo, &c. And in Matt. Paris, p. 155; Ego Halden Princeps Regi: pro viribus assensum præbeo, & ego Turketillus Dux concedo.

As Duke of Cornwall, and likewise Earl of Chester, the Prince of Wales is to appoint the Sheriffs, and other Officers, in those counties. The Prince of Wales, besides the revenues of the Principality of Wales, Duchy of Cornwall, &c. has also an income settled on him, from time to time, by Parliament. See stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 78, enabling the Prince to make leases in the Duchy of Cornwall; and stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 125, for preventing the accumulation of debts by any future Heir-Apparent of the Crown, and for regulating his mode of expenditure from the time of his having a separate establishment.

PRINCIPAL, Principalium.] Is variously used in our law; as an heir loom, &c.

The word Principal, was also sometimes anciently used for a mortuary, or corse-present. See title Mortuary.

In Urchenfield in the county of Hereford, certain Principals, as the best beast, the best bed, the best table, &c. pass to the eldest child, and are not liable to partition.

The chief person in some of the Inns of Chancery is called Principal of the House. Cowell.

PRINCIPAL AND ACCESSARY; See this Dictionary, title Accessory.

PRINCIPAL CHALLENGE, A species of the challenge to Jurors for suspicion of partiality. This takes place where the cause assigned carries with it primâ facie evident marks of suspicion, either of malice or favour. See titles Jury II; Challenge.

PRINTING; See Books; Libel; Literary Property.

PRINTS AND ENGRAVINGS; See title Literary Property.

PRIOR, Was in dignity next to the abbot, or the chief of a convent, &c. See title Abbot.

PRIORS ALIENS, Priores Alieni.] Were certain religious men, born in France and Normandy, Governors of Religious Houses erected for foreigners here in England; but were suppressed by Henry V. and afterwards their livings were given to other monasteries and houses of learning, and especially towards the erecting of the King's Colleges, at Cambridge and Eaton. 2 Inst. 584. See Stow's Annals, 582: and stat. 1 Hen. 5. c. 7.

PRIORITY, Prioritas.] An antiquity of tenure, in comparison of another less ancient. Old Nat. Br. 94. Crompt. in his Jurisd. fol. 117, useth this word in the same signification. The Lord of the Priority shall have the custody of the body, &c. and fol. 120; if the tenant hold by Priority of one, and by Posteriority of another, &c. To which effect, see also F. N. B. 142. and tit. Posteriority.

PRIORITY OF DEBTS AND SUITS: See titles Action; Abatement; Pleading, &c.—As to payment of Debts by an Executor in order of Priority; see this Dictionary, title Executor.—As to Priority of mortgages, see title Mortgage.

There is no Priority of time, in Judgments; for the Judgment first executed shall be first paid. See title Judgment.

Wherever any suit on a penal statute may be said to be actually depending, it may be pleaded in abatement of a subsequent prosecution, being expressly averred to be for the same offence. Neither will it be any exception to such a plea, that the offence in the subsequent prosecution is laid on a day different from that in the former. Neither doth a mistake in such a plea of the very day, whereon the suit pleaded as prior was commenced, seem to be material on the issue of nul tiel record, if it appear in truth to have been commenced before the other, and for the same matter.

And if two Informations be exhibited on the very same day, it seems that they may mutually abate one another; because there is no Priority to attach the right of the suit in one informer, more than in the other. Also it seems, that an information or bill the same day that they are filed, may be so far said to be depending before any process sued on them, that they may be pleaded in abatement of any other suit on the same statute. And from the same reason it seems also, that a writ of debt may be so pleaded in abatement of any other suit on the same statute; and from the same reason it seems also that a writ of debt may be so pleaded after it is returned; because then it seems to be agreed, that it may be properly said to be depending; and whether it may not also be so pleaded before it be returned, seems questionable; because, according to some opinions, a writ may be said to be depending as soon as purchased. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26. § 63. See title Information.

Those points of law, where Hawkins seems to doubt, are now, in general, pretty clearly settled, according to what appeared to be his opinion.

PRISAGE, Prisagium.] That share which belongs to the King, or Admiral, out of such merchandises as are taken at sea, by way of lawful prise, which is usually a tenth part. See stat. 31 Eliz. c. 5.

PRISAGE OF WINES is an ancient duty or custom on wines, payable at certain ports, except London, Southampton, &c. It is where the King claims out of every ship or vessel laden with wine, containing twenty tons or more, two tons of wine, the one before, the other behind the mast, at his price, which is twenty shillings for each ton; but this varies according to the custom of places; and at Boston every bark laden with ten tons of wine, or above, above, pays Prisage. This word is almost out of use, being now called Butlerage, because the King's chief butler receives it. See title Customs on Merchandise.

PRISE; See Prize.

FRISO, A prisoner taken in war. Hoveden, p. 541.

PRISON, Prisona] A place of confinement for the safe custody of persons, in order to their answering any action, civil or criminal. See title Gaol.

Prison Breaking; See title Gaol, III.

PRISONER, Prisonarius, Fr. Prisonnier.] One confined in prison, on an action, or commandment: and a man may be a prisoner on matter of record, or of fact: a prisoner on matter of record, is he who, being present in Court, is by the Court committed to prison; and the other is on arrest, by the Sheriff, &c. Staundf. P. C. 34, 35. See titles Gaol II. [illegible] Debtors; Execution III. 4; Insolvent Debtors.

PRIT; See Pleading.

PRIVATEERS, A kind of private men of War, the persons concerned wherein administer, at their own costs, a part of a war, by fitting out these ships of force, and providing them with all military stores; and they have, instead of pay, leave to keep what they take from the enemy, allowing the Admiral his share, &c.

Privateers may not attempt any thing against the laws of nations; as to assault an enemy in a port or haven, under the protection of any Prince or Republic, whether he be friend, ally, or neuter; for the peace of such places must be inviolably kept; therefore by a treaty made between King William and the States of Holland, before a commission shall be granted to any Privateer, the commander is to give security, if the ship be not above 150 tons, in 1500*l*. and if the ship exceed that burden, in 3000*l*. that they will make satisfaction for all damages which they shall commit in their courses at sea, contrary to the treaties with those States, on pain of forfeiting their commissions; and the ship is made liable. Lex Mercat. 177, 178.

Besides these private commissions, there are special commissions for Privateers, granted to commanders of ships, &c. who take pay, and are under a marine discipline; and if they do not obey their orders, may be punished with death. And the wars in latter ages, have given occasion to Princes to issue these commissions, to annoy the enemies in their commerce, and hinder such supplies as might strengthen them, or lengthen out the war: and likewise to prevent the separation of ships of greater force from their fleets or squadrons. See titles Letters of Marque; Admiralty.

PRIVATION, Privatio.] A taking away or withdrawing: most commonly applied to a Bishop or Rector, when by death, or other act, they are deprived of their preferments; it seems to be an abbreviation of the word Deprivation. Co. Litt. 239.

PRIVEMENT ENSIENT, The term to signify a woman being with child; but not quick with child. Wood's Inst. 662.

PRIVIES, from the Fr. Privé, i. e. Familiaris.] Those who are partakers, or have an interest in any action or thing, or any relation to another; as every heir in tail is privy to recover the land entailed, &c. Old Nat. Br. 117.

There are five several kinds of Privies, viz. Privies of blood, such as the heir to the ancestor; Privies in representation, as executors or administrators, to the deceased; Privies in estate, between donor and donee, lessor and lessee, &c. Privies in respect of contract; and Privies on account of estate and contract together. 3 Rep. 23, 123: 4 Rep. 123: Latch. 260.

It is also said, that there are three sorts of Privies and Privities; in estate, in blood, and in law.

Privies in blood are intended of Privies in blood inheritable, and this in three manners, viz. inheritable as general heir, or as special heir, or as general and special heir.

Privies in estate, as joint-tenants, baron and feme, donor and donee, lessor, and lessee, &c.

Privies in law are, when the law, without blood or privity of estate, casts the land on one, or makes his entry lawful; as lord by escheat, lord who enters for mortmain, lord of villain, &c. 8 Rep. 42, b: Jo. 32.

The Author of the New Terms of the Law maketh many sorts of Privies, viz. Privies in estate, Privies in deed, Privies in law, Privies in right, and Privies in blood. See Perkins, 831, 832, 833. Coke, lib. 3. f. 23. and lib. 4, 123, 124, mentions four kinds of Privies, viz. Privies in blood, as the heir to his father; Privies in representation, as executors or administrators to the deceased; Privies in estate, as he in reversion, and he in the remainder, when land is given to one for life, to another in fee, for that their estates are created both at one time: the fourth is Privy in tenure, as the lord by escheat, that is, when the land escheateth to the lord for want of heirs. Cowell.

If a fine be levied, the heirs of him who levied it are termed Privies. See title Fine of Lands I. If a lessor grants his reversion, the grantee and lessee are Privies in estate: Privies in contract extend only to the persons of the lessor and lessee; and where the lessee assigns all his interest, here the lessor and lessee remain Privy in contract, but not in estate, which is removed by the assignment. 3 Rep. 23.

Privies, in respect of estate and contract, appear, where the lessee assigns his interest; but the contract between the lessor and lessee, as to action of debt, continues, the lessor not having accepted of the assignee. 3 Lev. 295.

If the lessor grants over his reversion, or if the reversion escheat, now between the grantee, or the lord by escheat, and the lessee, there is Privity in estate only.

Privity of contract only, is personal Privity, and extends only to the person of the lessor, and to the person of the lessee; as when the lessee assigned over his interest, notwithstanding his assignment, the Privity of the contract remained between them, though Privity of the estate be removed by the act of the lessee himself; and the reason of this is,

1st, Because the lessee himself shall not prevent by his own act such remedy, which the lessor had against him by his own contract; but when the lessor granted over his reversion, there, against his own grant, he cannot have remedy, because he has granted the reversion to the other, to which the rent is incident.

2dly, The lessee may grant the term to a poor man, who shall not be able to manure the land, and who will by indigence, or for malice, permit it to lie fresh, and then the lessor shall be without remedy, either by distress, or by action of debt, which shall be inconvenient, and will concern in effect every man (because for the most most part every man is a lessor, or a lessee); and for those two reasons all the cases of entry by tort, eviction, suspension, and apportionment of the rent are answered; for in such cases it is either the act of the lessor himself, or the act of a stranger; and in none of the cases, the sole act of the lessee himself shall prevent the lessor of his remedy, for that it will introduce such inconvenience as has been said. See title Lease I. 3.

Privity of contract and estate together, is between the lessor and lessee himself. 3 Rep. 23.

Where there are Privies in contract, and the Privity is altered by assignment of an executor, &c. before any rent due, and after the Privity of estate, by the assignment of the executor's assignee, nothing remains whereby to maintain any action. Latch 260.

There are likewise Privies in deed, or in Law; where the deed makes the relation; or the Law implies it, in case of escheats to the Lord, &c. And only parties and Privies shall take advantage of conditions of entry on lands, &c. Co. Litt. 516.

If I deliver goods to a man, to be carried to such a place, and he, after he hath brought them thither, steal them, it is felony; because the Privity of delivery is determined as soon as they are brought thither. Staundf. Pl. Cor. lib. 1. cap. 15, 25. Merchants privy are opposed to merchant strangers, in stat. 2 Ed. 3. c. 9, 15.

Privies inheritable, as heir general, shall take benefit of the infancy; as if infant tenant in fee-simple makes feoffment, and dies, his heir shall enter. The same law of him who is heir general and special, and also of him that is heir special, and not general. But Privies in estate (unless in some special cases) shall not take advantage of the infancy of the other. 8 Rep. 42. b. 43.

PRIVILEGE,

Privilegium.] Is defined by Cicero, in his oration pro domo suâ, to be lex privato homini irrogata. It is, says another, Jus singulare, whereby a private man, or a particular Corporation, is exempted from the rigour of the Common Law. It is sometimes used in Law for a place which hath some special immunity. Kitchin 118.

Privilege is either personal or real: a personal Privilege is, that which is granted to any person, either against or beyond the course of the Common Law in other cases; as for example, Privilege of Parliament.

A Privilege real is, that which is granted to a place, as to the Universities, that none of either may be called to Westminster Hall, on any contract made within their own precincts, or prosecuted in other Courts: and one belonging to the Court of Chancery cannot be sued in any other Court, certain cases excepted; and if he be, he may remove it by writ of Privilege, grounded on the statute 18 E. 3. Cowell. Officers of that Court are to be sued in the petty bag office.

Privilege is an exemption from some duty, burden, or attendance, to which certain persons are entitled; from a supposition of Law, that the stations they fill, or the offices they are engaged in, are such as require all their care; that therefore, without this indulgence, it would be impracticable to execute such offices, to that advantage which the public good requires. 4 New Abr. 215.

I. Of Privilege in Suits, allowed Officers and Attendants in the Courts of Justice; and see titles Abatement I. 3. (a); Attorny.

II. Of the Privilege of Peers and Members of Parliament; in addition to what is said under titles Parliament; Peer.

III. Of the Proceedings in Courts, by and against Persons entitled to Privilege of Parliament.

I. The Officers, Ministers, and Clerks of the Courts in Westminster Hall are allowed particular Privileges in respect of their necessary attendance on those Courts; they are regularly to sue and be sued in the Courts they respectively belong to, and cannot (except in certain cases) be impleaded elsewhere; which Privilege arises from a supposition of Law, that the business of the Court, or their clients' causes would suffer by their being drawn into another than that in which their personal attendance is required. 2 Inst. 551: 4 Inst. 71: Vaugh. 154: Dyer 377. a. pl. 30.

The following extract from Tidd's Pract. K. B. applies in general, not only to Attornies, but to all other Officers of the Court; and details the nature of the practice by and against them; authorities are cited by Mr. Tidd for all the positions laid down.

Where an Attorney is plaintiff, he is entitled to sue in his own Court, by attachment of Privilege, and may lay the venue in Middlesex. But an Attorney, or other privileged person, defendant, has not the Privilege of changing the venue into Middlesex, when it is laid in another county. Where he is defendant, he must be sued in his own Court by bill, even as acceptor of a bill of exchange, or for a debt under forty shillings; and cannot be arrested or holden to special bail. It is also said, that an Attorney is entitled to have his cause tried at bar. These Privileges are allowed, not so much for the benefit of Attornies, as of their clients; and are therefore confined to Attornies who practise, or at least have practised within a year: and they are never allowed against the King; but actions qui tam are not considered as the King's actions. Neither are they allowed to Attornies, as against each other: it being a general rule, that there can be no Privilege against Privilege. But this rule only applies to Attornies of the same Court; for where they are of different Courts, the plaintiff is entitled to his Privilege. It is also settled, that an Attorney shall not be allowed his Privilege, where he sues or is sued in auter droit, as executor or administrator; or jointly with his wife, or other person who is not privileged; or where there would otherwise be a failure or defect of justice; as where an appeal, which only lies in the Court of K. B. is brought against an attorney of the Common Pleas, or such an Attorney is in the actual custody of the Marshal: but where an Attorney of the Common Pleas puts in bail, to an action depending in the Court of K. B. he does not thereby lose his Privilege; but may plead it in that action, or in any other brought against him by the bye: for it would be absurd, that he who founds his action on that of another, should be in a better condition than the original plaintiff. Yet where an Attorney, having put in bail, waives his Privilege, by pleading in chief, in one action, it is construed to be a waiver waiver of Privilege, in all other actions brought against him by the bye, during the same term.

The Attachment of Privilege, at the suit of an Attorney, is in nature of a Latitat: therefore, in replying it to a plea of the statute of Limitations, the plaintiff must set forth the continuances: and, like a Latitat, it may be sued out, and will warrant proceedings, against several defendants for distinct causes of action. In suing it out, the rule is, that " every Attorney shall leave a præcipe with the signer of the writs, containing the defendants' names, not exceeding four in each writ, with the return and day of signing such writ, and the agent's or Attorney's name who sued out the same; and that all such præcipes shall be entred on the roll, where the præcipes of Latitats, and all other writs issuing out of this Court, are entered; and the Officer, that signs the writs in this Court, shall not sign such attachment, till a præcipe be left with him for that purpose." R. Hil. 20 Geo. 2.

An Attorney was formerly permitted to hold the defendant to special bail, upon an attachment of Privilege, for fees or disbursements, however trifling. But now, since the statutes for preventing frivolous and vexatious arrests, the defendant cannot be arrested and holden to special bail, upon an attachment of Privilege, or any other process, unless the cause of action amount to ten pounds or upwards. Where it is under that amount, the defendant must be served with a copy of the process, and notice to appear, as in other cases.

The time allowed for declaring upon an attachment of Privilege, is the same as upon a Latitat, or other process in trespass. And if an Attorney sue out an attachment of Privilege, and deliver or file his declaration, and give notice thereof, four days exclusive before the end of the term wherein the attachment is returnable, the defendant must plead as of that term; the plaintiff having entered a rule to plead, and demanded a plea: but if he do not declare within that time, the defendant may impart to the next term; and if he do not declare before the essoin day, the defendant will have an imparlance to the term following.

The bill against an Attorney is a complaint in writing, describing the defendant as being present in Court; and generally concludes with a prayer of relief, though the declaration upon the bill is not demurrable for want of it. Formerly, the bill against an Attorney could only have been filed in term time, sedente curiâ, and not in vacation. But now it may be filed in vacation, as well as in term time: though if it be filed in vacation, otherwise than to avoid the statute of Limitations, the plaintiff will not be allowed his costs, if the action be settled before the ensuing term.

In practice, it is usual to file the bill, on stamped parchment, with the Clerk of the declarations, in the King's Bench Office; and to deliver a copy of it, on stamped paper, to the defendant, with notice thereon to plead in four days. And if the bill be filed, and a copy thereof delivered, four days exclusive before the end of the term, including Sunday, the defendant must plead as of that term; the plaintiff having entered a rule to plead, and demanded a plea: but if the bill be not filed, and a copy delivered within that time, the defendant is entitled to an imparlance. See title Pleading.

The rest of the Proceedings, by and against Attornies, are the same as in other cases; only that they are not bound to pay for copies of the pleadings.

Where J. S. was arrested in B. R. and after the arrest he procured himself to be made an Attorney of C. B. and prayed his Privilege, it was disallowed, because it accrued pendente lite. 2 Rol. Rep. 115.

If an Attorney lays his action in London, the Court will change the venue on the usual affidavit; for, by not laying it in Middlesex, he seems regardless of his Privilege, and is to be considered in the same light as an unprivileged person. 2 Vent. 47: Salk. 668.

As to other persons than Attornies claiming Privilege; the following cases are deserving notice:

Anderson, Ch. J. of C. B. brought trespass by bill for breaking his house in the city of Worcester, against a citizen of that city; the Mayor and Commonalty came and shewed a Charter granted by Edward VI. and demanded conusance of pleas; but it was refused, because the Privilege of that Court, of which the plaintiff was a Chief Member, is more ancient than the patent; for the Justices, Clerks, and Attornies, ought to be there attending their business, and shall not be impleaded or compelled to implead others elsewhere; and this Privilege was given the Court on the original erection of it. 3 Leon. 149.

In debt against the Warden of the Fleet, by bill of Privilege, he refused to appear; the Court doubted how they could compel him, as they could not forejudge him the Court, he having an inheritance in his office; but it being surmised that he made a lease of his office, it was held that he should not have his Privilege, for that the lessee, and not he, was the Officer during the lease. 2 Leon. 173.

So, if the Marshal of B. R. grants his place for life; the grantor has no Privilege during that time. 1 Vent. 65.

A Clerk of B. R. was sued in an inferior Court for a debt under five pounds, and had a writ of Privilege allowed; for the stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 23, never intended to take away the Privilege of Attornies. Palm. 403.

In the Court of Exchequer there are three sorts of Privilege: 1st, As Debtor. 2dly, As Accountant. 3dly, As Officer. Hard. 365.

J. S. was sued in London, which he removed into B. R. and afterwards prayed his Privilege of the Court of Exchequer; and on the puisne Baron's coming into Court, and bringing the red book of the Exchequer, which shewed that he was an Escheator, and so an Accountant to the King, the Privilege was allowed. Noy 40. Sed qu? the Officer having chosen the Court of B. R. for determination of his suit, and thereby, as it seems, submitted to the jurisdiction.

If one holds of the Queen as of her manor, he shall not have the Privilege of the Exchequer for that cause; but if the King grants tithes, and thereupon reserves a rent nomine decimæ, and a tenure of him, there he shall have Privilege. 2 Leon. 21.

A Latitat being sued out against the Commissioners of the Treasury, the puisne Baron of the Exchequer came into the Court of B. R. and brought the red book of the Exchequer, which is deemed a Record in that Court; and thereby it appeared, that the Treasurer had Privilege of being sued only in that Court; and the patent being produced in Court which constituted the defendants, &c. and granted them the office of Treasurer of England, their Privilege was allowed without putting them to bring a writ of Privilege; the Court grounding themselves on the Record before them. 2 Show. 299.

It hath been held, that the Treasurer of the Navy is eo ipso an accountant; and that an accountant's Privilege will hold against a special Privilege in another Court, as Officer of the Court or otherwise, though it be not alleged, that such an accountant is entered on his account; for that every accountant may be attached by the Court to make up his account, and must attend for that purpose de die in diem. Hard. 316. See Moor 753: 2 Inst. 23, 551: Bro. Privilege 16.

In debt in B. R. against J. S. he pleaded to the jurisdiction, That none of the Privy Chamber ought to be sued in any other Court, without the special licence of the Lord Chamberlain of the houshold, and that he was one of the Privy Chamber; on demurrer to this plea, the Court over-ruled it with great resentment, and awarded a Respondeas ouster. Raym. 34: 1 Keb. 137.

It was agreed, that the Privilege of the Court of C. B. which Serjeants claimed, extended only to inferior Courts, not to the Courts in Westminster-Hall; and that a Serjeant may be sued in any of these, because he is not confined to that Court alone, but may practise in any other Court; but it is otherwise as to Attornies or Philasers, who cannot practise in their own name in any other Court but such as they respectively belong to; and that a Serjeant at Law is to be sued by original, not by Bill of Privilege. 2 Lev. 129: 3 Keb. 42: Moor 296: S. C.

So, in action by bill brought in C. B. against a Serjeant at Law, he pleaded, that he ought to have been sued by original, and not by bill; and on demurrer, the Court held, that the case of a Serjeant and Prothonotary's Clerk were on the same footing, neither of them being bound to personal attendance, as Prothonotaries and Attornies were; that therefore he ought to have been sued by original; and accordingly gave judgment for the defendant. Trin. 7 G. 2. Serjeant Girdler's case.

J. S. being arrested by a writ out of C. B. brought his writ of Privilege as Clerk of the Crown Office; but, it appearing that he was only a Clerk to a Clerk of that Office, and not an immediate Clerk of the Office, a supersedeas to the writ of Privilege was granted, on motion; the Court having agreed, that he had no more Privilege than an Attorney's Clerk. 2 Show. 287.

A Serjeant at Law, or Barrister, as well as an Attorney, or other privileged person, whose attendance is necessary in Westminster Hall, may lay his action in Middlesex, though the cause of action accrued in another county; and the Court on the usual affidavit will not change the venue. Sil. 460: Moor 64: 2 Show. 242.

On a motion to discharge a rule which had been obtained for changing the venue, it appeared, that the plaintiff was a Barrister and Master in Chancery: and the Court held that he had Privilege, by reason of his attendance, to lay his action in Middlesex, therefore discharged the rule. 2 Raym. 1556.

As to the obstructions of public Justice, by means of pretended privileged places, see this Dictionary title Arrest: The following is a fuller statement of the statutes there referred to:

By stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. § 15, for preventing the many ill practices used in privileged places to defraud persons of their debts; the pretended Privileges of White Friars, the Savoy, Salisbury Court, Ram Alley, Mitre Court, Fuller's Rents, Baldwin's Gardens, Montague Close, the Minories, Mint, Clink, or Deadman's Place, are taken away. And the Sheriffs of London or their Officers are enabled to take the posse comitatûs, and such other power as shall be requisite, and enter such privileged places to make any arrest on legal process, and in case of refusal to break open doors.

The stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 28, enacts, That if any person within Suffolk Place, or the Mint, or the pretended limits thereof, wilfully obstruct persons executing any writ, &c. or abuse any person executing the same, whereby he receive damage or bodily hurt, the person offending shall be transported. And on complaint to three Justices, &c. by any person who shall have a debt owing from any one who resides in the Mint, having a legal process taken out for recovery thereof, if the debt be above 5 l. on oath thereof, the Justices are empowered to issue their warrant to the Sheriff of Surry, to raise the posse, and to enter the pretended privileged place, and arrest the party, &c. See also stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 22, enforcing the above penalties.

II. In an indictment for treason or felony, trespass vi & armis, assault or riot, process of outlawry shall issue against a Peer; for the suit is for the King, and the offence is a contempt against him; but in civil actions between party and party, regularly a Capias or Exigent lies not against a Lord of Parliament. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 199: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 16. See post. III. & title Outlawry.

If a Peer of Parliament be convicted of a disseisin with force, a capias pro fine and exigent shall issue; for the fine is given by statute, in which no person is exempted. Cro. Eliz. 170: See Dyer 314.

So, in debt on an obligation against the Earl of Lincoln, who pleaded non est factum, which being found against him, the judgment was ideo capiatur; on a writ of error brought by him, it was objected that a capias does not lie against a Peer; sed non allocatur: for by this plea found against him, a fine is due to the King, against whom none shall have any Privilege. Cro. Eliz. 503.

An information was exhibited in B. R. against the Earl of Devonshire, for striking in the King's Palace; which being in time of Parliament, he insisted on his Privilege, and refused to plead in chief, but sent in his plea of Privilege, to which there was a demurrer and the plea over-ruled, and he was fined 30,000*l.* Comb. 49.

Peers are punishable by attachment for contempts in many instances; as for rescuing a person arrested by due course of Law; for proceeding in a cause against the King's writ of prohibition; for discharging other writs, wherein the King's Prerogative, or the liberty of the Subject are nearly concerned; and for other contempts which are of an enormous nature. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 33.

If a Peer be returned on a Jury, on his bringing a writ of Privilege he may be discharged; also it seems the better opinion, that without such writ he may either challenge himself or be challenged by the party. Dyer 314: Moor 767: 9 Co. 49: Co. Lit. 157: 1 Jon. 153. See title Jury.

So, if a Peer be made Steward of a base Court, or Ranger of a Forest, he may, from the dignity of his person, fon, and the presumption that he is engaged in the more weighty affairs of the Commonwealth, exercise these Offices by deputy; though there are no words for this purpose in his creation. 9 Co. 49. a.

So if a licence be granted to a Peer to hunt in a chase or forest, he may take such a number of attendants with him as are suitable to his dignity. 9 Co. 49. b.

If a Peer bring an appeal, the defendant shall not be admitted to wage battle, by reason of the dignity of his person. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 45. § 5.

III. There are two ways of proceeding against Peers of the Realm and Members of the House of Commons; first, by original writ; and, secondly, by bill. See title Original.

The method of proceeding by Original is by Summons, Attachment, and Distress infinite. The Original should issue into that county where the defendant lives; and a copy of it is usually made out by the plaintiff's Attorney for the Sheriff, and served as the summons on the defendant. And it is said, that a Peer or Peeress, cannot be attached (on civil process), but should be brought in by summons. Before, or on the quarto die post of the return of the Original, the defendant either appears or makes default; for he cannot cast an essoin. If he make default, the plaintiff should sue out a Distringas, and after that (if necessary) an alias or pluries distringas; upon which he may move to increase and sell the issues, as before directed. Or if the Sheriff return, upon the distringas, &c. that the defendant hath nothing by which he can be distrained, the plaintiff may have a testatum distringas into another county.

The distringas and other subsequent process upon the Original, state the cause of action at large; and must be made returnable on a general return day, ubicunque, or wheresoever the King shall then be in England. Each succeeding writ must be teste'd on the quarto die post of the return of the preceding one; and there must be fifteen days at least between the teste and return.

If the defendant appear, upon any of these writs, he should enter his appearance with the Filaser; and when the purpose of the writ is thus answered, "the issues (if any have been levied) shall be returned; or, if sold, what shall remain of the money arising by such sale shall be repaid to the party distrained upon." See stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. § 4. But the plaintiff, in such case, is entitled to his costs: and where he had obtained rules for selling the issues levied upon a distringas, alias, and pluries, and also a rule for an attachment against the Sheriff, but the defendant appeared before any issues had been actually levied; the Court ordered, that upon payment of the costs of issuing the writs, the rules should be discharged; being of opinion, that these costs were not to abide the event of the suit, but were to be paid to the plaintiff immediately; and at all events, whether he should finally succeed in the suit or not.

At Common Law, it was not usual to proceed by bill against Peers of the Realm, or Members of the House of Commons; but now by statute 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 3. extended by stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50 to Scotland; "Any person or persons, having cause of action against any Knight, Citizen, or Burgess of the House of Commons, or any other person entitled to Privilege of Parliament, may prosecute such Knight, &c. in his Majesty's Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer, by summons and distress infinite, or by original bill and summons, attachment and distress infinite; which the said respective Courts are empowered to issue against them, or any of them, until he or they shall enter a common appearance, or file common bail, to the plaintiff's action, according to the course of each respective Court." Since the making of this statute, Peers of the Realm, and Members of the House of Commons, may be sued by bill and summons, &c. as well as by original writ. But this mode of proceeding is not allowed as against unprivileged persons.

The bill against a Peer of the Realm, or Member of the House of Commons, is a complaint in writing, describing the defendant as having Privilege of Parliament; and concludes with a prayer by the plaintiff, of process to be made to him, according to the form of the statute, &c. This bill is filed on stamped parchment, with the Clerk of the Declarations, in the King's Bench Office: and the first process thereon is a writ of Summons; which is a judicial writ, issuing out of the same Office, and directed to the Sheriff of the county where the venue is laid, commanding him to summon the defendant. Upon this writ the defendant should be summoned, in like manner as upon the Original; and, if he do not appear at the return of it, is subject to the like process of Distringas, &c.

The writ of Summons, and other subsequent process upon the bill, differ from the process by Original, in the following particulars; first, that they do not state the cause of action at large, but only require the defendant to answer the plaintiff, generally, in a plea of trespass on the case, to his damage of, &c. (according to the plea), as he can reasonably shew, that thereof he ought to answer; secondly, that they are teste'd on the very return, and not on the quarto die post of the return, of each other; thirdly, that they are made returnable on days certain, and not on general return days; and fourthly, that there need not be fifteen days between the teste and return of them.

If the defendant appear, he files common bail; and the plaintiff declares against him. The time of declaring against a Peer of the Realm, or Member of the House of Commons, is the same as in other cases. But there are these differences in the manner of declaring: first, that the declaration by bill begins with a Memorandum; and secondly, that in assigning the breach in Assumpsit, against a Peer of the Realm, whether by Bill or Original, as well as in the Bill or Original itself, the plaintiff must not charge the defendant with 'contriving and fraudulently intending craftily and subtilly to deceive and defraud him;' for the House of Lords have adjudged it a very high contempt and misdemeanor, to charge a Member of their House with any species of fraud or deceit.

All further proceedings against Peers of the Realm, and Members of the House of Commons, are the same as against other persons; only it should be remembered, that as no capias lies against them in civil actions, they cannot be taken in execution; unless where the judgment is obtained upon a statute-staple, or statute-merchant, or upon the statute of Acton Burnel; in which cases a capias lies, even against Peers of the Realm: And see ante II.

Lord

Lord Stourton brought a bill against Sir Thomas Meers, to compel him to a specific performance of articles for purchasing Lord Stourton's estate. Sir Thomas in his defence insisted, that there were defects in Lord Stourton's title to the estate; and it being ordered that Lord Stourton should be examined on interrogatories touching his title; it was objected, that Lord Stourton, being a Peer, ought to answer on Honour only; but it was ruled by Lord Harcourt, that though privilege did allow a Peer to put in his answer on Honour only, yet this was restrained to an answer; and as to all affidavits, or where a Peer is examined as a witness, he must be on oath; and that this examination on interrogatories, being in a cause wherein his Lordship was plaintiff, to force the execution of an agreement, as his Lordship would have Equity, so he should do Equity; and allow the other side the benefit of a discovery, and that in a legal manner; and accordingly ordered Lord Stourton to put in his examination on oath. 1 P. Wms. 145.

Peers, in suits in Equity, are entitled to a letter missive, which method was introduced on a presumption that Peers would pay obedience to the Chancellor's letter; and is founded on that respect which is due to the Peerage. Jenk. 107. If the Lord doth not appear on the letter, a subpœna, on motion, is awarded against him; because no subsequent process can be awarded but on a contempt to the Great Seal, and the Chancellor's letter is only ex gratia. If, on the service of the subpœna, the Peer doth not appear, or if he appears, and does not put in his answer, no attachment can be awarded against him, because his person cannot be imprisoned; but the proceedings must be by sequestration, unless cause, &c. and this is regularly made out, on affidavit made of the service of the letter and subpœna, though sometimes it is moved for without, since the Peer may shew want of service at the day assigned to shew cause why the sequestration should not issue; and this order for a sequestration is never made absolute without an affidavit of the service of the order to shew cause, and a certificate of no cause shewn. 2 Vent. 342. See title Chancery.

A sequestration was granted, unless cause, against Lord Clifford, for want of an answer; he afterwards put in an answer, which being reported insufficient, it was moved for a sequestration absolutely, an insufficient answer being as no answer; but the Court thought it a hardship, in the case of a Peer or Member of the House of Commons, that a sequestration, which in some respects is in nature of an execution, should be the first process against them; therefore allowed, that in case of an answer which is reported insufficient, the plaintiff is to move again de novo, for a sequestration nisi. 2 P. Wms. 385. See 3 Atk. 740.

It was moved for a sequestration nisi, for want of an answer, against a menial servant of a Peer, as the first process for contempt, in the same manner as in the case of the Peer himself; and though the motion was granted by the Master of the Rolls, yet the Registrar refused to draw it up, as thinking it against the course of the Court; which being moved again before the Chancellor, his Lordship, on reading the stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 3, likewise granted the motion, it appearing to be both within the meaning and words of the statute; and if it were not so, as it was plain no attachment would lie against their persons, consequently there would be no remedy against them, and they would have a greater privilege than their Lord, if the process against such menial servant were to be a subpœna. 1 P. Wms. 535.

PRIVITY, Privité.] Private familiarity, friendship, inward relation: If there be Lord and tenant, and the tenant holds of the Lord by certain service, there is a Privity between them in respect of the tenure. Cowell. See title Privies.

PRIVY, from the French privé, familiaris.] Signifies him who is partaker, or hath an interest in any action or thing; Old Nat. Brev. 117. See title Privies.

PRIVILEGIUM CLERICALE, Or, in common speech, the Benefit of Clergy; See Clergy, Benefit of.

PRIVILEGIUM Property propter. A man may have a qualified property in animals feræ naturæ, propter Privilegium: that is, he may have the Privilege of hunting, taking and killing them, in exclusion of other persons. 2 Comm. c. 25. p. 394. See title Game.

PRIVY-COUNCIL,

[Concilium Regis, Privatum Consilium.] A most Honourable Assembly of the King himself and his Privy Counsellors in the King's Court or Palace, for matters of State. 4 Inst. 53.

This is the principal Council belonging to the King, and is generally called, by way of eminence, The Council. According to Coke's description of it at length, it is a Noble, Honourable, and Reverend Assembly, of the King and such as he wills to be of his Privy Council, in the King's Court or Palace. The King's will is the sole constituent of a Privy Counsellor; and this also regulates their number, which, of ancient time, was twelve or thereabouts. Afterwards it increased to so large a number, that it was found inconvenient for secrecy and dispatch; and therefore King Charles II. in 1679 limited it to thirty: whereof fifteen were to be the Principal Officers of State, and those to be Counsellors, virtute officii; and the other fifteen were composed of ten Lords and five Commoners of the King's choosing. But since that time the number has been much augmented, and now continues indefinite. At the same time also, the ancient Office of Lord President of the Council was revived in the person of Anthony Earl of Shaftesbury. See title President of the Council.

Next to the Lord President of the Council, the Lord Privy Seal sits in Council, the Secretaries of State, and many other Lords and Gentlemen: And in all debates of the Council, the lowest delivers his opinion first, and the King declares his judgment last; and thereby the matter of debate is determined. 4 Inst. 55.

No inconvenience now arises from the extension of the number of the Privy Council, as those only attend who are especially summoned for that particular occasion, upon which their advice and assistance are required. The Cabinet Council, as it is called, consists of those Ministers of State, who are more immediately honoured with his Majesty's confidence, and who are summoned to consult upon the important and arduous discharge of the Executive Authority: their number and selection depend only on the King's pleasure; and each Member of that Council receives a summons or message for every attendance. 1 Comm. c. 5. p. 230. in n.

Privy Counsellors are made by the King's nomination, without either patent or grant; and, on taking the necessary necessary oaths, they become immediately Privy Counsellors, during the life of the King that chooses them, but subject to removal at his discretion.

As to the qualifications of Members to sit at this Board: any natural-born Subject of England is capable of being a Member of the Privy Council; taking the proper oaths for security of the Government, and the test for security of the Church. But, in order to prevent any persons under foreign connections from insinuating themselves into this important trust, as happened in the reign of King William in many instances, it is enacted by the act of Settlement, Stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2, that no person born out of the dominions of the Crown of England, unless born of English parents, even though naturalized by Parliament, shall be capable of being of the Privy Council.

The duty of a Privy Counsellor appears from the oath of Office, which consists of seven articles: 1. To advise the King, according to the best of his cunning and discretion. 2. To advise for the King's honour and good of the public, without partiality through affection, love, meed, doubt, or dread 3. To keep the King's Counsel secret. 4. To avoid corruption. 5. To help and strengthen the execution of what shall be there resolved. 6. To withstand all persons who would attempt the contrary. And, lastly, in general, 7. To observe, keep, and do all that a good and true Counsellor ought to do, for his Sovereign Lord. 4 Inst. 54.

The power of the Privy Council is to inquire into all offences against the Goverment; and to commit the offenders to safe custody, in order to take their trial in some of the Courts of Law. But their jurisdiction herein is only to inquire, and not to punish: and the persons committed by them are entitled to their Habeas Corpus by stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 10; as much as if committed by an ordinary Justice of the Peace. By the same statute, the Court of Star-chamber, and the Court of Requests, both of which consisted of Privy Counsellors, were dissolved; and it was declared illegal for them to take cognizance of any matter of property, belonging to the Subjects of this kingdom. But, in Plantation or Admiralty causes, which arise out of the jurisdiction of this kingdom; and in matters of lunacy or idiocy, being a special flower of the prerogative; with regard to these, although they may eventually involve questions of extensive property, the Privy Council continue to have cognizance, being the Court of Appeal in such cases: or, rather, the Appeal lies to the King's Majesty himself in Council; which is, in fact, a Court of Justice, which must at least consist of three Privy Counsellors. See 3 P. Wms. 108: 1 Comm. c. 5. Whenever also a question arises between two provinces in America or elsewhere, as concerning the extent of their Charters and the like, the King in his Council exercises original jurisdiction therein, upon the principles of feodal Sovereignty. And so likewise when any person claims an island or a province, in the nature of a feodal Principality, by grant from the King or his Ancestors, the determination of that right belongs to his Majesty in Council: as was the case of the Earl of Derby, with regard to the Isle of Man, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; and the Earl of Cardigan and others, as representatives of the Duke of Montague, with regard to the Island of St. Vincent in 1764. But from all the dominions of the Crown, excepting Great Britain and Ireland, an appellate jurisdiction (in the last resort) is vested in the same tribunal; which usually exercises it's judicial authority in a committee of the whole Privy Council, who hear the allegations and proofs, and make their report to his Majesty in Council, by whom the judgment is finally given. See 3 Inst. 182: 4 Inst. 53.

The Court of Privy Council cannot decree in personam in England, unless in certain criminal matters: nor the Court of Chancery in rem out of the kingdom. See Lord Hardwicke's argument in Pen v. Baltimore, where the jurisdiction of the Council and Chancery upon questions arising on subject-matters abroad, is very fully discussed. 1. Ves. 444.

The privileges of Privy Counsellors, as such, (abstracted from their honorary precedence, see title Precedence,) consist principally in the security which the Law has given them against attempts and conspiracies to destroy their lives. For, by stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 14, if any of the King's servants, of his household, conspire or imagine to take away the life of a Privy Counsellor, it is felony, though nothing be done upon it. The reason of making this statute, Coke says, was because such a conspiracy was, just before this Parliament, made by some of King Henry VII.'s household servants, and great mischief was like to have ensued thereupon. 3 Inst. 38. This extends only to the King's menial servants. But the stat. 9 Ann. c. 16, goes further; and enacts, that any person who shall unlawfully attempt to kill, or shall unlawfully assault, and strike, or wound, any Privy Counsellor in the execution of his office, shall be a felon without benefit of clergy. This statute was made upon the daring attempt of the Sieur Guiscard, who stabbed Mr. Harley, afterwards Earl of Oxford, with a pen-knife, when under examination for high crimes in a Committee of the Privy Council. And anciently if one did strike another in the house of a Privy Counsellor, or in his presence, the party offending was to be fined. 4 Inst. 53.

The dissolution of the Privy Council depends upon the King's pleasure; and he may, whenever he thinks proper, discharge any particular Member, or the whole of it, and appoint another. By the Common Law also it was dissolved ipso facto by the King's demise; as deriving all its authority from him. But now, to prevent the inconveniences of having no Council in being at the accession of a new Prince, it is enacted by stat. 6 Ann. c. 7, that the Privy Council shall continue for six months after the demise of the Crown, unless sooner determined by the successor. See 1 Comm. c. 5.

It is consistent with safety for a Privy Counsellor to give the King counsel when demanded; and the best counsel is ever given to a Prince, when the question is evenly propounded, so as the Counsellor cannot discern which way the King himself inclines; resolution should never precede deliberation, nor execution go before resolution; and when, on debate and deliberation, any matter is well resolved by the Council, a change of it on some private information is neither safe nor honourable. 4 Inst.

The Court of Privy Council is of great antiquity: The Government in England was originally by the King and Privy Council; though at present the King and Privy Council only intermeddle in matters of complaint plaint on sudden emergencies; their constant business being to consult for the public good in affairs of State. 4 Inst. 53.

The Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament have often transmitted matters of high concern to the King and Privy Council: And acts of the Privy Council, whether orders or proclamations, were of great authority: Hen. VIII. procured an act of Parliament to be made, that, with the advice of his Privy Council, he might set forth proclamations, which should have the force of acts of Parliament; but that statute was repealed in the reign of Ed. VI.

Acts of the Privy Council continued of great authority until the reigns of K. Charles I. and II.: And by these were controversies sometimes determined touching lands and rights, as well as the suspension of penal Laws, &c. But this seemed to be contrary to stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 4. And by stat. 16 Car. 1. cap. 10. § 5. it is declared, that neither the King, nor the Privy Council, have authority by petition, &c. to determine or dispose of lands, &c. of any Subject. See ante: and title Liberty.

The King, with advice of his Council, publishes proclamations binding to the Subject; but they are to be consonant to, and in execution of, the Laws of the land.

It is in the power of the Privy Council to inquire into crimes against Government; they may commit persons for Treason, and other offences against the State, in order for their trial in other Courts; and any of the Privy Council may lawfully do it. See title Commitment I.

By stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 23, persons examined by the Privy Council, on treasons, &c. done within or without the realm, may be tried before Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, appointed by the King in any county of England: This statute, as far as it relates to treason committed within the kingdom, is repealed by stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10. See title Treason.

If a person be killed beyond sea, out of the realm, the fact may be examined by the Privy Council, and the offender tried according to the aforesaid statute. See title Homicide.

PRIVY SEAL, Privatum Sigillum.] A Seal which the King useth to such grants or things, as pass the Great Seal. 2 Inst. 554. See Keeper of the Privy Seal.

No protection can be granted under the Privy Seal, but under the Great Seal: But a warrant of the King under the Privy Seal to issue money out of his coffers, is sufficient; though not under the Privy Signet. 2 Inst. 555: 2 Rep. 17: 2 Rol. Abr. 183. The Privy Seal is sometimes used in things of less consequence, that never pass the Great Seal; as to discharge a recognizance, debt, &c. But no writ shall pass under the Privy Seal, which toucheth the Common Law. 2 Inst. 555. Matters of the Privy Seal are not issuable, or returnable in any Court, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 211. See title Grant of the King.

PRIVY VERDICT; See title Jury.

PRIZES, Captio; præda; from the Fr. prendre.] A booty taken from an enemy in time of war: generally applied to the cases of Capture at Sea.

The Prize Courts in the Admiralty, and the Courts of Lords Commissioners of Appeals, have the sole and exclusive jurisdiction over the question of Prize or no Prize, and who are the Captors, notwithstanding any of the Prize Acts: and if they pronounce a sentence of condemnation, adjudging also who are the Captors, the Courts of Common Law cannot examine the justice or propriety of it, even though, perhaps, they would have put a different construction on the Prize Acts. And the same Courts have power to enforce their decrees. 4 Term Rep. 382. See this Dict. title Admiral, ad fin. and 2 Show. 232: Comb. 474: 1 Sid. 320.

PRO, A preposition, signifying for, or in respect of a thing; as pro consilio, &c. And in Law, pro in the grant of an annuity pro consilio, shewing the cause of the grant, amounts to a condition: But in a feoffment, or lease for life, &c. it is the consideration, and doth not amount to a condition; and the reason of the difference is, because the state of the land by the feoffment is executed, and the grant of the annuity is executory. Plowd. 412. See titles Condition; Grant.

PROBARE, To claim a thing as a man's own. Leg. Canut. c. 44.

PROBATE OF TESTAMENTS, Probatio Testamentorum.] The exhibiting and proving Wills and Testaments before the Ecclesiastical Judge, delegated by the Bishop, who is Ordinary of the place where the party dies. If all the deceased's goods, chattels, and debts owing to him, were in the same diocese, then the Bishop of the diocese, &c. hath the Probate of the Testament; but if the goods and chattels were dispersed in divers dioceses, so that there were any thing out of the diocese where the party lived, to make what is called bona notabilia, then the Archbishop of Canterbury, or York, is the Ordinary to make Probate by his prerogative. Blount. See title Executor V. 3.

The Probate of a will is usually made in the Spiritual Court, and is done by granting letters testamentary to the executor under seal of the Court, by which the executor is enabled to bring any action, &c. And if such letters testamentary are granted to the party who exhibits the will, merely on his oath, by swearing that he believeth it to be the last will of the deceased, this is called proving it in common form; and such a Probate may be controverted at any time: but if the executor, besides his own oath, produces witnesses to prove it to be the last will of the deceased, and this in the presence of the parties who claim any interest, or in their absence, if they are summoned, and do not appear; this is termed a Probate per testes, which cannot be questioned after thirty years. 2 Nels. Abr. 1301.

On an issue whether the deceased made an executor or no, the Probate of the will was adjudged good proof. 2 Lill. Abr. 375. And where the Probate of a will is produced in evidence at a trial, the defendant cannot say that the will was forged, or that the testator was non compos mentis; because it is directly against the seal of the Ordinary, in a matter where he had a proper jurisdiction: but the defendant may give in evidence that the seal itself was forged, or that the testator had bona notabilia, or he may be relieved on appeal. 1 Lev. 235: Raym. 405: 1 Strange 481. The Probate is evidence only in questions relating to the personal estates; as a will relating to real estate, only, need not be proved. See title Will.

As the Judge of the Spiritual Court only can determine the validity of wills for things personal; therefore the Probate of such a will is undeniable evidence to a Jury, and may not be controverted at Common Law. 1 Ld. Raym. 262.

A Probate, according to Holt, is evidence of a will only as to chattels: but if a will of lands be lost, it shall be allowed for such a will concerning lands. 1 Ld. Raym. 731, 735.

When Probate is to be granted of a will, wherein a legacy is interlined in a different hand, and supposed to be forged, the executor has no remedy but in the Spiritual Court; where the will ought to be proved, with a special reservation as to that clause. 1 P. Wms. 388.

Notwithstanding appeal from a will, a person is complete executor by the Probate; though the Probate may be traversed, if an executor plaintiff do not conclude with a profert hic in curiâ, or the defendant may demand oyer of the will. 3 Bulst. 72.

An executor being made by the act of the party deceased, the law entitles him to the Probate of the will, and the Probate cannot be revoked or altered, which would in effect make a new will; yet it may be suspended by an appeal: but if administration be granted to one, this is by act of the Court; and if he afterwards become bankrupt, &c. the administration may be repealed. 1 Rol. Rep. 226: Show. 293: 1 Salk. 36: 2 Nelf. Abr. 1302. See title Executor V. 3.

By stat. 21 H. 8. c. 5, which first settled the fees to be taken by a Registrar and Judge in the Probate of wills, it is enacted, that if the officer takes more than his due fees, he shall forfeit 10*l.* to be divided between the King and party grieved.

By several acts of Parliament, stamps are imposed on the Probates of wills and letters of administration, according to the value of the property of the deceased.

The power of granting Probates and administration of the goods of persons dying, for wages or work done in the King's docks and yards, shall be in the Ordinary of the diocese where the person dieth; or in him to whom power is given by such Ordinary, to the exclusion of the Prerogative Court, &c. Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. Several statutes have also been passed, regulating and alleviating the expence of the Probates of the Wills, or Administrations of the effects, of sailors, &c. in the King's service.

PROBATOR, An accuser, or approver, or one who undertakes to prove a crime charged upon another.

The word was strictly meant of an accomplice in felony, who, to save himself, confessed the fact, and accused any other principal or accessary, against whom he was bound to make good the charge by duel, or trial by the country, and then was pardoned life and members, but yet to suffer transportation. Bracton: Fleta, lib. 2. c. 52. §42, 44. See titles Accessary; Approver.

PROCEDENDO, or Procedendo in loquelâ.] A writ which lieth where an action is removed from an inferior to a superior Jurisdiction, as the Chancery, King's Bench, or Common Pleas, by Habeas Corpus, Certiorari, or writ of privilege; to send down the cause to the Court from whence removed, to proceed on it; it not appearing to the higher Court that the suggestion is sufficiently proved. F N. B. 153: 5 Rep. 63. See stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 23. So, where a cause has been removed from an inferior Court, the Court of K. B. will grant a Procedendo if the debt or damages appear to be under 10*l.* Tidd's Pract. K. B.

If the party who sues out the Habeas Corpus, or Certiorari, doth not put in good bail in time, (where good bail is required) then there goes this writ to the inferior Court to proceed notwithstanding the Habeas Corpus, &c. Rule, Mich. 1654. § 8

If a Certiorari or Habeas Corpus, to remove a cause, be returned before a Judge, the Judge will give a rule thereon to put in good bail, by such a day, which if the defendant, on serving his attorney with a copy of the rule, doth not do, then the Judge will sign a note or warrant for a Procedendo, to remove the cause where the action was first laid, unless bail is perfected in four days after service of the rule: Also if bail be put in at the time, and do not prove good, the Judge will grant a rule for better bail to be put in by a certain day, or else to justify the bail already put in; which if defendant doth not do, the Judge will then likewise grant a warrant for a Procedendo. Tidd. Pract. K. B. See titles Certiorari; Habeas Corpus.

Where bail, put in on removal of a cause into B. R. is disallowed by the Court, if the defendant on a rule for that purpose, and notice given, refuse to put in better bail, such as the Court shall approve of, a Procedendo may be granted; for disallowing the bail makes the defendant in the same condition as if he had put in no bail, and until the bail is put in and filed, the Court is not possessed of the cause so as to proceed in it. Mich. 24 Car. B. R.

After a record returned, and the defendant hath filed bail in B. R on a cause being removed, a Procedendo ought not to be granted; because by giving and filing bail in this Court, the bail below is discharged. Sid. 313.

The Procedendo removes the suspension created by the Habeas Corpus, and a cause once remanded thereby, cannot afterwards be removed or stayed before judgment. Stat. 21. Jac. 1. c 23. § 3.

This writ may also be awarded when it appears upon the return of the Habeas Corpus, that the Court above cannot administer the same justice to the parties, as the Court below. As where an action is brought in London on a custom or bye-law, which is only suable there. See titles Habeas Corpus IV. ad fin.

Where an Habeas Corpus is brought, after interlocutory, and before final, judgment in an inferior Court, and the defendant dies before the return of it, a Procedendo shall be awarded; because, by stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, the plaintiff may have a scire facias against the executors, and proceed to judgment, which he cannot have in another Court: and by this means he would be deprived of the effect of his judgment, which would be unreasonable. Salk. 352. So where an action was brought in the Sheriffs Court of London against two partners, and one of them brought a Habeas Corpus, and put in bail for himself only, a Procedendo was granted; for otherwise the plaintiff would have been disabled from going on in either Court. 1 Stra. 527.

PROCEDENDO ON AID PRAYER. If a man pray in aid of the King, in a real action, and aid be granted; it shall be awarded that he sue to the King in Chancery, and the Justices in the Common Pleas shall stay until the writ of Procedendo de loquelâ come to them: And if it appear to the Judges by pleading, or shewing of the party, that the King hath interest in the land, or shall lose rent, &c. there the Court ought to stay until they have from the King a Procedendo in loquelâ: And then they may proceed in the plea, until they come to give judgment; when the Justices ought not to proceed to judgment, without a writ for that purpose. So in a personal action, if defendant pray in aid of the King, the Judges are not to proceed till they receive a Procedendo in loquelâ. And though they may then proceed and try the issue joined, they shall not give judgment until a writ comes to proceed to judgment. New Nat. Brev. 342.

Procedendo ad Judicium; A remedial writ in case of refusal or neglect of justice, which issues out of the Court of Chancery, where Judges of any subordinate Court do delay the parties; for that they will not give judgment, either on the one side or the other, when they ought so to do. In this case a writ of Procedendo shall be awarded, commanding them, in the King's name, to proceed to judgment; but without specifying any particular judgment: for that (if erroneous) may be set aside in the course of appeal, or by writ of error, or false judgment: and upon further neglect or refusal, the Judges of the inferior Court may be punished for their contempt by writ of attachment, returnable in the Court of King's Bench or Common Pleas. 3 Comm c. 7: F N B. 153, 154. 240.

If a verdict pass for the plaintiff in assise of novel disseisin before the Justices of assise, and before they give judgment, by a new commission, new Justices are made; the plaintiff in assise may sue forth a Certiorari, directed to the other Justices to remove the record before the new Justices; and another writ to the new Justices to receive and inspect the record, and then proceed to judgment, &c. New Nat. Brev. 342, 343.

Where the authority of Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, &c. or of Justices of the Peace, is suspended by writ of supersedeas; their power may be restored by a writ of Procedendo. Regist. 124: 12 Ass. 21: H. P. C. 162.

PROCESS,

Processus; à procedendo ab initio usque ad finem.] Is so called, because it proceeds or goes out, upon former matter, either original or judicial; and hath two significations: First, it is largely taken for all the proceedings in any action or prosecution, real or personal, civil or criminal, from the beginning to the end: Secondly, that is termed the Process by which a man is called into any temporal Court, because it is the beginning or principal part thereof, by which the rest is directed; or, taken strictly, it is the proceeding, after the original, before judgment. Britton 138: Lamb. lib. 4: Crompt. 133: 8 Rep. 157.

I. Of Process in civil Cases.

II. In criminal Cases.

I. Blackstone considers Process in civil cases as the means of compelling the defendant to appear in Court. This is sometimes called original Process, being founded upon the original writ; and also to distinguish it from mesne or intermediate Process, which issues, pending the suit, upon some collateral interlocutory matter; as to summon Juries, Witnesses, and the like. Finch. L. 436. Mesne Process is also sometimes put in contradistinction to final Process, or Process of execution; and then it signifies all such Process as intervenes between the beginning and end of a suit. 3 Comm. c. 19.

Process therefore, as it is now to be considered, is the method taken by the law to compel a compliance with the original writ; of which the primary step is by giving the party Notice to obey it. This notice is given upon all real præcipes, and also upon all personal writs for injuries not against the peace, by summons; which is a warning to appear in Court at the return of the original writ, given to the defendant by two of the Sheriff's messengers called Summoners, either in person or left at his house or land. Finch. L. 436. This warning on the land is given, in real actions, by erecting a white stick or wand on the defendant's grounds; Dalt. Sher. c. 31. And by stat. 3 Eliz c. 3, the notice must also be proclaimed on some Sunday before the door of the parish church.

If the defendant disobeys this verbal monition, the next Process is by writ of attachment, or Pone; so called from the words of the writ, "pone per vadium et salvos "plegios: Put by gage and safe pledges A. B. the de-" fendant, &c" This is a writ, not issuing out of Chancery, but out of the Court of Common Pleas, being grounded on the non appearance of the defendant at the return of the original writ; and thereby the Sheriff is commanded to attach him, by taking gage, that is, certain of his goods, which he shall forfeit if he doth not appear; or by making him find safe pledges or sureties, who shall be amerced in case of his non-appearance. This is also the first and immediate Process, without any previous summons, upon actions of trespass vi et armis, or for other injuries, which though not forcible are yet trespasses against the peace, as deceit and conspiracy; where the violence of the wrong requires a more speedy remedy, and therefore the original writ commands the defendant to be at once attached, without any precedent warning. 3 Comm. 280.

If, after attachment, the defendant neglects to appear, he not only forfeits this security, but is moreover to be farther compelled by writ of Distringas, or distress-infinite; which is a subsequent Process issuing from the Court of Common Pleas, commanding the Sheriff to distrain the defendant from time to time, and continually afterwards, by taking his goods and the profits of his lands, which are called issues; and which by the Common Law he forfeits to the King if he doth not appear. But now the issues may be sold, if the Court shall so direct, in order to defray the reasonable costs of the plaintiff. Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. See title Privilege.

And here, by the Common Law, the Process ended in cases of injury without force: the defendant, if he had any substance, being gradually stript of it all by repeated distresses, till he rendered obedience to the King's writ; and if he had no substance, the Law held him incapable of making any satisfaction, and therefore looked upon all farther Process as nugatory: but by degrees the Capias, which was originally applied only to cases of injury, accompanied by force, was found to be a convenient remedy in cases merely civil, and was accordingly introduced into practice. If, therefore, a defendant, being summoned or attached, makes default, and neglects to appear; or if the Sheriff returns a nihil: (i. e. that the defendant hath nothing whereby he may be summoned, attached, or distrained;) or taking all or any of these circumstances for granted, the Capias now usually issues; being a writ commanding the Sheriff to take the body of the defendant and have him in Court at the day of the return. As to the origin and application of this this writ in civil suits, see further this Dict. titles Capias; Common Pleas.

This writ, and all others, subsequent to the original writ, not issuing out of Chancery, but from the Courts into which the original was returnable, and being grounded on what has passed (or supposed to have passed) in that Court, in consequence of the Sheriff's return, are called judicial, and not original Writs: they issue under the Private Seal of that Court, and not under the Great Seal of England; and are teste'd not in the King's name, but in that of the Chief (or if there be no chief, of the senior) Justice only. And these several writs, when actually grounded on the Sheriff's return, must respectively bear date the same day on which the writ immediately preceding was returnable. See 3 Comm. c. 19. p. 282.

Such is the first Process in the Court of Common Pleas: as to the proceeding by Original quare clausum fregit. See this Dict. title Common Pleas.

In the King's Bench they may also, and frequently do, proceed in certain causes, particularly in actions of Ejectment and Trespass, by original writ, with attachment and capias thereon; returnable, not at Westminster where the Common Pleas are now fixed in consequence of Magna Charta, but ubicunque fuedrimus in Angliâ, wheresoever the King shall then be in England; the Court of King's Bench being removable into any part of England at the pleasure and discretion of the Crown. But the more usual method of proceeding therein is without any original, but by a peculiar species of Process called a bill of Middlesex: and which is so intitled, because the Court now sits in that county; for if it sate in Kent, it would then be a bill of Kent. For though, as the Justices of this Court have, by its fundamental Constitution, power to determine all offences and trespasses, by the Common Law and custom of the realm, it needed no original writ from the Crown to give it cognizance of any misdemeanor in the county wherein it resides; yet, as by this Court's coming into any county, it immediately superseded the ordinary administration of justice by the general commissions of Eyre and of Oyer and Terminer, a Process of its own became necessary within the county where it sate, to bring in such persons as were accused of committing any forcible injury. The bill of Middlesex, (which was formerly always founded on a plaint of trespass quare clausum fregit, entered on the records of the Court,) is a kind of capias, directed to the Sheriff of that county, and commanding him to take the defendant, and have him before our Lord the King at Westminster on a day prefixed, to answer to the plaintiff of a plea of trespass. For this accusation of trespass it is, that gives the Court of King's Bench jurisdiction in other civil causes; since, when once the defendant is taken into custody of the Marshal, or prison-keeper of this Court, for the supposed trespass, he, being then a prisoner of this Court, may here be prosecuted for any other species of injury. Yet, in order to found this jurisdiction, it is not necessary that the defendant be actually the Marshal's prisoner; for, as soon as he appears, or puts in bail, to the Process, he is deemed, by so doing, to be in such custody of the Marshal, as will give the Court a jurisdiction to proceed. And, upon these accounts, in the bill, or Process, a complaint of trespass is always suggested, whatever else may be the real cause of action. This bill of Middlesex must be served on the defendant by the Sheriff, if he finds him in that county; but, if he returns "non est inventus," then there issues out a writ of Latitat, to the Sheriff of another county, as Berks; which is similar to the Testatum Capias in the Common Pleas, and recites the bill of Middlesex and proceedings thereon, and that it is testified that the defendant "latitat et discurrit," lurks and wanders about in Berks; and therefore commands the Sheriff to take him, and have his body in Court on the day of the return. But, as in the Common Pleas the Testatum Capias may be sued out upon only a supposed, and not an actual, preceding Capias; (see title Capias;) so in the King's Bench a Latitat is usually sued out upon only a supposed, and not an actual, bill of Middlesex. So that, in fact, a Latitat may be called the first Process in the Court of King's Bench, as the Testatum Capias is in the Common Pleas. Yet, as in the Common Pleas, if the defendant lives in the county wherein the action is laid, a common Capias suffices; so in the King's Bench likewise, if he lives in Middlesex, the Process must be by bill of Middlesex only. See further this Dictionary, title Latitat.

In the Exchequer the first Process is by writ of Quo minus, in order to give the Court a jurisdiction over pleas between party and party. In which writ the plaintiff is alledged to be the King's farmer or debtor, and that the defendant hath done him the injury complained of; quo minus sufficiens existit, "by which he is the less able," to pay the King his rent, or debt. And upon this the defendant may be arrested as upon a Capias from the Common Pleas.

Thus differently do the three Courts set out at first, in the commencement of a suit, in order to entitle the two Courts of King's Bench and Exchequer to hold plea in causes between Subject and Subject, which by the original constitution of Westminster-Hall they were not empowered to do. Afterwards, when the cause is once drawn into the respective Courts, the method of pursuing it is pretty much the same in all of them.

If the Sheriff has found the defendant upon any of the former writs, the Capias, Latitat, &c. he was anciently obliged to take him into custody, in order to produce him in Court upon the return; however small and minute the cause of action might be. For not having obeyed the original summons, he had shewn a contempt of the Court, and was no longer to be trusted at large. But when the summons fell into disuse, and the Capias became in fact the first Process, it was thought hard to imprison a man for a contempt which was only supposed: and therefore in common cases by the gradual indulgence of the Courts (at length authorized by stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29; amended by stat. 5 Geo 2. c. 27, made perpetual by stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 3, and extended to all inferior Courts by stat. 19 Geo 3. c. 70;) the Sheriff or proper officer can now only personally serve the defendant with the copy of the writ or Process, and with notice in writing to appear, by his attorney, in Court, to defend this action; which in effect reduces it to a mere summons. And if the defendant thinks proper to appear upon this notice, his appearance is recorded, and he puts in sureties for his future attendance and obedience; which sureties are called Common Bail, being the same two imaginary persons as are pledges for the plaintiff's prosecution; John Doe and Richard Roe. See title Pledges.

Or, if the defendant does not appear upon the return of the writ, or within eight days after, exclusive of the return day, the plaintiff may enter an appearance for him, as if he had really appeared in the Common Pleas; and may file common bail in the King's Bench in the defendant's name, and proceed thereupon as if the defendant had done it himself.

But if the plaintiff will make affidavit, or assert upon oath, that the cause of action amounts to 10*l.* or upwards, then he may arrest the defendant, and make him put in substantial sureties for his appearance, called Special Bail. In order to which, it is required by stat. 3 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 2, that the true cause of action should be expressed in the body of the writ or Process; else no security can be taken in a greater sum than 40*l.* This statute (without any such intention in the makers) had like to have ousted the King's Bench of all its jurisdiction over civil injuries without force; for, as the bill of Middlesex was framed only for actions of trespass, a defendant could not be arrested and held to bail thereupon for breaches of civil contracts. But to remedy this inconvenience, the officers of the King's Bench devised a method of adding what is called a clause of ac etiam to the usual complaint of trespass: the bill of Middlesex commanding the defendant to be brought in to answer the plaintiff of a plea of trespass, and also to a bill of debt: the complaint of trespass giving cognizance to the Court, and that of debt authorizing the arrest. In imitation of which, the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas a few years afterwards, in order to save the suitors of that Court the trouble and expence of suing out special originals, directed that, besides the usual complaint of breaking the plaintiff's close, a clause of ac etiam might also be added to the writ of Capias, containing the true cause of action: as, "that the said Charles the defendant may answer to the plaintiff of a plea of trespass in breaking his close: and also, ac etiam, may answer him, according to the custom of the Court, in a certain plea of trespass upon the case, upon promises, to the value of 20*l.*" &c. The sum sworn to by the plaintiff is marked upon the back of the writ; and the Sheriff, or his officer, the bailiff, is then obliged actually to arrest or take into custody the body of the defendant; and, having so done, to return the writ with a cepi corpus indorsed thereon. See this Dictionary, titles Arrest; Bail.

From the foregoing it appears, that Process is only meant to bring the defendant into Court, in order to contest the suit, and abide the determination of the Law. When he appears, then follow the Pleadings, &c. between the parties. See that title.

As to the origin and foundation of the above modes of Process, and of the jurisdiction of the several Courts, see more at large the Introduction to Crompton's Practice; and the Appendixes to Sellon's Practice, founded on that Introduction.

As to the language of the Process and Records of Law, see this Dictionary, title Pleading III; and for further matter, explanatory of the several sorts of writs and Processes, various apposite titles throughout the whole of this work.

Original Process to call persons into Court, &c. must be in the name of the King; and if it issue from the Court of King's Bench, it ought to be under the teste of the Chief Justice, or of the senior Judge of the Court, if there be no Chief Justice: and if it issueth from any other Court, it is to be under the teste of the first in commission, &c. Dalt. ch. 132: Finch. 456: Cro. Car. 393.

If Process is awarded out of a Court, which hath not jurisdiction of the principal cause, it is coram non judice and void: and the Sheriff executing it will be a trespasser. 2 Leon. 89.

II. There is no need of Process on an Indictment, &c. where the defendant is present in Court; but if he hath fled, or secretes himself, in capital cases, or hath not, in smaller misdemeanors, been bound over to appear at the Assises or Sessions, still an indictment may be preferred against him in his absence; since, were he present, he could not be heard before the Grand Jury against it. And, if it be found, then Process must issue to bring him into Court; for the indictment cannot be tried, unless he personally appears: according to the rule of equity in all cases, and the express provision of stat. 28 Edw. 3. c. 3, in capital ones, that no man shall be put to death, without being brought to answer by due Process of Law.

No Process shall regularly issue in the King's name, and by his writ, to apprehend a felon or other malefactor, unless there be an indictment or matter of record in the Court, upon which the writ issues. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 575.

The proper Process on an indictment for any petty misdemesnor, or on a penal statute, is a writ of Venire Facias, which is in the nature of a summons to cause the party to appear. And if by the return to such Venire it appears, that the party hath lands in the county whereby he may be distrained, then a distress infinite shall be issued from time to time till he appears. But if the Sheriff returns that he hath no lands in his bailiwick, then (upon his non-appearance) a writ of Capias shall issue, which commands the Sheriff to take his body, and have him at the next assizes; and if he cannot be taken upon the first Capias, a second, and a third shall issue; called an Alias, and a Pluries Capias. But on indictments for treason or felony, a Capias is the first Process; and for treason or homicide, only one shall be allowed to issue, or two in the case of other felonies, by stat. 25 Edw. 3. c. 14; though the usage is to issue only one in any felony; the provisions of this statute being in most cases found impracticable. 2 Hal. P. C. 195. And so, in the case of misdemesnors, it is now the usual practice for any Judge of the Court of King's Bench, upon certificate of an indictment found, to award a writ of Capias immediately, in order to bring in the defendant. But if he absconds, and it is thought proper to pursue him to an outlawry, then a greater exactness is necessary. For, in such case, after the several writs have issued in a regular number, according to the nature of the respective crimes, without any effect, the offender shall be put in the exigent in order to his outlawry; that is, he shall be exacted, proclaimed, or required to surrender, at five county Courts; and if he be returned quinto exactus, and does not appear at the fifth exaction or requisition, then he is adjudged to be outlawed, or put out of the protection of the Law; so that he is incapable of taking the the benefit of it in any respect, either by bringing actions or otherwise. See stat. 8 H. 6. c. 10; and this Dictionary, title Outlawry III.

The punishment, for outlawries upon indictments for misdemeanors, is the same as for outlawries upon civil actions; (as to which, and the previous Process by writs of capias, exigi facias; and proclamation, see this Dictionary, title Outlawry;) viz. forfeiture of goods and chattels. But an outlawry in treason or felony amounts to a conviction and attainder of the offence charged in the indictment, as much as if the offender had been found guilty by his country. 2 Hal. P. C. 205. His life is however still under the protection of the Law, so that though anciently an outlawed felon was said to have caput lupinum, and might be knocked on the head like a wolf, by any one that should meet him: because, having renounced all law, he was to be dealt with as in a state of nature, when every one that should find him might slay him: yet now, to avoid such inhumanity, it is holden that no man is entitled to kill him wantonly or wilfully; but in so doing is guilty of murder, unless it happens in the endeavour to apprehend him. 1 Hal. P. C. 497: Bracton, fol. 125. For any person may arrest an outlaw on a criminal prosecution, either of his own head, or by writ of warrant of capias utlagatum, in order to bring him to execution. But such outlawry may be frequently reversed by writ of error; the proceedings therein being (as it is fit they should be) exceedingly nice and circumstantial; and, if any single minute point be omitted or misconducted, the whole outlawry is illegal, and may be reversed: upon which reversal the party accused is admitted to plead to, and defend himself against, the Indictment. See further title Outlawry V.

The above is the Process to bring in the offender after indictment found: during which stage of the prosecution it is, that writs of Certiorari facias are usually had; though they may be had at any time before trial, to certify and remove the indictment, with all the proceedings thereon, from any inferior Court of criminal jurisdiction into the Court of King's Bench; which is the sovereign ordinary Court of justice in causes criminal. And this is frequently done for one of these four purposes; either, 1. To consider and determine the validity of criminal appeals or indictments, and the proceedings thereon; and to quash or confirm them as there is cause: or, 2. Where it is surmised that a partial or insufficient trial will probably be had in the Court below, the indictment is removed, in order to have the prisoner or defendant tried at the bar of the Court of King's Bench, or before the Justices of Nisi prius: or, 3. It is so removed, in order to plead the King's pardon there: or, 4. To issue Process of outlawry against the offender, in those counties or places where the Process of the inferior Judges will not reach him. 2 Hal. P. C. 210. Such writ of Certiorari, when issued and delivered to the inferior Court for removing any record or other proceeding, as well upon indictment as otherwise, supersedes the jurisdiction of such inferior Court, and makes all subsequent proceedings therein entirely erroneous and illegal; unless the Court of King's Bench remands the record to the Court below, to be there tried and determined. A Certiorari may be granted at the instance of either the prosecutor or the defendant: the former as a matter of right, the latter as a matter of discretion; and therefore it is seldom granted to remove indictments from the Justices of gaol-delivery, or after issue joined, or confession of the fact, in any of the Courts below. 4 Comm. c. 24. See this Dictionary, title Certiorari.

At this stage of prosecution also it is, that indictments found by the Grand Jury against a Peer must in consequence of a writ of Certiorari be certified and transmitted into the Court of Parliament, or into that of the Lord High Steward of Great Britain; and that, in places of exclusive jurisdiction, as the two Universities, indictments must be delivered (upon challenge and claim of cognizance) to the Courts therein established by charter, and confirmed by act of Parliament, to be there respectively tried and determined. 4 Comm. c. 24.

Obstructing the execution of lawful Process, is an offence against public justice, of a very high and presumptuous nature; but more particularly so, when it is an obstruction of an arrest upon criminal Process. And it hath been holden, that the party opposing such arrest becomes thereby particeps criminis; that is, an accessary in felony, and a principal in treason. 4 Comm. c. 10. p. 129. See titles Arrest; Privilege; Accessary; Misdemesnor, &c.

PROCESSION. In cathedral and conventual churches, the members had their stated Processions, wherein they walked in their most ornamental habits, with music, singing hymns, and other suitable solemnity: and in every parish, there was a customary annual Procession of the parish priest, the patron of the church, with the chief flag, or holy banner, and the other parishioners, to take a circuit round the limits of the parish or manor, and pray for a blessing on the fruits of the earth; to which we owe our present custom of perambulation, which in most places is still called processioning and going in Procession, though we have lost the order and devotion, as well as pomp and superstition of it. See Perambulation.

PROCESSUM CONTINUANDO, A writ for the Continuance of Process, after the death of the Chief Justice, or other Justices in the commission of Oyer and Terminer. Reg. Orig. 128.

PROCHEIN AMY, Proximus amicus.] The Next Friend, or next of kin to a child in his nonage; who in that respect is allowed to deal for the infant in the management of his affairs; as to be his guardian if he holds lands in socage, and in the redress of any wrong done him. See stat. West. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 47: West. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 15: 2 Inst. 261; and this Dict. title Infant V.

Prochein Amy is commonly taken for guardian in socage; but otherwise it is he who appears in Court for an infant who sues any action, and aids the infant in pursuit of his action: for to sue, an infant may not make an attorney, but the Court will admit the next friend of the infant plaintiff; and a guardian for an infant defendant.

If no guardian is appointed by the father, &c. of an infant, the course of B. R. hath been used to allow one of the officers of the Court to be Prochein Amy to the infant to sue. Terms de Ley. 2 Lil. Abr. 52.

Prochein Amy was never before the statute Westm. 1, and was appointed in case of necessity, where an infant was to sue his guardian, or the guardian would not sue for him. 2 Nels. Abr. 997.

The

The plaintiff infant may sue by guardian, or by Prochein Amy; and if the admission is to sue by Guardian when it should be by Prochein Amy, it will be well enough, there being many precedents both ways: but if he is sued, it must be by Guardian. Cro. Car. 86, 115: Hut. 92.

If an infant be eloigned or disturbed by his guardian, or any other, so that he cannot bring assise, his Prochein Amy shall be admitted. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 47. So generally, by stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 15. Since these statutes, the common rule seems to have been that the infant shall sue by Prochein Amy, and defendant by Guardian.

To constitute a Prochein Amy (or Guardian), the person intended, who is usually some near relation, goes with the infant before a Judge, at his chambers; or else a petition is presented to the Judge on behalf of the infant, stating the nature of the action; or if he is defendant, that he is advised, and believes, he has a good defence thereto; and praying in respect of his infancy, that the person intended may be assigned him as his Prochein Amy, or Guardian, to prosecute or defend the action. This petition should be accompanied with an Agreement, signifying the assent of the intended Prochein Amy, or Guardian: and an affidavit made by some third person, that the petition and agreement were duly signed: On one or other of these grounds, the Judge will grant his fiat; upon which a rule or order is drawn up, with the Clerk of the Rules for the admission of the Prochein Amy, or Guardian; which admission is either special, to prosecute or defend a particular action, or general, to prosecute or defend all actions whatsoever: though it is said, that by the practice of the Court of King's Bench, a special admission of a Guardian to appear in one cause, will serve for others. 1 Stra. 304, 5. See Tidd's Pract. K. B.: and Sellon's Pract.

PROCHEIN AVOIDANCE, A Power to present a minister to a church when it shall become void: as where one hath presented a clerk to a church, and then grants the next Avoidance to another, &c. See titles Avoidance; Advowson.

PROCLAMATION, Proclamatio.] A notice publicly given of any thing, whereof the King thinks fit to advertise his Subjects; and so it is used in stat. 7 R. 2. c. 6. See title King V. 3.

PROCLAMATION OF COURTS, Is used particularly in the beginning or calling of a Court, and at the discharge or adjourning thereof; for the attendance of persons, and dispatch of business.

Before a Parliament was dissolved, it was anciently held, that public Proclamation was to be made, that if any person had any petition, he should come in and be heard. Lex Constitut. 156. See title Parliament.

Proclamation is made in Courts Baron, for persons to come in and claim vacant copyholds, of which the tenants died seised since the last Courts; and the lord may seise a copyhold, if the heir come not in to be admitted on Proclamation, &c. 1 Lev. 63. See title Copyhold.

PROCLAMATION OF EXIGENTS. On awarding an Exigent, in order to outlawry, a writ of Proclamation issues to the Sheriff of the county where the party dwells, to make three Proclamations for the defendant to yield himself, or be outlawed. See title Outlawry III.

PROCLAMATION OF A FINE. When any fine of land is passed, Proclamation is solemnly made thereof in the Court of Common Pleas where levied, after engrossing it; and transcripts are also sent to the Justices of Assise, and Justices of the Peace of the county in which the lands lie, to be openly proclaimed there. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 7. See title Fine of Lands V.

PROCLAMATION OF NUSANCES. Proclamation is to be made against Nusances, and for the removal of them, &c. Stat. 12 R. 2. c. 13. See title Nusance.

PROCLAMATION OF REBELLION; Is a writ whereby a man not appearing upon a subpœna, or an attachment in the Chancery, is deputed and declared a rebel, if he render not himself by a day assigned. See titles Commission of Rebellion; Chancery.

PROCLAMATION OF RECUSANTS. A Proclamation whereby Recusants were heretofore convicted, on non-appearance at the assizes. See stats. 29 Eliz. c. 6: 3 Jac. 1. c. 4, 5. and this Dict. title Papists.

PRO CONFESSO, Where a bill is exhibited in Chancery, to which the defendant appears, and is afterwards in contempt for not answering; the matter contained in the bill shall be taken as if it were confessed by defendant. Terms de Ley.

If a defendant is in custody for contempt in not answering, on a Habeas Corpus, which is granted by order of Court, to bring him to the bar, the Court assigns him a day to answer, and the day being expired, and no answer put in, a second Habeas Corpus is issued, and the party being brought into Court, a further day is assigned; by which day, if he answer not, the bill on the plaintiff's motion shall be taken pro confesso, unless cause be shewed by a day; and for want of such cause shewed on motion, the substance of the bill shall be decreed to the plaintiff. Hil. 1662. Also after a fourth insufficient answer, the matter of the bill, not sufficiently answered unto by the defendant, shall be taken pro confesso, and decreed accordingly.

If in any suit in equity any defendant, against whom any process shall issue, shall not cause his appearance to be entered according to the rules of the Court, in case such process had been served, and affidavit shall be made, that such defendant is beyond the seas; or that, on inquiry at his usual place of abode, he could not be found, so as to be served, and that there is just ground to believe that such defendant is gone out of the realm, or absconds to avoid being served; the Court may make an order, appointing the defendant to appear at a day therein to be named and a copy of such order shall, within fourteen days, be inserted in the London Gazette, and published on some Lord's Day, after divine service, in the parish church where the defendant made his usual abode within thirty days next before his absenting; and a copy of such order shall be posted up, viz. a copy of such order made in Chancery, Exchequer or Duchy Chamber, shall be posted up at the Royal Exchange; and a copy of every such order made in any of the Courts of Equity of the counties palatine, or of the Great Sessions in Wales, shall be posted up in some market town within the jurisdiction of the Court, nearest to the place where the defendant made his usual abode, such place of abode being also within the jurisdiction of the Court; and if the defendant do not appear within such time as the Court appoint, then, on proof made of publication of such order as aforesaid, the Court may order the plaintiff's bill to be taken pro confesso, and make such decree as shall be just; and the defendant's estate shall be sequestered: and the Court may order the plaintiff to be paid his demands out of the estate sequestered according to the decree; such plaintiff giving security, to abide such order touching the restitution of such estate, as the Court shall make on the defendant's appearance. But in case the plaintiff refuse to give security, then the Court shall order the effects sequestered to remain under the direction of the Court, until the appearance of the defendant to defend such suit.—Provided, that this act shall not affect persons beyond the seas, unless affidavit be made of their being in England within two years before the subpœna: nor extend to Courts having a limited jurisdiction, unless oath be made of personal residence in such jurisdiction one year before the subpœna. Stat. 5 G. 2. c. 25.

It is not sufficient on this statute to make affidavit, that the party making it was informed, and believes, that the defendants withdrew themselves in order to avoid being served with the process of the Court. But it must be likewise sworn by whom the deponent received such information. Barn. 401.

A defendant appeared, and stood out to a sequestration, and afterwards, on getting time, put in an answer, which was reported insufficient in near twenty exceptions, and was served with a subpœna to make a better answer. The defendant put in another answer, alike insufficient. It was insisted for the defendant, that the practice of taking bills pro confesso is not of long standing, the ancient way being to put the plaintiff to make proof of the substance of the bill; and that, in this case, taking all the bill pro confesso, where part had been sufficiently answered, seemed very strange. But it was answered, that an insufficient answer is as no answer, therefore the whole to be taken pro confesso; and the Master of the Rolls decreed for the plaintiff; but Lord Chancellor King, on an appeal, said, he would consider how matters stood at the time of such decree, and that it was sufficient that there then was an answer, and which the plaintiff had admitted to be so by suing his process for a better; and that so to make the defendant confess the whole bill true, when by the Master's report (which was a record of the same Court) he had answered the greatest part, and when the plaintiff himself had taken the first answer to be an answer in part by serving the defendant with process to put in a better, was against common sense: and reversed the former decree. 2 P. Wms. 556.

If, on demurrer to a bill in equity, the defendant obstinately insists on his demurrer, and refuses to answer, where the Court is of opinion, that sufficient matter is alleged in the bill to oblige him to answer, and for the Court to proceed upon, the Court will decree the matter of the plaintiff's bill; for by the demurrer are confessed all matters of fact that are alleged. Curs. Canc. 509. See further, title Chancery.

PROCTOR, Procurator.] He who undertakes to manage another man's cause, in any Court of Civil or Ecclesiastical Law, for his fee: Qui aliena negotia procurata suscipit. A Proctor not to practise, if a Popish recusant. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. But see, title Papists. Not to act as Justice of Peace. 5 Geo. 2. c. 18. See title Justices of the Peace III.

PROCTORS OF THE CLERGY, Procuratores Cleri.] They who are chosen and appointed to appear for cathedral or other collegiate churches; as also for the common Clergy of every diocese, to sit in the Convocation-house in the time of Parliament.

On every new Parliament the King directeth his writ to the Archbishop of each province, for the summoning of all Bishops, Deans, Archdeacons, &c. to the Convocation, and generally of all the Clergy of his province, assigning them the time and place in the writ; then the Archbishop of Canterbury, on his writ received, according to custom directs his letters to the Bishop of London, as his provincial Dean, first citing him peremptorily, and then willing him to cite in like manner all the Bishops, &c. and generally all the Clergy of his province, to the place, and against the day prefixed in the writ; but directeth withal, that one Proctor be sent for every cathedral or collegiate church, and two Proctors for the body of the inferior Clergy of each diocese; and by virtue of these letters authentically sealed, the Bishop of London directs his like letters severally to the Bishop of every diocese of the province, citing them in like sort, and willing them not only to appear, but also to admonish the Deans and Archdeacons personally to appear; and the cathedral and collegiate churches, and the common Clergy of the diocese, to send their Proctors to the place at the day appointed; and also willeth them to certify to the Archbishop the names of every person so warned by them, in a schedule annexed to their letter certificatory: then the Bishops proceed accordingly, and the cathedral and collegiate churches, and the body of the Clergy make choice of their Proctors; which being done and certified to the Bishop, he returneth all at the day. Cowell. See title Convocation.

PROCONSULES, A name applied to Justices in eyre, or Justiciarii errantes, in England. Cowell.

PROCURATIONS, Procurationes.] Certain sums of money which parish priests pay yearly to the Bishop or Archdeacon, ratione visitationis; formerly the visitor demanded a proportion of meat and drink for his refreshment, when he came abroad to do his duty, and examine the state of the church; afterwards these were turned into annual payments of a certain sum, which is called a Procuration, being so much given to the visitor, ad procurandum cibum & potum. And complaints were often made of the excessive charges of the Procurations, which were prohibited by several councils and bulls; and that of Clement IV. is very particular, wherein mention is made that the Archdeacon of Richmond, visiting the diocese, travelled with one hundred and three horses, twenty-one dogs, and three hawks, to the great oppression of religious houses, &c.

A libel was brought in the Spiritual Court for Procurations by the Archdeacon of York, setting forth, that for ten or twenty years, &c. there had been due and paid to him so much yearly by a Parson and his predecessors; who suggested for a prohibition, that a duty had been payable, but denied the prescription, and that the Ecclesiastical Court cannot try prescriptions; but it was adjudged, that Procurations are [illegible] of common right, [illegible] and no [illegible] the same at Common Law; if he had [illegible] the [illegible], then a prohibition [illegible]. [illegible] 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 19.

These are also called Proxies; and it is said there are three sorts of Procurations or Proxies; ratione visitationis, consuetudinis, & pacti; and that the first is of ecclesiastical cognisance, but the two last are triable at law. Hardr. 180.

PROCURATOR. One who hath a charge committed to him by any person; in which general signification it hath been applied to a vicar or lieutenant, who acts instead of another; and we read of Procurator regni, and Procurator reipublicæ, which is a public magistrate: also Proxies of Lords in Parliament are in our law books called Procuratores; the Bishops are sometimes termed Procuratores ecclesiarum; and the advocates of religious houses, who were to solicit the interests, and plead the causes, of the societies, were denominated Procuratores monasterii; and from this word comes the common word Proctor. It is likewise used for him who gathers the fruits of a benefice for another man; and Procuracy is used in stat. 3 R. 2. c. 3. for the writing or instrument whereby he is authorised.

PROCURATORES ECCLESIÆ PAROCHIALIS. The Churchwardens; so called because they were to act as proxies and representatives of the church, for the true honour and interest of it. Paroch. Antiq. 562.

PROCURATORIUM, The procuratory, or instrument by which any person or community did constitute or delegate their proctor or proctors, to represent them in any judicial Court or cause.

PRODES HOMINES, A title often given in our [illegible] books to the Barons of the realm, or other military tenants, who were summoned to the King's Council; discreti & fideles (probi) homines, who, according to their prudence and knowledge, were to give their counsel and advice.

PRODITORIE, Treasonably.] The technical word in indictments for treason, when indictments were in Latin.

PROFANENESS, Quasi procul à fano.] A disrespect to the name of God, and to things and persons consecrated to Him. Wood's Inst. 396.

Profaneness is punishable by statute; as for reviling the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, profanely using the name of God in plays, &c. Profaning the Lord's Day; cursing and swearing, &c. See stats. 1 Ed. 6. c. 1: 1 Eliz. c. 1: 3 Jac. 1. c. 21: 1 Car. 1. c. 1: and this Dictionary, titles Blasphemy; Swearing; Sunday.

PROFER, Profrum, vel proferum, from the Fr, proferer, i. e. producere.] The time appointed for the accounts of offices in the Exchequer, which is twice in the year. Stat. 51 H. 3. st. 5.

As to the Profers of Sheriffs, though the certain [illegible] of the Sheriff could not be known before the finishing of his accounts; yet it seems there was anciently an estimate made of what his constant charge of the annual revenue amounted to, according to a medium, which was paid into the Exchequer at the return of the writ of summons of the Pipe; and the sums so paid were and are to this day called Profer vicecomitis; but although these Profers are paid, if on the conclusion of the Sheriff's accounts, and after allowances and discharges had by him, it appears that there is a surplusage, or that he is charged with more than he could receive, he hath his Profers paid or allowed him again. Hale's Shr. Accompt. 52. See title Sheriff.

There is a writ de attornato vicecomitis pro profro faciendo, Reg. Orig. 139. And we read of Profers in the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 21; in which place Profer signifies the offer and endeavour to proceed in an action. See Brit. c. 28: Fleta, lib. 1. c. 38.

PROFER THE HALF-MARK, To offer or tender the Half-mark. See title Half-Mark.

PROFERT IN CURIA. Where the plaintiff in an action declares on a deed, or the defendant pleads a deed, he must do it with a Profert in curiâ, to the end that the other party may at his own charges have a copy of it, and until then he is not obliged to answer it. 2 Lil. Abr. 382. And if a man pleads by virtue of an indenture, which is lost, on affidavit made thereof, the Court will compel the plaintiff to shew the counterpart, that the defendant may plead thereto; or will grant an imparlance. Cro. Jac. 429.

When he who is party or privy in estate or interest, or who justifies in the right of him who is party or privy, pleads a deed; notwithstanding the party privy claims but part of the original estate, yet he must shew the original deed. But where a man is a stranger to a deed, and claims nothing in it, &c. there he may plead the patent or deed, without a Profert in curiâ. 10 Rep. 92, 93.

A man may claim under a deed of uses, without shewing it; because the deed [illegible] belong to him, (though he claims by it,) but [illegible] covenantees, and he hath no means to obtain it; and [illegible] that it is an estate executed by the statute of uses, so as the party is in by law, like to tenant in dower, or by statute, &c. who may have a rent-charge extended, and need not shew the deed. Cro. Car. 442. And in things executed, or estates determined, there need not be any Profert in curiâ. 3 Lev. 204.

No advantage or exceptions shall be taken for want of a Profert in curiâ; but the Court shall give judgment according to the very right of the cause, without regarding any such omission and defect, except the same be specially and particularly set down, and shewn for cause of demurrer. Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. See title Amendment; and also Deed IV; Monstrans de fait; Oyer, &c.

PROFESSION, Professio.] Was used particularly for the entering into any religious order, &c. This entering into religion, whereby a man was shut up from all the common offices of life, was termed a Civil Death. See 1 Comm. 132.

PROFITS. A devise of the Profits of lands, is a devise of the land itself. Dyer 210.

A husband deviseth the Profits of his lands to his wife, until his son came of age, this was held to be a devise of the lands until that time: though if the lands were devised to the son, and that his mother should take the profits of it until he came of age, &c. this would give the mother only an authority, not an interest. 2 Lev. 221.

By devise of Profits, the lands usually pass; unless there are other words to shew the intention of the testator to be otherwise. Moor 753, 758: 2 Nels. Abr. 1051. See title Wills.

PROFITS OF COURTS. The Profits arising from the King's ordinary Courts of Justice make a branch of his revenue. And these consist not only in fines imposed upon offenders, forfeitures of recognizances, and amercements levied on defaulters; but also in certain fees due to the Crown in a variety of legal matters; as for setting the Great Seal to charters, original writs, and other forensic proceedings, and for permitting fines to be levied of lands in order to bar entails, or otherwise to insure titles. As none of these can be done without the immediate intervention of the King, by himself or his officers, the law allows him certain perquisites and Profits, as a recompense for the trouble he undertakes for the Public. These, in process of time, have been almost all granted out to private persons, or else appropriated to certain particular uses. So that, though our law proceedings are still loaded with their payment, very little of them is now returned into the King's Exchequer; for part of whose royal maintenance they were originally intended. All future grants of them, however, by stat. 1 Ann st. 2. c 7, are to endure for no longer time than the life of the Prince who grants them. 1 Comm. c. 8 p. 289.

PROHIBITION,

PROHIBITIO] A Writ to forbid any Court to proceed in any cause there depending, on suggestion that the cognizance thereof belongeth not to the Court. F. N. B 39. But it is now most usually taken for that writ which lieth for one who is impleaded in the Court christian, for a cause belonging to the temporal jurisdiction, or the conusance of the King's Court; whereby as well the party and his counsel, as the Judge himself, and the Registrar, are forbidden to proceed any further in that cause. Cowell.

The Writ of Prohibition is the remedy provided by the Common Law, against the encroachment of jurisdiction; where one is called coram non judice, to answer in a Court that has no legal cognizance of a cause; which is enumerated by Blackstone among the grievances cognizable by the Courts of Common Law. See 3 Comm. cap. 7.

As all external jurisdiction, whether ecclesiastical or civil, is derived from the Crown, and the administration of justice is committed to a variety of Courts; hence it hath been the care of the Crown, that these Courts keep within the limits and bounds of the several jurisdictions prescribed them; for this purpose the writ of Prohibition was framed; which issues out of the superior Court of Common Law to restrain inferior Courts, whether such Courts be temporal, ecclesiastical, maritime, military, &c. on a suggestion that the cognizance of the matter belongs not to such Courts; and in case they exceed their jurisdiction, the officer who executes the sentence, and in some cases the Judge who gives it, are punishable in such superior Courts, sometimes at the suit of the King, sometimes at the suit of the party, sometimes at the suit of both, according to the variety of the case. 2 Inst. 601: F. N. B. 40: 12 Co. 6: 1 And. 279: 2 Jon. 213: Show 628.

The reason of Prohibitions in general is, that they preserve the right of the King's Crown, and Courts, and the quiet of the Subject; that it is the wisdom and policy of the Law, to suppose both best preserved when every thing runs in its right channel, according to the original jurisdiction of every Court; as by the same reason that one might be allowed to encroach, another might; which would produce nothing but confusion in the administration of justice. Show. Par. Ca. 63.

So that Prohibitions do not import that the ecclesiastical or other inferior temporal Courts are alia than the King's Courts, but signify that the cause is drawn ad aliud examen than it ought to be; therefore it is always said in all Prohibitions, (be the Court ecclesiastical or temporal to which it is awarded,) that the cause is drawn ad aliud examen, contra coronam & dignitatem regiam. 2 Inst. 602: 1 Roll. Rep. 252: 3 Bulst. 120: Palm. 297.

A Prohibition is a writ issuing, properly, out of the Court of King's Bench, being the King's prerogative writ; but, for the furtherance of justice, it may now also be had, in some cases, out of the Courts of Chancery, Common Pleas, or Exchequer; see post I.: It is directed to the Judge and parties of a suit in any inferior Court, commanding them to cease from the prosecution thereof, upon a suggestion that either the cause originally, or some collateral matter arising therein, does not belong to that jurisdiction, but to the cognizance of some other Court. This writ may issue either to inferior Courts of Common Law; as, to the Courts of the Counties-palatine or principality of Wales, if they hold plea of land or other matters not lying within their respective franchises; to the County Courts, or Courts Baron, where they attempt to hold plea of any matter of the value of 40*s*: or it may be directed to the Courts-christian, the University Courts, the Court of Chivalry, or the Court of Admiralty, where they concern themselves with any matter not within their jurisdiction; as if the first should attempt to try the validity of a custom pleaded, or the latter a contract made, or to be executed, within this kingdom. Or if, in handling of matters clearly within their cognizance, they transgress the bounds prescribed to them by the laws of England; as where they require two witnesses to prove the payment of a legacy, a release of tithes, or the like; in such cases also a Prohibition will be awarded. For, as the fact of signing a release, or of actual payment, is not properly a spiritual question, but only allowed to be decided in those Courts, because incident or accessary to some original question clearly within their jurisdiction, it ought, therefore, where the two laws differ, to be decided, not according to the spiritual, but the temporal law; else the same question might be determined different ways, according to the Court in which the suit is depending: an impropriety, which no wise government can or ought to endure, and which is therefore a ground of Prohibition. And if either the Judge or the party shall proceed after such Prohibition, an attachment may be had against them, to punish them for the contempt, at the discretion of the Court that awarded it; and an action will lie against them, to repair the party injured in damages. 3 Comm. c. 7. p. 112, 114.

So long as the idea continued among the Clergy, that the Ecclesiastical State was wholly independent of the civil, great struggles were constantly maintained between the temporal Courts and the spiritual, concerning the writ of Prohibition and the proper objects of it; even from the time of the constitutions of Clarendon, made in opposition to the claims of Archbishop Becket in 10 H. 2, to the time of exhibiting certain articles of complaint to the King by Archbishop Bancroft in 3 Jac. 1, on behalf of the Ecclesiastical Courts; from which, and from the anfwers to them figned by all the Judges of Weftminfter-Hall, much may be collected, concerning the reafons of granting and methods of proceeding upon, Prohibitions. See 2 Inft. 601—618.

II. Who have a Right to, and may demand, and join in a Prohibition.

III. Of the Suggeftion for, and Manner of obtaining a Prohibition; and the Decifion of the Court thereon.

IV. In what Cafes it may be granted, to inferior Temporal Courts, or Jurifdictions; and at what Time.

V. In what Cafes to the Spiritual Courts; and at what Time.

I. The Superior Courts of Weftminfter, having a fuperintendency over all Inferior Courts, may in all cafes of innovation, &c. award a Prohibition; in this the power of the Court of B. R. has never been doubted, being the Superior Common Law Court in the kingdom. F. N. B. 53: 4 Inft. 71.

Alfo the Court of Chancery may award a Prohibition; which may iffue as well in vacation as in term time, but fuch writ is returnable into B. R. or C. B. Bro. Prohibition, pl. 6: 4 Inft. 81: 1 P. Wms. 43, 476.

If one be fued in an inferior Court for a matter out of the jurifdiction, the defendant may either have a Prohibition from one of the Common Law Courts of Weftminfter-Hall; or in regard this may happen in vacation, when only the Chancery is open, he may move that Court for a Prohibition; but then it muft appear by oath, that the fact did arife out of the jurifdiction, and that the defendant tendered a foreign plea, which was refufed; and if a Prohibition has been granted out of Chancery improvidè and without thefe circumftances attending it, the Court will grant a fuperfedeas thereto. 1 P. Wms. 476.

As the jurifdiction of the Court of C. B. is founded on original writs iffuing out of Chancery, it hath been doubted, whether this Court could, without writ or plea depending, award a Prohibition; but this point has been determined, viz. that this Court may on a fuggeftion grant Prohibitions, to keep as well Temporal as Ecclefiaftical Courts within their jurifdictions, and that without any original writ or plea depending; the Common Law being, in thefe cafes, a Prohibition of itfelf, and ftanding inftead of an original. Bro. Prohibition, pl. 6: Noy 153: 12 Co. 58, 108: Bro. Confultation, pl. 5: 4 Inft. 99: 2 Brownl. 17.

Accordingly it hath been adjudged, that a Prohibition ought to be granted by C. B. to the Court of Delegates, for fuing there to avoid the inftitution of a clerk to a church in Lancafhire, after induction; though the quare impedit for the church could not be brought in C. B. but only in the county of Lancafter; becaufe the title of the advowfon was not queftioned by this Prohibition, but the intrufion on the Common Law, of which this Court has fpecial care. Moor 861: 2 Rol. Abr. 317: Hob. 15.

But as to the Courts of B. R. and C. B. this difference hath been made, That in the firft of thofe Courts a Prohibition may be awarded on a bare furmife, without any fuggeftion on record; and fuch writ is only in nature of a commiffion prohibitory, which is difcontinued by demife of the King; but that as to a Prohibition iffuing out of C. B. the fuggeftion muft be on record, therefore is confidered as the fuit of the party, and in which he may be nonfuited, and is not difcontinued by demife of the King. Noy 77: Palm. 422: Latch. 114. Yet, if infifted on, a profecution cannot be moved for in B. R. till the fuggeftion be entered on the roll. And indeed it is the conftant practice, to enter the fuggeftion on the roll, and to leave a copy thereof with the clerk of the papers, previous to the motion. See 1 Salk. 136.

If the King's farmer, or copyholder of the King's manor, be fued in the Ecclefiaftical Court for tithes, on a fuggeftion in the Court of Exchequer that he prefcribes to pay a certain modus in lieu of tithes, he fhall have a Prohibition, and fuch modus fhall be tried there. Palm. 523—5: Lane 39: 1 Roll. Abr. 539.

The Grand Seffions of North Wales may fend a Prohibition, and write to the Spiritual Courts there. 1 Sid. 92. but for this fee Cro. Car. 341: 1 Jon. 330: Vaugh. 411.

It is laid down, that though a furmife be a matter of fact, and triable by a Jury, yet it is in the difcretion of the Court to deny a Prohibition, when it appears to them that the furmife is not true. Hob. 67.

But it hath been held, that awarding a Prohibition is a matter difcretionary; that is, that from the circumftances of the cafe, the fuperior Courts are at liberty to exercife a legal difcretion therein; but not an arbitrary one in refufing Prohibition, where in fuch like cafes they have been granted, or where by Law they ought to be granted. Winch. 78.

It hath been determined in the Houfe of Lords, that no writ of error will lie on the refufal of a Prohibition; but when a confultation is awarded, it is within an ideo confideratum eft, and then a writ of error will lie. 1 Ld. Raym. 545.

If the mafter of a fhip fues in the Admiralty for his wages, and a Prohibition is moved for, on a fuggeftion that the contract was made on land, and the Court is of opinion that a Prohibition ought to be granted; in this cafe they will not compel the party to find fpecial bail to the action in the Court above. Salk. 33: Carth. 518: Com. 74: 1 Ld. Raym. 576.

If there is judgment againft a fimonift, who by the affent of parties is to continue for a certain time on the benefice, and who at the expiration of the time refufes to remove, but commits wafte, a Prohibition to ftay wafte may be had by the patron, incumbent, or any other perfon, becaufe that is the King's writ; and any one may pray a Prohibition for the King, and it is grantable ex debito juftitiæ, and not in the difcretion of the Court. 1 Sid. 65: Hob. 247.

II. The King may fue for a Prohibition, though the plea in the Spiritual Court be between two common perfons; becaufe the fuit is in derogation of his Crown and dignity. F. N. B. 40.

If the Ecclefiaftical Court hold plea of any matter which belongs not to their jurifdiction, it has been already ftated, that, on information thereof to the King's Courts, a Prohibition will iffue. 2 Inft. 607. And if a man libels in the Spiritual Court for a matter which does not appertain to that Court, but to the Common Law, as a matter of frank-tenement; yet he himself, against his own suit, may pray a Prohibition, and have it. 2 Roll. Abr. 312: 1 Leon. 130: Gouldf. 149: 12 Co. 56.

So, where the plaintiff in the Spiritual Court brought a Prohibition to stay his own suit there, for that he suing for tithes by virtue of a lease made by the vicar of A. for three years, the defendant claimed to be discharged of tithes by a former lease and composition by deed; and in this case it was held, that the plaintiff himself may have a Prohibition to stay the suit; for the ecclesiastical Judges are not to meddle with the trial of leases or real contracts, though they have jurisdiction of the original cause, (viz. the tithes); for the lease is in the realty, and is not merely accidental; and it makes no difference, that the plaintiff brings Prohibition to stay his own suit; for if the Temporal Court has knowledge by any means, that the Spiritual Court meddles with temporal trials, a Prohibition ought to be awarded. Cro. Jac. 351: 2 Bulst. 283: Lutt. Rep. 20.

If a vicar sues a parishioner for tithes in the Spiritual Court, and the parson appropriate appears there pro interesse suo, and prays a Prohibition, it shall be granted. 2 Rol. Abr. 312: Cro. Eliz. 251: Kelw. 110.

If lessee for years is sued in the Spiritual Court for tithes, he in reversion may have a Prohibition. Moor 915: Cro. Eliz. 55.

But no man is entitled to a Prohibition, unless he is in danger of being injured by some suit actually depending; therefore, on a petition to the Archbishop, or other Ecclesiastical Judge, no Prohibition lies. March 22, 45. A Prohibition quia timet does not lie. Allen 56.

If several libels are exhibited against A. and B. in a matter in which the Court hath not conusance, A. and B. cannot join in a Prohibition; so if the griefs be several, as some books say. Noy 131: 1 Leon. 286: Cro. Car. 129.

But where the vicar of A. libelled several persons severally for tithes, who joined in a Prohibition, suggesting a modus; though the Court held in this case, that the Prohibition was not regularly brought, being in all their names, when there were several libels; yet inasmuch as this was on a custom, and matter triable at Common Law, in which the Ecclesiastical Court was properly prohibited, though not in exact form, they refused to award a consultation; but directed that the parties should put in several declarations, as if there had been several Prohibitions. Yelv. 128—9: Owen 13.

So if A. libels against B. and C. for defamation, and they sue a Prohibition, they shall join in attachment on it; and it is no objection to say, that the defamation was several. 1 Ld. Raym. 127; and see 1 Vent. 266: Raym. 425: Comb. 448.

Where two or more are allowed to join in a Prohibition, and one dies, the writ shall not abate; because nothing is to be recovered; they are only to be discharged. Owen 13.

III. The party aggrieved in the Court below applies to the superior Court, setting forth, in a suggestion upon record, the nature and cause of his complaint, in being drawn ad aliud examen, by a jurisdiction or manner of process disallowed by the laws of the kingdom: upon which, if the matter alledged appears to the Court to be sufficient, the writ of Prohibition immediately issues; commanding the Judge not to hold, and the party not to prosecute, the plea.

But sometimes the point may be too nice and doubtful to be decided merely upon a motion: and then, for the more solemn determination of the question, the party applying for the Prohibition is directed by the Court to declare in Prohibition; that is, to prosecute an action, by filing a declaration, against the other, upon a supposition or fiction (which is not traversable) that he has proceeded in the suit below, notwithstanding the writ of Prohibition. And if, upon demurrer and argument, the Court shall finally be of opinion, that the matter suggested is a good and sufficient ground of Prohibition in point of law, then judgment with nominal damages shall be given for the party complaining, and the defendant, and also the inferior Court, shall be prohibited from proceeding any farther. On the other hand, if the superior Court shall think it no competent ground for restraining the inferior jurisdiction, then judgment shall be given against him who applied for the Prohibition in the Court above, and a writ of consultation shall be awarded; so called, because, upon deliberation and consultation had, the Judges find the Prohibition to be ill founded, and therefore by this writ they return the cause to its original jurisdiction, to be there determined, in the inferior Court. 3 Comm. c. 7.

Leave to declare in Prohibition will be granted only when the Court inclines to prohibit, not when it inclines to the contrary. 1 Black. Rep. 81. Doug. 620, (528).—The party applying for a Prohibition has no right to insist on declaring, when the Court is satisfied that his application is groundless; but the defendant in Prohibition may, when the opinion of the Court is against him. 1 Burr. 198.

Even in ordinary cases, the writ of Prohibition is not absolutely final and conclusive. For, though the ground be a proper one in point of law, for granting the Prohibition, yet, if the fact that gave rise to it be afterwards falsified, the cause shall be remanded to the prior jurisdiction. If, for instance, a custom be pleaded in the Spiritual Court, a Prohibition ought to go, because that Court has no authority to try it; but, if the fact of such a custom be brought to a competent trial, and be there found false, a writ of consultation will be granted. For this purpose the party prohibited may appear to the Prohibition, and take a declaration, (which must always pursue the suggestion,) and so plead to issue upon it; denying the contempt, and traversing the custom upon which the Prohibition was grounded: and, if that issue be found for the defendant, he shall then have a writ of consultation.

The writ of consultation may also be, and is frequently, granted by the Court without any action brought; when, after a Prohibition issued, upon more mature consideration the Court are of opinion that the matter suggested is not a good and sufficient ground to stop the proceedings below. 3 Comm. c. 7.

Where the matter suggested for a Prohibition appears on the face of the libel, to be out of the jurisdiction of the Inferior Court, an affidavit of the truth of the suggestion, is never insisted on; but if it does not appear on the face of the libel, or if a Prohibition is moved for, for more than appears on the face of the libel, to be out of their their jurisdiction, there ought to be an affidavit. 2 Salk. 549: 1 P. Wms. 65, 477: Andr. 304.

The suggestion in the Temporal Courts may be traversed. 2 Inst. 611: 2 Co. 44: Moor 525.

On a rule to shew cause, why a Prohibition should not be granted, to stay a suit in the Court of the Archdeacon of Litchfield, against one for not going to church, nor receiving the sacrament thrice a year, on suggestion of the statute of Eliz. and Toleration Act, and then qualifying himself within the act, and alledging, that he pleaded it below, and they refused to receive his plea; cause was shewn, that this fact was false, and that the plaintiff was not a Dissenter, nor had qualified himself ut supra, and that there was no affidavit of the fact by the plaintiff; by which means any person might come and suggest a false fact, and oust the Spiritual Court of their jurisdiction; which the Court admitted, therefore for want of such affidavit the rule was discharged. 1 Ld. Raym. 1211.

If a plea to an inferior jurisdiction be properly tendered, which they refuse, though this be a good cause for a Prohibition, yet an affidavit must be made of the refusal. Skin. 20: Hard. 406: 3 Keb. 217.

A motion was made for a Prohibition to the Ecclesiastical Court of London, for calling a woman whore, on a suggestion that the words were actionable there by the custom of the place; but the Court would not grant a Prohibition without oath made, that if any such words were spoken, it was in London, and not elsewhere. 4 Mod. 367.

On a libel for calling the plaintiff old thief and old whore; the defendant suggested for a Prohibition, that if any such words were spoken, they were spoken at the same time; but this suggestion was held ill, because the words ought to have been fully confessed. 1 Vent. 10.

By stat. 2 & 3 Ed 6. c. 13, it is enacted, " That if, in cases of suits in the Ecclesiastical Court for Tithes, any party sue for any Prohibition, that then the same party, before any Prohibition shall be granted, shall bring and deliver to the hands of some of the Judges of the same Court, where the party demanded Prohibition, the very true copy of the libel depending in the Ecclesiastical Court, concerning the matter where the party demandeth Prohibition, subscribed with the hand of the same party; and under the copy of the libel shall be written the suggestion, wherefore the party demandeth the Prohibition; and in case the suggestion, by two witnesses at the least, be not proved true, in the Court where the Prohibition shall be granted, then the party, that is hindered of his suit in the Ecclesiastical Court by such Prohibition, shall, on his request, without delay have a consultation granted in the same case, in the Court where the Prohibition was granted; and shall recover double costs and damages against the party that so pursued the Prohibition; the costs and damages to be assessed by the Court where the consultation shall be granted; for which costs and damages the party to whom they shall be awarded may have an action of debt by bill, plaint, or information, in any Court of Record. See stats. 27 H. 8. c. 20: 32 H. 8. c. 7. to which this act refers.

In the construction of the above-mentioned statute the following opinions have been holden.

That this statute, referring to stats. 27 H. 8. c. 20; 32 H. 8. c. 7; which extend to tithes and offerings generally, all such tithes and church duties as are mentioned in those statutes are as much within this act as if particularly enumerated. 2 Inst. 662: Dyer 170, b.

Therefore it extends to Prohibitions to suits of small tithes as well as great. Yelv. 102: 2 Ld. Raym. 1172.

So it hath been adjudged, that the suggestion of a modus decimandi ought to be proved within six months, being within the act. Noy 148: Yelv. 104.

So where one, who was sued for tithe of hay in the Spiritual Court, suggested for a Prohibition, that he was to pay so much on an arbitrament; and it was held, that this suggestion ought to be proved, as well as one made of a modus decimandi: so on a suggestion on the stat. 31 H. 8. c. 13. § 21, that lands are tithe-free; because the clause requiring the proof of a suggestion, is general, and not limited to real composition. 1 Roll. Rep. 55.

So on a suggestion, that the suit in the Spiritual Court was for tithes of heath and barren ground improved, within seven years after the improvement, contrary to the statute; in this case proof of the suggestion within six months was held necessary. 1 Jon. 231: Cro. Car. 208.

But it hath been held, that there needs no proof of the suggestion where the suit is for tithes contrary to common right, or where the contract of the party is suggested. Comb. 147.

It hath been held, that the suggestion need not be proved strictly, nor with precise certainty as to all its circumstances; but that if it be proved in substance, or in such a manner as to shew that the Ecclesiastical Court has not jurisdiction, it is sufficient. Cro. Eliz. 736: Moor 911.

The suggestion must be proved by honest and sufficient witnesses, which is required by the express words of the statute; therefore the testimony of one attainted of felony, excommunicated or convicted of recusancy, is, as in other cases, to be rejected. 2 Bulst. 154.

But it hath been held, that persons, such as parishioners, &c. who may not be sufficient and able witnesses at a trial at Law, may notwithstanding be sufficient witnesses to prove the suggestion; the chief intent of the statute being to prevent vexatious suggestions; also it hath been held, that after the admitting and recording the proof of the suggestion, nothing is to be objected against the persons of the evidence. Mich. 27 Car. 2. in C. B.

If a suggestion consists of two parts, it is said to be sufficient to produce one witness to one, and another to another. 1 Vent. 107.

It hath been held, that the six months, for proof of the surmise, shall be accounted according to the calendar; for that this being a computation which concerns the church, it is but reasonable that it should be done according to the computation used in the Ecclesiastical Law. Hob. 197: Lit. Rep. 19: 2 Mod. 58.

It is said, that the time of six months, given by the statute to prove the suggestion, ought to be intended six months in term time, and that the vacation should be no part of the time; but this hath been since adjudged otherwise, and that the time shall commence from the teste of the writ of Prohibition, and not from the time of the rule made for awarding it. Moor 573: Noy 30: 2 Ld. Raym. 1172: 2 Salk. 554.

If the surmise be proved before one of the Judges within the six months, although it be not recorded till after the six months by the Court, it is well enough. Noy 30. It must be entered in the office. 2 Show. 308.

It hath been held, that proof which is not sufficient, may be supplied by better proof within the six months, but not after. Litt. Rep. 155.

The party, on failure of proof of the suggestion, shall not only have double costs and damages, but also his costs and damages in the action he brings for recovery of them. Bendl. 143. See stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. § 3; and this Dictionary, title Costs.

But if the Prohibition be grounded partly on a modus, which needs no proof, and partly on the contract of the parties which doth need proof, there ought not to be double costs; for mixing the contract with the matter of tithing privileges the whole. Brownl. 99: Yelv. 119.

So, where for a variance between the libel and suggestion, a consultation was awarded, and double costs adjudged to the defendant; this was held to be error by the very letter of the statute, which gives double costs only for want of proving the suggestion, and for no other cause. Yelv. 79, 80.

So, where a Prohibition was obtained, on a suggestion which was not proved within the six months, in which the defendant took issue with the plaintiff, which was found for the plaintiff; in this case it was resolved, that the defendant should not have double costs for want of the suggestion's being proved; for the statute is, that he shall have a consultation and double costs; but in this case he could not have a consultation, the matter in issue being found against him; but ought to have prayed a consultation on the suggestion not being proved, and then should have had his double costs. Latch. 140.

The surmise or suggestion may be brought in by attorney, and need not be in proper person. 1 Leon. 286.

A Prohibition is not to be grantedt he last day of term; but on motion a rule may be obtained to stay proceedings till the ensuing term. Latch. 7: 2 Roll. Rep. 456.

By stat. 50 E. 3. c. 4, no Prohibition shall go after a consultation; unless the libel be enlarged, or otherwise changed. And therefore, regularly, where a consultation is awarded upon the merits, the party shall not have another Prohibition on the same suggestion. But if a consultation is awarded, for want of form in the suggestion or proceeding thereon, another Prohibition may be allowed; or if a consultation goes for a collateral matter, as if the plaintiff is nonsuited. So if a consultation goes, and the party against whom it is granted, appeals, the appellee may have a Prohibition, though the appellants cannot. So, if after consultation the plaintiff pleads the same matter (which was suggested and found against him at Common Law) in the Spiritual Court, which is accepted, and proceeds there for trial, the former defendant may have a new Prohibition. See Com. Dig. title Prohibition (K. 3).

A Suggestion for Prohibition begins thus;

BE IT REMEMBERED, That on, &c. comes before our Lord the King at Westminster, C. D. in his proper person, and gives this Court here to understand and be informed, That whereas A. B. &c. (setting forth the complaint and proceeding in the other Court.) contrary to the laws and customs of the kingdom: Wherefore the said C. imploring the aid of this Honourable Court, before the King himself, prayeth to be relieved, and that he may have his Majesty's writ of Prohibition, directed to the Judge of the said Court, &c. to prohibit him and them from taking any further cognizance of the said plea before them, touching or concerning the premises: And it is granted him accordingly, &c.

The common form of a Prohibition runs thus:

GEORGE, &c. To A. B. &c. Greeting. We prohibit you, that you hold not plea in the Court, &c. of, &c. whereof C. D. complains, that E. F. draws him into plea before you, &c. And to the party himself; We prohibit or forbid you E. F. that you follow not the plea in the Court of, &c. whereof C. D. complains, that you draw him into the Court, &c.

IV. A PROHIBITION doth lie as well to a Temporal Court as to the Spiritual; Court of Admiralty, or other Court, whose proceedings are different from those in the Superior Courts of Common Law; if such Temporal Court exceed the bounds of its jurisdiction, or take cognizance of matters not arising within its jurisdiction. F. N. B. 45: 2 Inst. 229, 243, 601: 2 Roll. Rep. 379: 1 Roll. Rep. 252.

A Prohibition lies to a Court of Appeal, where it appears they have no jurisdiction over the subject; even after they have remitted the suit to the Court below, and awarded costs against the appellant, and though the party applying for the Prohibition be the appellant. 1 Term Rep. 552. See post. V. and Com. Dig. title Prohibition D. as to the time when a Prohibition shall be granted.

If trespass vi & armis be brought in the County-court, a Prohibition lies to the plaintiff. F. N. B. 47.

So if one sueth another in a Court-Baron or other Court, which is not a Court of Record, for charters concerning inheritance or freehold, he shall have a Prohibition. F. N. B. 47.

A person having obtained judgment in B. R. for his debt and damages, brought action for recovery of them against the bail in the Court of the Tower of London, in which action the party was taken on a capias, and was rescued, after which the plaintiff brought his action on the case in that Court for the rescue; and all this appearing to the Court of B. R. they granted a Prohibition. 1 Rol. Rep. 54.

So where an action of debt was brought in the Marshalsea, on a judgment in B. R. a Prohibition was granted. 2 Salk. 439.

A suit was surmised to be before the Lord President of the Marches, for an office, between the grantee of the Lord President and a stranger, wherein the only question would be, whether the grant of that office belonged to the Lord President; and, because in this case he would be as it were both judge and party, a Prohibition was granted. 1 Keb. 648.

If there be one entire contract above 40*s.* and a man sues for it in a Court Baron, severing it into small sums under 40*s.* a Prohibition shall be granted, because this is done to defraud the Court of the King. 19 Hen. 6. 54: 2 Rol. Abr. 280: F. N. B. 46.

An action was brought in the Hundred Court for 40*s.* in which the plaintiff confessed that he was satisfied one shilling, which being done with an intent to give that Court jurisdiction, and to defraud the Superior Courts, a Prohibition was granted. Palm. 564.

If there be several contracts between A. and B. at several times for divers sums, each under 40*s.* but amounting in the whole to a sum sufficient to entitle the superior Court to a jurisdiction, they shall be sued for in such superior, and not in an inferior Court, which is not of record. 1 Vent. 65.

So in a Prohibition to the Court of the Honour of Eye, where the case was; one contracted with another for divers parcels of malt, the money to be paid for each parcel being under 40*s.* he levied divers plaints thereupon in the said Court; wherefore the Court of K. B. granted a Prohibition; because though there be several contracts, yet as the plaintiff might have joined them all in one action, he ought to have so done, and sued in B. R; and not put the defendant to unnecessary vexation; any more than he can split an entire debt into divers, to give the inferior Court jurisdiction in fraudem legis. 1 Vent. 73: 2 K. b. 617: 1 Show. 11.

It is laid down by Coke, and admitted in a variety of cases, that no inferior Court can hold plea of any transitory action, if not made within the jurisdiction, and that the cause of action must be alleged to arise within such jurisdiction. 2 Inst. 231: 1 Saund. 74: 2 Jon. 230: 1 Show. 10: and see titles Courts; County Court.

Therefore, in an action on a promise in an inferior Court, not only the promise, but the consideration must be alleged to arise within the inferior jurisdiction, and must be so proved on the trial. 1 Rol. Abr. 5 5.

But if the plaintiff had shewn that the money had been lent within the jurisdiction of the Court, or if it had been for goods there sold, the plaintiff would have had no need to say, that the defendant assumed to pay within the jurisdiction; because the law creates the promise on the creation of the debt, which debt being within the jurisdiction, the promise shall be intended there also. Ld. Raym. 211.

In all cases where inferior Courts assume a jurisdiction, or hold plea of a matter not arising within their limits, the party hath his remedy, and may stay their proceedings by Prohibition; but such Prohibition can only regularly be obtained by its appearing, on oath made, that the fact did arise out of the jurisdiction, and that the defendant tendered a foreign plea, which was refused. 6 Mod. 146: Carth. 402: 1 Salk. 201: 1 P. Wms. 476.

In the case of Mendyke v. Stint it was greatly insisted upon, that though the party neglected to plead to the jurisdiction, yet, the matter arising out of the inferior jurisdiction, the superior Courts ought to grant a Prohibition; for otherwise the parties, their counsel, and attornies, would give a jurisdiction to inferior Courts which they were not entitled to by law; but it was otherwise adjudged; and it seems to be now agreed, that after admitting the jurisdiction, or after imparlance, the party cannot apply for a Prohibition. 2 Mod. 271.

But these things were agreed by the Court.

If any matter appears in the declaration, which sheweth that the cause of action did not arise within the jurisdiction, there a Prohibition may be granted at any time. If the subject-matter in the declaration be not proper for the judgment and determination of such Court, there also a Prohibition may be granted at any time. If the defendant, who intended to plead to the jurisdiction, is prevented by any artifice, as by giving a short day, or by the Attorney's refusing to plead it, &c. or if his plea be not accepted, or is over-ruled; in all these cases a Prohibition likewise will lie at any time. 2 Mod. 273.

A motion was made for a Prohibition, to be directed to the Sheriff's Court in Bristol, on suggestion that causes of action arising out of the jurisdiction of the Sheriff's Court ought not to be sued there; and this motion was made in behalf of a defendant in an action, before he had appeared, to stay the proceedings in the Court, who proceeded to attach his goods in the hands of a garnishee; and the motion was opposed; because the defendant could not pray a Prohibition on suggestion of a matter which he could not plead; and as here he could not plead this before appearance, so he ought not to make such a motion before appearance. And per Holt, a man shall not plead to the jurisdiction until he appear; but if the original cause of action arose out of the jurisdiction of the Court, the garnishee may plead it; and of that opinion was Hale Ch. J. but if it was debt on a simple contract, it is attachable where the person of the debtor is. 1 Ld. Raym. 346.

So, where a Prohibition was moved for to the Court of the Sheriffs of London to stay proceeding, where they attached the debt of the garnishees, because it arose out of the jurisdiction, it was denied, because the debt was on simple contract, which follows the person of the debtor. Ld. Raym. 347.

V. The general grounds for a Prohibition to the Ecclesiastical Courts, are either a defect of jurisdiction, or a defect in the mode of trial. If any fact be pleaded in the Court below, and the parties are at issue, the Court has no jurisdiction to try it, because it cannot proceed according to the rules of the Common Law; and in such case a Prohibition lies: Or where the Spiritual Court has no original jurisdiction, a Prohibition may be granted, even after sentence. But where it has jurisdiction, and gives a wrong judgment, this is the subject of appeal, and not of Prohibition. 3 Term Rep. 4.—But when a Prohibition is granted after sentence, the want of jurisdiction must appear upon the face of the proceedings of the Spiritual Court. Ibid: Cowp. 422: 4 Term Rep. 382.

In all cases where it appears on the face of the libel, that the Spiritual Court, &c. have not a jurisdiction, a Prohibition may be awarded, and is grantable as well after as before sentence; for the King's superior Courts have a superintendency over all inferior jurisdictions, and are to take care that they keep within their due bounds. 2 Inst. 602: 2 Rol. Abr. 319: Noy 137: 1 Sid. 65: Cro. Eliz. 571: Moor 462, 907: Skin. 299: Car 463: Ma 153: 2 Rol. Rep. 24: Comb. 356.

But where the Court has a natural jurisdiction of the thing, but is restrained by some statute; as by stat. 23 H. 8 c. 9, for not citing out of the diocese, there the party must come before sentence; for after pleading and admitting the jurisdiction of the Court below, it would be hard and inconvenient to grant a Prohibition. See the authorities supra; and Cro. Car. 97: 2 Show. 145: Vent. 61: 6 Mod. 252: 7 Mod. 137: Godb. 163, 243: 5 Mod. 541: Hetl. 19: 12 Co. 76: Salk. 543.

On a motion for Prohibition the case was, the defendant libelled in the Spiritual Court for tithes of faggots made of loppings of trees; and the suggestion for a Prohibition was, that these loppings were cut from the stumps of timber trees above the growth of twenty years; and it was alleged, that sentence was given in the Spiritual Court, therefore the plaintiff comes here too late to have a Prohibition: but per Holt, the sentence will not hinder the having a Prohibition in any case, but in the case of Prohibitions grounded on stat. 23 H. 8. c. 9, for citing out of the diocese; but because the plaintiff had not pleaded this matter in the Spiritual Court, they denied the Prohibition, because the Spiritual Court has a general jurisdiction of tithes; and if any special matter deprives them of their jurisdiction, it must be pleaded there: and if it had been pleaded there, and issue joined on it, and on the trial it had been found not to be silva cædua, it had been well; but if they had refused to admit the plea, a Prohibition should have been granted. 2 Ld. Raym. 835.

If one sues another in the Spiritual Court for a chattel or debt, the defendant shall have a Prohibition. So if he sues for a trespass. F. N. B. 40.

If the Spiritual Courts take on them to try the boundaries of a parish, a Prohibition lies. 2 Rol. Abr. 291: 7 Co. 44: 1 Rol. Rep. 332: Cro. Eliz. 228: 3 Leon. 829: 3 Keb. 286. S. P. because the prescription is the ground thereof.

If a suit be by a parson for tithes, and the defendant plead, that the place where, is in another parish, a Prohibition lies; because they meddle with that which is out of their jurisdiction, though the original thing be of their cognizance, and this comes in obliquely. 2 Rol. Abr. 282: 1 Show. 10: Noy 147.

So if the vicar of a parish libels against another to avoid his institution to the church of D. which he supposes to be a chapel of ease, appertaining to his vicarage, and the defendant suggests, that D. is a parish of itself, and not a chapel of ease; a Prohibition will be granted, for they shall not try the bounds of the parish. 2 Rol. Abr. 291.

So, if the question be in the Court-Christian, whether a church be a parochial church, or a chapel of ease, a Prohibition lies. Ibid.

But if the bounds of two vills lying in the same parish come in question in the Spiritual Court, no Prohibition lies; for such bounds are triable in the Ecclesiastical Court, though those of parishes are not. 1 Lev. 78.

The Ecclesiastical Courts have cognizance of a way to a church; and for not repairing such way the parties may be proceeded against in the Spiritual Court. March 45.

So, if a parson is prevented from carrying away his tithe by the stopping up the usual way, he may have his remedy in the Ecclesiastical Court, grounded on the statute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13: Bulst. 67: 1 Jon. 230.

But if the question be, whether he is to have one way or another, or whether such a way be a highway or not; this cannot be tried in the Spiritual Court. March. 15: 1 Bulst. 67: 2 Rol. Abr. 287.

So if the Churchwardens of a church sue for a way to the church, which they claim to appertain to all the parishioners by prescription, a Prohibition shall be granted; for this right being grounded on the prescription, is to be tried in the Temporal Courts. 2 Roll. Rep. 41, 287.

If a man be admitted, instituted, and inducted, and a suit is commenced in the Ecclesiastical Court to avoid the institution, supposing it not valid; though the thing be of their cognizance, yet because the induction, which is temporal, and gives a lay right, may depend on it, a Prohibition lies. Hob. 15: Latch. 205: 1 Bulst. 179: Lit. Rep. 165: Popb. 133: 1 Rol. Abr. 282: 1 Show. Rep. 10.

If there be a suit for tithes in the Ecclesiastical Court, and the tenant pleads, that the party who sues is not incumbent, but that J. S. is; and this plea, because it goes to the right of the incumbency, is rejected, a Prohibition lies; for by denying the tenant this liberty he might be twice charged for tithes. Cro. Eliz. 228: 3 Leon. 265.

There are frequent instances of Prohibitions being granted to the Ecclesiastical Courts, to stay suits for fees by chancellors, registrars, and proctors in those Courts; on this foundation, that demands for work and labour, are properly determinable at Common Law, and fees cannot be settled by the canon law; and that the Spiritual Court can only give costs and expences of suit, but that no action of debt will lie for such costs at Common Law; and that the profits of an office being temporal, the remedy for them ought to be by quantum meruit; or, in case it be an office of freehold, by assise; the denial of just fees being a disseisin; therefore it seems to be now settled, that neither a proctor nor registrar can sue for fees in the Spiritual Court, but that the proper remedy is, in case of a fee certain, by an indebitatus assumpsit, or in case of an uncertain fee, by quantum meruit; and in such suits it is not necessary to prove a retainer, that being implied by law. 2 Rol. Rep. 59: 3 Leon. 268: 1 Mod. 176: 2 Keb. 615: 3 Keb. 303, 441, 516: 1 Salk. 333: 4 Mod. 254.

If a legatee takes a bond from the executor for payment of the legacy, and afterwards sues him in the Spiritual Court for the legacy, a Prohibition will be granted; for by taking the obligation the nature of the demand is changed, and becomes a debt or duty recoverable in the Temporal Court. Yelv. 38: 2 Vern. 31. But 2 Rol. Rep. 160. S. P. cont. And see title Legacy 4.

Matters of freehold, and the rights of inheritances, are only determinable in the Temporal Courts; so that if the Ecclesiastical Courts intermeddle with those, a Prohibition lies. F. N. B. 40: 2 Rol. Abr. 286: Lit. Rep. 164.

As in a feoffment of tithes and lands, where there is no livery, if they adjudge the tithes to pass, notwithstanding there is no livery, a Prohibition will lie. Cro. Jac. 270: 1 Vent. 41.

So, if a man devises, that his lands shall be sold for the payment of his debts, and that the overplus shall be paid to such persons in certain shares; the legatees in this case cannot sue in the Ecclesiastical Court; for the provisions intended them arise originally out of lands, and their proper remedy in this case is in a Court of Equity. Dyer 151, 264: Hob. 265: 2 Rol. Abr. 284–5: 2 Show. 50: Cro. Car. 16.

But if a rent be devised out of a farm for years, the Ecclesiastical Courts may hold plea thereof; for the term for years, being only a chattel, is testamentary, consequently the rent devised thereout. 1 Sid. 279: 2 Keb. 5: 1 Lev. 179.

The rights to offices for life in the Ecclesiastical Courts, or Courts of Admiralty, are determinable at Common Law; as in the question concerning the validity of two patents, by which the office of Registrar to a Bishop was granted; it was held, that this should not be tried in the Spiritual Court, though the subject-matter be spiritual; because the office itself being matter of freehold is, for that reason, of temporal cognizance. 2 Rol. Abr. 285—6: Noy 91: Latch. 228: Palm. 450: Godb. 390: Cro. Car. 65: 2 Rol. Rep. 306: Raym. 88: 1 Lev. 125: 4 Mod. 27: Comb. 306.

When the right of election to the office of Canon-residentiary, a freehold office, is in the Dean and Chapter, a Prohibition shall go to the Bishop, claiming a right to present by lapse, under pretence of his visitatorial authority. 1 Term Rep. 650.

Trespass on a glebe, being freehold, cannot be determined in the Ecclesiastical Court. Bro. Jurisdiction, pl. 41.

A parson libelled against the defendant in the Spiritual Court of York for having cut elms in the church-yard; and a Prohibition was granted, on suggestion that they grew on his freehold. 1 Ld. Raym. 212.

If a remedy be given in any case by statute, in a Temporal Court, a Prohibition lies to the Spiritual Court, if a suit be there, though the matter be of a spiritual nature; except where the jurisdiction of the Spiritual Court is saved by the same statute. 1 Inst. 96, b.

Preaching without licence is within the act of Uniformity, and therefore Prohibition lies to a suit in the Spiritual Court for it. Fort. 345.

A Prohibition lies to a suit for marrying without banns or licence, since stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33, by which it is made felony. 2 Wils. 79.

But Prohibition does not lie to a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court against a Quaker for repairs of the church, on stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34; though the act gives a remedy before Justices of the Peace; for the old remedy is not taken away: nor in the case of small tithes, under stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 6. Fort. 347.

For more learning on this subject, see 4 New Abr: and 17 & 18 Vin. Abr. and Kyd's Com. Dig. under title Prohibition.

PROHIBITIO DE VASTO, DIRECTA PARTI, A judicial writ directed to the tenant, prohibiting him from making waste on the land in controversy, during the suit. Reg. Judic. 21.

A Prohibition shall be granted to any one who commits waste, either in the house or buildings of the incumbent of a spiritual living; or who cuts down trees on the glebe, or doth any other waste. Moor 917.

PRO INDIVISO, For undivided.] The possession or occupation of lands or tenements belonging to two or more persons, whereof none knows his several portion; as coparceners before partition. Bract. lib. 5. See title Parceners.

PROLES, Lat.] Progeny; Such issue as proceeds from a lawful marriage; though, if the word be used at large, it may denote others.

PROLOCUTOR OF THE CONVOCATION-HOUSE, Prolocutor domûs convocationis.] An officer chosen by Ecclesiastical persons, publicly assembled in convocation by virtue of the King's writ at every Parliament: there are two Prolocutors, one of the higher House of Convocation, the other of the lower House; the latter of which is chosen by the lower House, and presented to the Bishops of the higher House as their Prolocutor, that is the person by whom the lower House of Convocation intend to deliver their resolutions to the upper House, and have their own House especially ordered and governed: his office is to cause the clerk to call the names of such as are of that House, when he sees cause; to read all things propounded, gather suffrages, &c. PROMISSORY NOTES; See title Bill of Exchange.

PROMOTERS, Promotores.] Persons who in popular and penal actions prosecuted offenders, in their name and the King's, as informers, having part of the fines or penalties for their reward: they belonged chiefly to the Exchequer and King's Bench; and Sir Edward Coke calls them turbidum hominum genus. 3 Inst. 191.

To PROMULGE A LAW, Promulgare Legem.] To declare, publish, and proclaim a Law to the people; and so promulged, promulgatus, signifies published or proclaimed. See stat. 6 H. 6. c. 4: 1 Comm. 45: and this Dictionary, title Statute.

PRONOTARY; See Prothonotary.

PROOF, The shewing the truth of any matter alleged, or the trial, or making out, of any thing, by a Jury, witnesses, &c.

Bracton says, there is Probatio duplex, viz. Vivâ voce, by witnesses; and Probatio mortua, by deeds, writings, &c.

Proof, according to Lilly, is either in giving evidence to a Jury on a trial, or else on interrogatories, or by copies of records, or exemplifications of them. 2 Lil. Abr. 393.—Though where a man speaks generally of Proof, it shall be intended of Proof by a Jury, which in the strict signification is legal Proof. 3 Bulst. 56.

Condition of a bond was to pay such money as an apprentice should mispend, on Proof made by the confession of the apprentice or otherwise; and it was held, that although generally Proof shall be intended to be made on a trial by Jury, in this case it being referred to the confession of the party, it is sufficient if he confess it under his hand. Cro. Jac. 381.

It hath been insisted, that the Law knows no other Proof but before a Jury in a judicial way, and that which is on record; but if the Proof is modified by the agreement of the parties, that it shall be in such a manner, or before such a person, that modification which allows another manner of Proof shall be observed and prevail against the legal construction of the word Proof. Sid. 313: 2 Lutw. 436.

In articles the parties bound themselves in the penalty of 100*l.* &c. to be paid on due Proof of a breach; Proof at a trial will maintain the action. Lutw. 441. See further title Evidence.

PRO PARTIBUS LIBERANDIS, An ancient writ for partition of lands between coheirs. Reg. Orig. 316. See title Parceners.

PROPER FEUDS; See title Tenures I.

PROPERTY, Proprietas.] The highest right a man can have to any thing; being used for that right which one hath to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which no way depend on another man's curtesy.

Before men entered into society there was not any Property, but an universal right instead of it; every man might then take to his use what he pleased, and retain it, if he had sufficient power: but when men entered into society, and industry, arts, and sciences were introduced, Property was gained by various means; for the securing whereof, proper laws were ordained.

It seems, that the abstract right of Property originates in Occupancy, or when any thing is separated for private use from the common stores of nature: and this appears agreeable to the reason and sentiments of mankind, prior to all civil establishments. See 2 Comm. c. 1; and 2.; and this Dictionary, titles Occupant; Liberty; Title.

According to our law, Property in lands and tenements is acquired either by entry, descent by law, or conveyance; and in goods or chattels, it may be gained many ways, though usually by deed of gift, or bargain and sale. 2 Lil. Abr. 400.

For preserving Property the Law hath these rules:

1st, No man is to deprive another of his Property, or disturb him in enjoying it.

2dly, Every person is bound to take due care of his own Property, so as the neglect thereof may not injure his neighbour.

3dly, All persons must so use their right, that they do not, in the manner of doing it, damage their neighbour's Property.

There are also three sorts of Properties, viz. Property absolute; Property qualified; and Property possessory; an absolute proprietor hath an absolute power to dispose of his estate as he pleases, subject to the laws of the land. The husband hath a qualified Property in his wife's land, real chattels and debts; but in her chattels personal, he hath an absolute Property. Plowd. 5.

The right of possession of real Property, though it carries with it a strong presumption, is not always conclusive evidence of the right of Property, which may still subsist in another man; for as one man may have the possession, and another the right of possession, which is recovered by possessory actions; so one man may have the right of possession, and so not be liable to eviction by any possessory action, and another may have the right of Property, which cannot be otherwise asserted than by a Writ of Right. 3 Comm. c. 10. See this Dict. titles Action; Writ of Right.

Property in chattels personal may be either in possession; which is where a man hath not only the right to enjoy, but hath the actual enjoyment of the thing; or else it is in action; where a man hath only a bare right, without any occupation or enjoyment: and of these the former, or Property in possession, is divided into two sorts, an absolute and a qualified Property. Property in possession absolute may be in all inanimate things, and in all such animals as are naturally tame; a qualified Property is had, under certain circumstances, in wild animals, being tamed; or being unable to escape propter impotentiam, as birds in the nest; or may be obtained propter privilegium, by the privilege of hunting, &c. in exclusion of others. So, a qualified Property exists in the elements of light, air, and water. See 2 Comm. c. 25.

Every owner of goods, &c. hath a general Property in them: though a legatee of goods hath no Property in the goods given him by will until actually delivered him by the executor, who hath the lawful possession. See title Legacy.

And though, by a bare agreement, a bargain and sale of goods may be so far perfected, without delivery or payment of money, that the parties may have an action of the case for non-performance, yet no Property vests until delivery; therefore it is said, if a second buyer gets delivery, he has the better title. 3 Salk. 61, 62.

But if one covenant with me, that if I pay him so much money such a day, I shall have his goods in such a place, and I pay him the money: this is a good sale, and by it I have the Property of the goods. 27 H. 8. 16. See titles Agreement; Fraud.

As to Property of Things in Possession or Action;

In Possession, it is generally, when no other can have them from the owner, or with him, without his act or default; or specially, when some other hath an interest with him, or where there is a Property also in another as well as in the owner; as by bailment, delivery of things to a carrier, or innkeeper, where goods are pawned or pledged, distrained or leased, &c. And Property in Action, is when one hath an interest to sue at law for the things themselves, or for damages for them; as for debts, wrongs, &c. and all these things, in possession, or action, one may have in his own right, or in the right of another, as executor. Wood's Inst. 314.

A person hath such a special Property in goods delivered him to keep, that he may maintain actions against strangers who take them out of his possession: so of things delivered to a carrier, and when goods are pawned, &c. Lil. Abr. 400, 401.

An executor or administrator hath the Property of the goods of the deceased. But a servant hath neither a general or special Property in his master's goods; therefore to take them from his master may be trespass or felony, according to the value and other circumstances. Goldsb. 72. See titles Servant; Apprentice.

If a man hires a horse, he hath a special Property in the horse during the time, against all men, even against the right owner; against whom he may have an action if he disturbs him in the possession. Cro. Eliz. 236. But it hath been adjudged, that if a man deliver goods, &c. to another to keep for a certain time, and then to redeliver them; if he to whom they were delivered sell them in open market, before the day appointed for the redelivery, the owner may seize them wherever he finds them, because the general Property was always in him, and not altered by the sale. Godb. 160: 3 Nels. Abr. 18. And if one delivers a horse or other cattle, or goods, to another to keep, and he kills the horse, or spoils the goods, trespass lies against him; for by the killing or spoiling, the Property is destroyed. 5 Rep. 13. See title Bailment.

If a swarm of bees light on a tree, they are not the owner's of the tree, till covered with his hive; no more than hawks that have made their nests there, &c. But their young ones will be his Property, and for them he may have trespass. Doct. & Stud. c. 5: Co. Litt. 145.

A man's geese, &c. fly away out of sight, wherever they go, he hath still a Property in them. Staundf. lib. 1. c. 16: 3 Shep. Abr. 121.

 Wild

Wild beasts, deer, hares, conies, &c. though they belong to a man on account of his game and pleasure, none can have an absolute real Property in; but if they are inclosed and made tame, there may be a qualified and possessory Property in them. See title Game.

One may have absolute Property in things of a base nature, as mastiff dogs, hounds, spaniels, &c. but not in things feræ naturæ, unless when dead. Dalt. 371: Finch. 176: 11 Rep. 50: Raym. 16.

Property in lands, goods, and chattels, may be forfeited or lost, by treason, felony, flight, outlawry; also of goods by their becoming deodand, waif, estray, &c. Bac. Elem. 77, 78. See title Forfeiture.

PROPERTY IN HIGHWAYS, &c. He who hath the land which lies on both sides the Highway, hath the Property of the soil of the Highway in him, notwithstanding the King hath the privilege for his people to pass through it at their pleasure; for the Law presumes that the way was at first taken out of the lands of the party who owns the lands lying on both sides the way: And divers lords of manors claim the soil as part of their waste. 2 Lil. Abr. 400. See title Highway.

If the sea or a river, by violent incursion, carries away the soil or ground in so great a quantity, that he who had the Property in the soil can know where his land is, he shall have his land; but if his soil or land be insensibly wasted by the sea or river, he must lose his Property, because he cannot prove which is his land. Pasch. 1650. See title Occupant.

A tenant hath only a special Property in the trees on the lands demised, so long as they remain part of the freehold; for, when they are severed, his Property is gone 11 Rep. 82.

PROPERTY ALTERED. A man borrows or finds my goods, or takes them from me; neither of these acts will alter the Property. Bro. Propert. 27.

If one having taken away corn, make it into malt; turn plate into money, or timber into a house, &c. the Property of them is altered. Dodderidge Law 132, 133.

And where goods are generally sold in a market overt, for a valuable consideration, and without fraud, it alters the Property thereof. 5 Rep. 83. Except in some particular cases. See title Market.

To alter or transfer Property, is lawful; but to violate Property is never lawful, Property being a sacred thing which ought not to be violated. And every man (if he hath not forfeited it) hath a Property, and a right allowed him, to defend his life, liberty, and estate; and if either be violated, the Law gives an action to redress the injury and punish the wrong. 2 Lil. Abr. 400. See title Liberty.

PROPHECIES, Prophetiæ.] The foretelling of things to come, in hidden mysterious speeches; whereby commotions have been often caused in the kingdom, and attempts made by those to whom such speeches promised good success, though the words were mystically framed, and pointed only to the cognizance, arms, or some other quality of the parties: But these, for distinction sake, are called false or fantastical Prophecies.

False Prophecies, (where persons pretend extraordinary commissions from God) to raise jealousies in the people, to terrify them from impending judgments, &c. are punishable at Common Law, as impostures: They are reckoned by Blackstone among offences against the public peace; and were punished capitally by stat. 1 E. 6. c. 12; which was repealed in the reign of Queen Mary. And now by stat. 5 Eliz. c. 15, none shall publish or set forth any false Prophecy, with an intent to make any rebellion or disturbance, on pain of 10*l.* for the first offence, and a year's imprisonment; and for the second offence to forfeit all his goods and chattels, and suffer imprisonment during life: The prosecution to be within six months. See 3 Inst 128, 129.

PROPORTION, Proportio] See De Onerando pro Rata Portionis.

PROPORTUM, Purport.] Intent or meaning. Cowell.

PROPOUNDERS The 85th chapter of Coke's 3d Institutes is intitled, against Monopolists, Propounders, and Projectors, where it seems to signify the same as Monopolists: Cowell:—rather as Projectors.

PROPRIETARY, Proprietarius] He who hath a property in any thing, quæ nullius arbitrio est obnoxia; but was heretofore chiefly used for him who had the fruits of a benefice to himself, his heirs and successors, as abbots and priors had to them and their successors. See title Appropriations.

PROPRIETATE PROBANDA, A writ to the Sheriff to inquire of the property of goods distrained, when the defendant claimeth property on a Replevin sued; for the Sheriff cannot proceed till that matter is decided by writ; and if it is found for the plaintiff, then the Sheriff is to make replevin; but if for the defendant, he can proceed no further. F. N B. 77: Finch 316, 450: Co. Lit. 145. b. See title Replevin.

PRO RATA, Pro proportione.] In proportion:—As jointenants, &c. are to pay Pro Rata, i e. in proportion to their estates. See titles Joint tenants; Parceners.

PROROGUE, To prolong, or put of to another day. See title Parliament.

PROTECTION, Protectio.] Is generally taken for that benefit and safety which every Subject hath by the King's Laws; every man who is a loyal Subject is in the King's Protection; and, in this sense, to be out of the King's Protection, is to be excluded the benefit of the Law. See title Præmunire.

In a special signification, a Protection of the King is an act of grace, by writ issued out of Chancery, which lies where a man passes over the sea in the King's service; and by this writ (when allowed in Court) he shall be quit from all personal and real suits between him and any other person; except assises of novel disseisin, assise of darrein presentment, attaints, &c. until his return. 2 Lil. Abr. 398.

This term is thus further explained, viz. Protection is an immunity granted by the King to a certain person, to be free from suits at Law for a certain time, and for some reasonable cause; and it is a branch of the King's prerogative so to do: There are two sorts of these Protections; one is cum clausulâ, Volumus; and of that Protection there are three particulars; one is called quia profecturus, and is for him who is going beyond sea in the King's service; another is quia moraturus, which is for him who is already abroad in the King's service, as an ambassador, &c. and another is for the King's debtor, that he be not sued till the King's debt is satisfied: The other sort of Protection is cum clausulâ, Nolumus, &c. which is granted to a spiritual corporation, that their goods or chattels be not taken by the Officer of the King.

King, for the King's service; it may likewise be granted to a spiritual person single, or to a temporal person. Reg. Orig. 23.

By the Common Law the King might take his debtor into his Protection, so that no one might sue or arrest him till the King's debt were paid. F. N. B. 28: Co. Lit. 131: But by stat. 25 E. 3. st. 5. c. 19, notwithstanding such Protection, another creditor may proceed to judgment against him with a stay of execution, till the King's debt be paid; unless such creditor will undertake for the King's debt, and then he shall have execution for both. 3 Comm. c. 19.

On a person's going over sea, in the service of the King, writ of Protection shall issue, to be quit of suits till he return; and then a resummons may be had against him: But one may proceed against a defendant having such Protection, until he comes and shews the Protection in Court, and hath it allowed; when his plea or suit shall go sine die; though if after it appears that the party who hath the Protection, goes not about the business for which the Protection was granted, the plaintiff may have a repeal, &c. Terms de Ley: 2 Lil. Abr. 398. And by stat. 33 E. 1. st. 1. the plaintiff may challenge the Protection, and aver, that the defendant was within the four seas; or not in the King's service, &c.

A Protection is to be made for one year, and may be renewed from year to year; but if it be made for two or three years, the Justices will not allow it: And if the King grant a Protection to his debtor, that he be not sued till his debt is paid; on these Protections none shall be delayed; the party is to answer and go to judgment, and execution shall be staid. Co. Lit. 130: See ante: and stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 19.

The King granted a Protection to one of his debtors; and on demurrer it was alleged, that by stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 19, Protections of this kind are expresly, that none shall be delayed on them; and the Court ordered, that when it came to execution they would advise; so a respondeas ouster was awarded. Cro. Jac. 477.

In all Protections there ought to be a cause shewn for granting them: If obtained pending the suit, they are bad; and a person giving bail to an action on arrest, it is said, may not plead his Protection; one may not be discharged out of prison to which he is committed in execution, by Protection to serve the King, &c. Nor will a Protection be allowed where a person is taken on a capias utlagatum, after judgment; for though the capias utlagatum is at the King's suit in the first place, it is in the second degree for the Subject. Latch. 197: 1 Leon. 185: Dyer 162: Hob. 115.

But in action on assumpsit a Protection under the Great Seal was brought into Court, for that defendant was in the wars in Flanders, &c. and it was allowed though after an exigent. 3 Lev. 332.

A Plaintiff in an action cannot cast a Protection; for the Protection is for the defendant, and shall be always for him, if it be not in special cases where the plaintiff becomes defendant. New Nat. Br. 62. And no Protection shall be allowed against the King. Co. Lit. 131.

A Protection to save a default, is not good for any place within the kingdom of England: And regularly it lies only where the defendant or tenant is demandable; for the Protection is to excuse his default, which cannot be made when he is not demanded. Jenk. Cent. 66, 94.

These Protections are now very rarely used; the last instance of one was in 1692, when King William III. granted one to Lord Cutts, to protect him from being outlawed by his tailor. 3 Lev. 332.

FORM of the WRIT of PROTECTION:

PROTEST, Protestatio.] Hath two applications; one, by way of caution, to call witnesses (as it were) or openly affirm that he doth either not at all, or but conditionally, yield his consent to any act, or unto the proceeding of a Judge in a Court, wherein his jurisdiction is doubtful, or to answer on his oath further than by Law he is bound. See Plowden 676. and Reg. Orig. 306.

The other is by way of complaint, as to protest a man's bill. See title Bills of Exchange.

Each Peer has a right, by leave of the House, when a vote passes contrary to his sentiments, to enter his dissent on the Journals of the House, with the reasons of such dissent; which is usually styled his Protest. See title Parliament V. 1.

PROTESTATION, Protestatio.] A defence or safeguard to the party who maketh it, from being concluded by the action he is about to do, that issue cannot be joined by it. Plowd. 276. See title Pleading.

It is a form of pleading when one does not directly affirm or deny any thing alleged by another, or which he himself allegeth. Cowell. As, protestando that he made no testament pro placito that he made not the plaintiff his executor; because if he made no testament he could make no executor. Heath's Max. 26. cites Pl. C. 276.

Coke defines a Protestation to be an exclusion of a conclusion. 1 Inst. 124. For the use of it is, to save the party from being concluded with respect to some fact or circumstance, which cannot be directly affirmed or denied without falling into duplicity of pleading; and which yet, if he did not thus enter his Protest, he might be deemed to have tacitly waived or admitted. Thus, while tenure in villenage subsisted, if a villein had brought brought an action against his lord, and the lord was inclined to try the merits of the demand, and at the same time to prevent any conclusion against himself that he had waived his signiory; he could not in this case both plead affirmatively that the plaintiff was his villein, and also take issue upon the demand; for then his plea would have been double, as the former alone would have been a good bar to the action: but he might have alleged the villenage of the plaintiff, by way of Protestation, and then have denied the demand. By this means the future vassalage of the plaintiff was saved to the defendant, in case the issue was found in his (the defendant's) favour: for the Protestation prevented that conclusion, which would otherwise have resulted from the rest of his defence, that he had enfranchised the plaintiff; since no villein could maintain a civil action against his lord. Co. Lit. 126.* So also, if a defendant, by way of inducement to the point of his defence, alleges (among other matters) a particular mode of seisin or tenure, which the plaintiff is unwilling to admit, and yet desires to take issue on the principal point of the defence, he must deny the seisin or tenure by way of Protestation, and then traverse the defensive matter. So lastly, if an award be set forth by the plaintiff, and he can assign a breach in one part of it, (viz. the non-payment of a sum of money) and yet is afraid to admit the performance of the rest of the award, or to aver in general a non-performance of any part of it, lest something should appear to have been performed; he may save to himself any advantage he might hereafter make of the general non-performance, by alleging that by Protestation; and plead only the non-payment of the money. 3 Comm. c. 20. p. 312.

Protestation is said to be of two kinds, 1st, When a man pleads any thing which he dare not directly affirm, or cannot plead, for fear of making his plea double; as if in conveying to himself by his plea a title, he ought to plead divers descents by divers persons, and he dare not affirm that they were all seised at the time of their death, or although he could do it, yet it will be double to plead two descents, of both which each one by itself may be a good bar, then the defendant ought to plead and allege the matter, introducing the word protestando; as to say (by Protestation) that such a one died seised, &c. and that the adverse party cannot traverse. 2dly, When one is to answer two matters, and yet by Law he ought to plead but to one, then in the beginning of his plea he may say protestando & non cognoscendo such part of the matter to be true, (and then making his plea further) sed pro placito in hac parte, &c. and so he may take issue on the other part of the matter; and then he is not concluded by any of the rest of the matter which he hath by Protestation so denied. Reg. Plac. 70, 71. See 18 Vin. Abr. title Protestation.

In other terms, the use of a Protestation in pleading seems to be this, viz. When one party alleges or pleads several matters, and the other party can only offer, or take issue on one of them, he protests against the others: in such case should the issue, on trial, be found against the latter party, the record would not be evidence against him in another suit, as to those matters or points, against which he protested; which it otherwise might be, had he admitted, or not protested against them. Dict.

PROTHONOTARY, Protonotarius, vel Primus Notarius.] A chief Officer or Clerk of the Common Pleas and King's Bench; for the first Court there are three Prothonotaries, and the other hath but one: He of the King's Bench records all civil actions; as the Clerk of the Crown Office doth all criminal causes in that Court: Those of the Common Pleas, since the order 14 Jac. I., on agreement entered in between the Prothonotaries and Filazers of that Court, enter and inrol all manner of declarations, pleadings, assises, judgments, and actions: They make out all judicial writs, except writs of Habeas Corpus and Distringas Jurator'; (for which there is a particular office erected, called the Habeas Corpora Office;) also writs of execution, and of seisin, of privilege for removing causes from inferior Courts, writs of procedendo, scire facias's, in all cases, and writs to inquire of damages; and all process upon prohibitions, on writs of auditâ querelâ, false judgment, &c. They likewise enter recognizances acknowledged in that Court; and all common recoveries; and make exemplifications of records, &c. See stat. 5 H. 4. c. 14.

PROVER, Probator, mentioned in stats. 28 Ed. 1. st. 2: 5 H. 4. c. 2; See title Approver, and 3 Inst. 129. A man became an approver, and appealed five, and every of them joined battel with him: Et duellum percussum fuit cum omnibus, & Probator *devicit omnes quinque in duello; quorum quatuor suspendebantur, & quintus clamabat esse clericum & allocatur, & Probator pardonatur. PROVINCE, Provincia.] An out country, governed by a Deputy or Lieutenant. Lit. Dict. See this Dict. title Plantation.

It was used among the Romans for a country, without the limits of Italy, gained to their subjection by the sword; whereupon that part of France next the Alps was so called by them, and still retains the name; Provence.

But with us a Province is most usually taken for the circuit of an Archbishop's jurisdiction; as the Province of Canterbury, and that of York: Yet it is mentioned in some of our statutes, for several parts of the realm; and sometimes for a county. See stat. antiq. 32 H. 8. c. 23.

PROVINCIAL, Provincialis.] Of or belonging to a Province; also a chief Governor of a religious order; as of friars, &c. Stat. antiq. 4 H. 4. c. 17.

PROVISION, Provisio.] Was used for the providing a Bishop, or any other person an Ecclesiastical Living, by the Pope, before the incumbent was dead: It was also called gratia expectativa, or mandatum de providendo: The great abuse whereof produced the statutes of Provisors and Præmunire: See the latter title.

PROVISIONES. The acts to restrain the exorbitant abuse of arbitrary power, made in the Parliament at Oxford 1258, were called Provisions by Rishanger, who continued continued, Mat. Paris, anno 1260; being to provide againſt the King's abſolute will and pleaſure. See Matt. Paris ſub annis 1244 & 1254. Proviſiones ſignifies alſo Providentiæ, or Proviſions of victual. Cowell.

PROVISIONS, Selling unwholſome, Is reckoned by Blackſtone among offences againſt public health. To prevent which the ſtat. 51 Hen. 3. ſt. 6; and the ordinance for bakers, c. 7, prohibit the ſale of corrupted wine, contagious or unwholſome fleſh, or fleſh that is bought of a Jew; under pain of amercement for the firſt offence, pillory for the ſecond, fine and impriſonment for the third, and abjuration of the town for the fourth. And by ſtat. 12 Car. 2. c. 25. § 11, any brewing or adulteration of wine is puniſhed with the forfeiture of 100*l.* if done by the wholeſale merchant; and 40*l.* if done by the vintner or retail trader. 4 Comm. c. 13.

It would contribute much to the health of his Majeſty's Subjects, if theſe ſtatutes were enforced, with all the rigor of the Law. See title Victuals.

PROVISO, A condition inſerted in any deed, on the performance whereof the validity of the deed depends; ſometimes it is only a covenant, ſecundum ſubjectam materiam. 2 Rep. 70.

Proviſo, in the moſt common acceptation, is that clauſe in a mortgage, whereby the deed is declared to be void, on payment of principal and intereſt. See title Mortgage.

The word Proviſo is generally taken for a condition; but it differs from it in ſeveral reſpects; for a condition is uſually created by the grantor or leſſor, but a Proviſo by the grantee or leſſee; there is likewiſe a difference in placing the Proviſo; as if, immediately after the Habendum, the next covenant is that the leſſee ſhall repair, provided always that the leſſor ſhall find timber, this is no condition; nor is it a condition, if it comes among other covenants after the Habendum, and is created by the words of the leſſee; as if the leſſee covenants to ſcour the ditches, Proviſo, that the leſſor carry away the ſoil, &c. 3 Nelſ. Abr. 21.

It hath been held, that the Law hath not appointed any proper place in a deed to inſert a Proviſo; but that when it doth not depend on any other ſentence, but ſtands originally by itſelf, and when it is created by the words of the grantor, &c. and is reſtrictive or compulſory, to enforce the grantee to do ſome act, in ſuch caſe the word Proviſo makes a condition, though it is intermixed with other covenants, and doth not immediately follow the Habendum. 2 Rep. 70. See title Deed.

A Proviſo always implies a condition, if there be no words ſubſequent which may change it into a covenant: Alſo it is a rule in Proviſoes, that where the Proviſo is, that the leſſee, &c. ſhall do, or not do a thing, and no penalty is added to it; this is a condition; or it is void; but if a penalty be annexed, it is otherwiſe. Cro. Eliz. 242: 1 Lev. 155. And where a Proviſo is a condition, it ought to do the office of a condition, i. e. make the eſtate conditional, and ſhall have reference to the eſtate, and be annexed to it; but ſhall not make it void without entry, as a limitation will. See title Condition.

A leaſe was made for years, rendering rent at ſuch a day, Proviſo, if the rent be in arrear for one month after, the leaſe to be void: the queſtion was, whether this was a condition or limitation; for if it was a condition, then the leaſe is not determined without entry; adjudged, that it was a limitation, though the words were conditional; becauſe it appeared by the leaſe itſelf, that it was the expreſs agreement of the parties that the leaſe ſhall be void on non-payment of the rent; and it ſhall be void without entry. Moor 291. See titles Leaſe; Ejectment; Rent.

If a Proviſo be the mutual words of both parties to the deed, it amounts to a covenant: and a Proviſo by way of agreement to pay, is a covenant, and an action well lies upon it. 2 Rep. 72. See title Covenant I.

Plaintiff conveyed an office to defendant, Proviſo that out of the firſt profits he pay plaintiff 500*l.* And it was reſolved, that an action of covenant lay on this Proviſo; for it is not by way of condition or defeaſance, but in nature of a covenant to pay the money. 1 Lev. 155. But where defendant in conſideration of 400*l.* granted his lands to plaintiff for ninety-nine years, Proviſo if he pay ſo much yearly during the life of S. T. &c. or 400*l.* within two years after his death, then the grant to be void, and there was a bond for performance of covenants; in action of debt brought on this bond, it was adjudged, that there being no expreſs covenant to pay the money, there could be no breach aſſigned on this Proviſo. 2 Mod. 36. Sed qu. and ſee ante.

In articles of agreement to make a leaſe, Proviſo that the leſſee ſhould pay ſo much rent, &c. although there be no ſpecial words of reſervation of rent, the Proviſo is a good reſervation. Cro. Eliz. 486. And Proviſo with words of grant added to it, may make a grant and not a condition. Moor 174: See 1 And. 19.

When uſes are raiſed by covenant, in conſideration of paternal love to children, &c. and after, in the ſame indenture, there is a Proviſo to make leaſes, without any particular conſideration, it is void; though ſuch a Proviſo might be good, if the uſes were created by fine, recovery, &c. becauſe of the tranſmutation of the eſtate: and for that, in this caſe, uſes ariſe without conſideration. 1 Rep. 176: Moor 144: 1 Lev. 30. See title Uſe.

In a deed, a Proviſo, that if the ſon diſturb the other uſes, &c. that then a term granted to him, and the uſes to the heirs of his body, ſhall be void; this Proviſo is ſufficient to ceaſe the other uſes, on diſturbance. 8 Rep. 90. 91. But a Proviſo to make an eſtate, limited to one and the heirs male of his body, to ceaſe as if he was naturally dead, on his attempting any act by which the limitation of the land, or any the eſtate in tail, ſhould be undone, barred, &c. hath been adjudged not good; becauſe the eſtate tail is not determined by the death of tenant in tail, but by his dying without iſſue male. Dyer 351: 1 Rep. 83. See title Limitation of Lands.

A teſtator deviſed lands to one and the heirs male of his body, Proviſo, that if he attempt to alien, then his eſtate to ceaſe, and remain to another; the Proviſo is void. 1 Vent. 321.

A Proviſo that would take away the whole effect of a grant, as not to receive the profits of lands granted, &c. is void; and ſo is a Proviſo which is repugnant to the expreſs words of the grant: in a will, teſtator made another his executor, provided he did not adminiſter his eſtate, adjudged this Proviſo is void for repugnancy. Cro. Eliz. 107: Dyer 3.

And if a Proviſo is good at firſt, and afterwards it happens that there is no other remedy but that which was reſtrained: the remedy ſhall be had notwithſtanding the reſtraint. Wood's Inſt. 231. Where a Proviſo is parcel of, or abridgeth a covenant, it makes an exception; when when it is annexed to an exception in a deed, it is an explanation; and where added at the end of any covenant, there it extends only to defeat that covenant. 4 Leon. 72, 73: Moor 105, 471. See Deed; Condition; Covenant.

Proviso, Trial by; is where the plaintiff in an action desists in prosecuting his suit, and doth not bring it to trial in convenient time, the defendant in such case may take out the venire facias to the Sheriff, which hath in it these words, Proviso, quod, &c. i. e. provided that, if plaintiff take out any writ to that purpose, the Sheriff shall summon but one Jury on them both, and this is called going to trial by Proviso. Old Nat. Br. 159. See title Trial.

Process may be taken out by a defendant in criminal cases by Proviso in appeals, in the same manner as in other actions, on default of the appellant; but not in indictments, nor in actions where the King is sole party; and it hath been questioned, whether there can be any such process in informations qui tam. 2 Hawk. c. 41. § 10. See stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32; and this Dictionary, title Trial.

PROVISOR, One who sued to the Court of Rome for a provision. See title Præmunire. It is sometimes also taken for him who hath the care of providing things necessary; a Purveyor. Cowell.

Provisor Monasterii, The treasurer or steward of a Religious House, who had the custody of goods and money, and supervised all accounts. Cowell.

Provisor Victualium, The King's Purveyor, who provided for the accommodation of his Court, is so called in our historians. Cowell.

PROVOCATION, To make killing a person manslaughter, &c. See title Homicide III. 2.

PROVOST MARSHAL, Is an officer of the King's Navy, who hath the charge of prisoners taken at sea: and is sometimes used for like purpose at land. See stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 9.

PROXIES, Persons appointed instead of others, to represent them.

Every Peer of the Realm, called to Parliament, hath the privilege of constituting a Proxy to vote for him in his absence on a lawful occasion; but such Proxies are by licence of the King, and sometimes Proxies have been denied by the King; particularly annis 6, 27, & 39 Ed. 3. See title Parliament V. 1.

Proxies are also annual payments made by Parochial Clergy to the Bishop, &c. on visitations. See Procurations.

PRYK, A kind of service or tenure; according to Blount, it signifies an old-fashioned spur, with one point only, which the tenant, holding land by this tenure, was to find for the King.

In the time of Hen. VIII. light horsemen in war were called Prickers; because they used such spurs or Pryks, to make their horses go with speed.

PUBERTY, Pubertas.] The age of fourteen in men, and twelve in women; when they are held fit for, and capable of contracting, marriage. See titles Age; Infant.

PUBLICATION, Is used of depositions of witnesses in a cause in Chancery, in order to the hearing; it signifies the shewing the depositions openly, and giving out copies of them, &c. pursuant to the rules of the Court. See titles Chancery; Depositions.—As to the publication of Libels and Wills, see those titles.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS; See title Accounts, Public.

All the lands, tenements, and hereditaments, which an accountant hath, shall, for the payment of debts to the Crown, be liable and put in execution, in like manner as if he had stood bound by writing obligatory, having the effect of a statute staple, &c. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 4.

PUBLIC ACT of Parliament; See Statute.

PUBLIC FAITH, Fides Publica.] In the reign of Charles I. there was a pretence or cheat, to raise money of the seduced people, upon what was termed the Public Faith of the nation, to make war against the King, about the year 1642. Stat. 17 C. 1. c. 18.

PUERITIA; See Puberty.

PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE, Is a plea of new matter, pending an action, post ultimam continuationem. See title Pleading.

PUISNE, Fr. Puisné.] Younger, puny, born after, junior. See Mulier. The several Judges and Barons, not chiefs, are called Puisne Judges, Puisne Barons.

PULSATOR, The plaintiff or actor; from pulsare, to accuse any one. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 26.

PUNISHMENT, Pœna.] The penalty for transgressing the Law: and as debts are discharged to private persons by payment, so obligations to the public, for disturbing society, are discharged when the offender undergoes the Punishment inflicted for his offence. See title Judgment, Criminal.

PUR AUTER VIE. Where lands, &c. are held for another's life. See title Occupant.

PURCHASE.

Acquisitum, Perquisitum, Perquisitio.] The buying or other acquisition of lands, or tenements, with money, or by gift, deed, or agreement; as distinct from the obtaining them by descent or hereditary right; conjunctum perquisitum is where two or more persons join in the Purchase. Litt. § 2: Reg. Orig. 143.

Purchase, taken in its largest and most extensive sense, is thus defined: The possession of lands and tenements, which a man hath by his own act or agreement, and not by descent from any of his ancestors or kindred. In this sense it is contradistinguished from acquisition by right of blood; and includes every other method of coming to an estate, but merely that by inheritance: wherein the title is vested in a person not by his own act or agreement, but by the single operation of Law. Lit. § 12: 1 Inst. 18. What is termed in the Common Law Purchase, was by the feudists called Conquest, conquæstus or conquisitio: and in this sense it was that William the First was called Conquæstor, or the Conqueror, signifying, that he was the first of his family who acquired the Crown and Realm of England. See 2 Comm. c. 15.

This is the legal signification of the word perquisitio, or Purchase; and in this sense it includes the five following methods of acquiring a title to estates: Escheat, Occupancy, Prescription, Forfeiture, Alienation. See this Dictionary, under those and other titles connected therewith: and further, titles Remainder; Executory Devise; Limitation of Estate, &c.

Mr. Hargrave, after some remarks on the peculiar nature of Escheats, observes, that instead of distributing all the several titles to land under Purchase and Descent, it would be more accurate to say, that the title to land is either by Purchase, to which the act or agreement of the party is essential, or by mere act of Law: and under the latter to consider, first, Descent; and then Escheat, and such ſuch other titles, not being by deſcent, as yet like them accrue by mere act of Law. 1 Inſt. 18. b.

One cometh in by Purchaſe when he comes to lands by legal conveyance, and hath a lawful eſtate: and a Purchaſe is always intended by title, either from ſome conſideration, or by gift; (for a gift is in Law a Purchaſe;) whereas deſcent from an anceſtor cometh of courſe by act of Law; alſo all contracts are comprehended under this word Purchaſe. Co. Litt. 18: Doct. and Stud. cap. 24.

Purchaſe in oppoſition to Deſcent is taken largely; if an eſtate comes to a man from his anceſtors without writing, that is a Deſcent: but where a perſon takes any thing from an anceſtor, or others, by deed, will, or gift, and not as heir at law; that is a Purchaſe. 2 Lil. Abr. 403.

When an eſtate doth originally veſt in the heir, and never was nor could be in the anceſtor; ſuch heir ſhall take by way of Purchaſe: but when the thing might have veſted in his anceſtor, though it be firſt in the heir, and not in him at all, the heir ſhall have it in nature of Deſcent. 1 Rep. 95, 106.

Conſiſtent with the above rule is Mr. Fearne's explanation of the much-conteſted point, in what caſe an heir ſhall be ſaid to take by limitation, and in what by Purchaſe: or, in the language of conveyancers, what are words of limitation, and what are words of Purchaſe. See fully this Dictionary, title Remainder; and poſt. Div. I. of this title.

I. In what Caſes Heirs ſhall be deemed Purchaſers; and of the Effect of their taking by Purchaſe.

II. Of Purchaſers for a valuable Conſideration; and how protected or made anſwerable in Equity. See alſo this Dictionary, under titles Fraud; Conſideration, &c.

I. Purchase, in its vulgar and confined acceptation, is applied only to ſuch acquiſitions of land as are obtained by way of bargain and ſale, for money, or ſome other valuable conſideration. But this falls far ſhort of the legal idea of Purchaſe: for if I give land freely to another, he is in the eye of Law a Purchaſer; and falls within Littleton's definition, for he comes to the eſtate by his own agreement, that is, he conſents to the gift. 1 Inſt. 18. A man who has his father's eſtate ſettled upon him in tail, before he was born, is alſo a Purchaſer; for he takes quite another eſtate than the law of deſcents would have given him. Nay, even if the anceſtor deviſes his eſtate to his heir at law by will, with other limitations, or in any other ſhape than the courſe of deſcents would direct, ſuch heir ſhall take by Purchaſe. Ld. Raym 728. Thus if a man, having two daughters, his heirs, deviſes his land to them and their heirs; they ſhall take by Purchaſe as joint-tenants; for the eſtate of joint tenants, and tenants in common, is different in its nature and quality from that of co-parceners. Cro. Eliz. 431. But if a man, ſeiſed in fee, deviſes his whole eſtate to his heir at law, ſo that the heir takes neither a greater nor a leſs eſtate by the deviſe than he would have done without it, he ſhall be adjudged to take by deſcent, even though it be charged with incumbrances; this being for the benefit of creditors, and others, who have demands on the eſtate of the anceſtor. 1 Rol. Abr. 626: Salk. 241: Ld. Raym. 728. If a remainder be limited to the heirs of A. here A. himſelf takes nothing; but, if he dies during the continuance of the particular eſtate, his heirs ſhall take as Purchaſers. 1 Roll. Abr. 627. But if an eſtate be made to A. for life, remainder to his right heirs in fee, his heirs ſhall take by deſcent: for it is an ancient rule of Law, that wherever the anceſtor takes an eſtate for life, the heir cannot by the ſame conveyance take an eſtate in fee by Purchaſe, but only by deſcent. 1 Rep. 104: 2 Lev. 60: Raym. 334. And, if A. dies before entry, ſtill his heir ſhall take by deſcent, and not by Purchaſe; for where the heir takes any thing that might have veſted in the anceſtor, he takes by way of deſcent. 1 Rep. 98. The anceſtor, during his life, beareth in himſelf all his heirs; and therefore, when once he is, or might have been, ſeiſed of the lands, the inheritance ſo limited to his heirs veſts in the anceſtor himſelf: and the word "heirs" in this caſe is not eſteemed a word of Purchaſe, but a word of limitation, enuring ſo as to increaſe the eſtate of the anceſtor, from a tenancy for life to a fee-ſimple. Co. Litt. 22. And, had it been otherwiſe, had the heir (who is uncertain till the death of the anceſtor) been allowed to take as a Purchaſer originally nominated in the deed, as muſt have been the caſe if the remainder had been expreſsly limited to him by name; then, in the times of ſtrict feodal tenure, the lord would have been defrauded, by ſuch a limitation, of the fruits of his ſigniory, ariſing from a deſcent to the heir. 2 Comm. c. 15. p. 242. See further, this Dictionary, titles Remainder; Heir II.

The difference in effect, between the acquiſition of an eſtate, by deſcent and by Purchaſe, conſiſts principally in theſe two points: Firſt, That by Purchaſe the eſtate acquires a new inheritable quality, and is deſcendible to the owner's blood in general, and not to the blood only of ſome particular anceſtor. See title Deſcent. Secondly, That an eſtate taken by Purchaſe will not make the heir anſwerable for the acts of the anceſtor, as an eſtate by deſcent will. For, if the anceſtor by any deed, obligation, covenant, or the like, bindeth himſelf and his heirs, and dieth; this deed, obligation, or covenant, ſhall be binding upon the heir, ſo far forth only as he (or any other in truſt for him, ſtat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 10;) had any eſtate of inheritance, veſted in him by deſcent from, (or any eſtate pur auter vie, coming to him by ſpecial occupancy, as heir to, [§ 12, of the ſame ſtatute,]) that anceſtor, ſufficient to anſwer the charge; whether he remains in poſſeſſion, or hath aliened it before action brought. See 1 P. Wms. 777: ſtat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14: Therefore if a man covenants, for himſelf and his heirs, to keep my houſe in repair, I can then (and then only) compel his heir to perform this covenant, when he has an eſtate ſufficient for this purpoſe, or aſſets, by deſcent from the covenantor: for though the covenant deſcends to the heir, whether he inherits any eſtate or no, it lies dormant, and is not compulſory, until he has aſſets by deſcent. Finch Rep. 86. See title Aſſets.

II. A. enters into partnerſhip in 5ths, with three others, for 21 years, for digging mines in A.'s lands, A. to have two 5ths, and alſo, in conſideration of his ownerſhip of the land, to have a tenth more out of the ſhare of the other partners. Purſuant to the articles, they ſearched for the mines, and after two years' time, and the expence of about 120*l.*, they diſcovered a valuable mine, and worked it for about three months; and then A. dies, and his widow ſets up a voluntary ſettlement, made made after marriage. The Court inclined that the partners were as Purchasers, and that the voluntary settlement should not stand against them. 2 Vern. 326.

The wife joins with the husband in letting in an incumbrance on her jointure, and barring the estate-tail, and then limits the uses to the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to their daughter. Per Lord Keeper Wright, the daughters are not Purchasers, so as to shut out a judgment-creditor of the husband's, antecedent to barring the estate-tail; it might have been a good consideration for both, but it was not expressed in the deed, to be any consideration for settling the estate on the daughters, but was a voluntary gift of the wife to her husband, therefore the daughter's estate must be taken to be voluntary; and so a judgment-creditor ought to have the assistance of this Court before them. Canc. Prec. 114.

Every lessee is a Purchaser. 9 Mod. 59. See 2 Vern. 327.

A. seised in fee, settled his estate in 1712, to the use of himself for life, remainder to B. in tail, but with power of revocation, by any writing signed, &c. and attested by three, &c. credible witnesses. In 1715, A. by deed, attested by two witnesses only, reciting that he was indebted, as in a schedule annexed, conveyed his estate to W. R. and W. S. and their heirs, in trust to pay his said debts by profits, mortgage, or sale; and after payment thereof, to pay the overplus, and reconvey such part as should be unsold, to A. or such other person, &c. and for such uses, &c. as he, by any writing, signed and sealed, and attested, &c. should direct. A. died without issue, but left the said B. and C. the daughters of two sisters, his heirs at law. The deed of 1715 was kept private till after the death of W. S. the surviving trustee in 1724; and was then laid before counsel, who directed, that the heir of W. S. should assign the legal estate to the trustees in the deed of 1712, which was done. Afterwards, in 1726, on a treaty of marriage between Lord Fauconbridge and B. a marriage settlement was prepared by the same counsel, as counsel for Lord Fauconbridge, who made a settlement on B. in consideration of the great estate in land which he was to have with her. The surviving trustee in the deed of 1712, joined in this marriage settlement. C. brought a bill claiming a moiety of this estate of A. as coheiress with B., for that the deed in 1715 was a revocation of the deed in 1712. Lord F. pleaded that he was a Purchaser under the deed of 1712, without notice of that in 1715, and that the settlement made by him on B. was in contemplation of that settlement in 1712, and that the surviving trustee in that settlement was party to the marriage settlement; and that though the Purchase was not of the legal estate, but the trust only, that it would make no difference, according to Wilker and Bodington's case, 2 Vern. 599; and that neither would it differ the case, though there was no actual conveyance; for as the trustees in the deed of 1712 always acted under that deed for B. that trust should subsist as to himself, who was a fair Purchaser; and that he should not be affected by constructive notice to his counsel, as having been advised with on these two deeds in 1724; for it must be intended, that at the time of the counsel's being concerned for him, which was in 1726, he had forgot that he had ever seen this deed of 1715, there being an interval of two years between his first seeing it, and his being counsel for defendant. And for these reasons the Court held, that this could not be notice to his Lordship. Ld. Ch. B. Reynolds, who assisted the Lord Chancellor, held, that the Lord F. could be a Purchaser of no more than B. had, as no actual conveyance was made to him. The Master of the Rolls said, that to be a Purchaser in the notion of equity, there must be an actual contract, and a consideration paid; therefore, if at the time of marriage the deed of 1712 stood revoked, the trustees could be seised only of a moiety for the use of B., consequently Lord F. can be a Purchaser of no more. Lord Chancellor decreed a moiety of the estate, and an account of the rents and profits to C. since the death of A. See Gilb. 207; and Lilly's Pract. Conv. 391 to 402.

A. having a long lease of a house, in which his wife had some interest, by her consent renews it for eighty-one years, and in consideration of 400*l.* assigns it to B. who assigns it to C. his son, who married M. and died, leaving M. his executrix; M. on a second marriage, conveys it to trustees, &c. A. by bill sets forth this assignment, and that it was a mortgage, and that B. agreed to execute a reconveyance thereof, &c. and prayed a redemption. The executrix pleads she was a Purchaser, without notice of such agreement; and in consideration of a marriage with J. S. and of his undertaking to pay her debts, she assigned the original lease, &c. such a day to trustees, to the use of her intended husband, not having any notice of the agreement, prior to the executing the said deed on marriage. It was decreed, that defendants were in nature of Purchasers; and the plea was allowed. Finch. Rep. 9.

It is the rule of Equity, that where a man is Purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice, he shall not be annoyed in equity; not only where he has a prior legal estate, but where he has a better title or right to call for the legal estate, than the other. Treat. Eq. lib. 2. c. 6. § 2, cites 2 Vern. 599: 2 P. Wms. 678, &c.

This rule is founded on an obvious principle of equity. It seems, however, to have been broken in upon by the decisions in Burgh v. Burgh; [Burgh v. Francis;] Finch 28: and Williams v. Lambe, 3 Bro. C. R. 264. In the former of which cases the Court appears to have interposed to the prejudice of a judgment-creditor, without notice of the plaintiff's equity; and in the latter to the prejudice of a Purchaser, without notice of the plaintiff's title as Dowress. With respect to those instances in which a bonâ fide Purchaser has in equity been postponed, in respect of his conniving at the subsequent fraud of him under whom he derived his title, they are evidently exceptions to the general rule, which is confined to the claim of the Purchaser at the time of completing his Purchase; a claim which he may forfeit, as to third persons, by subsequent misconduct. Fonblanque's Note on Treat. Eq. ubi sup.: and see Treat. Eq. 1. c. 3. § 4, in n.; and this Dictionary, title Mortgage III.

It has been said, that by taking a conveyance with notice of a trust, the Purchaser himself becomes the trustee; and must not, to serve himself, be guilty of a breach of trust, notwithstanding any consideration paid. 2 Vern. 271. But this proposition seems to be stated too generally; for though an immediate or first Purchaser, with notice of an equitable claim in another, shall certainly not be allowed, though a Purchaser for valuable consideration, to protect himself against such equitable claim; yet if a person, having notice of an equitable claim claim in another, purchase from one who had not notice of such claim, he may protect himself by want of notice in his vendor; such protection being necessary to secure to the bona fide Purchaser, without notice, the full benefit of his Purchase. Pre. Ch. 51: 1 Atk. 571: 2 Bro. C. R. 66. Neither shall a Purchaser without notice, from a Purchaser with notice, be considered in equity as bound by the trust. 2 Vern. 384: Ambl. 313. See post.—It may be material to remark, that notice is not confined to the time of the contract; for if a person who has a lien in equity on the premises, give notice thereof before actual payment of the Purchase-money, it is sufficient. 3 P. Wms. 307: 2 Atk. 630: 3 Atk. 304: Or before the execution of the conveyance, though the Purchase-money be actually paid. 1 Atk. 384: Cases in C. 34.

A Purchaser who comes in without notice of a rent-charge shall not be chargeable therewith, although given to a charitable use. Toth. 258.

A Purchaser shall not be affected by a judgment in equity, without express notice of it before the Purchase, otherwise it is at law. Chan. Cas. 37.

A. indebted by bond, devised a debt to be paid out of his personal estate; but if it was not sufficient, then to sell his real estate, and pay it: the estate was sold, and by several mesne conveyances came to defendant, who was sued for the debt, as charged on the lands which he had bought. The defendant pleaded, that he had no notice of the demand, and was a Purchaser for a valuable consideration, and that the personal estate, was first liable, and that the Purchase-money, which was paid to two other of the defendants, was liable in the next place; and that there were other lands, which descended to one of them on the death of A. which ought to come in aid of him, and decreed accordingly. Finch. Rep. 137.

A Purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice, was decreed to pay arrears of an annuity charged on the lands purchased; though the same were due thirty years before, and no demand in all that time. Finch 252.

A Purchaser from T. S. who has a decree against him in Chancery for land, shall be bound by the decree, though he had no notice of it. 2 Chan. Cas. 48.

A bill was brought to prove a will, and perpetuate the testimony of witnesses; the defendant pleaded himself a Purchaser, without notice of such will; and insisted, that as there had been a verdict in affirmance of such will, (nothing hindering the plaintiff, but if he had a title he might recover at Law,) the plaintiff ought not to be admitted to examine his witnesses, thereby to hang a cloud over the Purchaser's estate; and on debate the Court allowed the plea. Vern. 354.

A. mortgaged land to B. and afterwards by his will (having sons D. and E.) devised the equity of redemption to E.—B. and D. join in an assignment of the mortgage to F.; though F. pleaded want of notice of the will, and that D. was the visible heir, yet decreed, that E. should have the equity of redemption on the foot of the first mortgage. N. Ch. R. 153.

A. purchases, having notice of a settlement whereby B. the vendor was but tenant for life, remainder to his first, &c. son in tail. Afterwards A. sells to D. who had no notice; B. dies, leaving a son; it was decreed that the last Purchaser should hold the land, but the first should account for the consideration-money, for which he sold the estate, with interest from the decease of B., thereout discounting what was due on a mortgage prior to the settlement which he had bought in. 2 Vern. 384.

Where there is a general trust, as to pay debts, though the Purchaser has notice of them, it seems that he is not obliged to see the Purchase-money applied: otherwise if the debts be particular, as for payment of debts in a schedule. Treat. Eq. ii. c. 6. § 2. But though the Purchaser be bound to see to the application of the money, as to the schedule debts, he is not bound to see that only so much real estate is sold or mortgaged, as will discharge such debts; unless there be a collusion between the heir and trustee. 1 Vern. 301: 2 Ch. Ca. 115; 221.—Neither is he bound to see to the payment of legacies, if the estate be charged generally with debts and legacies; for not being in such case bound to see to the discharge of debts, he cannot be expected to see to the discharge of the legacies, which cannot be paid till after the debts. Fonblanque's Note on Tr. Eq. ubi sup. cites Jebb. v. Abbott, 2 Bro. C. R.

As a Purchaser for valuable consideration has an equal claim to the protection of a Court of Equity, to defend his possession, as the plaintiff has to the assistance of the Court to assert his right, a Court of Equity will not, in general, compel a Purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice of the plaintiff's title, to make any discovery which may affect his own title; but such discovery will be enforced in favour of a Dowress. See 1 Vern. 179: 3 Bro. C. R. 264.

Thus an assignee of a lease shall not be forced to discover whether the lease is expired: but lessee for years of conusor of a statute has been compelled to discover what estate he had from the conusor, to the end that he might be liable to the statute. 8 Vin. 554. pl. 2; cited Treat. Eq. lib. 6. c. 3. § 3.

A Purchaser of lands from A. which B. makes title to, getting the deeds which make out B.'s title, is not bound to discover them. Chan. Cas. 69. So there is no reason to compel one whose land lies contiguous to mine, to discover the boundaries in his deeds; for that would be to help a man to evidence, to evict another of his possession. 2 Vern. 38. And a Court of Equity will not help the Issue against a Purchaser. 1 Vern. 212, 273: 2 Vern. 35, 50.

PURGATION, Purgatio.] The clearing a man's self of a crime, whereof he is publicly suspected, and accused before a Judge: of which there was formerly great use in England.

Purgation is either canonica or vulgaris.

Canonical Purgation is, that which is prescribed by the Canon Law, the form whereof, used in the Spiritual Court, is that the person suspected take his oath, that he is clear of the fact objected against him; and bring his honest neighbours with him to make oath, that they believe he swears truly.

The Vulgar Purgation, according to the ancient manner, was by fire or water ordeal, or by combat, abolished by canon. Staundf. P. C. lib. 2. c. 48. See tit. Ordeal.

The canonical doctrine of Purgation, whereby the parties were obliged to answer upon oath to any matter, however criminal, that might be objected against them, (though long ago over-ruled in the Court of Chancery,) continued till the middle of the last century to be upheld by the Spiritual Courts; when the Legislature was obliged to interpose, to teach them a lesson of moderation, similar to to that of the English Law. By stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 12, it is enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any Bishop or Ecclesiastical Judge, to tender or administer to any person whatsoever, the oath usually called the oath ex officio, or any other oath whereby he may be compelled to confess, accuse, or purge himself of any criminal matter or thing, whereby he may be liable to any censure or punishment, 3 Comm. 100. See further, titles Wager of Law; Chancery; Clergy, Benefit of.

The stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 12, having thus taken away the oath ex officio, of persons accusing or purging themselves, &c. some maintain that all the proceedings of Purgation on common fame fall too; others say, there is still a legal Purgation left, but not canonical. Wood's Inst. 506, 507.

PURIFICATIO BEATÆ MARIÆ VIRGINIS. Mentioned in stat. 32 Hen. 8 c 21; see Candlemas.

The Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, is one of the general returns of writs, still in use, viz. the third in Hilary term.

PURLIEU, or PURLUE, from Fr. pur, purus, & lieu, locus.] All that ground near a forest, which, being added to the ancient forests by King Hen II., Rich. I., and King John, was afterwards disafforested and severed by the Charta de Foresta, and the perambulations and grants thereon, by Hen. III. So that it becomes Purlue, viz. pure and free from the laws and ordinances of the forest. Manw For' Laws, par. 2. c. 20

Our ancestors called this ground Purlieu, puram locum, because it was exempted from that servitude which was formerly laid on it: As Manwood and Crompton call it Pourallee, we may derive it from pur, purus, & allee, ambulatio; because he who walketh or courseth within that circuit is not liable to the laws or penalties incurred by those who hunt within the forest precincts; but Pourallee is said to be properly the perambulation whereby the Purlieu is deafforested. Stat. 33 Ed. 1. st. 5: 4 Inst. 304

Owners of grounds within the Purlieu by disafforestation, may fell timber, convert pastures into arable, &c. inclose them with any kind of inclosure; erect edifices, and dispose of them as if they had never been afforested; and a Purlieu-man may as lawfully hunt, to all intents, within the Purlieu, as any man may in his own grounds which were never afforested: he may keep his dogs within the Purlieu unexpeditated; and the wild beasts belong to the Purlieu-man ratione soli, so long as they remain in his grounds, and he may kill them. 4 Inst. 303.

If the Purlieu-man chase the beast with grey-hounds, and they fly towards the forest for safety, he may pursue them to the bounds of the forest; and if he then do his endeavour to call back and take off his dogs from the pursuit, although the dogs follow the chase in the forest, and kill the King's deer there, this is no offence, so as he enter not into the forest nor meddle with the deer so killed: and if the dogs fasten on the deer before he recover the forest, and the deer drag the dogs into the forest, in such case the Purlieu-man may follow his dogs and take the deer. 4 Inst. 303, 304.

But in the case of Sir Richard Weston, it was said, that there was no Purlieu in law to hunt; that it cannot be by prescription, and there is nothing in statutes as to hunting; therefore Purlieu-men may only keep out the deer, but cannot kill them, though they be in their ground. 1 Jones's Rep. 278. See Moor 706, 987.

And notwithstanding Purlieus are absolutely deafforested, it hath been permitted, that the ranger of the forest shall, as often as the wild beasts of the forest range into the Purlieu, with his hounds rechase them back to the forest. 4 Inst.

PURLIEU MEN, These who have ground within the Purlieu, and being able to dispend forty shillings a-year freehold; who, on these two points, are licensed to hunt in their own Purlieus, observing what is required. Manw For. Laws 151, 157, 180, 186. See Purlieu.

PURPARTY; See Pourparty.

PURPRESTURE; See Pourpresture.

PURSE. A certain quantity of money, amounting to 500 dollars, or 125*l.* in Turkey. Merch. Dict.

PURSUIVANT; See Poursuivant.

PURVEYANCE. As well before as after the Conquest, the King, on his ancient demesnes of the Crown of England, had houses of husbandry, and stocks for the furnishing necessary provision for his household; and the tenants of those manors did, by their tenures, manure, till, &c. and reap the corn on the King's demesnes, mowed his meadows, &c. repaired the fences, and performed all necessary things belonging to husbandry on the King's demesnes: in respect of which services, and to the end they might apply the same the better, they had many liberties and privileges; as, that they should not be sued out of the Court of that manor, nor impanelled on any Jury or Inquest, nor appear at any other Court, but only at the Court of the manor, nor be contributory to the expences of the Knights of the Shire which served at Parliament, nor pay any toll, &c. which liberties and immunities continue to this day, although the original cause is ceased. 2 Inst. 542, 543. c. 2. See further Pourveyance.

PURVIEW, Fr. pourveu, a patent or grant.] The body, or that part of an act of Parliament which begins with, Be it enacted, &c. The statute 3 Hen. 7, stands upon a preamble and Purview. 2 Inst. 403: 12 Rep. 20. See title Statute.

PUTAGE, Putagium, from the Fr. putaine, Italian putta, meretrix] Fornication.

By the feudal laws, if any heir female under guardianship were guilty of this crime she forfeited her part to her coheirs; or if she were an only heiress, the lord of the fee took it by escheat. Spelman: Cowell.

PUTATIVUS, Putative, reputed, or commonly esteemed; in opposition to notorious and unquestionable.—Pater pueri putativus, the reputed father of the child. Jo. Brompton 909.

When a single woman, with child, swears that such a man is the father, he is called the Putative father. See title Bastard.

PUTTING IN FEAR; See title Robbery.

PUTURA, q. Potura.] A custom claimed by keepers in forests, and sometimes by bailiffs of hundreds, to take man's meat, horse meat, and dog's meat, of the tenants and inhabitants within the perambulation of the forest, hundred, &c.; and in the liberty of Knaresburgh it was long since turned into the payment of 4*d.* in money by each tenant. M. S. de Temp. Ed. 3: 4 Inst. 307. The land subject to this custom is called Terra Putura. Plac. apud Cestr. 31 Ed. 3.

PYKER, or PYCAR, A small ship or herring boat. See stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 2.

Q.

QUADRAGESIMA, The fortieth part; also the time of Lent, from our Saviour's Forty Days' Fast. Lit. Dict. Quadragesima Sunday, Is the first Sunday in Lent; so called, because about the fortieth day before Easter. Blount.

QUADRAGESIMALIA. In former days it was the custom for people to visit their mother church on Mid-lent-Sunday, and to make their offerings at the High Altar; as the like devotion was again observed in Whitsun Week: But as the procession and oblations at Whitsuntide were sometimes commuted into a rated payment of Pentecostals; so the Lent or Easter offerings were changed into a customary rate called Quadragesimalia, and Denarii Quadragesimales, also Lætare Jerusalem, from those words in the Hymn for the Day. Dict.

QUADRANS, a fourth part of a penny: Before the reign of Ed. 1. the smallest coin was a sterling or penny, marked with a cross, by the guidance whereof a penny might be cut into halves for a half-penny, or into quarters or four parts for farthings; till, to avoid the fraud of unequal cutting, that King coined half-pence and farthings in round distinct pieces. Mat. Westm. anno 1279.

QUADRANTATA TERRÆ, Quadrarium; The fourth part of an acre. See Fardingdeal.

QUADRIVIUM, The center of four ways, where four roads meet and cross each other. By statute, posts with inscriptions are to be set up at such cross ways, as a direction to travellers, &c. See title Highways.

QUÆ EST EADEM, Which is the same, trespass, &c.] Words used in pleading to supply the want of a traverse; 2 Lil. Abr. 405. As where a plaintiff brings an action of trespass, and the defendant pleads, that the plaintiff gave him leave to enter on the land, and that he entered accordingly; Quæ est eadem Transgressio, "which is the same trespass, of which the plaintiff complains."

In a Clausum fregit such a day, defendant pleads plaintiff's licence to him to enter on the same day, and that virtute inde he entered; he need not say Quæ est eadem Transgressio: So in trespass for taking goods; if defendant justifies the same day and place: And in trespass and battery, if defendant justifies that, the same day and place, the plaintiff assaulted him, and that what damages happened to him was of his own wrong; this is good without Quæ est eadem Transgressio, &c. though he doth not directly answer the assault laid by plaintiff; but where he justifies at another day, or at another place, then he ought to say, Quæ est eadem. 21 Hen. 7. pl. 2.

A fact laid Nov. 1, and a justification Nov. 2, Quæ est eadem, is well enough without a traverse, the day not being material; but it had been naught, if the day had been material. 1 Lev. 241.

If a trespass is alleged Nov. 10, and a justification Nov. 11, and there be an averment of Quæ est eadem, it is here held good without making any traverse. Lutw. 1457.

Where defendant justifies dicto tempore in the plaintiff's declaration, he hath no occasion to say Quæ est eadem Transgressio; because he agrees with plaintiff in the time and place mentioned in his declaration, and gives an answer to it. But in all these cases, pleading thus, which is the said breaking and entering, &c. whereof the plaintiff hath complained against the defendant, is the safest way. Dict. See title Pleading.

Quæ Plura, A writ which lay where an inquisition had been taken by an Eschcator of lands, &c. of which a man died seised, and all the land was supposed not to be found by the office or inquisition; this writ was therefore to inquire of what more lands or tenements the party died seised, Reg. Orig. 293: But it is now useless, since the taking away the Court of Wards and Offices post mortem, by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

QUÆRE, or Querie; A note for the reader to make further inquiry, where any point of Law, or matter of debate, is doubted, as not having sufficient authority to maintain it. 2 Lil. Abr. 406.

QUÆRENS NON INVENIT PLEGIUM; A return made by the Sheriff, on a writ directed to him with this clause, viz. Si A. fecerit B. securum de clamore suo prosequendo, &c. F. N. B. 38. See title Original.

QUÆ SERVITIA, See Per quæ Servitia.

QUÆSTA, An indulgence or remission of penance, exposed to sale by the Pope: The retailers thereof were called Quæstionarii, and desired charity for themselves or others. Mat. Westm. anno 1240.

QUÆSTUS, That which a man hath by purchase; as hæreditas is what he hath by descent. Glanv. lib. 7. c. 1. See Purchase; Questus.

QUAKERS, Tremuli.] From their pretending to tremble or quake, in the exercise of their religion. The stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 27, enacts, That Quakers making and subscribing the declaration of fidelity mentioned in 1 W. & M. (now according to the stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 6,) should not be liable to the penalties against others refusing to take the oaths; and not subscribing the declaration of fidelity, &c. they are disabled to vote at election of Members of Parliament.

Quakers, where an oath is required, are permitted to make a solemn affirmation or declaration, declaring, in the presence of God, the witness of the truth, &c. stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34, made perpetual by stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 6. But they are not capable of being witnesses in a criminal cause, serving on Juries, or bearing any office in the Government, unless they are sworn like other Protestants.

On

On the affirmation of a Quaker, the Court will not grant an attachment for non-performance of an award. 1 Strange 441. Nor security for the peace. Ibid. 527 Nor a rule for an information. 2 Strange 856, 872, 946. But a rule to shew cause why an appointment of overseers should not be quashed, being served by a Quaker, was made absolute on his affirmation; this not being looked on as a criminal prosecution, though on the Crown side, and the rule in the King's name. 2 Strange 1219.

The stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 6, authorizes the affirmation of Quakers with the words, I do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm, &c. without saying in the presence of Almighty God; and by this statute, false and corrupt affirming incurs the penalties of wilful perjury.

By stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. § 36, an affirmation shall be allowed in all cases (except criminal) where by any act of Parliament an oath is required, though no provision be therein for admitting a Quaker to make his affirmation. Quakers refusing to pay tithes, or church rates, Justices of Peace are to determine them, and order costs, &c. Stats. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34. § 4: 1 Geo. 1. c. 6. Quakers may be committed to prison for non-payment of tithes, on stat. 27 H. 8. c. 20, which is not repealed by 7 & 8 W. 3 which gives another remedy. 1 Ld. Raym. 323. See title Tithes.

A Quaker, who has served an apprenticeship of seven years, is entitled to be admitted to the freedom of a Corporation, as well as any other person: And his solemn affirmation is equivalent to taking the usual oaths: The clause of the stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34, which provides, that no Quaker, by virtue of that act, shall have any office or place of profit in the Government, does not extend to the freedom of a Corporation. Carth. 448: 1 Ld. Raym. 337: 3 Mod. 402.

QUALE JUS, A judicial writ, which was brought where a man of religion had judgment to recover land, before execution was made of the judgment; it went forth to the Escheator between judgment and execution, to inquire what right the religious person had to recover, or whether the judgment were obtained by collusion between the parties, to the intent that the lord might not be defrauded. Reg. Judic. 8, 16, 46. Stats. Westm. 2: 13 C. 1. st. 1. c. 32.

QUALIFIED, Is applied to a person enabled to hold two benefices. See Plurality.

QUALIFIED (or Base) FEE; Is such a one as hath a qualification subjoined thereto. See title Estate.

QUALIFIED PROPERTY; See Possession; Property.

QUAMDIU SE BENE GESSERIT, As long as he shall behave himself well in his office. A clause often inserted in letters patent of the grant of offices, as in those to the Barons of the Exchequer, &c. which must be intended in matters concerning their office; and is nothing but what the Law would have implied, if the office had been granted for life. 4 Inst. 117. See title Judges.

QUANTUM MERUIT, So much as he deserved.] An action on the case, express or implied, grounded on a promise to pay the plaintiff for doing any thing so much as he should deserve or merit.

If a man retains any person to do work or other thing for him; as a taylor to make a garment, a carrier to carry goods, &c. without any certain agreement; in such case, the Law implies that he shall pay for the same, as much as they are worth, and shall be reasonably demanded; for which Quantum Meruit may be brought: And if one sue another on a promise to satisfy him for work done, &c. he must shew and aver in his declaration how much he deserved for his work. See title Pleading I. 1.

QUANTUM VALEBAT, So much as it was worth.] Where goods and wares sold are delivered by a tradesman at no certain price, or to be paid for them as much as they are worth in general: then Quantum valebat lies, and the plaintiff is to aver them to be worth so much: so where the Law obliges one to furnish another with goods or provisions; as an innkeeper his guests, &c. See titles Assumpsit; Pleading I. 1.

QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT. See titles Capias; Common Pleas.

QUARE CUM, Are general words used in original writs, &c. See Original.

QUARE EJECIT INFRA TERMINUM; A Writ which lieth by the ancient Law where the wrongdoer or ejector is not himself in possession of the lands, but another who claims under him. As where a man leaseth lands to another for years, and after, the lessor or reversioner entereth, and maketh a feoffment in fee or for life of the same lands to a stranger: Now the lessee cannot bring a writ of Ejectione firmæ, or ejectment, against the feoffee; because he did not eject him, but the reversioner: neither can he have any such action to recover his term against the reversioner who did oust him, because he is not now in possession. And upon that account this writ was devised upon the equity of stat. Westm. 2. c. 24, as in a case where no adequate remedy was already provided. F. N. B. 198. And the action is brought against the feoffee, for deforcing or keeping out the original lessee, during the continuance of his term; and herein, as in the ejectment, the plaintiff shall recover so much of the term as remains; and also shall have actual damages for that portion of it, whereof he has been unjustly deprived. 3 Comm. c. 11. p. 207.

Since the introduction of fictitious ousters, whereby the title may be tried against any tenant in possession, (by what means soever he acquired it,) and the subsequent recovery of damages, by action of trespass for mesne profits, this writ is fallen into disuse. See title Ejectment.

It is in the election of lessee, or, if he grants over his term, the second lessee, to sue a writ of Ejectione firmæ, or a Quare ejecit infra Terminum against the lessor, or his heir, or against the lord by escheat, &c. if they put the termor out of his term. 19 Hen. 6.

QUARE IMPEDIT.

A Writ lying for him who hath purchased an advowson, against a person who hinders or disturbs him in his right of advowson by presenting a Clerk thereto, when the church is void. F N. B. 32: Stat. Westm. 2. c. 5.

It differs from assise of darrein presentment (ultimæ præsentationis), because that lies where a man or his ancestors, under whom he claims, have formerly presented to the church; and this for him who is purchaser himself; but in both the plaintiff recovers the presentation and damages; though in the writ of darrein presentment, &c. he recovers only the presentation, not the title, to the advowson, as he doth in a Quare impedit; for which reason the remedy by that assise is discontinued: And where a man may have assise of darrein presentment, he may have Quare impedit. 2 Inst. 356. See title Darrein Presentment.

Upon the vacancy of a living, the Patron is bound to present within six calendar months, otherwise it will lapse to the Bishop. See title Advowson II. But if the presentation be made within that time, the Bishop is bound to admit and institute the Clerk, if found sufficient; unless the church be full, or there be notice of any litigation. For if any opposition be intended, it is usual for each party to enter a caveat with the Bishop, to prevent his institution of his antagonist's Clerk. An institution after a caveat entered is void by the Ecclesiastical Law; but this the Temporal Courts pay no regard to, and look upon a caveat as a mere nullity. But if two presentations be offered to the Bishop upon the same avoidance, the church is then said to become litigious; and, if nothing farther be done, the Bishop may suspend the admission of either, and suffer a lapse to incur. Yet if the Patron or Clerk on either side request him to award a jus patronatûs, he is bound to do it. This jus patronatûs is a commission from the Bishop, directed usually to his Chancellor, and others of competent learning; who are to summon a Jury of six Clergymen and six Laymen, to inquire into and examine who is the rightful Patron; (see title Jus patronatûs;) and if, upon such inquiry made and certificate thereof returned by the Commissioners, he admits and institutes the Clerk of that Patron whom they return as the true one, the Bishop secures himself at all events from being a disturber, whatever proceedings may be had afterwards in the Temporal Courts. 3 Comm. c. 16.

The Clerk refused by the Bishop may also have a remedy against him in the Spiritual Court, denominated a duplex querela: which is a complaint in the nature of an appeal from the Ordinary to his next immediate superior; as from a Bishop to the Archbishop, or from an Archbishop to the Delegates; and if the Superior Court adjudges the cause of refusal to be insufficient, it will grant institution to the appellant.

Thus far matters may go on in the mere ecclesiastical course: but in contested presentations they seldom go so far; for upon the first delay or refusal of the Bishop, to admit his Clerk, the Patron usually brings his writ of Quare impedit against the Bishop; for the temporal injury done to his property, in disturbing him in his presentation. And, if the delay arises from the Bishop alone, as upon pretence of incapacity, or the like, then he only is named in the writ; but if there be another presentation set up, then the pretended Patron and his Clerk are also joined in the action; or it may be brought against the Patron and Clerk, leaving out the Bishop; or against the Patron only. But it is most advisable to bring it against all three: for if the Bishop be left out, and the suit be not determined till the six months are past, the Bishop is entitled to present by lapse; for he is not party to the suit; but, if he be named, no lapse can possibly accrue till the right is determined. Cro. Jac. 93. If the Patron be left out, and the writ be brought only against the Bishop and the Clerk, the suit is of no effect, and the writ shall abate; for the right of the Patron is the principal question in the cause. Hob. 316: 7 Rep. 25. If the Clerk be left out, and has received institution before the action brought (as is sometimes the case), the Patron by this suit may recover his right of patronage, but not the present turn; for he cannot have judgment to remove the Clerk, unless he be made a defendant, and party to the suit, to hear what he can allege against it. For which reason it is the safer, and now usual, way to insert all three in the writ. See Hob. 320: Jenk. Cent. 200.

Quare impedit will not lie against the Ordinary and Incumbent, without naming the Patron; because at Common Law the Incumbent could not plead any thing which concerned the right of patronage, therefore it is unreasonable that he alone should be named in the writ who could not defend the patronage; but stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 3. c. 7, enables him to plead against the King, and to defend his incumbency, although he claims nothing in the patronage; and by that statute he shall plead against any common person; though with this difference that when the inheritance of the Patron is to be divested by judgment in a Quare impedit, there he must be named in the writ; but where the next presentation only is to be recovered, he need not be named: yet where the King presents without a title, and his Clerk is inducted, the Quare impedit is to be against the Ordinary and Incumbent; for it will not lie against the King; but, if he is plaintiff, the writ may be brought against the Patron alone, without naming the Incumbent. 7 Rep. 25: Cro. Jac. 650: Palm. 306.

By the writ of Quare impedit a Patron may be relieved, not only on his presentation to a church, but to a chapel, prebend, vicarage, &c. And this writ lies of a donative; and the special matter is to be set forth in the declaration: It also lieth for a deanery by the King, although it be elective; and for an archdeaconry; but not for a mere office of the church. Co. Litt. 344: 1 Leon. 205. And the chapter may have a Quare impedit against the Dean, of their several possessions. 40 Ed. 3. 48.

If the Quare impedit be for a donative; the writ shall be Quare impedit to present to the donative; if of a parsonage, then Quare impedit præsentare ad Ecclesiam; if to a vicarage, ad Vicariam; if to a Prebend, ad Prebendam, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 35.

If a Bishop be disturbed to collate, where he ought to make collation, he may have a writ Quare impedit, and the writ shall be quod permittat ipsum præsentare, &c. and he shall count on the collation; and if the King be disturbed in his collation by letters patent, he shall have Quare impedit, &c. New Nat. Br. 73.

Grantee of a next avoidance may bring this writ against the patron who granted the avoidance. 39 Hen. 6.

It may be brought by Executors, for a disturbance in vitâ testatoris; and executors, being disturbed in their presentation, may bring Quare impedit as well as their testator might. Owen 99: Lutw. 1.

Husband and wife jointly, or the husband alone without his wife, may have the writ Quare impedit; and if a man who hath an advowson in right of his wife be disturbed in his presentation, and dies, the wife shall bring it on that disturbance. 14 Hen. 4: 5 Rep. 97.

The heir shall not have Quare impedit, for a disturbance tempore patris; nor can he have execution on a recovery by the ancestor. Br. Q. Imp. pl. 7, 9. But by stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 5, usurpation of churches during wardship, particular estates of vacancy, &c. shall not bar an heir at full age, reversioner in possession, or a spiritual person in succession, from having a writ possessory of Quare impedit, &c. as the ancestor or predecessor might have have had, if such usurpation had been in their time: and the same form of pleading shall be had in darrein presentment, and Quare impedit.

Where partition is made on record, to present by turns, the coparcener who is disturbed shall not be put to a Quare impedit; but may have remedy on the roll, by scire facias: it is otherwise on an agreement to present. Stat. 22 E. 4. 8: See stat. 13 E. 1. c. 5. § 5.

If tenant in tail suffer an usurpation, and die, and six months pass, the issue in tail cannot bring Quare impedit: but at the next avoidance he may have it within the six months. 46 Assise 4.

As this writ is all in the possession; the presentment of a grantee of the next avoidance is a good title for the grantor and patron in fee to bring it; and likewise for his heir, and other grantees. 9 Hen. 7. 23: 5 Rep. 97.

The King cannot remove an Incumbent, presented, instituted, and inducted, although on a usurpation, but by Quare impedit in a judicial way. Cro. Jac. 385. See title Advowson III.

He who claims by a recovery, shall maintain a Quare impedit. Stat. 7 H. 8. c. 4.

The writ of Quare impedit must be brought in the county where the church is: It commands the disturbers, the Bishop, the Pseudo-patron, and his Clerk, to permit the plaintiff to present a proper person (without specifying the particular Clerk) to such a vacant church, which pertains to his patronage; and which the defendants, as he alleges, do obstruct; and unless they so do, then that they appear in Court to shew the reason why they hinder him. F. N. B. 32.

Immediately on the suing out of the Quare impedit, if the plaintiff suspects that the Bishop will admit the defendant's or any other Clerk, pending the suit, he may have a prohibitory writ, called a Ne admittas; which recites the contention begun in the King's Courts, and forbids the Bishop to admit any Clerk whatsoever till such contention be determined. See title Ne admittas.

In the proceedings upon a Quare impedit, the plaintiff must set out his title at length, and prove at least one presentation in himself, his ancestors, or those under whom he claims; (except in case of a church created by himself; see post.;) for he must recover by the strength of his own right, and not by the weakness of the defendant's. Vaugh. 7, 8: and he must also shew a disturbance before the action brought. Hob. 199: Upon this the Bishop and the Clerk usually disclaim all title, save only, the one as Ordinary, to admit and institute; and the other as presentee of the Patron, who is left to defend his own right. And, upon failure of the plaintiff in making out his own title, the defendant is put upon the proof of his, in order to obtain judgment for himself, if needful. But if the right be found for the plaintiff, on the trial, three farther points are also to be inquired: First, If the church be full; and, if full, then of whose presentation: for if it be of the defendant's presentation, then the clerk is removable by writ brought in due time. Secondly, Of what value the living is: and this in order to assess the damages which are directed to be given by the statute of Westminster 2, 13 E. 1. c. 5: see post. Thirdly, In case of plenarty upon an usurpation, whether six calendar months have passed between the avoidance and the time of bringing the action: for then it would not be within the statute, which permits an usurpation to be devested by a Quare impedit, brought infra tempus semestre. So that plenarty is still a sufficient bar in an action of Quare impedit, brought above six months after the vacancy happens; as it was universally by the Common Law, however early the action was commenced. 2 Inst. 361. See title Advowson III.

In the declaration of the plaintiff, it is not sufficient for him to allege, that he, or such a person from whom he claims, were seised of the advowson of the church, but he must allege a presentation made by one of them; for, if he doth not, the defendant may demur to the declaration: and the reason is, that the plaintiff, by joining the last presentation to his own title, is to make it appear, that he hath a right to present now as well as then. Cro. Eliz. 518: 5 Rep. 97: Vaugh. 57. But the want of such allegation may be cured by verdict. 2 Stra. 1006.

And if a man, by the King's licence, creates a church which shall be presentable, if he be disturbed to present to it, he may have a Quare impedit without alleging a presentation in any person: but anciently it was held he might not, because he could not allege a presentation. 20 Ed. 4. 14: Mallory's Q. Imped. 153.

The only plea the Bishop hath by the Common Law on a Quare impedit is, that he claimeth nothing but as Ordinary; he could not counterplead the Patron's title, or any thing to the right of patronage, nor could the Incumbent counterplead such title, till the stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 3. c. 7; by which both Bishop and Incumbent may counterplead the title of the Patron; the one, when he collates by lapse, or makes title himself to the patronage; the other, being persona impersonata, may plead his Patron's title, and counterplead the title of the plaintiff. And it has been adjudged, that an Incumbent cannot plead to the title of the parsonage, without shewing that he is persona impersonata on the presentation of the Patron. W. Jones 4: March. 159.

Several were plaintiffs in a Quare impedit, the defendant pleaded the release of one of them pending the writ; and it was resolved, that this release shall only bar him who made it, and that the writ shall stand good for the rest. 5 Rep. 97.

In all Quare impedits, a defendant may traverse the presentation alleged by the plaintiff, if the matter of fact will bear it; but the defendant must not deny the presentation alleged, where there was a presentation. Vaugh. 16, 17. And if a presentation is alleged in the grantor and grantee, the presentation in the grantor is only traversable; for that is the principal. Cro. Eliz. 518.

Quare impedit was brought against two, one of them cast an essoin, and idem dies datus est to the other, &c. Then an attachment issued against them for not appearing at the day, and process continued to the Grand Cape; which being returned, and the parties not appearing, it was ruled that final judgment should be entered according to the stat 52 H. 3. c. 12. But on motion to discharge this rule, because the defendants were not summoned either on the attachment or grand distress, the summoners being only the feigned names of John Doe and Richard Roe, the judgment was set aside; for the design of the statute was to have process duly executed, and that must be with notice, &c. And where the right is for ever concluded, this being so fatal, the process must never be suffered to be a thing of course. 1 Mod. 248.

Where two defendants in a Quare impedit plead several bars, and one of them is found against the plaintiff, and the other with him; he shall not have his writ to the Bishop. And if there are many defendants pleading several pleas, the plaintiff shall not have judgment before all the pleas are tried: for though some be for the plaintiff, others may be found against him, and he cannot have judgment without a good title. F. N. B. 30: Hob. 70.

If it be found that the plaintiff hath the right, and hath commenced his action in due time, then he shall have judgment to recover the presentation; and, if the church be full by institution of any clerk, to remove him: unless it were filled, pendente lite, by lapse to the Ordinary, he not being party to the suit; in which case the plaintiff loses his presentation pro hac vice, but shall recover two years' full value of the church from the defendant, the pretended Patron, as a satisfaction for the turn lost by his disturbance; or in case of insolvency, the defendant shall be imprisoned for two years: and in other cases half a year's value, and half a year's imprisonment. Stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 5. § 3. But if the church remains still void at the end of the suit, then whichever party the presentation is found to belong to, whether plaintiff or defendant, shall have a writ directed to the Bishop ad admittendum clericum, reciting the judgment of the Court, and ordering him to admit and institute the Clerk of the prevailing party; and, if upon this order he does not admit him, the patron may sue the Bishop in a writ of Quare non admisit, and recover ample satisfaction in damages. F. N. B. 38, 47: 1 Mod. 254. See title Quare non admisit.

In a Quare impedit, though it was found that the church was full of another, who was a stranger to the writ, and it did not appear whether he came in by a better title than that which was found for the plaintiff; it was held, that the plaintiff might have a general writ to the Bishop, which he is bound by law to execute, or shall be amerced, &c. and he cannot return that the church is full of another; for no issue can be joined between the Bishop and the plaintiff, because he has no day in Court. 6 Rep. 51: 3 Leon. 136: See ante and post.

But where the plaintiff recovered an advowson in ejectment, and thereupon had a writ to the Bishop, there being another Incumbent in the church, who was not a party to the action; adjudged, that this writ would not lie without a scire facias to the Incumbent. Sid. 93.

If it appears in Quare impedit, either in pleading, or by confession of the parties, that neither of them have a title, but that it is in the King; the Court may award a writ to the Bishop for the King, to remove the Incumbent, and admit idoneam personam ad præsentationem regis; but this must be when his title is very plain. Hob. 126, 163: 1 Leon. 323.

In Quare impedit, the plaintiff and defendant are both actors; so that the defendant may have a writ to the Bishop, as well as the plaintiff; but not without a title appearing to the Court; wherefore, if the defendant never appears, the plaintiff must make out a title for form sake, and so must the defendant, if the plaintiff be nonsuited. Hob. 163.

If the plaintiff, after appearance, in a Quare impedit be nonsuited, it is peremptory; because the defendant on title made, whereby he becomes actor, shall have a writ to the Bishop: and it is the same in case of a Discontinuance. 7 Rep. 27.

It is the nature of a Quare impedit to be final, either on a discontinuance or nonsuit; and a man cannot have two suits for the same thing in this case against one person, though he may have several Quare impedits against several persons. 7 Rep. 27: Hob. 137.

The Parson, Patron, and Ordinary are sued; the Ordinary disclaims, and the Parson loseth by default; the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover his presentation, and a writ shall issue to the Bishop, &c. with a cesset executio, until the plea is determined between the plaintiff and Patron. Vaughan 6.

In a Quare impedit against the Archbishop, the Bishop, and three defendants: the Archbishop pleaded that he claimed nothing but as Metropolitan; and the Bishop pleaded that he claimed nothing but as Ordinary; and the defendants made title; but there was a verdict against them: It was a question, whether the writ of execution should be awarded to the Archbishop, or the Bishop; and it was held, that where neither of them are parties in interest, it may be directed to either; but if the Bishop is party in interest, it must be directed to the Archbishop. 6 Rep. 48: 3 Bulst. 174. And if the Archbishop of Canterbury be plaintiff in a Quare impedit, the writ must be directed to the Archbishop of York. Show. 329.

If a defendant pleads Ne disturba, (that he did not disturb,) which is, in effect, the general issue in a Quare impedit, this will be only a defence of the wrong with which he stands charged, and is so far from controverting the plaintiff's title, that the plea, as it were, confesses it; and the plaintiff may presently pray a writ to the Bishop, or maintain the disturbance in order to recover damages. Hob. 163.

There must be a disturbance to maintain this action: In a Quare impedit, the Patron declared on a disturbance of him to present 1 November; the Incumbent pleaded, that 1 May next after, the presentation devolved on the Queen by lapse, and she presented him to the church, &c. And on demurrer the plea was held ill; because the defendant had not confessed and avoided, nor traversed the disturbance set forth in the declaration: and though by the demurrer the Queen's title was confessed, it appearing that it was already executed, and the defendant having lost his incumbency by ill pleading, the writ shall not be awarded to the Bishop for the Queen to present again, but for the Patron. 1 Leon. 194.

The Courts at Westminster are very cautious not to abate the writ of Quare impedit, for any want of form, &c. yet if the Bishop against whom the writ is brought, or any of the defendants are misnamed, it is good cause of abatement: if the Patron be not named in the writ, it may be pleaded in abatement; though death of the Patron, pending the writ, doth not abate it, if the Quare impedit is brought against the Bishop, Patron, and Incumbent: and if the Incumbent dies, pending the writ, and a disturber present again, and die, Quare impedit would lie on the first disturbance by Journies Accounts; but the first writ is abated by the plaintiff's death; also if the plaintiff bring a new writ within fifteen days after the abatement, that shall be a continuance of the first writ, and prevent the defendant taking any advantage: but if the writ abate for any fault in the declaration, the defendant shall have a writ to the Bishop to admit his Clerk; so, if judgment is given on demurrer, &c. Cro. Eliz. 324: Cro. Car. 651: 7 Rep. 57: Dyer 240.

In a plea of Quare impedit, days are given from 15 to 16, or from three weeks to three weeks, according to the distance of place: and if the disturber come not in on the great distress, a writ is to be sent to the Bishop, that he claim not, to the prejudice of the plaintiff, for that time; and, on recovery, judgment is to be given to the party to recover the presentation and advowson. Stat. 52 Hen. 3. c. 12: 2 Roll. Abr. 377.

Though damages are given by stat. Westm. 2. c. 5, they shall not be had against the Bishop, where he claims nothing but as Ordinary, and is no disturber. 3 Lev. 59. Before this statute no damages were allowed on a Quare impedit; and the King hath none at this day; for although he declares ad damnum, &c. he is not within that statute; because by his prerogative he cannot lose his presentation. 6 Rep. 52. If the plaintiff hath a verdict, and the church is found vacant, the patron may have the fruits of his presentation, and so not be entitled to damages; in which case, a remittitur de damnis is entered. 3 Lev. 59.

The points to be inquired of, where the Jury find for the plaintiff, &c. are, of whom, and on whose presentation, the church is full; how long since it was void; the yearly value of the church, &c. which being found, damages are to be given accordingly. 6 Rep. 51. See ante.

No costs are recoverable in Quare impedit, because of the great damages given by the statute of Westm. 2. c. 5.

Where judgment is given to have a writ to the Bishop in Quare impedit; it shall not be reversed on writ of error brought on the whole judgment, though the judgment by the statute for damages be erroneous and reversed. 5 Rep. 58, 59.

When one recovers in a Quare impedit against an Incumbent, the Incumbent is so removed by judgment, that the recoverer may present without any thing farther; but the Incumbent continues Incumbent de facto, till such presentation is made: and if the plaintiff in this suit be instituted on a writ to the Bishop, the defendant cannot appeal; if he doth, a Prohibition lies; because in this case, the Bishop acts as the King's Minister, not as a Judge. 2 Roll. Abr. 365: 1 Roll. Rep. 62.

In a writ of Quare impedit, which is almost the only real action that remains in common use, and also in the assise of darrein presentment, and writ of right of advowson, (see title Writ of Right,) the Patron only, and not the Clerk, is allowed to sue the disturber. But, by virtue of several acts of Parliament, there is one species of presentations, in which a remedy, to be sued in the Temporal Courts, is put into the hands of the clerks presented, as well as of the owners of the advowson; viz. the presentation to such benefices as belong to Roman-Catholic Patrons; which, according to their several counties, are vested in and secured to the two Universities of this kingdom. See stats. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5: 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 26: 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 14: 11 Geo. 2. c. 17. By the statute of 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 14. § 4, particularly, a new method of proceeding is provided; viz. that, besides the writs of Quare impedit, which the Universities as Patrons are entitled to bring, they, or their Clerks, may be at liberty to file a bill in equity against any person presenting to such living, and disturbing their right of Patronage, or his cestuy que trust, or any other person whom they have cause to suspect: in order to compel a discovery of any secret trusts, for the benefit of Papists, in evasion of those laws whereby this right of advowson is vested in those learned bodies. And also (by stat. 11 Geo 2. c. 17.) to compel a discovery whether any grant or conveyance, said to be made of such advowson, were made bona fide to a Protestant purchaser, for the benefit of Protestants, and for a full consideration; without which requisites every such grant and conveyance of any advowson or avoidance is absolutely null and void. This is a particular law, and calculated for a particular purpose: but in no instance except this does the Common Law permit the Clerk himself to interfere in recovering a presentation, of which he is afterwards to have the advantage. For, besides that he has no temporal right in him till after institution and induction, this exclusion of the Clerk from being plaintiff seems also to arise from the very great honour and regard which the Law pays to his sacred function. See 3 Comm. c. 16; and further, titles Advowson; Juris Utrum; Papists, &c.

QUARE INCUMBRAVIT; A Writ which lieth against the Bishop, who, within six months after the vacation of a benefice, confers it on his Clerk, whilst two others are contending at law, for the right of presentation; to shew why he hath incumbered the church. Reg. Orig. 32. See title Quare impedit.

Or it is a writ brought, after a recovery in Quare impedit, or assise of darrein presentment, against the Bishop who thus admits a Clerk, notwithstanding the writ Ne admittas served on him: for if the Bishop incumber the church before a Ne admittas issued, then, the party shall have a Quare impedit; as the Ordinary can have no notice till the Ne admittas. F. N. B. 32, 33. See Ne admittas.

If a man hath a writ of right of advowson depending between him and another, and the church is void pendant the writ, the plaintiff shall not have a Quare incumbravit or Ne admittas, although the Bishop incumber the church; because the plaintiff shall not recover the presentation on this writ, but the advowson: and where he hath title to present he may do it; and have Quare impedit, if he be disturbed. New Nat. Br. 108, 109.

If the Bishop delay the true Patron in his presentation, and the Patron sue a Quare impedit, he may thereupon have a Ne admittas; and if the Bishop, after receipt of such writ, admit the Clerk of any other person without a verdict in a jus patronatûs, the true Patron shall have a Quare incumbravit against the Bishop, and thereby recover the presentation with damages. See title Quare impedit.

Also a writ is to be directed to the Bishop to disincumber the church. F. N. B. 37.

This writ may be brought after the six months; and if a plaintiff be nonsuit in a Quare incumbravit, he may have another writ, and vary from his first declaration, &c. F. N. B. 48.

After a Ne admittas delivered, if the six months pass, the Bishop may present his Clerk for lapse, and shall not be charged by the writ of Quare incumbravit for the presentation; but he cannot admit the Clerk of the other man, for that would be against the writ Ne admittas delivered to him. F. N. B. 48. But to prevent this he is usually made a defendant in the Quare impedit.

If the Bishop incumber the church, where there is no dispute about it, yet this writ Quare incumbravit lies; but according to the best opinions there ought to be a suit depending, though there is no actual recovery. 18 E. 3. 17: Fitz. Q. Imped. 3.

QUARE NON ADMISIT, A writ which lies against a Bishop where a man hath recovered his advowson, or presentation, in a writ of right of advowson, or in Quare impedit, or other action, and the Bishop refuses to admit his Clerk, on pretence of lapse, &c. See title Quare impedit.

It is requisite in the writ to mention the recovery; and it is to be brought in the county where the refusal was. F. N. B. 47: 7 Rep.: Dyer 40.

In a Quare non admisit the plaintiff shall recover damages: and if the plaintiff have judgment in a Quare impedit and a writ is awarded to the Bishop; if on this writ the Bishop makes a false return, the plaintiff may have Quare non admisit against him, and have his damages. Dyer 260.

King Edw. I. presented his Clerk to a benefice in Yorkshire, and the Archbishop of that province refused to admit him; on which the King brought a Quare non admisit, and the Archbishop pleaded that the Pope had a long time before provided for that church, as one having supreme authority; in that case, therefore he could not admit the King's Clerk. It was adjudged, that for his contempt to execute the King's writ, the Archbishopric should be seised, &c. 5 Rep. 12 See title Præmunire.

If the Bishop refuse the King's presentee, and afterwards admit him, yet the King shall have Quare non admisit for the refusal; and so it is presumed may a common person. New Nat. Br. 106.

QUARE NON PERMITTIT, An antient Writ which lay for one who had a right to present to a church for a turn, against the proprietary. Fleta, l. 5. c. 6.

QUARENTINE; QUARENTAINE; Quarentina.] A benefit allowed by Law to the widow of a man dying seised of lands, whereby she may challenge to continue in his capital messuage or chief mansion-house, (not being a castle,) by the space of forty days after his decease in order to the assignment of her dower, &c. And if the heir, or any other, eject her, she may bring the writ de quarentinâ habendâ; but the widow shall not have meat, drink, &c. though if there be no provision in the house, according to Fitzherbert, she may kill things for her provision. See Magna Charta, cap. 7: Bract. lib. 2. cap. 40: F. N. B. 161: and this Dictionary, title Dower III.

QUARENTINE. The term of forty days, during which, the persons coming from foreign parts, infected with the plague, are not permitted to land or come on shore.

To this Head may be referred the provisions of our Laws against the Plague: an evil which, by the blessing of Providence, has not been inflicted on this kingdom for more than a century past. The stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 31, still remains in force; and enables the Mayor, Justices, and Head-officers of the place infected, to make a rate for the relief of the unhappy sufferers, and to effect such regulations as shall be necessary to prevent the infection from spreading: and by that statute it is enacted, that if any person infected with the plague, or dwelling in any infected house, be commanded by the officer to keep his house, and shall disobey, he may be enforced, by the watchmen appointed, to obey such necessary command; and if any hurt ensue by such enforcement, the watchmen are indemnified. And if such person, so commanded to confine himself, goes abroad and converses in company, if he has no plague-sore upon him, he shall be punished as a vagabond, by whipping, and be bound to his good behaviour; but if he has any infectious sore upon him uncured, he shall be guilty of Felony.

To prevent the introduction of this dreadful malady from foreign parts, ships coming from infected countries are to perform a Quarentine; according to the directions of stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 6, explained by stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 8, and further enforced by stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 34 See also stat. 12 Geo. 3 c. 57, as to building Lazarettos. It seems that the provisions of stat. 9 Ann. c. 2, are not now in force; but it is remarkable that neither Burn's Justice, nor any similar publication, are sufficiently accurate in their statements on this subject.

By the general provisions of these acts, the method of performing Quarentine, or 40 days' probation, by ships from foreign parts, is put in a much more regular and effectual order than formerly: and masters of ships arriving from infected places, and disobeying the directions given, having the plague on board and concealing it, and in certain other circumstances, are guilty of felony without clergy Penalties, (even to felony in some cases,) are imposed on persons escaping from the lazarettos or places wherein Quarentine is to be performed: on officers and watchmen neglecting their duty; and persons conveying goods or letters from ships performing Quarentine. A penalty of 50*l.* is imposed on the Captain quitting the ship, or permitting any person to quit it; and 200*l.* and six months' imprisonment on any other person quitting it.

If a pilot quits the ship, contrary to an order of the King in Council, though perhaps he is liable to the last-mentioned penalty, yet under the first clause of stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 6, which contains a general prohibition, without any particular penalty, he may be indicted for a misdemeanor, and punished at the discretion of the Court. 4 Term Rep. 206.

QUARENTINE, likewise signifies a quantity of ground, containing forty perches. Leg Hen. 1. c. 16.

QUARE OBSTRUXIT. A Writ which lay for him who, having a liberty to pass through his neighbour's ground, could not enjoy his right, because the owner had so obstructed it. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 26.

QUARREL, Querela; à querendo.] Extends not only to actions personal, but also to mixt; and the plaintiff in them is called Querens, and in most of the writs it is said Queritur; so that, if a man release all Quarrels, (a man's deed being taken most strongly against himself,) yet it is as beneficial as all actions, for by it all actions real and personal are released. 8 Co. 153: 1 Inst. c. 8. § 511. See title Release.

QUARRELLING IN CHURCH OR CHURCHYARD. All affrays in a church, or churchyard, are esteemed very heinous offences, as being indignities to Him to whose service those places are consecrated; therefore mere quarrelsome words, which are neither an affray nor an offence in any other place, are penal here. For it is enacted by stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 4, that if any person shall, by words only, quarrel, chide, or brawl in a church or churchyard, the Ordinary shall suspend him, if a Layman, ab ingressu ecclesiæ; and, if a Clerk in orders, from the ministration of his office during pleasure. And, if any person in such church or churchyard proceed to smite or lay violent hands on another, he shall be excommunicated ipso facto; or if he strike him with a weapon, or draw any weapon with intent to strike, he shall, besides excommunication, (being convicted by a Jury,) have one of his ears cut off; or, having no ears, be branded with the letter F in his cheek. 4 Comm.

QUARTELOIS. Upper garments with coats of arms quartered on them, the old habit of English knights. Walsing. in vit. Ed. 2.

QUARTERISARI. To be quartered, or cut into four quarters in execution. Artic. Richardi Scrope Archiep. Ebor. apud Angl. Sacr. par 2. 266: Quarterization is part of the punishment and execution of a traitor, by dividing his body into four quarters. See title Treason.

QUARTER SESSIONS, Of the Peace. A general Court held by two Justices of the Peace, one of which must be of the Quorum, in every county, once every quarter of a year; originally erected only for matters touching the breach of the Peace, but now its power is greatly increased, and extends much farther by many statutes.

The holding these Sessions quarterly was first ordained by stat. 25 Ed. 3. stat. 1. c. 8; and the particular times appointed by stat. 36 Ed. 3. c 12.

By stat. 12 R. 2. c 10, Justices are to hold their Sessions every quarter of the year at least: And by stat. 2 Hen. 5 c 4, this Court is appointed to be in the first week after Michaelmas day; the first week after the Epiphany; the first week after the close of Easter; and in the week after the translation of Saint Thomas à Becket, or the seventh of July See title Sessions of the Peace.

QUARTO DIE POST, The fourth day inclusive after the return of the writ; and if the defendant makes his appearance on this day, it is sufficient. See titles Practice; Term.

QUASH, Quassare: Fr. quasser; Lat. cassum facere] To overthrow or annul. Bracton, lib 5. tract. 2 c 3. nu. 4. If the Bailiff of a liberty return any out of his franchise, the array shall be quashed. An array returned by one who hath no franchise shall be quashed. 1 Inst. 156.

The Court of B R. hath power to quash orders of Sessions, Presentments, Indictments, &c. Though this quashing is by favour of the Court, and the Court may leave the party to take advantage of the insufficiency by pleading; as they generally do where an indictment is for an offence very prejudicial to the Commonwealth; as for perjury, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 410. See further, titles Indictment; Information, &c.

QUAYS; See Ports.

QUEEN, Lat. Regina; Sax. Cwen, i. e. Uxor, a wife; propter excellentiam, the wife of the King.] The Queen of England is either Queen Regent, Queen Consort, or Queen Dowager. The Queen Regent, Regnant, or Sovereign, is she who holds the Crown in her own right; as the first (and perhaps the second) Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, and Queen Anne; and such a one has the same powers, prerogatives, rights, dignities, and duties, as if she had been a King. This is expressly declared by stat. 1 Mar. st. 3. c 1; See title King. But the Queen Consort is the wife of the reigning King; and she, by virtue of her marriage, is participant of divers prerogatives above other women. Finch. L. 86.

She is a public person, exempt and distinct from the King; and not, like other married women, so closely connected as to have lost all legal or separate existence, so long as the marriage continues. For the Queen is of ability to purchase lands, and to convey them, to make leases, to grant copyholds, and do other acts of ownership, without the concurrence of her lord; which no other married woman can do. 4 Rep. 23. She is also capable of taking a grant from the King, which no other wife is from her husband. The Queen of England hath separate Courts and Officers, distinct from the King's, not only in matters of ceremony, but even of law; and her Attorney and Solicitor-General are entitled to a place within the bar of his Majesty's Courts, together with the King's Counsel. See title Precedence. She may likewise sue and be sued alone, without joining her husband. She may also have a separate property in goods as well as lands, and has a right to dispose of them by will. In short, she is in all legal proceedings looked upon as a feme sole, and not as a feme covert; as a single, not as a married woman. Finch L. 86: Co. Lit. 133. For which the reason given is this: Because the wisdom of the Common Law would not have the King (whose continual care and study is for the public, and circa ardua regni) to be troubled and disquieted on account of his wife's domestic affairs; and therefore it vests in the Queen a power of transacting her own concerns, without the intervention of the King, as if she was an unmarried woman. 1 Comm. c. 4.

The Queen Consort is of ability, without the King, to purchase, grant, and make leases; and may sue and be sued alone, in her own name only, by præcipe, not by petition: She may have in herself the possession of personal things during her life, &c. But both her real and personal estate goes to the King after her death: If she doth not in her lifetime dispose of them, or devise them by will. Co. Lit. 3, 31, 133: Finch. 86: 1 Roll. Abr. 912.

Acts of Parliament relating to her, need not be pleaded; for the Court must take notice of them, because she is a public person. 8 Rep. 28.

If a tenant of the Queen aliens a part of his tenancy to one, and another part to another; the Queen may distrain in any one part for the whole, as the King may do. Wood's Inst 22. And in a Quare impedit brought by the Queen, some say that plenarty is no plea; but see 2 Inst. 361.

By stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 27, the Queen was constituted Regent of the kingdom, during the King's absence abroad; to be capable of the office, without taking the oaths, or doing any act required by Law to qualify any other.

The Queen hath also many exemptions, and minute prerogatives. For instance: she pays no toll; Co. Lit. 133; nor is she liable to any amercement in any Court. Finch. L. 185. But in general, unless where the Law has expressly declared her exempted, she is upon the same footing with other Subjects; being to all intents and purposes the King's Subject, and not his equal.

The Queen hath also some pecuniary advantages, which heretofore formed her a distinct revenue: As, in the first place she is entitled to an ancient perquisite called Queen-gold; (aurum reginæ;) which is a Royal revenue, belonging to every Queen Consort during her marriage with the King, and due from every person who hath hath made a voluntary offering or fine to the King, amounting to ten marks or upwards, for and in consideration of any privileges, grants, licences, pardons, or other matter of Royal favour conferred upon him by the King: And it is due in the proportion of one tenth part more, over and above the entire offering or fine made to the King; and becomes an actual debt of record to the Queen's Majesty by the mere recording of the fine. Pryn. Aur. Reg. 2. As, if an hundred marks of silver be given to the King for liberty to take in mortmain, or to have a fair, market, park, chase, or free-warren: There the Queen is entitled to ten marks in silver, or (what was formerly an equivalent denomination) to one mark in gold, by the name of Queen-gold, or aurum reginæ. 12 Rep. 21: 4 Inst. 358. But no such payment is due for any aids or subsidies granted to the King in Parliament or convocation; nor for fines imposed by Courts on offenders, against their will; nor for voluntary presents to the King, without any consideration moving from him to the Subject; nor for any sale or contract whereby the present revenues or possessions of the Crown are granted away or diminished. Pryn. 6.

The original revenue of our ancient Queens, before and soon after the Conquest, seems to have consisted in certain reservations or rents, out of the demesne lands of the Crown, which were expressly appropriated to her Majesty, distinct from the King. It is frequent in Domesday-book, after specifying the rent due to the Crown, to add likewise the quantity of gold or other renders reserved to the Queen. These were frequently appropriated to particular purposes; to buy wool for her Majesty's use, to purchase oil for her lamps, or to furnish her attire from head to foot, which was frequently very costly, as one single robe in the fifth year of Henry II. stood the city of London in upwards of fourscore pounds. And, for a farther addition to her income, this duty of Queen-gold is supposed to have been originally granted; those matters of grace and favour, out of which it arose, being frequently obtained from the Crown by the powerful intercession of the Queen. There are traces of its payment, though obscure ones, in the book of Domesday, and in the great Pipe-roll of Henry I. In the reign of Henry II. the manner of collecting it appears to have been well understood; and it forms a distinct head in the antient dialogue of the Exchequer written in the time of that Prince, and usually attributed to Gervase of Tilbury. From that time downwards it was regularly claimed and enjoyed by all the Queen Consorts of England till the death of Henry VIII; though after the accession of the Tudor family the collecting of it seems to have been much neglected: And, there being no Queen Consort afterwards till the accession of James I., a period of near sixty years, its very nature and quantity became then a matter of doubt; and, being referred by the King to the Chief Justices and Chief Baron, their report of it was so very unfavourable, that his consort Queen Anne (though she claimed it) yet never thought proper to exact it. In 1635, 11 Car. I., a time fertile of expedients for raising money upon dormant precedents in our old records, the King, at the petition of his Queen Henrietta Maria, issued out his writ for levying it; but afterwards purchased it of his Consort at the price of ten thousand pounds; finding it, perhaps, too trifling and troublesome to levy. 19 Rym. Fæd. 721. And when afterwards, at the Restoration, by the abolition of the military tenures, and the fines that were consequent upon them, the little that legally remained of this revenue was reduced to almost nothing at all, in vain did Mr. Prynne, by a treatise which does honour to his abilities as an antiquary, endeavour to excite Queen Catherine to revive this claim.

Another antient perquisite belonging to the Queen Consort, mentioned by all our old writers, and therefore only worthy notice, is this; that on the taking of a whale on the coasts, which is a Royal fish, it shall be divided between the King and Queen; the head only being the King's property, and the tail of it the Queen's. The reason of this whimsical division, as assigned by our antient records, was to furnish the Queen's wardrobe with whalebone. Bracton, l. 3. c. 3: Britton, c. 17: Flet. l. 1. c. 45 & 46: Pryn. Aur. Reg. 127. It is remarked by Mr. Christian, that the reason is more whimsical than the division, as the whalebone lies entirely in the head; which is the King's property.

The Revenue of our Queens, after the death of the King, is settled from time to time by statute: at present it is 100,000*l.* And by various statutes the King is enabled to make grants for her benefit. See stats. 2 Geo. 3. c. 1; 15 Geo. 3. c. 53, as to Buckingham House, now called The Queen's Palace, and settled on her in lieu of Somerset House.

Though the Queen is in all respects a Subject, yet, in point of the security of her life and person, she is put on the same footing with the King. It is equally treason (by the stat. 25 Edw. 3,) to compass or imagine the death of our Lady the King's companion, as of the King himself: And to violate, or defile the Queen Consort, amounts to the same high crime; as well in the person committing the fact, as in the Queen herself, if consenting. If however the Queen be accused of any species of treason, she shall (whether Consort or Dowager) be tried by the Peers of Parliament, as Queen Ann Boleyn was in 28 Hen. 8.

The husband of a Queen Regnant, as Prince George of Denmark was to Queen Anne, is her Subject; and may be guilty of High Treason against her: But, in the instance of conjugal infidelity, he is not subjected to the same penal restrictions.

A Queen Dowager is the widow of the King, and as such enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as Queen Consort. But it is not High Treason to conspire her death; or to violate her chastity, because the succession to the Crown is not thereby endangered. Yet still, pro dignitate regali, no man can marry a Queen Dowager without special licence from the King, on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. This, Coke says, was enacted in Parliament in 6 Hen. VI., though the statute be not in print. See 2 Inst. 18: Riley's Plac. Parl. 72: 1 Inst. 133. in n. The statute is variously cited in these places, as, 8 H. 6. No. 7: 6 H. 6. No. 41: and 2 H. 6. The Queen Dowager, though an alien born, shall still be entitled to dower after the King's demise, which no other alien is. Co. Lit. 31. A Queen Dowager, when married again to a Subject, doth not lose her regal dignity, as Peeresses dowager do their Peerage when they marry Commoners. For Catherine, Queen Dowager of Henry V, though she married a private gentleman, Owen ap Meredith ap Theodore, commonly called Owen Tudor, yet, by the name of Catherine Queen of England, maintained an action action against the Bishop of Carlisle: And so the Queen Dowager of Navarre, marrying with Edmond Earl of Lancaster, brother to King Edward I., maintained an action of dower after the death of her second husband, by the name of Queen of Navarre 2 Inst. 50.

QUEEN-GOLD, Aurum Reginæ.] See title Queen.

QUE ESTATE, Which Estate.] A plea, where a man entitling another to land, &c. saith that the same estate such other had, he has from him: As, for example, in a Quare impedit, the plaintiff alleges that two persons were seised of lands, whereunto the advowson in question was appendant in fee, and did present to the church, and afterwards the church was void: Which Estate of the two persons he hath now, by virtue whereof he presented, &c. Broke 175: Co. Lit 121.

A man cannot plead a Que Estate in an estate tail, nor can it be pleaded in estates for life, or for years; a Que Estate of a term may not be pleaded, by reason a term cannot be gained by disseisin, as a fee may; but one may plead a Que Estate in a term in another person, under whom he doth not claim, and be good; for he is not privy to the estate of the stranger, to know his title. 1 Rep. 46: 1 Lev 190: 3 Lev. 19: Lutw. 81.

A thing which lies in grant, cannot be claimed by a Que Estate, directly by itself; yet it may be claimed as appurtenant to a manor, by Que Estate in the manor. 1 Mod. 232.

A man may not prescribe by a Que Estate of a rent, advowson, or toll; but he may of a manor, &c. to which these are appendant. 2 Mod. 144: 3 Mod. 52.

A person cannot plead a Que Estate, without shewing the deed how he came by it. Cro. Jac. 673. This is in case of a rent in gross, or lands, which cannot pass from one man to another without deed. Jenk. Cent. 26. See this Dictionary, title Prescription.

Sometimes

Sometimes this word Quinsime, or Quinzime, is used for the fifteenth day after any feast, as the Quinzime of St. John Baptist. Stat. 13 Ed. 1, in the preamble

QUINTAL, or KINTAL, Quintulus.] A weight of lead, iron, &c. usually 100lbs. at six score per cent. Cowell. Plowden mentions 2000 Kintals of wood.

QUINTANE, Quintena.] A Roman military sport or exercise, by men on horseback, formerly practised in this kingdom to try the agility of the country youth: It was tilting at a mark made in the shape of a man to the navel, in his left hand having a shield, in his right a wooden sword; the whole made to turn round, so that if it was struck with the lance in any other part but full in the breast, it turned with the force of the stroke, and struck the horseman with the sword which it held in its right hand: This sport is recorded by Matt. Paris, anno 1253.

QUINTO EXACT' Quintus exactus, mentioned in stat. 31 Eliz. c. 3.] The fifth and last call of the defendant, who is sued to outlawry; when, if he appear not, he is by the judgment of the coroners returned outlawed; if a woman, waived. See titles Exigent; Outlawry.

QUI TAM, See titles Action-Popular; Information.

QUOD CLERICI, Beneficiati de Cancellaria.] A Writ to exempt a Clerk of the Chancery from the contribution towards the Proctors of the Clergy in Parliament. Reg. Orig. 261.

Quod Clerici non eligantur in Officio Ballivi, &c. A Writ which lies for a Clerk, who, by reason of some land he hath, is made, or about to be made bailiff, beadle, reeve, or some such officer. See Clerico infra sacros, &c. Reg. Orig. 117: F. N. B. 261.

Quod Cum, That Whereas.] This being by way of recital, and not positively, is not good in indictments. 3 Salk. 188. See title Indictment.

Quod ei deforceat, A Writ for tenant in tail, tenant in dower, by the curtesy, or for term of life, having lost their lands by default, against him who recovers, or his heir. Reg. Orig. 171: Stat. Westm. 2. c. 4.

Quod ei deforceat may be brought against a stranger to the recovery; as if a man recover by default, and maketh a feoffment, this writ may be had against the feoffee.

If a woman lose by default, and taketh husband, she and her husband shall have the Quod ei deforceat, but where tenant in tail loseth by default, and dieth, his heirs shall not have a writ of Quod ei deforceat, but a Formedon: And if husband and wife lose by default the land of the wife, which she holdeth for term of life, and the husband dieth, she may not have this writ, for cui in vita is her remedy; and when one bringeth Quod ei deforceat, he counts that he was seised of the land in his demesne, as of freehold, or in tail, &c. without shewing of whose gift he was seised; also he ought to allege esplees in himself, and then the defendant is to deny the right of the plaintiff, &c. and shew how that at another time he recovered the land against the plaintiff, by Formedon, or other action; and shall say in the end of his plea, Quod ipse paratus est ad manutendum jus & titulum suum prædict. per donum, &c. unde petit judic. &c. New Nat. Br. 347, 349.

If tenant in tail, or such other tenant, who hath a particular estate, lose by default, where he is not summoned, &c. he may have either a Writ of Disceit, or Quod ei deforceat. Ibid; See 16 Vin. Abr. 145, 1483 and this Dict. titles Writ of Right; Recovery.

Quod permittat; A Writ which lies for the heir of him who is disseised of his common of pasture, against the heir of the disseisor, being dead. Terms de Ley.

And according to Broke, this writ may be brought by him whose ancestor died seised of common of pasture, or other like thing annexed to his inheritance, against the deforceant: If a man is disturbed by any person in his common of pasture, so that he cannot use it, he shall have a Quod permittat; so of a turbary, piscary, fair, market, &c. New Nat. Br. 272, 273, 275, 276. And a person may have a Quod permittat against a disseisor, &c. in the time of his predecessor.

The writ Quod permittat, on a disseisin of common of pasture directed to the Sheriff, Commands A. that justly, &c. he permit B. to have common of pasture in, &c. which he ought to have, as it is said; and unless he shall do it, &c. then summon, &c. Reg. Orig. 155. See further, 18 Vin. Abr. and this Dictionary, title Common III.

Quod permittat prosternere; A Writ which lieth against any person who erects a building, though on his own ground, so near to the house of another, that it hangs over, or becomes a nusance to it. 2 Lill. Abr. 413.

Formerly where a man built a wall, a house, or any thing which was a nusance to the freehold of his neighbour, and afterwards died; in such case he who received any damage thereby, sued a Quod permittat against the heir of him who did the nusance; and the form of it was Quod permittat prosternere murum, &c. 3. Nels. Abr. 44.

At the Common Law, an assise of nusance did not lie against the alienee of a wrong-doer, for the purchaser was to take the land in the same condition it was conveyed to him; but by the statute of West. 2. c. 24, damages may be recovered against the person who sold the land, if the nusance be not abated on request made to him; or against the person to whom he sold it; though this doth not extend to the alienee of the alienee. 3 Nels. 45. Lutw. 1588. This writ is seldom brought, being turned into action on the case. See title Nusance III. 3.

Quod Persona nec Prebendarii, &c. A writ which lay for spiritual persons who were distrained in their spiritual possessions, for payment of a fifteenth with the rest of the parish. F. N. B. 176.

QUO JURE, A Writ which lies for him who has land, wherein another challengeth common of pasture time out of mind: And is to compel him to shew by what title he challenges it. F. N. B. 128; and Britton, more largely, c. 59: Reg. Orig. 156.

This is now out of use, as, on the claimant's putting his cattle in, the owner may bring trespass, when the claimant must plead and prove his title See title Common of Pasture.

Quo

QUO MINUS, A Writ which lies for him who hath a grant of house bote, and hay bote in another man's woods, against the grantor, making such waste whereby the grantee can the less enjoy his grant. Old Nat. Br. 148.

This writ also lies for the King's farmer in the Exchequer, against him to whom he selleth any thing by way of bargain touching his farm, or against whom he hath any cause of personal action. Perkins, Grants, 5. For he supposeth, by the vendee's detaining any due from him, he is made less able to pay the King's rent.

Formerly it was allowed only to such persons as were tenants or debtors to the King; as this day the practice is become general for the plaintiff to surmise, that, for the wrong which the defendant doth him, he is less able to satisfy his debt to his Majesty; which surmise gives jurisdiction to the Court of Exchequer, to hear and determine the cause. Finch. 66: Old N. B. 148. See titles Exchequer; Process.

QUORUM, Lat.] Often occurs in our statutes, and commissions both of the peace and others, but particularly in commissions to Justices of the Peace; and a Justice of the Quorum is so called, from the words in the commission, Quorum A. B. unum esse volumus: As where a commission is directed to five persons, of whom A. B. and C. D. to be two: In this case A. B. and C. D. are said to be of the Quorum, and the rest cannot proceed without them. See title Justices of the Peace II.

Quorum Nomina. In the reign of Hen. VI. the King's Collectors, and other Accountants, were much perplexed in passing their accounts, by new extorted fees, and forced to procure a then late-invented writ of Quorum Nomina, for the allowing and suing out their quictus at their own charge, without allowance of the King. Chron. Angl.

QUOTA, A tax to be levied in an equal manner.

QUO WARRANTO,

A Writ which lies against any person, or Corporation, that usurps any franchise or liberty against the King, without good title; and is brought against the usurpers, to shew by what right and title they hold or claim such franchise or liberty: It also lies for misuser, or nonuser of privileges granted; and, by Bracton, it may be brought against one who intrudes himself as heir into land, &c. Old Nat. Br. 149.

A Writ of Quo Warranto is in the nature of a Writ of Right for the King, against him who claims or usurps any office, franchise, or liberty, to inquire by what authority he supports his claim, in order to determine the right. Finch. L. 322: 2 Inst 282. It lies also in case of nonuser or long neglect of a franchise, or misuser or abuse of it; being a writ commanding the defendant to shew by what Warrant he exercises such a franchise, having never had any grant of it, or having forfeited it by neglect or abuse. This was originally returnable before the King's Justices at Westminster; but afterwards only before the Justices in Eyre, by virtue of the statutes of Quo Warranto, 6 Ed. 1: 18 Ed. 1. stat. 2: but since those Justices have given place to the King's temporary Commissioners of Assise, the Judges on the several circuits, this branch of the statutes hath lost its effect; and writs of Quo Warranto (if brought at all) must now be prosecuted and determined before the King's Justices at Westminster. See 2 Comm. c. 17; and Kyd's Law of Corporations, ii. c. 4. § 3.

The judgment on a writ of Quo Warranto (being in the nature of a writ of right) is final and conclusive even against the Crown. 1 Sid. 86: 2 Show. 47: 12 Mod. 225: Kel. 139. This, together with the length of its process, probably occasioned that disuse into which it is now fallen; and introduced a more modern method of prosecution, by information filed in the Court of King's Bench by the Attorney-General, in the nature of a writ of Quo Warranto; wherein the process is speedier, and the judgment not quite so decisive. This is properly a criminal method of prosecution, as well to punish the usurper by a fine for the usurpation of the franchise, as to oust him, or seise it for the Crown: but hath long been applied to the mere purposes of trying the civil right, seising the franchise, or ousting the wrongful possessor; the fine being nominal only. 2 Comm. c. 17.

This proceeding is now applied to the decision of corporation disputes between party and party, without any intervention of the prerogative, by virtue of the stat. 9 Ann. c. 20; which permits an information in nature of a Quo Warranto to be brought, with leave of the Court, at the relation of any person desiring to prosecute the same, (who is then styled the Relator,) against any person usurping, intruding into, or unlawfully holding any franchise or office in any city, borough, or town corporate; provides for its speedy determination; and directs that, if the defendant be convicted, judgment of ouster (as well as a fine) may be given against him, and that the relator shall pay or receive costs according to the event of the suit.

The Form of this Information is thus:

" A. B. Attorney-General of the Lord the King, who sues for the Lord the King in this behalf, comes here into the Court of our said Lord the King, before the King himself, at Westminster, on ——— in this same term; and for the said Lord the King gives the Court here to understand and be informed, that ——— for the space of ——— now last past, and more, have used, and still do use, without any warrant or royal grant, the following liberties and franchises, to wit, ———: Of all which liberties, privileges, and franchises aforesaid, the said ———, during all the time aforesaid, have usurped, and still do usurp, upon the said Lord the King, to the great damage and prejudice of his royal prerogative: Whereupon the said Attorney of the said Lord the King, for the said Lord the King, prays the advice of the Court in the premises, and due process of Law against the said ——— in this behalf to be made, to answer to the said Lord the King, BY WHAT WARRANT he claims to have, use, and enjoy the liberties, privileges, and franchises aforesaid."

This is the form, whether the information be brought for an usurpation without any original title, or for a subsequent forfeiture, where the original title is not disputed. See Co. Ent. 527—564.

An information, in the nature of a Quo Warranto, lies for acting as a trustee, under an act of Parliament, without due appointment. 1 Strange 299. Against one for usurping the office of Steward of a Court-Leet. Ibid 621. For erecting a new office. 2 Strange 736. For the office of Constable. Ibid. 1213. For a Ferry. Ibid. 1161. But not for erecting a Warren. 1 Strange 637. Nor for the office of Churchwarden. Ibid. 1196.

The process usually awarded on the roll against individuals, whether claiming to act as a Corporation, or claiming any other franchise, is a venire facias, sometimes with a clause of non omittas, and sometimes without.—The entry, immediately after the conclusion of the information, is thus: "Whereupon the Sheriff is commanded, that he cause to come;" or, "that he omit not, &c. but that he cause to come, &c. to answer," &c.

If the defendants do not appear at the day, the next process awarded is a distringas. Against a Corporation, not prosecuted for acting as a Corporation, but for usurping other liberties, the first process awarded is a distringas, and the entry on the roll in this form: "Whereupon it is agreed, that the aforesaid Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of be distrained by all their lands, &c. so that, &c. to answer to our Lord the King in the premises; and the Sheriff is commanded, that he distrain them in form aforesaid, so that, &c. at such a day." Co. Ent. 536. a.

Though a venire facias and distringas are the process usually awarded on the roll, yet it seems that against individuals who cannot be personally served with the venire, process of outlawry lies. See Cro. Jac. 528, 531.

When the defendant appears, he may either disclaim or plead as to all the franchises mentioned in the information; or he may plead as to part, and disclaim as to part.

If he disclaim as to all, the entry is in this form:

"The said ———, protesting that the information aforesaid is not sufficient in Law, and that he is not under any necessity by the Law of the land to answer thereto, for plea nevertheless, saith, that he never used the aforesaid liberties, privileges, and franchises, nor any of them, nor in the same, or any of them, ever usurped upon the said Lord the King, in manner and form as by the said information is supposed, but the same, and every of them, disclaims and disavows; whereupon he prays judgment, and that he may be dismissed by the Court." Co. Ent. 527, b.

If he plead as to part, and disclaim as to part, the entry of the disclaimer, after the plea, is in this form:

"And as to the residue of the liberties, privileges, and franchises in the said information above specified, upon the said Lord the King supposed to be usurped by the said ———, the said ——— says, that he nev r used, nor does he now use the residue," &c. Co. Ent. 529, b.

Where the defendant pleads, the entry is in this form:

"The said ———, as to the aforesaid liberty, &c. of ———, says, &c. ———. Here he sets out his title to the particular franchise; and so of every other claimed by a distinct title, and concludes his plea as to each, in this manner: And BY THIS WARRANT the said ——— has used, during all the time aforesaid, in the said information mentioned, and still uses the liberties, privileges, and franchises of ——— as he well might and still may: WITHOUT THIS that the said ——— has usurped, or now does usurp the said liberties, &c. on the said Lord the King, in manner and form as by the information aforesaid, for the said Lord the King, is above supposed: All which the said ——— is ready to verify, as the Court, &c. Whereupon he prays judgment, and that all and singular the liberties, &c. above by him as aforesaid claimed, may be allowed and adjudged to him, and that he may thereupon be dismissed from this Court." See Co. Ent.

The Attorney-General then demurs or replies, and the subsequent proceedings are in the same manner as in civil actions.

In a Quo Warranto to shew by what authority a person claimed to have a Court-Leet, and alleging farther quod usurpavit libertatem sine aliquâ concessione, &c. defendant pleaded Non usurpavit; and it was objected that this was no good plea, for the answer to Quo Warranto is either to claim or disclaim; but the better opinion was, that by this plea defendant had answered the usurpation, though it did not shew by what title he claimed. Godb. 91.

In Quo Warranto for using a fair and market, and taking toll, issue was taken, whether they had toll by prescription, or not; and it was found they had; it was moved in arrest of judgment, that here was a discontinuance, because there was no issue as to the other liberties claimed: But it was held, they were too soon to make this objection, and that there can be no discontinuance against the King before judgment; for, by virtue of his prerogative, the Attorney-General may proceed to take issue on the rest, or may enter a nolle prosequi; but if he will not proceed, the Court may make a rule on him ad replicandum, and then there may be a special entry made of it. Hardres 504.

The judgment seems to be the same, and subject to the same varieties as on the writ of Quo Warranto.

If it be given in favour of the defendant, the entry is in this form: "It is considered, that the liberties, &c. be allowed to the said ———;" or thus: "The said ——— may use, have, and enjoy all the said, &c. and that the said ——— as to the said premises may be dismissed from this Court: SAVING always the right of the said Lord the King, if hereafter," &c.

This salvo jure for the King, says Coke, serveth for any other title than that which was adjudged; and therefore William de Penrugge, the King's Attorney, for prosecuting a Quo Warranto against the Abbot of Fischamp for franchises within the manor of Steyning, sine praecepto, was committed to gaol. 1 Inst. 282.

On disclaimer, by the defendant, the Attorney-General prays, "That whereas the said ———, by his plea, has disavowed and disclaimed all and singular the liberties, &c. above specified, judgment may be given for the King; and that the said ———, with the said liberties and franchises, or any of them, may no way intermeddle, but may hereafter be altogether excluded from the same;" and judgment is accordingly given in that form. Co. Ent. 27, b.

With respect to the form of the judgment for the King, when it is given on the defendant's pleading, there has been much difficulty and dispute.

In the Year-book of the 15 Ed. 4. this rule is laid down, "That where it clearly appears to the Court, that a liberty is usurped by wrong, and exercised on no title, either by the King's grant or otherwise, judgment only of ouster shall be entered: But that where it appears, that the King or his ancestors have once granted a liberty, and the liberty is forfeited by misuser or nonuser, the judgment shall be, that it be seised into the King's hands." And the reason given for the distinction is, that where the liberty or franchise has been usurped, the King cannot have that which never legally existed; but, in cases of an abuser or nonuser of a franchise once lawfully granted, the King resumes that which originally flowed from his bounty; and this course in the latter case, it has been said, is most beneficial for the Subject, who, though by forfeiture, mispleading, or default, he may lose his liberty, may have recourse to the King's mercy for restitution. See 15 E. 4. 7, b: Sawyer's Arg. Quo Warranto 17: 5 Term Rep. 551.

From this it would seem, that the only cases in which judgment of ouster only ought to be given, is where there is

is no colour of title in the defendant; or where a franchise is claimed by prescription, but it is such, that by Law it cannot be so claimed; or where it is not such a franchise as may subsist in the hands of the Crown. See 3 Comm. c. 17. cites Cro. Jac. 259: 1 Show. 280.

So, if a man claim to hold a Court-Baron in virtue of a manor held by copy of another manor; there, judgment of ouster only shall be given, because a copyholder, being only tenant at will, cannot hold a Court-Baron to have forfeitures, and hold pleas in a writ of right. Cro. Jac. 259.

But where there is a colour of title, but the pleading of the defendant is defective, there is only judgment of seisure, and not of ouster. See 9 Co. 24, a: Co. Ent. 43, a: Sawyer's Arg. 17.

Where grants appear, but either the parties are not capable of taking, or the liberty or privilege granted, is not allowable by Law, the course has been to enter a mixt judgment both of seisure and ouster. Sawyer's Arg. 17: Co. Ent. 537, 539, a: Palm. 1: 2 Rol. Rep. 113.

In addition to the judgment of seisure or of ouster, or of seisure and ouster, except only in the case of ouster on disclaimer, there is also judgment, that the defendants be taken to make fine to the King for the usurpation. And in this respect, it seems the judgment in the information, differs from that in the writ of Quo Warranto; for in the latter, it is apprehended, there could be no judgment of capias pro fine: The defendant was in the nature of a plaintiff; he made his claim; if he failed in making it good, the judgment was not capias pro fine, but quod sit in misericordiâ. Rast. Ent. 540, a. pl. 1.

Upon Quo Warranto, when liberties are seised quousque, &c. and they are not replevied, the course is, that judgment final be given, nisi the defendants plead within such a time. Comberbach 18, 19.

Wherever judgment is given for the King on a Quo Warranto, for liberties usurped, the judgment is Quod extinguantur, and that the usurpers libertates, &c. nullatenus intromittant; and in such case the writ must be brought against particular persons: But where the Quo Warranto is for a liberty claimed by a Corporation, there it is to be brought against the body politic; and the liberties may be seised, but the Corporation still subsists, and is not dissolved without cause of forfeiture. 4 Mod. 52, 58.

A judgment of seisure cannot be proper where a thing is dissolved: And the judgment in the Quo Warranto against the city of London, seems contradictory, for the first part of it is, quod libertates & franchisiæ capiantur & seisantur in manus Regis; and the latter part of it is, quod capiantur ad satisfaciend' Domino Regi de fine suo pro usurpatione libertat', &c. And the Corporation was not thereby dissolved, for it implied that they were not extinguished. 4 Mod. 52, 58. See title London; and under that title particularly as to the abuses of the Information by Quo Warranto.

After judgment, the regular course is to issue a writ of seisure to the Sheriff, which, after reciting the proceedings in the Quo Warranto, commands him to seise the liberties into the King's hands. But this writ in point of fact, has not always issued. See Co. Ent. 539, b.

Where several franchises are granted by the same charter, and one is subordinate and inseparably incident to the other, the forfeiture of the principal is the forfeiture of the subordinate and incident; but when the franchises are independent, and the one may stand without the other, the forfeiture of the one is not the forfeiture of the other. Palm. 82.

Where a Quo Warranto, or an information in the nature of it, is brought for several franchises, it is as several writs or several informations, to which there may be several pleas and several judgments; because the defendant may claim one franchise by one title, and another by another. Palm. 7, 8.

It has been adjudged, that the stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, by which informations in the Crown-Office are not to be filed without express orders in open Court, &c. being a remedial Law, extends to informations in the nature of a Quo Warranto, which always suppose the usurpation of some franchise. See Kyd's Law of Corporations, ii. 410, &c. 415, &c.; and this Dictionary, title Information I. IV.

This statute, and the stat. 9 Ann. c. 20, leave the power of the Attorney-General with respect to filing informations, whether in the nature of Quo Warranto, or not, exactly as it was at Common Law; for stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, expresly provides, that it shall not be construed to extend to any other information than such as shall be exhibited in the name of their Majesties' Coroner or Attorney in the Court of King's Bench for the time being, commonly called the Master of the Crown-Office: And stat. 9 Ann. c. 20, only introduces some provisions with respect to informations in cases within the meaning of it, filed in the name of the latter officer. In point of fact there are several Records in the Crown-Office, of informations in the nature of Quo Warranto, filed in the name of the Attorney-General, in the intermediate time between the two statutes, and since the passing of the last, as well in cases within the meaning of the last, as in other cases. 2 Kyd's Corp. 415, &c.

The distinction between the power of the Attorney-General and the Master of the Crown-Office, seems to be this; that the power of the latter is confined to cases which concern the Public Government; whereas that of the former extends, also, to cases which only concern the private rights of the Crown. 2 Ld. Raym. 1409: Hardw. 261: Stra. 637: 3 Burr. 1814, 1817. See 2 Kyd's Corp. 417, &c.

The stat. 9 Ann. c. 20, gives full costs, on verdict or judgment, to the successful party, whether relator or defendant; but it is only in case of verdict or judgment that, under this statute, the defendant can have costs for a groundless prosecution; but it has been decided, that, if the prosecutor do not, at his own costs, procure the information to be tried within a year after issue joined, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the recognizance under the statute of William and Mary. See further, title Information I.

What cases are within the meaning of the statute has been the subject of some controversy, as the successful party is entitled to his costs only in such cases.

The words of the statute are, the "offices of Mayors, Bailiffs, Portreeves, and other offices within cities, towns-corporate, boroughs, and places:" one question has been, whether these words express only corporation-offices, or whether they extend to offices in boroughs and other places not corporate. And it seems on the whole decided, that the word places in the act only extends to offices in places of the same kind with those before enumerated.

It has likewise been urged, that there is a material difference between the case of a person who is compellable to take upon himself a burdensome office, which he could not refuse without being liable to an indictment, and that of a person who voluntarily undertakes an office from which he expects personal importance or some other advantage; and that it is unreasonable that a person, supposed to be elected into an office of the first description, should be liable to pay the costs of a prosecution for ousting him, on account of some defect in his election. 5 Term Rep. 375.

The cases in which informations in the nature of Quo Warranto are granted under this act are, where a man exercises a corporate franchise, or acts as a corporate officer, without having been duly elected and sworn or admitted, and where the office of a corporate officer becomes void by something subsequent, as amotion, &c. Kyd's Corp. 424.

As this statute, 9 Ann. c. 20, extends only, as regards costs, to cases where the title of a person to be a corporate officer, as mayor, bailiff, or freeman, is in question; an information to try the right of holding a Court, is therefore not within it; but stands upon the Common Law only: and, being a prosecution in the name of the King, no costs are given. 1 Burr. 402.

To subject a man to an information in nature of a Quo Warranto, it is necessary that there should be not only a claim, but an user of the franchise. See Sayer 245: 5 Term Rep. 85.

Where the only act done by the party, against whom an application is made for leave to file an information in the nature of Quo Warranto, is voting in an election for Members of Parliament, under any claim of right, the Court will refuse it; on the ground that an inquiry into the right of voting belongs, more properly, to the House of Commons. 1 Stra. 547.

But an information, in the nature of Quo Warranto, will lie against a person claiming to have a right of voting, by virtue of a burgage tenement. 3 Term Rep. 599, n.

The Court of King's Bench, having a discretionary power of granting informations in the nature of Quo Warranto, had long ago established a general rule to guide their discretion, as to the time for applications of this nature; viz. not to allow in any case such information against a person who had been twenty years in the possession of his franchise; but having reason to consider this time as too extensive, they by degrees restrained it, by analogy to the Statute of Limitations; and resolved not to allow such information against any person who had been six years in possession. See 4 Burr. 1962; 2022; 2120; 2523: Cowp. 75: 1 Term Rep. 1, 4: 2 Term Rep. 767: 4 Term Rep. 282, 4. And at length the Legislature confirmed this regulation, and extended it to informations filed by the Attorney-General. By stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 58, it is enacted, that to any information in the nature of Quo Warranto, for the exercise of any corporate office or franchise, the defendant may plead that he has been in possession of, or has executed the office, for six years or more. And it is by the same act provided, that no defendant shall be affected by any defect in the title of the person, from whom he derives his right and title, if that person has been in the undisturbed exercise of his office, or franchise, six years previous to the filing of the information.

This latter provision must be considered as applying only to cases, where issue is taken on the title of the person through whom the defendant claims; for no inquiry can be made into such title, where no issue has been taken upon it. Kyd. Corp. ii. 444; and see Id. 435, &c.

To obtain leave to file an information, the party applying must lay a proper case before the Court, verified by affidavit; on which the Court will grant a rule on the defendant to shew cause. It was formerly, indeed, so much the practice of the Court to grant Quo Warranto informations, as of course, that it was held prudent never to shew cause against the rule; for fear of disclosing the grounds on which the defendant rested his defence. But since these matters have come more under consideration, it is no longer a matter of course; and the Court have, on several occasions, declared, that it was the intention of the Legislature, that they should exercise a sound discretion, according to the particular circumstances of the respective cases that came before them; and should not, without good reason, disturb the quiet of any corporation. See 1 Term Rep. 2: 4 Burr. 1964; 2022.

Where the right, or the fact on which the right depends, is disputed; that is a sufficient reason for granting an information, if the application be made within the proper time. So, where the right depends on a point of new or doubtful law. See 3 Burr. 1485: Cowp. 58: Doug. 397, (382).

The conduct of the parties, on whose behalf the application is made, will weigh much with the Court, in some instances, in granting or refusing an information. See 4 Burr. 1963; 2024; 2120: 3 Term Rep. 300; 573: Cowp. 75: 4 Term Rep. 223.

It is no reason for refusing an information, that informations formerly granted, for the same cause, have been abandoned; as that may have been by collusion. But it is a good reason, that the prosecutor stands exactly in the same circumstances with the defendant. 2 Term Rep. 770, 1.

In cases where there has been a long acquiescence, and where the objection, if it prevailed, might tend to dissolve the Corporation, the Court may refuse the application. Cowp. 59. But though a great number of derivative titles may be affected, by judgment of ouster against the defendant, yet, if it be confessed that elections may still be made, the Court will not refuse it on that ground alone. 2 Term Rep. 767.

Where the application is made in the names of persons unconnected with the Corporation, that will in general be a strong reason for refusing it. 1 Term Rep. 23. But where the objection to the defendant's title is, that he had not received the Sacrament within a year before his election, an information will be granted on the application of a stranger; because such an omission is against a general law, which affects all the Corporations in the kingdom. 3 Term Rep. 574, n.

It was formerly a subject of much discussion, whether a new trial could be granted in a Quo Warranto information, when the verdict was in favour of the defendant. This depended chiefly on the question, whether such an information was a criminal prosecution; but, since it has been held that it is merely a civil proceeding, there is no doubt but that a new trial may be granted, where a verdict has been given in favour of the defendant, as well as where it has been given in favour of the Crown. 2 Term Rep. 484.

R.

RACHETUM, from the Fr. racheter, i. e. redimere.] The compensation or redemption of a thief. 1 Stat. Rob. K. Scot. c. 9.

RACK, An engine to extort confession from delinquents, but utterly unknown to the Law of England. See title Mute.

RACK RENT, The full yearly value of the land let by lease, payable by tenant for life or years, &c. Wood's Inst. 185. See title Rent.

RACK-VINTAGE, A second Vintage; or voyage made by our merchants for racked wines, i. e. wines drawn from the lees. See stat antiq. 32 H. 8. c. 14.

RAGEMAN, A statute of justices assigned by Ed. I. and his Counsel, to hear and determine all complaints of injuries done throughout the realm, within the five years next before Michaelmas, in the fourth year of his reign.

RAGLORIA, A word mentioned in the charter of Edw. III. whereby he created his eldest son Edward, Prince of Wales, in Parliament at Westminster, the seventeenth year of his reign, recited by Selden in his Titles of Honour, 597 ——Cum forestis, parcis, chaseis, boscis, warenniis, hundredis, comotis, Ragloriis, ringelaiis, wodewardis, constabulariis, ballivis, &c. Davis in his Dictionary says, that rhaglaw among the Welsh signifies seneschallus, surrogatus, præpositus.

RAGLORIUS, A steward. Seld. Tit. of Honour 597.

RAGMAN's ROLL; Rectius, Ragimund's Roll: so called from one Ragimund, a legate in Scotland, who, calling before him all the beneficed clergymen in that kingdom, caused them on oath to give in the true value of their benefices; according to which they were afterwards taxed by the Court of Rome: and this Roll, among other records, being taken from the Scots by Edward I. was redelivered to them in the beginning of the reign of Edward III.

Sir Richard Baker saith, that Ed III. surrendered, by charter, all his right of sovereignty to the kingdom of Scotland, and restored divers instruments of their former homages and fealties, with the famous evidence called Ragman's Roll.

RAN, Sax.] Aperta rapina, open or public theft. Lamb. Archai. 125: Ll. Canuti, c. 58: Hoveden.

The term, all that a man can rap and ran, or still more corruptly rap and rend, is by some derived hence; rap from rapio, to take by force.

RANGE, from Fr. ranger, to order, dispose of] It is used in the Forest Laws, both as a verb, as, to range; and a substantive, as, to make range. Charta de Foresta, c 6.

RANGER, A sworn officer of the forest, of which there are twelve. Charta de Foresta. His authority is in part described by his oath set down by Manwood, part. 1. c. 50:—but more particularly part. 2. cap. 20. num. 15, 16, 17. His office chiefly consists in three points, to walk daily through his charge, to see, hear, and inquire, of trespasses in his bailiwick; to drive the beasts of the forest, both of venary and chase, out of the deafforested into the forested lands: and to present all trespasses of the forest at the next Court holden for the forest. See title Forest.

This Ranger is made by the King's letters patent, and hath a fee paid yearly out of the Exchequer, and certain fee-deer. Rangeator Forestæ de Whittlewood. Pat. 14 R. 2. m. 3.

RANSOM, Fr. Rançon, Redemptio.] Is properly the sum paid for redeeming a captive or prisoner of war; and sometimes taken in our Law for a sum of money paid for pardoning some great offence, and setting the offender at liberty who was under imprisonment. See stats. 1 H. 4. c. 7: 11 H. 6. c. 11.

Fine and Ransom go together, and some writers tell us, that they are the same; but others say, that the offender ought to be first imprisoned, and then redelivered or ransomed in consideration of a fine. Co. Litt. 127: Dalt 703.

Ransom differs from amercement, being a redemption of a corporal punishment due to any crime. Lamb. Eiren. 556. See title Fines for Offences.

A ship was taken by the French; the master (having a share in her) ransomed her for 1800*l.* and was taken to France as an hostage for this money. The Ransom-money must be raised out of the profits, notwithstanding any former mortgage of the ship; for if there was a precedent mortgage, what would become of that security, if the ship had not been redeemed? After the ship was redeemed, she performed her intended voyage, and the freight-money received after redemption was the first profits arising, and out of them the Ransom-money is to be satisfied; the insurers always pay a part of the Ransom-money. 2 Eq. Abr. 690. See further, title Insurance II. 2.

RAPE, Raptus vel Rapa.] A division of a county, similar to that of a hundred; but oftentimes containing in it more hundreds than one.

Sussex is divided into six Rapes only, viz. Chichester, Arundel, Bramber, Lewis, Pevensey, and Hastings; every of which, besides hundreds, hath a castle, river, and forest belonging to it. Camd. Britann. 225, 229. These Rapes are incident to the county of Sussex; as Lathes are to Kent; and Wapentakes to Yorkshire, &c.

These Rapes and Lathes are considered by Blackstone as an intermediate division between the Shire and the Hundreds; each of them containing about three or four hundreds a-piece. These had formerly their Rape-reeves and Lathe-reeves, acting in subordination to the Shire reeve (Sheriff);

(Sheriff): Where a county is divided into three of these intermediate jurisdictions, they are called Trithings, which were anciently governed by a Trithing-reeve. These Trithings still subsist in the large county of York, where, by an easy corruption, they are denominated Ridings; the North, East, and West Riding. 1 Comm. Introd. § 4. p. 116. See the several titles.

RAPE OF THE FOREST, Raptus Forestæ.] Trespass committed in the Forest by violence; it is reckoned among those crimes, whose cognisance belonged only to the King. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 10. See title Forest.

RAPE OF WOMEN, Raptus; from rapio.] An unlawful and carnal knowledge of a woman, by force, and against her will: a ravishment of the body, and violent deflowering her: which is Felony by the Common and Statute Law. Co. Litt. 190. The word Rapuit (ravished) is so appropriated by Law to this offence, that it cannot be expressed by any other; even the words Carnaliter Cognovit, &c. without it, will not be sufficient. Co. Litt. 124: 2 Inst. 180.

Rape was punished by the Saxon laws, particularly those of King Athelstan, with death, Bracton, l. 3. c. 28. But this was afterwards thought too hard: and in its stead another severe, but not capital, punishment, was inflicted by William the Conqueror: viz. castration and loss of eyes; which continued till after Bracton wrote, in the reign of Henry the Third. Ll Guil. Conq. c. 19.

But, in order to prevent malicious accusations, it was then the Law, (and, it seems, still continues to be so in appeals of Rape,) that the woman should, immediately after, "dum recens fuerit maleficium," go to the next town, and there make discovery to some credible persons of the injury she has suffered: and afterwards should acquaint the High Constable of the hundred, the Coroners, and the Sheriff, with the outrage. Glanv. l. 14. c. 6: Bract. l. 3. c. 28. See 1 Hale P. C. 632. Afterwards, by statute Westm. c. 13, the time of limitation was extended to forty days. At present there is no time of limitation fixed: for, as it is usually now punished by indictment at the suit of the King, the maxim of Law takes place, that nullum tempus occurrit Regi: but the Jury will rarely give credit to a stale complaint. During the former period also it was held for Law, that the woman (by consent of the Judge and her parents) might redeem the offender from the execution of his sentence, by accepting him for her husband; if he also was willing to agree to the exchange, not otherwise. Glanv. l. 14. c. 6: Bract. l. 3. c. 28.—But this is now not held for Law; and it is said, that the election of the woman is taken away by virtue of stat. Westm. 2, making the Rape felony, although she consent afterwards. See post.

By stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 13, the punishment of Rape was much mitigated: the offence itself, of ravishing a damsel within age, (that is, under twelve years old,) either with her consent or without, or of any other woman against her will, being reduced to a trespass, if not prosecuted by appeal within forty days, and subjecting the offender only to two years' imprisonment, and a fine at the King's will. But, this lenity being productive of the most terrible consequences, it was soon found necessary to make the offence of forcible Rape felony, which was accordingly done by stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 3. c. 34. And by stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7, it is made Felony without benefit of Clergy: as is also the abominable wickedness of carnally knowing and abusing any woman-child under the age of ten years; in which case the consent or non-consent is immaterial, as by reason of her tender years she is incapable of judgment and discretion.

Before this statute it was a question, whether a Rape could be committed on the body of a child of the age of six or seven years; and a person being indicted for the Rape of a girl of seven years old, although he was found guilty, the Court doubted, whether a child of that age could be ravished; and it was said, if she had been nine years old she might, for at that age she may be endowed. Dyer 304.

Hale is indeed of opinion, that such profligate actions committed on an infant under the age of twelve years, the age of female discretion by the Common Law, either with or without consent, amount to Rape and Felony; as well since as before the statute of Queen Elizabeth. 1 Hal. P. C. 631.

That Law, however, has in general been held only to extend to infants under ten; though it should seem that damsels between ten and twelve are still under the protection of the stat. Westm. 1, the Law with respect to their seduction not having been altered by either of the subsequent statutes. 4 Comm. c. 15.

A male infant, under the age of fourteen years, is presumed by Law incapable to commit a Rape, and therefore, it seems, cannot be found guilty of it. For though in other felonies malitia supplet ætatem, yet, as to this particular species of felony, the Law supposes an imbecillity of body as well as mind. 1 Hal. P. C. 631.

It is no excuse or mitigation of the crime, that the woman at last yielded to the violence, and consented either after the fact or before, if such consent was forced by fear of death or duress; or that she was a common strumpet, for she is still under the protection of the Law, and may be forced: but it was antiently held to be no Rape to force a man's own concubine; and it is said by some to be evidence of a woman's consent, that she was a common whore. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 41. § 2: Co. Litt. 123: See 1 Hal. P. C. 629.

Also, formerly, it was adjudged not to be a Rape to force a woman, who conceived at the time; because it was imagined, that if she had not consented, she could not have conceived: though this opinion hath been since questioned, by reason the previous violence is no way extenuated by such a subsequent consent; and if it were necessary to shew the woman did not conceive, to make the crime, the offender could not be tried till such time as it might appear whether she did or not. 2 Inst. 190: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 41. § 2.

As to the material facts requisite to be given in evidence and proved upon an indictment of Rape, they are of such a nature, that though necessary to be known and settled, for the conviction of the guilty and preservation of the innocent, and therefore are to be found in such criminal treatises as discourse of these matters in detail, yet they are highly improper to be publicly discussed, except only in a Court of Justice. The following remarks, with regard to the competency and credibility of the witnesses, may, salvo pudore, be considered.

And, first, the party ravished may give evidence upon oath, and is, in Law a competent witness; but the credibility of her testimony, and how far forth she is to be believed, believed, must be left to the Jury upon the circumstances of fact that concur in that testimony. For instance; if the witness be of good fame; if she presently discovered the offence, and made search for the offender; if the party accused fled for it; these and the like are concurring circumstances, which give greater probability to her evidence. But, on the other side, if she be of evil fame, and stand unsupported by others; if she concealed the injury for any considerable time after she had opportunity to complain; if the place where the fact was alleged to be committed, was where it was possible she might have been heard, and she made no outcry; these and the like circumstances carry a strong, but not conclusive, presumption that her testimony is false or feigned. 1 Hal. P. C. 634, 5, 6.

Moreover, if the Rape be charged to be committed on an infant under twelve years of age, she may still be a competent witness, if she hath sense and understanding to know the nature and obligations of an oath; or even to be sensible of the wickedness of telling a deliberate lie. Nay, though she hath not, it is thought by Sir Matthew Hale, that she ought to be heard without oath, to give the Court information; and others have held, that what the child told her mother, or other relations, may be given in evidence; since the nature of the case admits frequently of no better proof. But it is now settled, by a solemn determination of the twelve Judges, that no hearsay evidence can be given of the declarations of a child who hath not capacity to be sworn, nor can such child be examined in Court without oath: and that there is no determinate age, at which the oath of a child ought either to be admitted or rejected. Yet, where the evidence of children is admitted, it is much to be wished, in order to render their evidence credible, that there should be some concurrent testimony, of time, place, and circumstances, in order to make out the fact; and that the conviction should not be grounded singly on the unsupported accusation of an infant under years of discretion. There may be therefore, in many cases of this nature, witnesses who are competent, that is, who may be admitted to be heard; and yet, after being heard, may prove not to be credible, or such as the Jury is bound to believe. 4 Comm. c. 15.

Aiders and abettors in committing a Rape, may be indicted as principal felons, whether men or women. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 41. § 6. Lord Audley was indicted and executed as a principal, for assisting his servant to ravish his own wife, who was admitted a witness against him. Dalt. 107: 1 St. Trials 265.

Hale observes, that though a Rape is a most detestable crime, it is an accusation easily made, and hard to be proved, but harder to be defended by the man accused, although ever so innocent: and he mentions several instances of Rapes, which at the time were apparently fully proved, but were afterwards discovered to have been malicious contrivances. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 635, 636. See further, title Appeal of Rape.

RAPINE, Rapina.] To take a thing in private, against the owner's will, is properly theft; but to take it openly, or by violence, is Rapine. See title Robbery: And as to Rapine on the Northern borders, see titles Mischief, Malicious; Northumberland.

RAPTU HEREDIS, A Writ for taking away an Heir holding in socage; of which there are two sorts, one when the Heir is married, the other when he is not; see Reg. Orig. 163; and this Dict. title Guardian.

RASE, Raseria.] Seems to have been a measure of corn now disused. Toll shall be taken by the Rase, and not by the heap or cantel. Ordinance for Bakers, &c. c. 4.

RASURE of a Deed, so as to alter it in a material part, without consent of the party bound by it, &c. will make the same void, and if it be rased in the date, after delivery, it is said it goes through the whole. 5 Rep. 23. 119.

Rasure, &c. is most suspicious, when it is in a Deed-poll, that there is but one part of the Deed, and it makes to the advantage of him to whom made. And where a Deed, by Rasure, addition, or alteration, becomes no Deed, the defendant may plead non est factum. 5 Rep. 23, 119. See titles Deed; Pleading.

RATE, A valuation of every man's estate; or the appointing and setting down how much every one shall pay, or be charged with, to any tax.

RATE-TITHE, Is when any sheep or other cattle are kept in a parish for less time than a year, the owner must pay Tithe for them pro Rata, according to the custom of the place. F. N. B. 51. See title Tithes.

RATIFICATION, Ratificatio.] A ratifying or confirming: it is particularly used for the confirmation of a Clerk in a prebend, &c. formerly conferred on him by the Bishop, where the right of patronage is doubted, or supposed to be in the King. Reg. Orig. 304.

RATIHABITIO, Confirmation, agreement, consent. See 18 Vin. Abr. 156.

RATIO, An account; as reddere rationem, to give an account, and so it is frequently used. According to some it is a cause, or giving judgment therein; and ponere ad rationem, is to cite one to appear in judgment. Wals. 88.

RATIONABILIBUS DIVISIS, A Writ which lies where two lords, in divers towns, have seigniories joining together, for him who findeth his waste by little and little to have been encroached on, against the other who hath encroached, thereby to rectify their bounds; in which respect Fitzherbert calls it in its own nature a Writ of Right. The Old Nat. Brev. says, that this is a kind of Justicies, and may be removed by a pone out of the county to the Common Bench. See the form and use in F. N. B. 128: and Reg. Orig. 157: and this Dictionary, title Perambulation.

RATIONABILE ESTOVERIUM, Alimony was heretofore so called. Rot. 7 H. 3. See Baron and Feme XI.

RATIONABILI PARTE BONORUM, A writ which lay for a wife, after the death of her husband, against the executors of the husband, denying her the third part of his goods after debts and funeral charges paid. F. N. B. 222.

It appears by Glanville, that by the Common Law of England, the goods of the deceased (his debts first paid) shall be divided into three parts; one for the wife, another for his children, and the third to the executors: and this writ may be brought by the children, as well as the wife. Reg. Orig. 142.

But it seems to be used only where the custom of the county serves for it; and the writs in the register rehearse the customs of the counties, &c. New Nat. Br. 270, 271.

As to children bringing this writ, their marriage is no advancement, if the father's goods be not given in his lifetime; but where a child is advanced by the father, this writ will not lie. New N. B. 270. See this Dict. titles Executor V. 8; Will; and 18 Vin. Abr. 158.

RAVISHMENT, Fr. Raviſſement, i. e. Direptio, raptio.] An unlawful taking away either a woman, or an heir in ward; ſometimes it is uſed in the ſame ſenſe with Rape.

RAVISHMENT DE GARD, Raviſhment of Ward.] A Writ which lay for the guardian by knights-ſervice, or in ſocage, againſt a perſon who took from him the body of his Ward. F. N. B. 140.

By ſtat. 12 Car. 2 c. 24, this writ is taken away, as to lands, held by knights-ſervice, &c. but not where there is guardian in ſocage, or appointed by will. See title Guardian.

The Mayor and Aldermen and Chamberlain of London, who have the cuſtody of orphans, if they commit any orphan to another, he ſhall have a writ of Raviſhment of Ward againſt him who taketh the Ward out of his poſſeſſion. New Nat. Br. 317. See titles London; Orphans.

RAY, Cloth never coloured or dyed. See ſtats. 17 R. 2. c. 3: 11 H. 4. c 6: 1 R 3. c. 8.

REAFFORESTED, Is where a foreſt which had been deafforeſted is again made foreſt; as the foreſt of Dean is by ſtat. 20 Car. 2. c 3.

REALTY, Is an abſtract of real, as diſtinguiſhed from Perſonalty.

REASON, is the very life of Law; and what is contrary to it is unlawful.

When the Reaſon of the Law once ceaſes, the Law itſelf generally ceaſes; becauſe Reaſon is the foundation of all our Laws. Co. Litt. 97, 183.

If maxims of Law admit of any difference, thoſe are to be preferred which carry with them the more perfect and excellent Reaſon. Ibid. See 1 Comm. 70.

REASONABLE AID, A duty claimed, by the lord of the fee, of his tenants holding by knights ſervice, to marry his daughter, &c. Stat. Weſtm 2. c. 24. See title Tenures.

REASONABLE PART; See Rationabili Parte.

REATTACHMENT, Reattachiamentum.] A ſecond Attachment of him who was formerly attached and diſmiſſed the Court without day, by the not coming of the Juſtices, or ſome ſuch caſualty. Broke Reg. Orig. 35.

A cauſe diſcontinued, or put without day, cannot be revived without Reattachment or Reſummons; which, if they are ſpecial, may revive the whole proceedings; but, if general, the original record only. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 105. And on a Reattachment, the defendant is to plead de novo, &c. See Day.

REBATE; Diſcount; The abating what the intereſt of money comes to, in conſideration of prompt payment. Merch. Dict. See title Uſury.

REBELLION, Rebellio.] Among the Romans, was where theſe who had been formerly overcome in battle, and yielded to their ſubjection, made a ſecond reſiſtance: but with us it is generally uſed for the taking up of arms traiterouſly againſt the King, whether by natural Subjects, or others when once ſubdued; and the word Rebel is ſometimes applied to him who wilfully breaks a Law: ſo to a villein diſobeying his lord. See ſtats. 25 Ed. 3. c. 6: 1 R. 2. c. 6.

There is a difference between Enemies and Rebels: Enemies are thoſe who are out of the King's allegiance; therefore Subjects of the King, either in open War, or Rebellion, are not the King's Enemies, but Traitors. Thus David, Prince of Wales, who levied war againſt Edw. I. becauſe he was within the allegiance of the King, had ſentence pronounced againſt him as a Traitor and Rebel. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 16 Private perſons may arm themſelves to ſuppreſs Rebels, Enemies, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 63. § 10.

REBELLIOUS ASSEMBLY; See title Riot.

REBUTTER, from the Fr. bouter, i. e. repellere, to put back or bar.] The anſwer of a defendant to a plaintiff's ſurrejoinder. See title Pleading.

Rebutter is alſo where a man by deed or fine grants to warranty any land or hereditament to another; and the perſon making the warranty, or his heir, ſues him to whom the warranty is made, or his heir or aſſignee, for the ſame thing; if he who is ſo ſued, plead the deed or fine with warranty, and pray judgment if the plaintiff ſhall be received to demand the thing which he ought to warrant to the party, againſt the warranty in the deed, &c. this is called a Rebutter. Terms de Ley. And if I grant to a tenant to hold without impeachment of waſte, and afterwards implead him for waſte done, he may debar me of this action, by ſhewing my grant; which is Rebutter. Co. Entr. 284: Co. Litt. 365.

RECAPTION, Recaptio.] The taking a ſecond diſtreſs of one formerly diſtrained, during the plea grounded on the former diſtreſs: and it is a writ to recover damages for him whoſe goods being diſtrained for rent, or ſervice, &c. are diſtrained again for the ſame cauſe, pending the plea in the County-Court, or before the Juſtices. F. N. B. 71, 72. See ſtat. antiq. 47 Ed. 3. c. 7.

A Recaption lies where the lord diſtrains other cattle of the tenant than he firſt diſtrained, as well as if he had diſtrained the ſame cattle again, if it be for one and the ſame cauſe; but anno 19 Ed. III, iſſue was taken whether the cattle were other cattle of the plaintiff, &c. New Nat. Br 161. See title Replevin.

If the lord diſtrain the cattle of a ſtranger for the ſame rent, and not his cattle who was firſt diſtrained; neither the ſtranger, nor the party firſt diſtrained, ſhall have the writ of Recaption: And if the lord diſtrain for rent or ſervice, and afterwards the lord's bailiff takes a diſtreſs on the ſame tenant for the ſame rent or ſervice, pending the plea: the tenant ſhall not have a Recaption againſt the lord, nor againſt the bailiff, although the bailiff maketh cogniſance in right of the lord, &c. for it may be the lord had no notice of that diſtreſs, or the bailiff had no notice of the diſtreſs taken by the lord; though in ſuch caſe action of treſpaſs lies; and if the lord agree to the diſtreſs taken by his ſervant or bailiff, the tenant may have this writ againſt the lord. New Nat. Br. 159.

A man is diſtrained within a liberty, and ſues a replevin there by plaint or writ, and pending that plaint in the liberty he is diſtrained again for the ſame cauſe by the perſon who diſtrained before; he ſhall not on that diſtreſs bring a writ of Recaption, becauſe the plaint is not pendant in the County-Court before the Sheriff, nor in C. B. before the Juſtices: but if the plaint be removed by pone or recordare out of the liberty before the Juſtices, then the party diſtrained may have a Recaption, Reception, &c. And if a person be convicted before the Sheriff in a writ of Reception, he shall not only render damages to the party, but be amerced for the contempt; and be fined. 39 Ed. 3. See further, title Replevin.

For damage-feasant, beasts may be distrained as often as they be found on the land; because every time is for a new trespass and a new wrong, and no Reception lies.

RECAPTION is also a species of remedy by the mere act of the party injured. This happens, when any one hath deprived another of his property in goods or chattels personal, or wrongfully detains one's wife, child, or servant: in which case the owner of the goods, and the husband, parent, or master, may lawfully claim and retake them, wherever he happens to find them; so it be not in a riotous manner, or attended with a breach of the peace. 3 Inst. 134. Hal. Annal. § 46.

The reason for this is obvious; since it may frequently happen that the owner may have this only opportunity of doing himself justice: his goods may be afterwards conveyed away or destroyed; and his wife, children, or servants, concealed or carried out of his reach; if he had no speedier remedy than the ordinary process of Law. If therefore he can so contrive it as to gain possession of his property again, without force or terror, the Law favours, and will justify, his proceeding. But, as the public peace is a superior consideration to any one man's private property; and as, if individuals were once allowed to use private force as a remedy for private injuries, all social justice must cease, the strong would give law to the weak, and every man would revert to a state of nature; for these reasons it is provided, that this natural right of Recaption shall never be exerted, where such exertion must occasion strife and bodily contention, or endanger the peace of society. If, for instance, my horse is taken away, and I find him in a common, a fair, or a public inn, I may lawfully seize him to my own use: but I cannot justify breaking open a private stable, or entering on the grounds of a third person, to take him, except he be feloniously stolen; but must have recourse to an action at law. 2 *Roll. RECEIPT; See Rescept.

All Receipts in writing are subjected to certain stamp-duties, from 2*d.* to 2*s.*, by various acts of Parliament.

RECEIVER, Receptor] Is by us, as with the Civilians, commonly used in the evil part, for such as receive stolen goods, &c. The receiving a felon, and concealing him and his offence, makes a person accessary to the felony. 2 Inst. 183. See title Accessary II. 3.

By the Common Law, THE RECEIVING OF STOLEN GOODS was a misdemeanor: but by stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9, it is enacted, "that Receivers of stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, shall be deemed accessaries after the fact."

But this offence being dependent on the fate of the principal, a Receiver thus circumstanced could not be tried till after the conviction of such principal; so that however strong and conclusive the evidence might be, the Receiver was still safe, unless the thief could be apprehended; and even if apprehended, and put upon his trial, if acquitted through any defect of evidence, the Receiver, although he had actually confessed the crime, and the goods in his possession could be proved to be stolen, must be acquitted also; and this offence, even if completely proved, applied only to capital felonies, and not to petit larceny.

These defects were afterwards foreseen, and partly remedied by stats. 1 Ann st. 2 c 9. 5 Ann c. 31; which enact, "that Buyers and Receivers of stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, may be prosecuted for a misdemeanor, and punished by fine and imprisonment; though the principal be not previously convicted of felony: or though he cannot be taken so as to be prosecuted and convicted."

This act also greatly improved the laws applicable to this species of offence; by empowering the Court to substitute a corporal punishment instead of fine and imprisonment; and by declaring, that if the felony shall be proved against the thief, then the accessary should receive judgment of death; but the benefit of clergy was reserved.

The mischief still increasing, and these laws being found insufficient, the stat 4 Geo 1. c. 11, enacted, "that Receivers of stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, should, on conviction, be transported for fourteen years; and that, buying at an undervalue should be presumptive evidence of such knowledge." And the same statute makes it felony, without benefit of clergy, "for any person, directly or indirectly, to take a reward for helping any person to stolen goods; unless such person bring the felon to his trial, and give evidence against him." See title Advertisement.

But still these amendments proved ineffectual; and not being found to apply immediately to persons receiving stolen lead, iron, copper, brass, bell metal, or solder, taken from buildings, or from ships, vessels, wharfs, or quays: It was enacted by stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 30, "that the Receivers of such articles, knowing the same to be stolen, or who shall privately purchase these respective metals, by suffering any door, window, or shutter to be left open between sun-setting and sun rising, or shall buy or receive any of the said metals in a clandestine manner, shall, on conviction, be transported for fourteen years; although the principal felon has not been apprehended or punished." § 1.

The same statute empowers one Justice to grant a warrant to search in the day-time for such metals suspected to be stolen, as by the oath of one witness may appear to be deposited or concealed in any house or place; and if goods are found, the statute empowers two Justices to adjudge the person having the custody of the same, guilty of a misdemeanor, if he does not produce the party from whom he purchased, or give a satisfactory account how they came into his possession; and the offender shall forfeit 40*s.* for the first offence: 4*l.* for the second: and 6*l.* for every subsequent offence. §§ 2, 6.

This statute also empowers officers of justice (and watchmen while on duty) to apprehend all persons suspected of conveying any stolen metals, as already described, after sun-set or before sun rise; and if such persons cannot give a good account of the manner by which they were obtained, two Magistrates are in like manner authorised to adjudge them guilty of a misdemeanor, and they to forfeit 40*s.* &c. § 3, 6.

The persons also to whom such articles are offered for sale, or to be pawned, where there is reasonable ground to suppose they were stolen, are empowered to apprehend and secure the parties, and the materials, to be dealt dealt with according to Law. And if it shall appear, even on the evidence of the thief, corroborated by other testimony, that there was cause to suspect the goods were stolen, and that the person, to whom they were offered, did not do his duty in apprehending the person offering the same, he shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and forfeit 20s. for the first offence: 40s. for the second; and 4l. for every offence subsequent. § 5. And so anxious has the Legislature been to suppress the evil of stealing and receiving metals, that § 8, of the said stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 30, entitles the actual thief to a pardon, on the discovery and conviction of two or more of the Receivers: And § 9, screens from prosecution any person stealing such metals, who shall discover the Receiver to whom the same were delivered, so as a conviction might follow.

Under these stats. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9: 5 Ann. c. 31: 29 Geo. 2. c. 30, the prosecutor has two methods in his choice; either to punish the Receivers for the misdemeanor, immediately, before the thief is taken; or to wait till the felon is convicted, and then punish them as accessaries to the felony. But it is provided by the statutes, that he shall only make use of one, and not both, of these methods of punishment. Foster 374.

By stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 24, it shall be lawful for any pawnbroker, or any other dealer, their servants, or agents, to whom any goods shall be offered to be pawned, exchanged, or sold, which shall be suspected to be stolen, to seize and detain the persons offering the same, for the purpose of being examined by a Justice; who is empowered, if he sees any grounds to apprehend that the goods have been illegally obtained, to commit the persons offering the same, to prison, for a period not exceeding six days; and if on the farther examination, the Justice shall be satisfied that the goods were stolen, he shall commit the offender to prison, to be dealt with according to Law; and although it may afterwards appear that the goods in question were fairly obtained, yet the parties who seized the supposed offender shall be indemnified.

It has been determined, that money and bank notes are not goods within the meaning of these statutes. [illegible] 68. Upon the trial of the Receiver, the principal felon may be admitted a witness. Leach 325.

It is well observed, by the ingenious author of the [illegible] the Police of the Metropolis, that it would have [illegible] to the principles of the first of these statutes [illegible] to every kind of goods and chattels, [illegible] money, and bank notes, as well as to the [illegible] therein described; but it is to be lamented, that [illegible] has not been to look at great features of [illegible] to meet every existing pressure [illegible] another partial statute was made, [illegible] the provisions of stat. 29 [illegible] goods, [illegible] or materials taken from [illegible] by enacting, "that all persons [illegible] knowing them to be stolen, [illegible] the same in a concealed or clandestine manner [illegible] sun-setting and sun-rising, shall be transported [illegible] fourteen years, although the principal felon [illegible]." But, by the wording of this act, it is [illegible] to receiving stolen goods from [illegible] of the River.

[illegible] applicable to the Receivers of stolen [illegible] 10 Geo. 3. c. 48, whereby it is enacted, "that the Buyers and Receivers of jewels, gold, silver, plate, or watches, knowing the same to be stolen, where such stealing was accompanied by a burglary or highway robbery, may be tried, as well before as after the principal felon is convicted; and whether he be in or out of custody; and, if found guilty, shall be transported for fourteen years."

Eleven years after the passing of the above-mentioned statute, the Legislature, appearing to be impressed with the great extent of the depredations committed by persons stealing pewter pots, and desirous of punishing the Receivers, the stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 69, was passed; which enacts, "that any person who shall buy or receive any pewter pot or other vessel, or any pewter in any form or shape whatsoever, knowing the same to be stolen, or who shall privately buy or receive stolen pewter in a clandestine manner, between sun setting and sun-rising, shall, on conviction, be transported for seven years, or detained in the House of Correction, at hard labour, for a term not exceeding three years, nor less than one year, and may be whipped not more than three times; although the principal felon has not been convicted."

In the following Session of Parliament, the stat. 22 Geo 3. c. 58, (said to have been framed by an able and experienced Lawyer and Magistrate, Mr. Serjeant Adair, then Recorder of London,) removed many of the imperfections of former statutes, and particularly that which respected Petty Larceny; by enacting, "That where any goods (except lead, iron, copper, brass, bell metal, or solder, the Receivers of which, it has been already stated, are punishable, under stat 29 Geo. 2. c 30, by transportation for fourteen years,) have been stolen, whether the offence amount to Grand Larceny, or some greater offence, or to Petty Larceny only; (except where the offender has been convicted of Grand Larceny, or some greater offence; when the Receiver must be prosecuted as an accessary to the felony, and under stat. 24 Geo 2. c. 11, already noticed, may be transported for fourteen years;) every person who shall buy or receive the same, knowing them to be stolen, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished by fine, imprisonment, or whipping, as the Quarter Sessions who are empowered to try such offender, or any other Court, before whom he shall be tried, shall think fit, although the principal be not convicted; and if the felony amounts to Grand Larceny, or some greater offence, and the person committing such felony has not been before convicted, such offender shall be exempted from being punished as accessary, if the principal sha' be afterwards convicted." § 1.

This statute also empowers one Justice to grant a warrant to search for stolen goods in the day-time, on oath being made, that there are just grounds of suspicion; and the person concealing the said goods, or in whose custody they are found, shall, in like manner, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished, in the manner before mentioned. § 2.

The same statute extended the powers granted, by former acts relative to metals, to [illegible] of goods, by authorising peace-officers [illegible] while on duty) to apprehend all persons suspected of carrying [illegible] goods after sun-setting and before sun-rising [illegible], on conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and [illegible] not exceeding [illegible], nor less than three months. § 3.

Power

Power is also given by this act to any person to whom goods suspected to be stolen, shall be offered to be sold or pawned, to apprehend the person offering the same, and to carry him before a Justice.

And as an encouragement to young thieves to discover the Receivers, the same act provides, "That if any person or persons, being out of custody, or in custody, if under the age of fifteen years, upon any charge of felony within benefit of clergy, shall have committed any felony, and shall discover two Receivers, so as that they shall be convicted, such discoverer shall have pardon for all felonies by him committed before such discovery."

When the stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9, had made the Receiver of stolen goods an accessary after the fact, his punishment in the case of Grand Larceny was the same as that of the principal, viz. burning in the hand, and imprisonment not exceeding a year. By stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11, the punishment of the principal might be changed, at the discretion of the Court, into transportation for seven years; but it seems to be understood, that the clause respecting the Receiver is peremptory, and that the Court is obliged to sentence him to transportation for fourteen years. Fost. 73. The words of the statute, however, it has been remarked, are, that it shall and may be lawful for the Court to order Receivers to be transported for fourteen years; which seem to leave it still to the discretion of the Judge, whether he will inflict this, or the former punishment of burning in the hand, upon the offender. 4 Comm. c. 10, in n.

RECEIVER. Annexed to other words, as Receiver of rents, signifies an officer belonging to the King, or other personage. Crompt. Jurisd. 18. See Account.

RECEIVER OF THE FINES; An officer who receives the money of all such as compound with the King, on original writs sued out of Chancery. West. Symb. par. 2. sect. 106: Stat. 1 Ed. 4. c. 1.

RECEIVER-GENERAL OF THE DUCHY OF LANCASTER; An Officer of the Duchy Court, who collects all the revenues, fines, forfeitures, and assessments, within the Duchy, or what is there to be received, arising from the profits of the Duchy Lands, &c. Stat. 39 E. 1. 7.

RECEIVER OF THE KING'S RENTS AND TENTHS; What he shall take for acquittances, see stat. 33 H. 8. c 39, § 65.

How the King's Receivers and Collectors shall be charged. See stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 2.

Officers accountant to the Crown shall find sureties, and make their accounts duly. Stat. 7 Ed 6. c. 1.

Receivers to pay 12*l.* per cent. in case they neglect to account for two months. 20 Car. 2. c. 2.

The Treasury empowered to make allowances to Receivers. Stat. 5 G. 1. c. 4. § 5: 7 G. 1. st. 1. c. 20. § 36.

See stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 35, enabling the Court of Exchequer to sell the estate of a debtor to the Crown; and to apply the same in liquidation of the King's demand, under an extent, or diem clausit extremum.

RECITAL, Recitatio.] Is the rehearsal or making mention, in a deed or writing, of something which has been done before. 1 Lill. Abr. 416.

A Recital is not conclusive, because it is no direct affirmation; otherwise, by feigned Recitals in a true deed, men might make what titles they pleased, since false Recitals are not punishable. Co. Litt. 352: 2 Lev. 108.

If a person by deed of assignment recite that he is possessed of an interest in certain lands, and assign it over by the deed, and become bound by bond to perform all the agreements in the deed; if he is not possessed of such interest, the condition is broken; and though a Recital of itself is nothing, yet, being joined and considered with the rest of the deed, it is material. 1 Leon. 112. A Recital, that before the indenture the parties were agreed to do such a thing, is a covenant; and the deed itself confirms it. 3 Keb. 466.

The Recital of one lease in another, is not a sufficient proof that there was such a lease as is recited Vaugh 74. But the Recital of a lease in a deed of release, is good evidence of a lease against the releassor, and those who claim under him. Mod. Ca. 44.

A new reversionary lease shall commence from the delivery, where an old lease is recited, and there is none, &c. Dyer 93: 6 Rep. 36.

A. recites that he hath nothing in such lands, and in truth he hath an estate there, and makes a lease to B. for years: the Recital is void, and the lease good. Jenk. Cent. 255. In this case, if the Recital were true, the lease would not bind. See title Deeds.

RECOGNITION, Recognitio.] An acknowledgment: it is the title of the first chapter of the stat. 1 Jac. 1. whereby the Parliament acknowledged the Crown of England, on the death of Queen Elizabeth, rightfully to have descended to King James RECOGNITIONE ADNULLANDA per Vim et Duritiem factâ, A Writ to the Justices of C. B. for sending a record touching a Recognizance, which the Recognizor suggests was acknowledged by force and duress; that, if it so appear, the Recognizance may be disannulled. Reg. Orig. 183.

RECOGNITORS, Recognitores.] The Jury impannelled on an Assise; so called, because they acknowledge a disseisin by their verdict. Bract. lib. 5. See titles Assise; Jury.

RECOGNIZANCE, Fr. Reconoissance; Lat. Recognitio; Obligatio.] An Obligation of Record, which a man enters into, before some Court of Record, or Magistrate duly authorised, with condition to do some particular act; as to appear at the Assises, to keep the peace, to pay a debt, or the like. It is, in most respects, like another bond; the difference being chiefly this; that the bond is the creation of a fresh debt, or Obligation de novo; the Recognizance is an acknowledgment of a former debt upon record; the form whereof is, "That A. B. doth acknowledge to owe to our Lord the King, to the plaintiff, to C. D. or the like, the sum of 10*l* " with condition to be void on performance of the thing stipulated; in which case the King, the plaintiff, C. D. &c. is called the Cognizee, is cui cognoscitur; as he that enters into the Recognizance is called the Cognizor, is qui cognoscit. This being either certified to, or taken by, the officer of some Court, is witnessed only by the record of that Court, and not by the party's seal: so that it is not, in strict propriety, a deed, though the effects of it are greater than a common Obligation, being allowed a priority in point of payment, and binding the lands of the Cognizor from the time of enrolment on record. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. See Bail.

As to Recognizances of a private kind, in nature of a Statute-Staple, by virtue of stat. 23 H. 8. c. 6, and which are a charge on real estate, the following observations will serve at present: and see further, title Statute-Staple.

For debt, or bail, they are taken or acknowledged before the Judges, a Master in Chancery, &c. See title Bail. And to appear at the Assises, or Sessions, they may be taken by Justices of Peace; which Recognizances are to be returned by the Justices to the Sessions, or an information lies against them. 2 Lil Abr. 417. See Justices.

By the statute, 23 H. 8. c. 6, the Chief Justices of the King's Bench and Common Pleas in term time, or, in their absence out of term, the Mayor of the Staple at Westminster, and the Recorder of London, jointly, have power to take Recognizances for the payment of debts, in this form, Noverint universi per præsentes Nos A. B. & C. D. teneri & firmiter obligari E. F. in centum libris, &c. They are to be sealed with the seal of the Cognizor, and of the King appointed for that purpose, and the seal of one of the Chief Justices, &c. And the Recognizees, their executors and administrators, have the like process and execution against the Recognizors, as on Obligations of Statute-Staple. 2 Inst. 678.

The execution on a Recognizance or statute, pursuant to stat. 23 H. 8. c. 6, is called an extent; and the body of the Cognizor, (if a layman,) and all his lands, &c. into whose hands soever they come, are liable to the extent; goods (not of other persons in his possession) and chattels, as leases for years, cattle, &c. which are in his own hands, and not sold bonâ fide, and for valuable consideration, are also subject to the extent. 3 Rep. 13.

But the land is not the debtor, but the body; and land is liable only in respect that it was in the hands of the Cognizor at the time of the acknowledgment of the Recognizance, or after: and the person is charged, but the lands chargeable only. Plowd. 72.

Lands held in tail are chargeable only during life, and do not affect the issue in tail; unless a recovery be passed, when it is as fee-simple land: Copyhold lands are subject to the extent, only during the life of the Cognizor. The lands a man hath in right of his wife, shall be chargeable, only during the lives of husband and wife together; and lands which the Cognizor hath in joint-tenancy with another, are liable to execution during the life of the Cognizor, and no longer; for after his death, if no execution was sued in his life, the surviving joint-tenant shall have all; but if the Cognizor survive, all is liable. 2 Inst. 673.

If two or more join in the Recognizance, &c. the lands of all ought equally to be charged: and where a Cognizor, after he hath entered into a Recognizance or statute, conveys his lands to divers persons, and the Cognizee sues execution on the lands of some of them, and not all; in this case he or they, whose lands are taken in execution, may, by auditâ querelâ or scire facias, have contribution from the rest, and have all the lands equally and proportionably extended. But the Cognizor, or his heirs, when he sells part of his lands, and keeps the remainder, shall not have any contribution from a purchaser, if his land is put in execution. 3 Rep. 14: Plowd. 72.

If there be a Recognizance, and after a statute entered into by one man to two others; his lands may be extended pro rata, and so taken in execution. Yelv. 12.

This kind of Recognizance may be used for payment of debts; or to strengthen other assurance. Wood 288.

If a Recognizance is to pay 100*l*. at five several days, viz. 20*l*. on each day, immediately after the first failure of payment, the Cognizee may have execution by elegit on the Recognizance for the 20*l*. and shall not stay till the last day of payment is past, for this is in nature of several judgments. Co Litt. 292: 2 Inst. 395, 471. When no time is limited in a statute or Recognizance for payment of the money, it is due presently. See title Bond.

A Recognizance for money lent, though it is not a perfect record till entered on the roll; yet, when entered, it is a Recognizance from the first acknowledgment, and binds persons and lands from that time. Hob. 196. By stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, no Recognizance shall bind lands in the hands of purchasers for valuable consideration, but from the time of enrolment; which is to be set down in the margin of the roll: and Recognizances, &c. in the counties of York and Middlesex, shall not bind lands, unless registered, pursuant to stats. 2 Ann. c. 4: 5 Ann. c. 18: 6 Ann. c. 35: 7 Ann. c. 20. See tit. Registry of Deeds. The Clerk of the Recognizances is to keep three several rolls of the entering Recognizances taken by the Chief Justices, &c. and the persons before whom the Recognizances are taken; and the parties acknowledging, are to sign their names to the roll, as well as to the Recognizance. Stat 8 Geo. 1. c. 25.

To make a good Recognizance or obligation of record, the form prescribed must be pursued; therefore they may not be acknowledged before any others, besides the persons appointed by the statutes; and the substantial forms of the statute are to be observed herein. But a Recognizance may be taken by the Judges in any part of England. Dyer 221: Hob. 195.

Recognizances and statutes are like judgments; and the Cognizee shall have the same things in execution, as after judgment. The body of the Cognizor himself, but not of his heir, or executor, &c. may be taken, though there be lands, goods, and chattels to satisfy the debt: and if a Cognizor is taken by the Sheriff, and he let him go; yet his lands and goods are liable. 12 Rep. 1, 2: Plowd. 62: 1 And. 273.

By Recognizances of debt, and bail, the body and lands are bound; though some opinions are, that the lands of bail are bound from the time of Recognizance entered into; and some that they are not bound but from the recovery of the judgment against the principal. 2 Leon. 84: Cro. Jac. 272, 449. See title Bail.

In B. R. all Recognizances are entered as taken in Court; but in C. B. they enter them specially where taken, and their Recognizances bind from the caption; but those in B. R. from the time of entry; in C. B. a scire facias may be brought on their Recognizances either in London or Middlesex; on those in B. R. in the county of Middlesex only. 2 Salk. 659.

A Recognizance of bail in C. B. is entered specially; the bail are bound to pay a certain sum of money, if the party condemned doth not pay the condemnation, or render his body to prison: and in B. R. Recognizances are entered generally; that if the party be condemned in the suit or action, he shall render his body to prison, or pay the condemnation-money, or the bail shall do it for him. 2 Lil. Abr. 417. See title Bail.

 It

It was formerly a question, whether a ca. sa. would lie on a Recognizance taken in Chancery; but adjudged, that immediately after the Recognizance is acknowledged, it is a judgment on record; and then by stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 17. a ca. sa. will lie, it being a debt on record. 2 Bulst. 62.

If a Recognizance be made before a Master in Chancery, for a debt, or to perform an order or decree of the Court; if the condition be not performed, an extent shall issue; or a scire facias is the proper process, for the Recognizor to shew what he can say, why execution should not be had against him; upon which, and a scire facias or two nihils returned, and judgment thereupon, the proper execution is an elegit, &c. Cro. Jac. 3.

Where a man is bound by Recognizance in Chancery, and the Cognizor hath certain indentures of defeasance; if the Recognizee will sue execution on the Recognizance, the Recognizor may come into Chancery, and shew the indentures of defeasance, and that he is ready to perform them; and thereon he shall have a scire facias against the Recognizee, returnable at a certain day; and in the same writ, he shall have a supersedeas to the Sheriff not to make execution in the mean time. New Nat. Br. 589.

If a person is bound in a Recognizance in Ch[illegible]ry, or other Court of Record, and afterwards the [illegible]gnizee dieth; his executors may sue for an [illegible] to have execution of the lands of the Recogn[illegible]or; and if the Sheriff return that the Recognizor is de[illegible] [illegible] a special scire facias shall go against the heir of the Recognizor, and those who are tenants [illegible] the lands which he had at the day of the Recogniz[illegible] entered into. New Nat. Br. 590.

One of the best securities we have for a debt is the Recognizance in Ch[illegible]ery, acknowle[illegible]ed before a Master of that Court; which is to be signed by such Master, [illegible] and the King may, by his commission, giv[illegible] to receive a Recognizance of another man, [illegible] return the same into Chancery; and on such a Recognizance, if the Recognizor do not pay the debt at the day, the Reco[illegible] shall have an elegit on the Cognizance so taken, as [illegible] were taken in the Chancery. New Nat. Br. 589.

In case lands are mortgaged, without giving notice of a Recognizance formerly had, if the Recognizance be not paid off and vacated in six months, the mortgagor shall forfeit his equity of redemption, &c. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 16. See title Mortgage III.

When a statute has been shewn in Court, and the plea discontinued, the Conusee, on a resummons, may have execution without producing it again. Stat. 5 H. 4. c. 12.

On a scire facias to defeat a Recognizance, the Conusor shall find surety to the party, as well as to the King. Stat. 11 H. 6. c. 10.

Recognizances for keeping the peace shall be returned to the Sessions. Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 1.

Recognizances for debt may be taken before the chief Justices, &c. 23 H. 8. c. 6.

RECOGNIZEE, He to whom one is bound in a Recognizance, mentioned in stat. 11 H. 6. c. 10.

RECOGNIZOR, He who enters into the Recognizance.

RECORD, Recordum, from the Lat. Recordari, to remember.] A Memorial or Remembrance; An authentic Testimony in writing, contained in rolls of parchment, and preserved in a Court of Record, Britton, c. 27. In these rolls are contained the judgment of the Court on each case, and all the proceedings previous thereto; carefully registered, and preserved in public repositories, set apart for that purpose. The term Record is applied to such proceedings of superior Courts only, and does not extend to the rolls of inferior Courts; the registries of proceedings whereof are not properly called Records. Co. Litt. 260: See title Courts.

All Courts of Record are the King's Courts in right of his Crown and royal dignity: and therefore no other Court hath authority to fine or imprison. A Court not of Record, is the Court of a private man; whom the Law will not intrust with any discretionary power over the fortune or liberty of his fellow-subjects. Such are the Courts-Barons incident to every manor, and other inferior jurisdictions; where the proceedings are not enrolled or recorded: but as well their existence, as the truth of the matter contained therein, shall, if disputed, be tried and determined by a Jury. 3 Comm. c. 3. p. 24.

There are three kinds of Records, viz. A judicial Record, as an attainder, &c. a ministerial Record on oath, being an office or inquisition found; and a Record made by conveyance and consent, as a Fine, Recovery, or a Deed inrolled. 4 Rep. 54. But it has been held, that a deed inrolled, or a decree in Chancery inrolled, are not Records, but a deed and a decree recorded; and there is a difference between a Record and a thing recorded. 2 Lil. 421.

Records, being the rolls or memorials of the Judges, import in themselves such incontrollable verity, that they admit of no proof or averment to the contrary, insomuch that they are to be tried only by themselves; for otherwise there would be no end of controversies; but during the term wherein any judicial act is done, the roll is alterable in that term, as the Judges shall direct; when the term is past, then the Record admitteth of no alteration, or proof that it is false in any instance. Co. Lit. 260: 4 Rep. 52.

Matter of Record is to be proved by the Record itself, and not by evidence, because no issue can be joined on it to be tried by a Jury like matters of fact; and the credit of a Record is greater than the testimony of witnesses. 21 Car. B R. Though where matter of Record is mixed with matter of fact, it shall be tried by Jury. Hob. 124.

A man cannot regularly aver against a Record; yet a jury shall not be estopped by a Record to find the truth of the fact: And it was adjudged, that on evidence, it is at the discretion of the Court to permit any matter to be shewn to prove a Record. 1 Vent. 362: Allen 18.

A Record may be contradictory in appearance, and yet be good: And though it hath apparent falsehood in it, it is not to be denied; but a Record may in some cases be avoided by matter in fact. Style's Reg. 281: Co. Lit.: Cro. Car. 329: Hutt. 20.

The Judges cannot judge of a Record given in evidence, if the Record be not exemplified under seal: But a Jury may find a Record although it be not so, if they have a copy proved to them, or other matter given in evidence sufficient to induce them to believe that there was such a Record. 2 Lill. Abr. 421: See post, Trial by Record.

Judges

Judges may reform defects in any Record, or Process, or variance between Records, &c. And a Record exemplified or inrolled may be amended for variation from the exemplification. Stat. 8 H. 6. cc. 12, 15. See Amendment.

If the transcript of a Record be false, the Court of B.R. will, on motion, order a Certiorari to an inferior Court, to certify how the Record is below; and if it be on a writ of error on a judgment of the Common Pleas, they will grant a rule to bring the Record out of C. B. into this Court, and then order the transcript to be amended in Court, according to the roll in C. B. And a Record cannot be amended without a rule of the Court, grounded on motion. 2 Lill. Abr. 421, 2.

Where a Record is so drawn, that the words may receive a double construction, one to make the Record good, and another to make it erroneous, the Court will interpret the words that way which will make the Record good, as being most for the advancement of justice: So if a letter of a word in a Record be doubtful, that it may be taken for one letter or another, the Court will construe it to be that letter which is for upholding the Record. See Cro. Eliz. 161: Cro. Jac. 119, 153, 244, &c.

The Court will not supply a blank left in a Record, to make it perfect, when before it was defective; as this would be to make a Record, which is not the office of the Court to do, but to judge of them. 2 Lil. Abr. 420. If a subsequent Record hath any relation to one that is precedent; in such case it must appear in pleading, &c. to be the same without any variation. 3 Lutw. 905.

Records certified out of inferior Courts, on writs of error, and the judgments on such Records are to be entered in B. R.; for until then the Records are not perfected: And if a Record once comes into B. R. by writ of error, it never goes out again; but a transcript of it may go to the House of Lords, on a writ of error there. 2 Lil. 422. Writ of error removes the Record; but the original is no part of it. Jenk. Cent. 164. A Record cannot be removed by writ of error, until the judgment in that Record is entered: And when and how a Record may be removed, and where and how remanded, see Cro. Jac. 206: 2 Brownl. 145; and this Dict. tit. Error.

Justices of Assise, Gaol-delivery, &c. are to send all their Records and processes determined, to the Exchequer at Michaelmas in every year; and the Treasurer and Chamberlains, on sight of the commissions of such Justices, are to receive the same Records, &c. under their seals, and keep them in the Treasury. Stat. 9 Ed. stat. 3. 1. c. 5.

Imbezzling or vacating Records, (or falsifying certain other proceedings in a Court of Judicature,) is a felonious offence against public justice. It is enacted by stat. 8 H. 6. c. 12, that if any clerk, or other person, shall wilfully take away, withdraw, or avoid, (vacate,) any Record or Process, in the superior Courts of Justice in Westminster-Hall; by reason whereof the judgment shall be reversed, or not take effect: It shall be felony, not only in the principal actors, but also in their procurers and abettors: And this may be tried, either in the King's Bench or Common Pleas, by a Jury de medietate, half Officers of any of the superior Courts, and the other half common Jurors. So by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 26, to acknowledge any Fine, Recovery, Deed-inrolled, Statute, Recognizance, Bail, or Judgment, in the name of another not privy to the same, is felony without clergy. This Law extended only to proceedings in the Courts themselves; but by stat. 4 W. & M. c. 4, to personate any other as bail before Judges of Assise, or the Commissioners in the country, is also felony. See titles Bail: Fine: Recovery, &c.

A Record that is rased, if legible, remains a good Record notwithstanding the rasure; but he who rased it is not to go unpunished for his offence. And in case of a rasure in a judgment, done by fraud to hinder execution, the Record hath been ordered to be amended, and a special entry thereof to be made; but though the Record by this means be made perfect, the offender may be indicted for the felony. 2 Rol. Rep. 81.

Trial by Record, Is used where a matter of Record is pleaded in any action, as a Fine, a Judgment, or the like; and the opposite party pleads nul tiel Record, "that there is no such matter of Record existing."—Upon this issue is tendered, and joined in the following form: "And this he prays may be inquired of by the Record; and the other doth the like." And hereupon the party pleading the Record has a day given him to bring it in; and proclamation is made at the rising of the Court on that day, for him "to bring forth the Record by him in pleading alleged, or else he shall be condemned;" and, on his failure, his antagonist shall have judgment to recover, by rule of the Court, according to the circumstances of the case. The trial of this issue is merely by the Record, on the principle already stated.

Titles of Nobility, as whether Earl or no Earl, Baron or no Baron, shall be tried by the King's writ or patent only, which is matter of Record. 6 Rep. 53. Also in case of an alien, whether alien friend or enemy, shall be tried by the league or treaty between his Sovereign and ours, for every league or treaty is of Record. 9 Rep. 31: And, also, whether a manor be to be held in ancient demesne, or not, shall be tried by the Record of Domesday in the King's Exchequer. 3 Comm. c. 22. p. 330. See title Ancient Demesne.

Thus, also, upon the plea of a former judgment recovered by the plaintiff against the defendant for the same cause of action; or of another action depending on the same cause; or of outlawry; or of comperuit ad diem to a bail-bond; or of any act of Parliament; or, in short, of any other matter of Record, the general replication is nul tiel Record; upon which the parties join issue, and the truth or falsehood of such issue is determined by the party producing or failing to produce, the Record in question, on a day given him for that purpose. Sellon's Pract. c. 13.

Where the Record pleaded is the Record of another Court, the only way of producing it is by suing out a Certiorari from the Court of Chancery, for the Court where the Record is to certify the Record: and upon the return of the Certiorari, but not till then, the Record will be sent by mittimus to the Court where it is to be produced: and thus a Record of K. B. may be removed into C. B. contrary to the general rule, that they are not removable out of that Court. Cro. Car. 297: 2 Saund. 344.

Where Records are pleaded, they must be shewn; and one may not plead any Record, if it be not in the same Court where it remaineth, unless he shew it under the the Great Seal of England, if denied: Acts of Record must be specially pleaded. Bro. c. 20: Cro. Jac. 560: 9 Rep. 218: 10 Rep. 92: Styk 22. Records are to be pleaded intire, and not part of them, with an inter alia referring to the Record; and so should a special verdict find a Record, unless a judgment be pleaded, or the declaration is on a judgment in a superior Court, when the plaintiff may say recuperavit generally; but not in an inferior Court, for there all the proceedings must be set forth particularly. Mich. 22 Car. B. R.

Though writs are matter of Record, they need not be so pleaded. 1 Salk. 1: 1 Lev. 211.

As to making up the Record of a cause for trial, see titles Pleading; Record

RECORDARI FACIAS LOQUELAM; (frequently abbreviated Re. fa lo.) A Writ directed to the Sheriff to remove a cause, depending in an inferior Court, to the King's Bench or Common Pleas; and it is called a Recordari, because it commands the Sheriff to make a Record of the plaint and other proceedings in the County-Court, and then to send up the cause: F. N. B. 71: 2 Inst. 339.

This Writ is in the nature of a Certiorari; on which the plaintiff may remove the plaint, from the County-Court, without cause; but a defendant cannot remove it without cause shewn in the writ, as on a plea of freehold, &c. If the plaint is in another Court, neither plaintiff nor defendant can remove it without cause. Wood's Inst. 572.

If a plea is discontinued in the county, the plaintiff or defendant may remove the plaint into the Common Pleas or King's Bench by Recordari, and it shall be good; and the plaintiff may declare on the same, and the Court hold plea thereof. New. Nat. Br. 158.

The form of this Writ in the Register is, Et Recordum illud habeas, &c. But in a Recordari to remove a Record out of the Court of ancient demesne, the writ shall say, Loquelam & processum, &c. And there is a writ to call a Record, &c to an higher Court at Westminster, called Recordo & processu mittendis. Tab. Reg. Orig. By the usual writ Recordari,—The Sheriff is commanded, in his full Court, to cause to be recorded the plaint which is in the said Court between A. and B. of, &c. And have that Record before the Justices at Westminster, the day, &c. under the seals, &c. And to the said parties appoint the same day, that they be then there to proceed in that plea, as shall be just, &c.

RECORDER, Recordator.] A person whom the Mayor and other Magistrates of any city or town corporate, having jurisdiction, and the Court of Record within their precincts by the King's grant, associate unto them for their better direction in matters of justice, and proceedings according to Law: therefore he is generally a Counsellor, or other person experienced in the Law.

The Recorder of London, is one of the Justices of Oyer and Terminer; and a Justice of Peace of the Quorum, for putting the Laws in execution for preservation of the Peace and Government of the city: And being the mouth of the City, he delivers the sentences and judgments of the Courts therein; and also certifies and records the City-Customs, &c. Chart. K. Charles II: Co. Litt. 288. He is chosen by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen; and attends the business of the City, on any warning by the Lord Mayor, &c. See titles London; Customs of London; Certificate.

RECOVERY,

RECUPERATIO, from Fr. recouvrer, recuperare.] In a general sense, the obtaining any thing by judgment or trial of Law.

There is a true Recovery and a feigned one.

A true Recovery is an actual or real Recovery of any thing, or the value thereof, by judgment; as if a man sue for any land, or other thing moveable or immoveable, and have a verdict or judgment for him.

A feigned Recovery is a certain form or course set down by Law to be observed, for the better assuring lands or tenements: And the effect thereof is to discontinue and destroy estates-tail, remainders and reversions, and to bar the entails thereof. West. Sym. part. 2. title Recoveries, § 1. See this Dict. title Fine of Lands.

The power of suffering a Common Recovery is a privilege inseparably incident to an estate-tail: and cannot be restrained by condition, limitation, custom, recognizance, statute, or covenant. See 1 Burr. 84. But the tenant in tail, in order to be entitled to such privilege, must be tenant in tail in possession, or he must have the concurrence of the prior freeholder, who claims under the same settlement. 2 Burr. 1072. See more fully post; and this Dict. title Tail and Fee tail.

A true Recovery is as well of the value as of the thing: For example, If I buy land of another with warranty, which land a third person afterwards by suit of law recovereth against me, I have my remedy against him who sold it me, to recover in value, that is, to recover so much in money as the land is worth, or other lands of equal value by way of exchange. F. N. B. 134: Cowell. And this rule will be found to pervade the whole of the present doctrine of Recoveries.

A Common Recovery is so far like a Fine, that it is a suit or action, either actual or fictitious: and in it the lands are recovered against the Tenant of the Freehold; which Recovery, being a supposed adjudication of the right, binds all persons, and vests a free and absolute fee-simple in the recoveror.

Fines and Recoveries are now considered as mere forms of Conveyances, or Common Assurances, the theory and original principles of them being little regarded. See 1 Wils. 73. Common Recoveries were invented by the Ecclesiastics, to elude the statutes of Mortmain; and afterwards encouraged by the finesse of the Courts of Law in 12 E. 4, in order to put an end to all fettered inheritances; and bar not only Estates-tail, but also all remainders and reversions expectant thereon. See further this Dict. titles Mortmain; Tail and Fee-tail, &c. In addition to what is said under those titles, and title Fine of Lands, the following will serve to develope the original principle of these conveyances. And see Cruise on Recoveries.

A Recovery, in a large sense, is a restitution to a former right by solemn judgment; at Common Law, judgments, whether obtained after a real defence made by the tenant to the writ, or whether pronounced on his default or feint plea, had the same efficacy to bind the right of the land in question; and from hence men took an opportunity of making use of the decisions of the Court to their own advantage, and to the prejudice of others, who, though in some cases strangers to the action, yet were interested in the land for which it was brought. 2 Inst. 75, 429.

 For,

For, whilst these Recoveries were governed by the strict rules of Common Law, particular tenants, as tenant in dower, courtesy, in tail after possibility of issue extinct, and for life only, all those who had made leases for years, and those, whose wives were entitled to dower, often took advantage of them; and by selling the lands, and suffering their purchasers to recover them, thereby defeated the right of those in remainder or reversion, &c.; which were inconveniencies so great, that it was thought necessary to provide against them by positive laws: Thus the stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 3, makes provision for him in reversion, against the Recoveries suffered either by the tenant in dower, by the courtesy, or in tail after possibility of issue extinct, or for life; and by the 4th chapter of this statute, the wife is secured as to her dower; and the statute of Gloucester, 6 Ed. 1. c. 11; and stats. 7 Hen. 8. c. 4: 21 Hen. 8. c. 15, have established the rights of termors, and enabled them to falsify such Recoveries. See Co. Litt. 104: Kel. 109: F. N. B. 468: Plowd. 57: Doct. & Stud. 45.

But there is no express provision made by any statute to preserve the interest of the issue in tail, or of him in reversion, against a Recovery suffered by the donee; yet it seems, that for two hundred years after the making the statute De donis, they were protected by that statute; therefore we find no express resolution, where such Recovery was allowed to bar the issue in tail, or those in remainder or reversion, till the reigns of Ed. IV. and Hen. VII. though in some cases the donee in tail was allowed to change the entail, and even to bar it. See 1 Roll. Abr. 342: Co. Litt. 343: 10 Co. 37: Plowd. 436: 2 Inst. 335: Co. Litt. 374: 4 Leon. 132, 133.

When these Recoveries were established as a common conveyance, and the best way of barring the issue in tail, and those in reversion or remainder, the tenant for life began to apply them once more to the prejudice of those who had the inheritance; and though the former statutes gave those who had the inheritance a remedy, yet the provision made by them being tedious and expensive, it was thought proper to make the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 31; which declared all such covinous Recoveries against the particular tenants to be void, in respect to him in reversion or remainder; and though the Judges very reasonably determined Recoveries against that act to be not only void, but a forfeiture of the particular estate, because it was a manner of conveyance as much known at that time as a fine or feoffment, therefore, by parity of reason, ought to have the same operation, yet that statute did not fully answer the end for which it was made. Co. Litt. 356, a; 1 Co. 15: Vaughan 51.

For if A. had been tenant for life, and made a lease for years to B. and B. had made a feoffment in fee, if the feoffee had suffered a Recovery, and vouched the tenant for life, this was no void Recovery within the statute; because A. the tenant for life was not seised at the time of the Recovery, for the feoffment of the termor was a disseisin to A. and him in reversion; and the statute makes Recoveries of tenants for life in possession only void against them to whom the reversion then belongs. 10 Co. 45, a: Co. Lit. 362.

Yet where tenant for life bargained and sold his land in fee by indenture enrolled, and the bargainee suffered a Recovery, and vouched the bargainor, this was a void Recovery, and a forfeiture within the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 31; for though the bargain and sale was of the inheritance, yet it passed only an estate for life of the bargainor, which was the greatest estate he could lawfully pass, consequently the reversioner was not devested; therefore the bargainee being a legal tenant for life in possession, the Recovery against him, though with a voucher of the bargainor, was void within that act against him in reversion, whose reversion was not turned to a right as in the former case of a disseisin. 1 Co. 15: 1 Leon. 123.

But the former defect was cured by stat. 14 Eliz. c. 8; which repeals the said stat. 32 H. 8. c. 31, and declares all Recoveries (had by agreement of the parties, or by covin) against tenant for life, of any lands whereof he is so seised, or against any other with voucher over of him, to be void, as against the reversioners and their heirs.

These statutes made no provision for reversions or remainders expectant on estates tail; therefore, if there be tenant for life, remainder in tail, remainder in fee; and tenant for life suffers a Recovery, and vouches the remainder-man in tail, who vouches the common vouchee; this is so far from being a void Recovery within those statutes, that the reversion in fee is actually barred by it; for the intended recompence, which the remainder-man in tail is to have against the common vouchee, is to go in succession, as the estate-tail would have done; and it cannot be a covinous Recovery within the act, because the remainder-man in tail joined in it, who may at any time suffer such a Recovery to destroy the remainder in fee. 10 Co. 39, 43, 45: Co. Litt. 362, a: 3 Co. 60. b: Cro. Eliz. 562: Moor 690: Cro. Eliz. 570.

These common Recoveries were no sooner allowed by the Judges to bar estates-tail, but men began to improve them into a common way of conveyance, and to declare uses on them, as on fines and feoffments. Hence it is, that the statutes, which provide against any alienations or discontinuances of particular tenants, provide at the same time against their Recoveries; thus stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20, declares all Recoveries, as well as other discontinuances by fine or feoffment of women tenants in tail, of the gift of their husbands, or their ancestors, to be void; so, a Recovery against husband and wife of the inheritance of the wife, without any voucher, is declared to be void within stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28; though the statute says, "suffered or done by the husband;" for this, like a feoffment by baron and feme is, in substance, the act of the baron only, and so within the statute; but a Common Recovery suffered by a feme covert, where her husband joins with her, is good to bar her and her heirs. Doct. and Stu. 54: Co. Lit. 326, a: 8 Co. 72: 10 Co. 43: 2 Inst. 342: 2 Rol. Abr. 205. See title Baron and Feme; and post. II: and Cruise on Rec.

II. The Effect of a Recovery. 1. What Estates and Interests may be barred by a Common Recovery. 2. Of single and double Voucher, and Tenant to the Præcipe. And, 3. Of Deeds to lead or declare the Uses of a Recovery; (or Fine).

III. Of covinous and void Recoveries; who may avoid them, and by what Methods; and see Div. I.

I. In order to explain the nature of a Common Recovery, Blackstone gives the following account of its progress: Premising, that it is in the nature of an action at Law, not immediately compromised like a Fine, but carried on through every regular stage of proceeding. See 2 Comm. c 21.

Let us, in the first place, suppose one David Edwards to be tenant of the freehold, and desirous to suffer a Common Recovery, in order to bar all entails, remainders, and reversions, and to convey the same in fee-simple to Francis Golding. To effect this, Golding is to bring an action against him for the lands; and he accordingly sues out a writ, called a Præcipe quod reddat, because those were its initial or most operative words, when the Law proceedings were in Latin. In this writ the demandant Golding alleges, that the defendant Edwards (here called the tenant) has no legal title to the land; but that he came into possession of it after one Hugh Hunt had turned the demandant out of it. The subsequent proceedings are made up into a Record or Recovery roll, in which the writ and complaint of the demandant are first recited: whereupon the tenant appears, and calls upon one Jacob Morland, who is supposed, at the original purchase, to have warranted the title to the tenant; and thereupon he prays, that the said Jacob Morland may be called in to defend the title which he so warranted. This is called the Voucher, vocatio, or calling of Jacob Morland to warranty; and Morland is called the Vouchee Upon this, Jacob Morland, the vouchee, appears, is impleaded, and defends the title. Whereupon Golding, the demandant, desires leave of the Court to imparl, or confer with the vouchee in private; which is (as usual) allowed him: and soon afterwards the demandant, Golding, returns to Court, but Morland, the vouchee, disappears, or makes default. Whereupon judgment is given for the demandant, Golding, now called the Recoveror, to recover the lands in question against the tenant, Edwards, who is now the Recoveree: and Edwards has judgment to recover of Jacob Morland lands of equal value, in recompence for the lands so warranted by him, and now lost by his default; which is agreeable to the ancient doctrine of Warranty. See that title. This is called the Recompence, or Recovery in value. But Jacob Morland having no lands of his own, being usually the cryer of the Court, (who, from being frequently thus vouched, is called the common vouchee,) it is plain that Edwards has only a nominal recompence, for the lands so recovered against him by Golding; which lands are now absolutely vested in the said Recoveror by judgment of Law; and seisin thereof is delivered by the Sheriff of the county. So that this collusive Recovery operates merely in the nature of a conveyance in fee-simple, from Edwards the tenant in tail, to Golding the purchaser.

The Recovery, here described, is with a single voucher only; but sometimes it is with double, treble, or farther voucher, as the exigency of the case may require. And indeed it is now usual always to have a Recovery with double voucher at the least; by first conveying an estate of freehold to any indifferent person, against whom the præcipe is brought; and then he vouches the tenant in tail, who vouches over the common vouchee. For, if a Recovery be had immediately against tenant in tail, it bars only such estate in the premises of which he is then actually seised; whereas, if the Recovery be had against another person, and the tenant in tail be vouched, it bars every latent right and interest which he may have in the lands recovered. Bro. Abr. tit. Taile. 32. Plowd 8. If Edwards therefore be tenant of the freehold in possession, and John Barker be tenant in tail in remainder, here Edwards doth first vouch Barker, and then Barker vouches Jacob Morland the common vouchee; who is always the last person vouched, and always makes default: whereby the demandant Golding recovers the land against the tenant Edwards, and Edwards recovers a recompence of equal value against Barker the first vouchee; who recovers the like against Morland the common vouchee, against whom such ideal Recovery in value is always ultimately awarded. See post. II.

This supposed recompence in value is the reason why the issue in tail is held to be barred by a Common Recovery. For, if the Recoveree should obtain a recompence in lands from the common vouchee, (which there is a possibility in contemplation of Law, though a very improbable one, of his doing,) these lands would supply the place of those so recovered from him by collusion, and would descend to the issue in tail Doct. and Stud. b. 1. Dial. 26. This reason will also hold with equal force, as to most remainder-men and reversioners; to whom the possibility will remain and revert, as a full recompence for the realty, which they were otherwise entitled to: but it will not always hold; and therefore the Judges have been even astuti, in inventing other reasons to maintain the authority of Recoveries. And, in particular, it hath been said, that, though the estate-tail is gone from the Recoveree, yet it is not destroyed, but only transferred; and still subsists, and will ever continue to subsist, (by construction of Law,) in the Recoveror, his heirs, and assigns: and, as the estate-tail so continues to subsist for ever, the remainders or reversions, expectant on the determination of such estate-tail, can never take place. 2 Comm. c. 21.

To such awkward shifts, such subtile refinements, and such strange reasoning, remarks the learned Commentator, were our ancestors obliged to have recourse, in order to get the better of that stubborn statute De donis. The design, for which these contrivances were set on foot, was certainly laudable; the unriveting the fetters of estates-tail. Our modern Courts of Justice have therefore adopted a more manly way of treating the subject; by considering Common Recoveries in no other light, than as the formal mode of conveyance, by which tenant in tail is enabled to aliene his lands. And it has therefore been avowed by the Judges, that the true reason of Common Recoveries being bars, is not the recompence in value, though that is the foundation of almost all the arguments on the subject, but that they are common conveyances. See 2 Lev. 28: Pig. Rec. 14: Vin Abr. Recovery (A): Plowd. 514: Bac. Law Tr. 149; Com. Dig. Estates (B. 27).

Since, however, the ill consequences of fettered inheritances are now generally seen and allowed, and of course the utility and expedience of setting them at liberty are apparent; it hath often been wished, that the process of this conveyance was shortened, and rendered less subject to niceties; by either totally repealing the statute De donis, which, perhaps, by reviving the old doctrine of conditional fees, might give birth to many litigations:

litigations: See title Tail and Fee-tail: Or by vesting in every tenant in tail of full age the same absolute fee-simple, at once, which now he may obtain whenever he pleases, by the collusive fiction of a Common Recovery, though this might possibly bear hard upon those in remainder or reversion, by abridging the chances they would otherwise frequently have; as no Recovery can be suffered in the intervals between term and term, which sometimes continue for near five months together. Or, lastly, by empowering the tenant in tail to bar the estate-tail by a solemn deed, to be made in term-time, and enrolled in some Court of Record; see 1 P. Wms. 91; which is liable to neither of the other objections; and is warranted not only by the usage of our American Colonies, and the decisions of our own Courts of Justice, which allow a tenant in tail (without Fine or Recovery) to appoint his estate to any charitable use; see title Will; but also by the precedent of the stat 21 Jac. 1. c. 19, which, in case of a bankrupt tenant in tail, empowers his Commissioners to sell the estate at any time, by deed indented and enrolled. See title Bankrupts III. 2. And if, in so national a concern, the emoluments of the Officers, concerned in passing Recoveries, are thought to be worthy attention, those might be provided for in the fees to be paid upon each enrolment. 2 Comm 361.

Infants are not capable of suffering Common Recoveries, on account of their want of understanding: although, if an Infant is permitted to suffer a Common Recovery in person, he must, as in the case of a Fine, and for the same reason, reverse it during his minority; which must be tried by inspection of the Judges; otherwise the Recovery will bind him for ever afterwards. But if an Infant suffers a Common Recovery, in which he appears by Attorney, he may reverse it at any time after he has attained his full age; as it may be tried by a Jury, whether he was an Infant or not when he appointed an Attorney, and which, by Law, an Infant is capable of performing. Cruise on Rec.

It was formerly doubted, whether a Common Recovery bound an Infant who appeared by his Guardian: and the practice therefore was, when an Infant intended to suffer a Common Recovery, that he and his Guardian should petition the King to grant letters, under the Privy Seal to the Judges, of the Court of C. B., directing them to permit such Infant to suffer a Recovery: But it was still in the discretion of the Judges to permit the Infant to suffer it or not, according to the circumstances of his case; and if the Judges, upon examination, found it necessary, or that it would be advantageous to the Infant, that he should suffer a Recovery, they then admitted persons of known integrity and fortune to appear as his Guardians, and to suffer a Recovery for him in Court; But these sort of Recoveries, suffered by Privy Seal, are now disused; and private Acts of Parliament are universally substituted in their stead Cruise on Rec

An Infant Trustee may join in a Common Recovery, if he is directed so to do by the Court of Chancery. Stat. 7 Ann. c. 19. See further, title Infant V.

A Recovery, as well as a Fine, by a Feme-covert, is good to bar her; because the præcipe in the Recovery answers the writ of covenant in the Fine to bring her into Court; where the examination of the Judges destroys the presumption of Law, that this is done by the coercion of her husband, for then it is presumed they would have refused her. 10 Co. 43, a: 2 Rol. Abr. 395.

Whenever a husband and wife appear in the Court of C. B. to suffer a Common Recovery, the wife is always privately examined as to her consent. And where a Warrant of Attorney is acknowledged before Commissioners appointed by a writ of dedimus potestatem de Attornato faciendo, by a husband and wife, the Commissioners are positively directed by a rule of Court (Hil 14 Geo 3.) to examine the wife, separately and apart from her husband, as to her free and voluntary consent to the suffering such Recovery. Cruise on Rec.

The King cannot suffer a Common Recovery; for if he does, he must be either tenant or vouchee. and, in both cases, the demandant must count against him, which the Law does not allow. Pig 74 · Plowd. 244

Idiots, Lunatics, and generally all persons of Nonsane Memory, are disabled from suffering Common Recoveries, as well as from levying Fines; though, if an Idiot or Lunatic does suffer a Common Recovery, and appears in person, no averment can afterwards be made that he was an Idiot or Lunatic. But, if he appears by Attorney, it seems that such averment would be admitted upon the same principle, that an averment of Infancy may be made against a Warrant of Attorney, acknowledged by an Infant, for the purpose of suffering a Common Recovery; since the fact of Idiocy may be tried by a Jury, with as much propriety as the fact of Infancy. Cruise on Rec.

In a celebrated case (Hume v. Burton) determined by the House of Lords in Ireland, since the independence of that jurisdiction, the majority of the Judges were of opinion, that the caption of a Warrant of Attorney, taken by the Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, for the purpose of suffering a Common Recovery, was not conclusive evidence of the capacity of the person acknowledging such Warrant of Attorney. See Cruise on Rec, and Appendix to Vol 2.

Although no averment of Idiocy or Lunacy can be made against a Recovery, where the parties appear in person, yet evidence of weakness of understanding has been admitted, on a trial in ejectment, to invalidate a deed to make a tenant to the præcipe for suffering a Recovery, and the Recovery has in that manner been set aside. Cruise on Rec See further this Dict. titles Fine of Lands IV, Idiots and Lunatics IV.

As to persons restrained by statute from suffering Common Recoveries, see ante, the Introduction to the present title.

Recoveries, being now settled as common assurances to establish men in their purchases, are very much favoured by the Judges, and not compared to judgments in other real actions or adversary suits. 2 Inst. 353. Poph. 21, 23: 2 Vent. 32.

If a man be seised of a reputed manor, which really is no manor, and he suffers a Common Recovery of this by the name of a manor, this is a good Recovery of the lands which constituted the reputed manor, though strictly speaking there is no manor recovered; because the Law supports this, as all other conveyances, according to the intention of the parties; for it would be severe to vacate this conveyance, when the purchaser recovered them by the assent of the vendor under such a denomination.

nation. 2 Rol. Abr. 396: 6 Co. 64: 2 Rol. Rep. 67: 2 Vent. 321 S. P. See Cro. Eliz. 524, 707; and 1 Keb. 591, 691. cont.

So, if a Recovery be suffered of a manor with its appurtenances, lands which have been reputed parcel of the manor shall pass; for it is but equitable, quod voluntas Domini volentis rem suam in alium transferre rata habeatur; and though the Recovery does not mention the lands reputed parcel of the manor, but only the manor itself, yet this was supplied by the indenture, which was of the manor, and all lands reputed parcel thereof, and though occupied together but two years. 1 Sid. 190: 1 Lev. 27: 1 Keb. 591, 691: 2 Mod. 235. In all the books which report this case, (Thynn v. Thynn,) it is said, that as to Sir Moyle Finch's case, (which see 6 Co. 33,) all the Judges of England gave their opinions under their hands, that the lands in reputation, belonging to that manor, should not pass; but that Coke, after he was made Chief Justice, got it adjudged otherwise, and so it hath been held ever since; and well it was that it was so adjudged, because many settlements depended thereon.

If a man having a third part of a manor suffers a Recovery of a moiety, this is good to pass his interest in the third part; for where the words of a conveyance (which a Recovery is agreed to be) contain more than the grantor can convey, it would be an unreasonable interpretation to make this void and entirely useless, when they are sufficient to convey so much as he might lawfully pass; so if the Recovery had been in this case, of the third part of the manor, by the name of the moiety, part and purparty of the manor, this had been good for the whole third part, and not only for a moiety of the third. Cro. Car. 109, 110.

In ejectment a special verdict found, that there was a parish of Ribton, and the vill of Ribton, but the latter not of equal extent with the former; and that J. S. was seised of land in tail in the parish, but not in the vill; and bargained and sold the land in the parish of Ribton, with covenant to levy a Fine, and suffer a Recovery to the uses in the deed; but the Fine and Recovery were only of the lands in Ribton; the question was, Whether this Recovery would serve for the land in the parish of Ribton? The Court, in favour of Common Recoveries, extended this Recovery to the lands in the parish of Ribton; because the verdict found, that he who suffered the Recovery had no lands in the vill, consequently that the Recovery must be void, if not extended to the parish; and though parishes are not so ancient as vills, and therefore till lately were never inserted in writs, yet now they are, and the Law takes notice of them. 2 Vent. 31, 32: 1 Mod. 250: 2 Mod. 235: But for this see Hut. 105: Cro. Car. 269: 2 Rol. Abr. 20: Cro. Jac. 120, 574: 1 Mod. 206: 2 Mod. 47: 1 Vent. 143, 170: 1 Mod. 78: 2 Keb. 802, 821, 848: Owen 60: and 2 Mod. 236, which seems against this case; but is reconcilable with this diversity, that in those cases there were lands on which the Fine might operate, viz. the lands in the vill of Street, without taking in the parish of Street to carry the lands in Walton, a vill of that parish; but here, if those in the parish should not pass, there were no other to pass. See post. III.

A Common Recovery in the Common Pleas of Copyhold lands will not pass them; though it is said, if lands are Customary Freeholds, and pass by surrender in a Borough Court, a Recovery in C. B. of such lands will be good. 1 Atk. 474; but see contra, 2 Vel. 603. For the method of suffering Recoveries of Copyholds, see Pig. 100: Bac. Abr. Copyhold (C.)

Recovery may be suffered of a Trust estate, by Cestui que trust, as effectually as it may of a legal estate. 1 P. Wms. 91: 9 Mod. 143: Fearne.

See further, of what things a Recovery may be suffered, Vin. Abr. Recovery (S): Wilf. 283: Pig. 97.

II. 1. THE FORCE and effect of Common Recoveries may appear, from what has been said, to be an absolute bar, not only of all estates tail, but of remainders and reversions expectant on the determination of such estates. So that a tenant in tail may, by this method of assurance, convey the lands held in tail to the Recoveror, his heirs and assigns, absolutely free and discharged of all conditions and limitations in tail, and of all remainders, reversions, charges, and incumbrances dependent upon it. But, though a Common Recovery bars a contingent remainder, by destroying the particular precedent estate which supported it, yet it does not bar a springing use, nor an Executory Devise. Pig. 127. And it is a rule, that an Executory Devise cannot be prevented or destroyed, by any alteration whatsoever in the estate out of which, or after which, it is limited. Fearne, 3d edit. 306. See this Dict. titles Executory Devise; Perpetuity. If the remainder be in abeyance, a Common Recovery will bar it. 6 Co. 42, a. A term limited to commence, on failure of issue, may also be barred by a Recovery. 1 Lev. 35. So a power appendant, or in gross, is barrable by a Recovery. Pig. 135. But a Recovery will not bar a Mortgage, because that is to be considered as a charge upon the estate, and cannot be defeated. 2 Atk. 591. Tenant in tail mortgaged for years, and died, without suffering a Recovery, the mortgage was held not good; but if he had suffered a Recovery afterwards, it would have let in the mortgage. 1 Wilf. 276. As to the operation of a Recovery in general, by letting in all the preceding incumbrances, and rendering valid all the preceding acts of tenant in tail, see Pig. 120. Cruise on Rec. 159. And as to the mode of guarding against a Recovery's letting in the incumbrances of the remainder-man, see 1 Inst. 203. b. in n.

By stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 20, no Recovery had against tenant in tail, of the King's gift, whereof the remainder or reversion is in the King, shall bar such estate-tail, or the remainder or reversion of the Crown. See title Tail and Fee-tail. And by stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 20, no woman, after her husband's death, shall suffer a Recovery of lands settled on her by her husband; or settled on her husband and her by any of his ancestors. And by stat. 14 Eliz. c. 8, no tenant for life, of any sort, can suffer a Recovery, so as to bind them in remainder or reversion. For which reason, if there be tenant for life, with remainder in tail, and other remainders over, and the tenant for life is desirous to suffer a valid Recovery; either he, or the tenant to the præcipe by him made, must vouch the remainder-man in tail; otherwise the Recovery is void: but if he does vouch such remainder-man, and he appears and vouches the common vouchee, it is then good; for if a man be vouched and appears, and suffers the Recovery to be had against the tenant to the præcipe, it is as effectual to bar the estate-tail, as if he himself were the Recoveree. Salk. 571.

In all Recoveries it is necessary that the Recoveree, or tenant to the præcipe, as he is usually called, be actually seised of the freehold, else the Recovery is void. Pigot 28. For all actions, to recover the seisin of lands, must be brought against the actual tenant of the freehold, else the suit will lose its effect; since the freehold cannot be recovered of him who hath it not. And, though these Recoveries are in themselves fabulous and fictitious, yet it is necessary that there be actores fabulæ, properly qualified. But the nicety, thought by some modern practitioners to be requisite in conveying the legal freehold, in order to make a good tenant to the præcipe, is removed by the provisions of the Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 20, which enacts, with a retrospect and conformity to the ancient rule of law, that, though the legal freehold be vested in lessees, (for life,) yet those who are entitled to the next freehold estate in remainder or reversion may make a good tenant to the præcipe;—that, though the deed or fine which creates such tenant be subsequent to the judgment of Recovery, yet if it be in the same term, the Recovery shall be valid in law; and that, though the Recovery itself do not appear to be entered, or be not regularly entered, on record, yet the deed to make a tenant to the præcipe, and declare the uses of the Recovery, shall, after a possession of twenty years, be sufficient evidence, on behalf of a purchaser for valuable consideration, that such Recovery was duly suffered. 2 Comm. c. 21.—And by this act also, Common Recoveries shall, after twenty years from the time of suffering them, be deemed valid, if it appears on the face of such Recovery, that there was a tenant to the writ; and if the persons joining in such Recovery had sufficient estate and power to suffer the same; notwithstanding the deed or deeds for making the tenant to the præcipe, should be lost or not appear. For the operation of this statute, see 1 Burr. 115: 2 Burr. 1074.

In respect to estates-tail, and barring them by Recovery, what is principally to be regarded is, that there must be a legal tenant to the præcipe at the time of the writ purchased, or at the return; for since estates-tail are only barred on account of the intended recompence, which is to follow the descent of the tail, where there happens to be no tenant to the præcipe, the demandant can really recover nothing; consequently the supposed tenant can have no recompence in value against the vouchee; for that is only given against the vouchee, in consideration of what the tenant lost. Hob. 262.

As if there be tenant for life, remainder in tail, remainder in fee, and tenant for life with the remainder in tail suffer a Recovery, with voucher over, this shall not bar the remainder in tail, nor the remainder in fee; because the remainder-man in tail was not tenant to the præcipe, consequently could not have the intended recompence, because that was given in lieu of the estate recovered, which was no greater than the estate for life, he only being legal tenant to the præcipe. 1 Rol. Abr. 395: Dyer 3 [illegible]: Cro. Eliz. 690: Moor 255, 256.

In a writ of error to reverse a Common Recovery, the tenant to the præcipe was made by a Fine, the Recovery was suffered, and the Fine reversed; yet it was held a good Recovery, for there was a good tenant to the præcipe at the time. 2 Salk. 568. See title Fine of Lands.

If a manor be given to a man and a woman, and the heirs of the body of the man begotten on the woman, and they intermarry, and then the husband suffers a Recovery of the whole manor; this is good for a moiety, because, the gift being made before marriage, they had each an undivided moiety, which they may transfer; but the Recovery can operate but for a moiety, because the husband only was tenant to the præcipe, consequently the demandant only could recover his interest in the manor, which was but a moiety. Moor 93. See this Dictionary, title Baron and Feme.

If lands are given to a man and his wife, and the heirs of the body of the husband, and a Recovery is had against him only, this Recovery will neither bar the reversion, nor the tail; for the recompence being to go in succession, as the estate which the tenant lost would have done, the husband could not lose all the land, because he was not a legal tenant to the whole, his wife being joint tenant with him who was no party to the writ; nor could the Recovery be good for a moiety, because there are no moieties between baron and feme, but both are considered as one person in Law; but if the husband had levied a fine, and the conusee suffered a Recovery, and vouched the husband, who vouched the common vouchee, this had been a good bar of the entail; for there the husband came in to defend the estate-tail, which the wife was a stranger to; and the assets which he recovered over is a recompence for the estate-tail, which he only had a right to, without the feme, and which the Law gives him a power to dispose of. Moor 210: 3 Co. 5: 2 Rol. Abr. 395: 4 Leon 93: 1 And. 162: 2 Salk. 568.

In ejectment, on special verdict, the case was, A. seised in fee of the lands in question, hath issue B. his eldest son, C. his second, and D. his third son; on a marriage intended between D. his youngest son, and one E. he (A.) before the marriage, covenants to stand seised to the use of himself for life, remainder to D. and E. and the heirs male of their two bodies, remainder to D. and the heirs male of his body, remainder to C and the heirs male of his body, remainder to B. and the heirs male of his body, the remainder to his own right heirs; A. dies, a præcipe is brought against one Upton as tenant of the freehold, and after, before the return of the writ, D. by bargain and sale conveys the land to Upton and his heirs, and the deed was enrolled after the return of the writ, and within six months: Upton vouches D. only, without his wife, and a common Recovery was suffered to the use of D. and his heirs; then E dies, and after D. dies without issue male, having issue four daughters; and between them and C. in remainder was the question, what was barred by this Recovery? 1st, It was agreed on both sides, that here was a good tenant to the præcipe, the bargain and sale being made to Upton before the return, yet, it being enrolled in due time, the freehold was in Upton, ab initio. 2dly, That this settlement being made before marriage, when the husband and wife took by moieties and not by intireties, the husband had absolute power over his own moiety; therefore, for that, the Recovery was an absolute bar; wherein this differs from the case of Owen and Morgan, (the preceding case,) 3 Co. 5, where they took by intireties. 3dly, That this Recovery was no bar to the other moiety of E. because she was not party; but her estate-tail in that continued untouched, though it was urged also to be a bar for her moiety, she dying first, and so her husband is as sole tenant of the whole ab initio, and this during the coverture.

covenants, the husband had power to make a good tenant of the whole; but the Court held otherwise. 4thly, It was held, that the estate-tail to D. and E. being determined, the remainder to D. in tail-male-general, and all the other remainders depending thereon, were barred absolutely by this Recovery; for D. coming in as vouchee, comes in privity and representation of all the estates he hath or had, consequently he comes in representation of the remainder to himself in tail-male general, and then the recompence in value goes to that, and also to all the other remainders depending thereupon, and by consequence all are barred by the Recovery. 3 Lev. 407.

Tenant in tail, in consideration of his son's marriage, covenants to stand seised to the use of himself and his heirs till the marriage, and then to the use of himself for life, and after to the use of his son and to the heirs of his body, and suffers a common Recovery with single voucher to this purpose, and then dies without issue: This Recovery did not bar the remainder expectant on the estate-tail, for the covenant had changed the estate-tail into a fee, consequently the recompence could not be in lieu of the entail; since the tenant to the præcipe was not seised of the estate-tail at the time of the Recovery suffered. Yelv. 51. But see 2 Salk. 619, which seems contrary.

A tenant for life, remainder to B. in tail, the remainder to C. in fee, A. and B. join in a Fine come ceo, &c. to a stranger, who renders it to A. for life, remainder to B. and his heirs; afterwards A. and B. suffer a Recovery with single voucher to the use of B. and his heirs: This Recovery did not bar the remainder in fee, because by the render they were seised of a new estate, and B. was not either tenant in possession, or seised in right of the entail, consequently, the recompence being given in lieu of the estate recovered, the tail could not be docked, nor the remainder-man barred by this Recovery, because the tenants to the præcipe were not seised of it at the time of the Recovery suffered. Cro. Eliz. 807: Moor 634.

If the tenant in tail, to whom the estate has descended ex parte maternâ, suffers a Recovery, and declares the uses to himself in fee, the estate will descend to an heir on the part of the mother, even if he had the reversion in fee from his father: and vice versâ; but if he took the estate tail by purchase, the new fee will descend to the heirs general. 5 Term Rep 104. If then a person who has inherited an estate tail from his mother, wishes to cut off the entail, and to make the estate descendible to his heirs on the part of the father; after the Recovery, he ought to make a common conveyance to trustees; and to have the estate reconveyed back by them; by which means he will take the estate by purchase, which will then descend to his heirs general. 2 Comm. 362, in n.

2. As to the use of the single and double voucher, it has been already observed, that the tenant who loses the land has on his vouching over, a recompence in value adjudged against his vouchee, which is to go in the same succession as the land recovered would have done: Now, a Recovery with single voucher is sufficient to bar an estate-tail, where the tenant in tail is tenant to the præcipe, and seised of the lands in tail at the time of the præcipe brought against him; for the recompence in value shall ... descent of the land which he loses; and when that proves to be the estate-tail, then the issue is supposed to have an equivalent for it, consequently not prejudiced by the Recovery; but because a single voucher can bar only the estate which the tenant is seised of at the time of the præcipe brought, and not any right which he hath, it was found necessary to admit the use of a double voucher; for if such tenant in tail discontinue the tail, and take back an estate or disseise the discontinuee, a Recovery against him with a voucher over could not bar the estate-tail; for the recompence comes in lieu of the land recovered, which was the defeasible estate, consequently the issue has nothing in value for the estate-tail, without which he cannot be barred. Bro. title Recovery. Yelv. 51: 3 Co. 5: Moor 256.

But if in this case tenant in tail after disseisin had, either by fine, or release, made a tenant to the præcipe, and came in himself as vouchee, and then vouched over the common vouchee; this double voucher had been sufficient to bar the tenant in tail, and his heirs, of every estate of which he was at any time seised; for when the tenant in tail comes in as vouchee, it is presumed he will, and he has an opportunity to, set up every title he had, to defeat the demandant; and since what he offered was not sufficient to bar the demandant, the Court takes it for granted, he had no other title than what he set up; therefore will give him but one recompence for all. 3 Co 6, b. Plowd. 8: Cro. Eliz. 562: Poph. 100. Moor 365: Hob 263.

Thus, if A. be tenant for life, remainder to B. in tail, and a stranger disseises A. and enfeoffs B. if a præcipe be brought against B. and a recovery suffered as usual, this shall not affect the estate-tail; because B. had only a right to that, and was not seised of it; and the recompence was not given in lieu of the tail, because the estate-tail was not in question, on the Recovery, for B could not lose the estate he had not; but if in this case B. had made another tenant to the præcipe, and came in himself as vouchee, this had barred the entail. 3 Co. 58, b: 2 Rol. Abr. 395.

If A. be tenant for life, remainder to B. in tail, and B disseises A. and suffers a common Recovery, himself being tenant to the præcipe; this Recovery with a single voucher is sufficient to bar the estate-tail in B. because he was actually seised of that, at the time of the præcipe brought against him; for his disseisin did not divest his own estate, but only gave him a defeasible estate for life, which was immediately merged in his remainder; because the estate for life, and his inheritance, could not subsist together at the same time in him. 2 Rol. Abr. 395.

Thus we see how estates-tail are barred by Recoveries, and the uses of the single and double voucher; and in this respect the operation of a Recovery is correspondent to that of a Fine, for they are but different ways of transfering estates-tail for security of purchasers; but the operation of a Fine differs from a Recovery in respect to strangers who have reversions or remainders expectant on estates-tail; for a Fine does not bar them, unless they omit to make their claim within five years after the estate-tail is spent, and their reversion or remainder becomes executed; but a Recovery reaches them immediately, and at the same time bars the estate-tail and all reversions and remainders on account of this supposed and imaginary recompence. Co. Lit. 372, a: 2 Rol. Abr. 396: Moor 156: Bro. title Recovery, 28, 55.

And

And as a Common Recovery suffered by tenant in tail bars all reversions and remainders expectant, so it avoids all charges, leases, and incumbrances made by those in reversion or remainder, and the Recoveror shall enjoy the land, free from any charge, for ever; as where he in remainder on an estate-tail, granted a rent-charge, and the tenant in tail suffered a Recovery; it was adjudged, that the grantee could not distrain the Recoveror; for, since the rent was only at the first good, because of the possibility of the grantor's remainder coming in possession, when that possibility ceases, by the Recovery of tenant in tail, such grant must then become void. Moor 118: Cro. Eliz. 718: 1 Co. 62: 2 Rol. Abr. 396: Moor 152: 4 Leon. 150, &c.: Poph. 516. See ante II. 1.

Tenant to the præcipe may be made either by fine, feoffment, lease, and release, or by bargain and sale enrolled. Wilf. 281. See further, Vin. Abr. Recovery (U): Com. Dig. Recovery (B. 5.): Pig. 65, 72. As to the doctrine of tenant to the præcipe by disseisin, see 1 Burr. 60: 2 Burr. 1065. Tenant to the præcipe made by Fine, Recovery suffered, Fine reversed; yet held a good Recovery, for there was a tenant at the time. 2 Salk. 568. For if the person against whom the præcipe is brought, be, at the time when the præcipe is sued, or at any time before judgment, a tenant of the freehold, it is immaterial what becomes of it afterwards. 1 Inst. 201, b. in n.

Though there is no tenant to the præcipe, the Recovery is good against the party who suffered it, by way of estoppel; though not against remainder-men or strangers. 10 Mod. 45. And though the tenant for life keeps the possession, yet the Recovery will be good. Pig. 41. And a surrender by tenant for life shall be presumed on a Recovery of 40 years standing. 2 Stra. 1129; 1267; see 2 Burr. 1069.

3. If Fines or Recoveries be levied or suffered without any good consideration, and without any uses declared, they, like other conveyances, enure only to the use of him who levies or suffers them. Dyer 18. And if a consideration appears, yet as the most usual fine, "sur cognizance de droit come ceo, &c." conveys an absolute estate, without any limitations, to the cognizee; (see title Fine;) and as Common Recoveries do the same to the Recoveror; these assurances could not be made to answer the purpose of family settlements, (wherein a variety of uses and designations is very often expedient,) unless their force and effect were subjected to the direction of other more complicated deeds, wherein particular uses can be more particularly expressed. The Fine or Recovery itself, like a power once gained in mechanics, may be applied and directed to give efficacy to an infinite variety of movements, in the vast and intricate machine of a voluminous family settlement. And, if these deeds are made previous to the Fine or Recovery, they are called deeds to lead the uses; if subsequent, deeds to declare them. As if A. tenant in tail, with reversion to himself in fee, would settle his estate on B. for life, remainder to C. in tail, remainder to D. in fee; this is what, by Law, he has no power of doing effectually, while his own estate tail is in being. He therefore usually, after making the settlement proposed, covenants to levy a Fine, (or, if there be any intermediate remainders, to suffer a Recovery,) to B., and directs that the same shall enure to the uses in such settlement mentioned. This is now a deed to lead the uses of the Fine or Recovery; and the Fine when levied, or Recovery when suffered, shall enure to the uses so specified, and no other: For, though B. the Cognizee or Recoveror, hath a fee simple vested in himself by the Fine or Recovery; yet, by the operation of this deed, he becomes a mere instrument or conduit-pipe, seised only to the use of B., C., and D. in successive order: which use is executed immediately, by force of the Statute of Uses. Or, if a Fine or Recovery be had without any previous settlement, and a deed be afterwards made between the parties, declaring the uses to which the same shall be applied, this will be equally good, as if it had been expressly levied or suffered in consequence of a deed directing its operation to those particular uses. For by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, indentures to declare the uses of Fines and Recoveries, made after the Fines and Recoveries had and suffered, shall be good and effectual in Law, and the Fine and Recovery shall enure to such uses, and be esteemed to be only in trust; notwithstanding any doubts that had arisen on the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3, to the contrary. See 2 Comm. c. 21, and the Appendix in that volume; and this Dictionary, title Uses.

III. THE JUDGMENT obtained in a Common Recovery being a matter of record, and similar in almost every respect to a judgment in an adversary suit, can only be reversed by a writ of error: but no person has a right to bring such writ of error, unless he has an immediate interest in the lands whereof the Recovery was suffered; though the right of bringing such writ is not forfeited to the Crown on an attainder for High Treason. Cruise on Rec.

A Recovery ought not to be reversed unless writs of scire facias are issued against the terre-tenants and the heir: because the errors in a Recovery ought not to be examined until all the parties interested in supporting it be before the Court: but this circumstance is discretionary, and not stricti juris. 3 Mod. 119; 274: Holt 614.

Nothing can be assigned for error in a Common Recovery, which contradicts the record; and therefore no incapacity in a vouchee can be assigned for error, where he appeared in person: but if a vouchee appears by attorney, an averment may then be made, either that such vouchee died before the day on which judgment was given; or that he laboured under some personal disability, which rendered him incapable of suffering a Recovery. See 1 Wilf. 42: 4 Rep. 7: Cro. Eliz. 719, and ante I.

By stat. 23 Eliz. c. 3, it is enacted, that no Recovery (Fine, &c.) shall be reversed for false or incongruous Latin; rasure, interlining, misentring of a Warrant of Attorney, or not returning of the Sheriff, or other want of form in words, and not in matter of substance. And by stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 14, that no Recovery (Fine, or Judgment in a real action, &c.) shall be reversed or avoided, for any error or defect therein, unless the writ of error, or suit for reversing such Recovery, &c. be brought and prosecuted with effect within twenty years after such Recovery suffered, &c. Saving the right of infants, femes coverts, &c. so that they bring their writ of error within five years after their disabilities removed. By this latter statute, a writ of error must be brought within twenty years after the Recovery has been suffered; and not within [illegible] years after the title [illegible] accrued. Cruise on Rec. And by stat. 2 [illegible] persons persons suffering Recoveries in the name of others are guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. See title Fine of Lands VII.

Where a Recovery is suffered of lands held in ancient demesne, it must be reversed by writ of deceit. See title Ancient Demesne.

A Common Recovery suffered in a copyhold Court can only be reversed by petition to the lord, in the nature of a writ of false judgment. But it seems that the lord of a manor is not, in all cases, bound to allow of any proceedings on such a petition. See Show. P.C. 67 : 1 Vern. 367.

As a Common Recovery can only be reversed by writ of error, or some proceeding of a similar nature, to which none are entitled but those who have an immediate interest in the lands, the Law allows all strangers, whose interests are affected by a Recovery to falsify it, by entry, action, or plea. Thus, where a Recovery is suffered by tenant in tail, although the issue in tail cannot enter, because the Recovery operates as a discontinuance, yet he may bring a formedon, and if the Recovery is pleaded against him, he may falsify by pleading matter to avoid it; but in cases of this kind he is restrained, in the same manner as in a writ of error, from pleading any thing contrary to the record. Cruise on Rec. cites Booth 77. As to the remedies for termors affected by Recoveries, see ante; the introduction to this title.

A Common Recovery may also be invalidated, circuitously, by evidence on a trial in ejectment. See ante I.

Although a Common Recovery can only be reversed by the Court of Common Pleas in the first instance, and by the Court of King's Bench upon a writ of error from the Court of Common Pleas, yet the Court of Chancery can, in fact, invalidate a Common Recovery, where it appears to have been obtained by fraud or imposition; by compelling the Recoveror to convey the estate to the person who is entitled in equity to have it, or by declaring the Recoveror to be a trustee for such person. And a Court of Equity will also restrain the operation of a Common Recovery to those purposes for which it was intended, and will not allow it to have a more extensive effect. 2 Eq. Ab. 695 : Pre. Ch 435; and this Dictionary, title Fine of Lands VII.

It has been already observed, (see ante I.) that a Recovery suffered by an infant in person shall not bind him; but though he may avoid it, yet it cannot be done by any entry in pais, but by writ of error, and this too during his minority; for the judgment of the Court being on record must be set aside by an act of equal notoriety; but an infant may avoid a Recovery by writ of error, as well where he comes in as vouchee, as where he is tenant to the præcipe; for though (strictly speaking) the Recovery is not against him where he is not tenant to the præcipe, yet for the greater security of the purchaser, and to strengthen the Recovery by the use of the double voucher, the person, who really has the right to the land in demand, comes in as vouchee; and then, by vouching over the common vouchee, has one recompence for all his titles; consequently, if he be the person who really loses the land, he ought in reason to reverse the Recovery, as well where he comes in as vouchee, as where he is seised of the land and is tenant to the præcipe. 1 Rol. Abr. 742 : 1 Lev. 142.

If tenant in tail within age comes in as vouchee by attorney in a Common Recovery, he in remainder may assign this for error, for he is party in interest to the Recovery; and where a man's interest is bound by another's act, it is but reasonable he should be allowed to free himself from the mischief by taking advantage of any error in it. 1 Rol. Abr. 755, 796.

If A. be tenant in tail, remainder to B. and A. suffers an erroneous Recovery, and the common vouchee releases to the Recoveror; yet if A. dies without issue, B. may, notwithstanding the release, reverse it by writ of error; for the common vouchee is only called in for form, and as he has really no interest in or title to the land, so really neither does he make any recompence to the person who loses the land; therefore it were unreasonable to carry the notion of the imaginary recompence so far as to suppose him a real sufferer, and thereby give him the privilege of setting aside the conveyance, by which he is no way affected. Cro. Eliz. 2, 3.

In a writ of error to reverse a Recovery, suffered by an infant who appeared by guardian, the error assigned was in the entry of his admission by guardian, viz. quod A. B. sequatur pro J. S.; whereas it was objected, that since the infant was tenant to the writ, it ought to have been entered, that the guardian was admitted to defend for the infant; but this exception was disallowed, because the words ad sequend. for the infant, signify the same with ad defendend.; for ad sequend. is to follow and attend the business and suit of the infant; and the guardian being assigned to do that, must likewise have been assigned to take care of, or take upon him the defence of the infant's suit. 2 Saund. 94, 95 : 1 Mod. 48.

In error to reverse a Recovery, the errors assigned were: 1. That the writ of entry was brought of an advowson of a rectory, and of a rent issuing out of the rectory, which was a bis petitum, therefore the writ vicious; but this was disallowed, because the advowson and rectory are different things; for he who has the advowson has only the right of presentation; but he who has the rectory has the profits of the church, out of which the rent issues; consequently there can be no bis petitum in this case, because by the demand of the advowson of the rectory, and of the rent issuing out of the rectory, the demandant recovers more than by a demand of the rectory only: Another error assigned was in the demand of a rent or pension of four marks issuing out of the rectory, which is so uncertain a demand, a pension being a different thing from a rent, and recoverable in the Spiritual Court; but this was disallowed; because it is plain there is but one sum of four marks demanded, and the pension or rent must be synonymous here, because they are demanded as issuing out of the rectory; therefore the pension cannot be in nature of an annuity, which charges the person only, because it is expresly to issue out of the rectory. Poph. 23 : 5 Co. 41. a.

In a writ of error to reverse a Common Recovery, the error insisted on was, that the warrant of attorney of the vouchee bore date before the Summoneas ad warrantizand. issued, yet the judgment was affirmed, because the vouchee may come in, if he will, before the Summoneas ad warrantizand. and make his attorney; therefore, to support the Common Recovery, it shall be presumed the vouchee was present in Court, and appointed his attorney; and so the dedimus for the warrant and the Summoneas ad warrantizand. void. 1 Sid. 313 : 1 Lev. 130 : Raym. 70.

RECOUPE.

RECOUPE, from the Fr. recouper.] The keeping back or stopping something which is due; and in our Law, we use it for, to defalk, or discount; as if a person hath a rent of ten pounds out of certain lands, and he disseises the tenant of the land; in an assise brought by the disseissee, if he recover the land and damages, the disseisor shall recoupe the rent due, in the damages; so of a rent-charge issuing out of land, paid by the tenant to another, &c. he may recoupe the same. Terms de Ley: Dyer 2. See title Set off.

RECREANT, Fr.] Cowardly, faint hearted. See title Champion.

RECTA PRISA REGIS, The King's right to Prisage or taking of one butt or pipe of wine before, and another behind the mast, as a custom for every ship laden with wines. Edw. I. in a charter of many privileges to the Barons of the Cinque-Ports, discharged them of this duty. Cowell. See titles Prisage, Customs on Merchandise.

RECTITUDO, Right, or Justice; sometimes it signifies legal dues, a tribute or payment. Leg. Ed. Confess. c. 30: Leg. Hen 1. c. 6.

RECTO, Right; Breve de Recto; A Writ of Right, which is of so high a nature, that as other writs in real actions are only to recover the possession of the land, &c. in question: this aims to recover the seisin, and the property, and thereby both the Rights of possession and property are tried together. Co. Litt. 158. See title Writ of Right.

It hath two species: Writ of Right patent, and Writ of Right close: the first is so called, because it is sent open, and is the highest writ of all others; lying for him who hath a fee-simple in the lands or tenements sued for, against tenant of the freehold at least, and in no other case. F. N. B. 1, 2, &c. But this Writ of Right patent seems to be extended farther than originally intended; for a Writ of Right of Dower, which lies for tenant in dower is patent, as appears by F. N. B. 7. And the like may be said in some other cases. Table Reg. Orig. Also there is a special Writ of Right patent in London, otherwise termed a Writ of Right according to the custom, which lieth of lands or tenements within the city, &c. The Writ of Right patent is likewise called breve magnum de Recto. Reg. Orig. 9: Fleta, lib. 5. c. 34.

A Writ of Right close is brought where one holds lands and tenements by charter in ancient demesne, in fee-simple, fee tail, or for term of life, or in dower, and is disseised; it is directed to the bailiff of the King's manors, or to the lord of ancient demesne, if the manor is in the hands of a Subject, commanding him to do Right in his Court: this writ is also called breve parvum de Recto. F. N. B. 11: Reg. Orig. 9: Britton, c. 120.

If a person seised in fee-simple dies seised of such estate, and a stranger doth abate and enter into the land, and deforce the heir; the heir may sue a Writ of Right patent against the tenant of the freehold of the same land, or an assise of Mort d'ancestor. 11 Ass. 17.

In a Writ of Right patent, the demandant is to count of his own seisin, or of the seisin of his ancestor; if one bring the writ as heir to an ancestor, he may lay the seisin and esplees as in pernancy of the profits of the lands in his ancestors; and where it is brought by a Bishop or Body-politic, seisin of the esplees is to be laid in themselves, or in their predecessors. New Nat. Br. 10.

Where a Writ of Right close is directed to the lord of whom the lands are holden, and he will not hold his Court to proceed on it; a writ shall issue requiring him to hold his Court, &c. And if the lord hold his Court, but will not do the demandant right, or delay it, the plea may be removed by the writ called Tolt into the County-Court of the Sheriff; and from thence by Recordari into the Common Pleas. New Nat. Br. 6, 7. See title Writ of Right.

Glanvil seems to make every writ, whereby a man sues for any thing due unto him, a Writ of Right. c 10—12.

RECTO DE ADVOCATIONE ECCLESIÆ, A Writ which lay at Common Law, where a man had right of advowson, and the parson of the church dying, a stranger presented his clerk to the church; the party who had the right not having brought his action of quare impedit nor darrein presentment, but having suffered the stranger to usurp on him, and it lay only where an advowson was claimed in fee to him and his heirs. F. N. B. 30. See title Advowson III: 3 Comm c 16.

RECTO DE CUSTODIA TERRÆ ET HÆREDIS. A Writ of Right of Ward.] A Writ which lay for him whose tenant, holding of him in chivalry, died in nonage, against a stranger who entered on the land, and took the body of the heir. By the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, it is become useless as to lands holden in capite, or by knights-service; but not where there is guardian in socage, or appointed by the last will and testament of the ancestor. For the form, see in F. N. B. 139: Reg Orig 161.

Guardian in socage was always, and still is, entitled to an action of Ravishment of Ward, (Ravishment de Gard; see that title;) if his ward or pupil be taken from him; but then he must account to his pupil for the damages he so recovers. Hale on F. N B. 139. And as he was entitled at Common Law to this Writ of Right of Ward, so it seems that he is still entitled to this antiquated remedy. 3 Comm. 141. But a more speedy and summary method of redressing all complaints relative to Wards and Guardians hath of late obtained, by an application to the Court of Chancery: which is the supreme guardian, and has the superintendent jurisdiction of all the infants in the kingdom. See title Guardian I. 3. 4; and passim.

RECTO DE DOTE; A Writ of Right of Dower, which lies for a woman who has received part of her Dower, and demands the residue against the heir of the husband, or his guardian. F. N. B. 7, 8, 147: Co Litt. 32, 38. See title Dower.

RECTO DE DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET; A Writ of Right which lies in case where the husband, having divers lands or tenements, hath assured no Dower to his wife, and she thereby is driven to sue for her thirds against the heir, or his guardian. Old Nat. Br. 6: Reg. Orig. 170. See title Dower.

RECTO QUANDO (or QUIA) DOMINUS REMISIT; A Writ which lieth where lands or tenements, in the seigniory of any lord, are in demand by a Writ of Right; if the lord in such case holdeth no Court (or hath waived his right) at the prayer of demandant or tenant, but sends to the King's Court his writ to put the cause thither for that time, (saving to him at other times the right of his seigniory,) then this writ shall issue out for the other party, and hath its name from the words therein contained. F. N. B. 16. See title Writ of Right.

RECTO DE RATIONABILI PARTE, A Writ of Right lying between privies in blood, as brothers in Gavelkind, sisters, and other coparceners, for land in fee-simple. If there be two sisters, and the ancestor dieth seised of land in fee, and one of the sisters enters into the whole, and deforces the other, she who is deforced shall have the Writ of Right de rationabili Parte; to have her reasonable or proportionable Part: And if, where there are two sisters, after the death of the ancestor they enter and occupy in common as coparceners, and then one of them deforce the other to occupy that which is appendant or appurtenant to the messuage, &c. which they have in coparcenary; she who is deforced shall have this writ. Also, if the ancestor were disseised of lands, and dieth, and one sister entereth into the whole land, and deforceth her sister, she shall have the writ against her other sister: For it lieth as well on a dying seised of the ancestor, if one sister enter on all, as where the ancestor doth not die seised; and it is a writ of right-patent, &c. F. N. B. 9: New Nat. Br. 19, 26.

In this writ the demand shall be of a certain portion of land, to hold in severalty; and voucher and view do not lie in it, because of the privity of blood; but in a rationabili Parte the view was granted, an. 15 H. 5; for that the ancestor did not die seised, &c. The process on the writ, after removing into C. B. is Summons, Grand Cape, and Petit Cape, &c. F. N. B. 9. See Booth on real actions.

RECTO SUR DISCLAIMER, A Writ which lies where the lord, in the Court of Common Pleas, avows on his tenant, and the tenant disclaims to hold of him; on which Disclaimer the lord shall have this writ; and if he avers and proves that the land is holden of him, he shall recover back the land from the tenant for ever: this writ is grounded on the statute of Westm. 2. c. 2. Old. Nat. Br. 150. See title Disclaimer.

RECTOR, Lat.] A Governor; Rector Ecclesiæ Parochialis, Is he who hath the charge and cure of a parish church. It has been held, that Rector Ecclesiæ is one who hath a parsonage where there is a vicarage endowed. And when dioceses were divided into parishes, the Clergy who had the charge in those places were called Rectors; afterwards, when their Rectories were appropriated to monasteries, &c. the Monks kept the great tithes; but the Bishops were to take care that the Rector's place should be supplied by another, to whom he was to allow the small tithes for his maintenance; and this was the Vicar. See titles Parson; Vicar.

RECTORIAL TITHES; See title Tithes.

RECTORY, Rectoria.] Is taken pro integrâ Ecclesiâ Parochiali, cum omnibus suis juribus, prædiis, decimis, alisque proventuum speciebus. Spelm. Also the word Rectoria hath been often applied to the Rector's mansion, or parsonage-house. Paroch. Antiq. 549. See titles Parson; Parsonage.

RECTUM, Right; anciently used for a trial or accusation. Bract. lib. 3.

RECTUM ESSE; See Rectus in Curiâ.

RECTUM ROGARE, To petition the Judge to do Right. Leg. Inæ. c. 9.

RECTUM, Stare ad Rectum, To stand trial at Law, or abide by the justice of the Court. Hoved. 655.

RECTUS IN CURIA, i. e. Right in Court; one who stands at the bar, and no man objects any offence against him. Smith de Repub. Angl. lib. 2. c. 3. When a person outlawed hath reversed the outlawry, so that he can participate of the benefit of the Law, he is said to be Rectus in Curia.

RECUSANTS; See title Papists I. 2. and also titles Oaths; Nonconformists.

The following determinations may perhaps be useful by analogy; and are therefore here preserved as supplementary to what is said upon the subject under the titles referred to.

As to licensing a Recusant to travel, the Bishop, Lieutenant, or Deputy-lieutenant, who gives his assent to it, must be a distinct person from the Justice of Peace who gave the licence; therefore, if one and the same person be a Justice of Peace, and Deputy-lieutenant, he cannot act in both capacities; but if he sign and seal the licence as a Justice of Peace, the assent of some other Deputy-lieutenant, &c. must be had: And it is a good exception to a licence by four Justices, that no particular cause of the Recusant's travelling is expressed in it. Cro. Jac. 352: Cowley 210.

A person was indicted for Recusancy, but conformed before conviction; and so again the second time, and was indicted a third time for a relapse: And on motion, that it might be certified into the Exchequer, because, by the statute 35 Eliz. c. 2, he is to lose all the benefit which he was to have by his former conformity, the relapse was certified accordingly. 1 Bulst. 133.

It hath been adjudged, that a writ of error will not lie on a conviction of a Recusant, for not rendering himself to the Sheriff, &c. because the conviction is no judgment, but the statute gives process on it for the forfeiture: So that if there be any faults in it, the same is to be quashed in the Exchequer, the party first conforming. Raym. 433.

An information qui tam was brought against a defendant, setting forth, that before and on such a day he was a Recusant convict, and that afterwards he conformed, &c. and for three years after had not received the Sacrament, and so demanded 60*l.* for every year: On not guilty pleaded, the plaintiff had verdict; and thereupon it was moved that the information was incertain, because neither the time was alleged, nor how, or in what Court, nor before whom the conviction was; and the informer demands the penalty for three years, when by statute no informer can demand a penalty upon the penal Law, but by an information exhibited within a year after the offence: But it was resolved, that the first exception had been good on demurrer; but the defendant having pleaded Not guilty, all the circumstances of his conviction were admitted, and nothing remained to be tried but the fact: and as for the second exception it was good against the informer for his part, but should not prejudice the King. Cro. Jac. 365.

The stat. 23 Eliz. c. 1, gives several remedies against Recusants; one for the King alone, and there the prosecution must be by indictment in B. R.; the other for a common person, and that is to be by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information. And the stat. 29 Eliz. c. 6, was made for the benefit of the Crown on indictments, and doth not extend to informations; therefore such informations may be brought in any Court of Record. Hob. 204.

Where the defendant is indicted on the statute of Recusancy, conformity is a good plea; but not if an action of debt be brought. 1 Mod. 213: but vide 2 Show. 332.

A Recusant certified into the Court of King's Bench, according to stat. 23 Eliz. c. 1, shall give security for his good behaviour, &c. 2 Bulst. 155. The judgment in Recusancy is quod convictus est. 2 Strange 1048.

RED, Sax. raed.] Advice; and redbana is one who advised the death of another. See Dedbana.

RED BOOK OF THE EXCHEQUER, Liber Rubeus Scaccarii.] An ancient record, wherein are registered, the names of those who held lands per Baroniam in the time of Hen. II. Ryley 667. It is a manuscript volume of several miscellaneous treatises, in the keeping of the King's Remembrancer, in his office in the Exchequer; and hath some things (as the number of the hides of lands in many of our counties, &c.) relating to the times before the Conquest. There is likewise an exact collection of the escuages under King Hen. I., Rich. II., and King John; and the ceremonies used at the coronation of Queen Eleanor, wife to King Henry III., &c.

REDDENDUM, Is used substantively for the clause in a lease, whereby the rent is reserved to the lessor; which anciently consisted of corn, flesh, fish, and other victuals. 2 Rep. 72.

In debt for rent, the plaintiff declared on a lease made 25 August 11 W. 3. of a messuage, &c. for seven years, to commence from the 24th day of June before; Reddendum quarterly at Michaelmas, St. Thomas's day, Lady-day and Midsummer, three pounds ten shillings, the first payment to be made at Michaelmas then next; and assigned for breach that fourteen pounds of the rent was in arrear for one year, ending 24 December anno 13 Wil. And on demurrer to this declaration, it was objected that on this lease there was no year could be ended on the 24th of December, but on St. Thomas's day, according to the Reddendum; which was held to be true, because where special days are limited in the Reddendum, the rent must be computed from those days, not according to the habendum; and that the rent is never computed from the habendum, but when the Reddendum is general, i. e. paying quarterly so much. 1 Salk. 141. See titles Deed II.; Rent; Lease.

REDDIDIT SE, Hath rendered himself.] Where a man procures bail for himself to an action in any Court at Law; if the party bailed at any time before the return of the second scire facias against the bail, renders himself in discharge of his bail, they are thereby discharged. 2 Lill. Abr. 430. See titles Bail; Scire facias against Bail.

REDDITARIUS, A Renter; Redditarium, a Rental of a manor, or other estate. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS. 92.

REDDITION, Redditio.] A surrendering or restoring; being also a judicial acknowledgment that the thing in demand belongs to the demandant, and not to the person so surrendering. See stat. antiq. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 24.

REDDITUS ASSISUS, A set or standing Rent. See Assisus.

RE-DELIVERY, A yielding and delivery back of a thing: if a person has committed a robbery, and stolen the goods of another, he cannot afterwards purge the offence by any Re-delivery, &c. Co. Litt. 69: H. P. C. 72. See titles Robbery; Larceny.

RE-DEMISE, A re-granting of lands demised or leased. See Demise and Re demise.

REDEMPTION, Redemptio.] A Ransom or Commutation: By the old Saxon Laws, a man convicted of a crime paid such a fine according to the estimation of his head, pro redemptione sua.

RE-DISSEISIN, Re-disseisina] A Disseisin made by him, who once before was found and adjudged to have disseised the same man of his lands or tenements; for which there lies a special writ called a Writ of Re-disseisin. Old Nat. Br. 106: F. N. B. 188. See this Dict. titles Disseisin; Assise of Novel Disseisin.

REDRESS OF INJURIES. The more effectually to accomplish the Redress of Injuries, Courts of Justice are instituted in every civilized society, in order to protect the weak from the insults of the stronger; by expounding and enforcing those laws, by which rights are defined, and wrongs prohibited: This remedy is therefore principally to be sought by application to these Courts of Justice; that is by civil suit or action. 3 Comm. 2.

REDUBBERS, Those that buy stolen cloth, and turn it into some other colour or fashion, that it may not be known again. Britton, c. 29: 3 Inst. 134.

RE-ENTRY, from the Fr. rentrer, rursus intrare.] The resuming or retaking a possession lately had; as if a man makes a lease of lands, &c. to another, he thereby quits the possession; and if he covenants with the lessee, that, for non-payment of rent at the day, it shall be lawful for him to re-enter; this is as much as if he conditioned to take again the land into his own hands, and to recover the possession by his own act, without assistance of the Law. But words in a deed give no Re-entry, if a clause of Re-entry be not added. Wood's Inst. 140.

One may reserve a rent on condition, in a feoffment, lease, &c. that if the rent is behind he shall re-enter, and hold the lands till he is satisfied, or paid the rent in arrear; and in this case if the rent is behind, he may re-enter; though when the feoffee, &c. pays or tenders on the land all the arrears, he may enter again. And the feoffor, &c. by his Re-entry, gaineth no estate of freehold, but an interest, by the agreement of the parties, to take the profits in the nature of a distress: Here the profits shall not go in part of satisfaction of the rent; but it is otherwise if the feoffor was to hold the land till he was paid by the profits thereof. Litt. 327: Co. Litt. 203.

The distinction, when the profits taken by the lessor after entry are, and when they are not, to be in satisfaction of the rent, is not admitted in equity; for the Courts of Equity will always make the lessor account to the lessee for the profits of the estate, during the time of his being in possession of it: and decree him, after he is satisfied the rent in arrear, and the costs, charges, and expences attending his entry, and detention of the lands, to give up the possession to the lessee; and deliver and pay him the surplus of the profits of the estate, and the money arising thereby. 1 Inst. 283. (a) in n.

All persons who would re-enter on their tenants for non-payment of rent, are to make a demand of the rent; and, to prevent the Re-entry, tenants are to tender their rent,

rent, &c. 1 Inst. 201. If there is a lease for years, rendering rent, with condition, that, if the lessee assigns his term, the lessor may re-enter; and the lessee assigneth, and the lessor receiveth the rent of the assignee, not knowing or hearing of the assignment, he may re-enter notwithstanding the acceptance of the rent, 3 Rep. 65: Cro. Eliz. 553. See further, title Rent.

A feoffment may be made upon condition, that if the feoffor pay to the feoffee, &c. a certain sum of money at a day to come, then the feoffor to re-enter, &c. Litt. § 322. See titles Use; Entry.

REEVE-LAND; See Reveland.

RE-EXCHANGE, The like sum of money, payable by the drawer of a Bill of Exchange, which is returned protested, as the Exchange of the sum mentioned in the bill, is, back again to the place whence it was drawn. Lex Mercat. 98. See title Bill of Exchange.

RE-EXTENT, A second extent on lands or tenements, on complaint, that the former was partially made, &c. Broke 313. See title Extent.

RE-FA-LO, The abbreviation of Recordari facias loquelam; See that title.

REFARE, from Sax. reaf, or ræfan.] To bereave, take away, or rob. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 83.

REFERENCE, The sending any matter by the Court of Chancery to a Master; and by the Courts at Law to a Prothonotary, or Secondary, to examine and report to the Court. 2 Lil. Abr. 432.

In Chancery, by order of Court, irregularities, exceptions, matters of account, &c. are referred to the examination of a Master of that Court. In the Court of B. R. matters concerning the proceedings in a cause, by either of the parties, are proper matters of Reference under the Secondary, and for him in some ordinary cases to compose the differences betwixt them; and in others to make his report how the matters stand, that the Court may settle the differences according to their rules and orders. Pasch. 1650.

If a matter in difference be referred to the Secondary, and one of the parties will not attend at the time appointed, after notice thereof given, to hear the business referred; the other party may proceed in the Reference alone, and get the Secondary to make his report without hearing of the party not attending. 2 Lill. 342.

If a question of mere law arises in the course of a cause in Chancery, as whether, by the words of a will, an estate for life or in tail is created; or whether a future interest devised by a testator shall operate as a remainder on an executory devise; it is the practice of that Court to refer it to the opinion of the Judges of the Court of K. B. or C. P. upon a case stated for that purpose, wherein all the material facts are admitted, and the point of law is submitted to their decision; who thereupon have it solemnly argued by counsel on both sides, and certify their opinion to the Chancellor: and on such a certificate the decree is usually founded. It seems that the Master of the Rolls, sitting for the Chancellor, may make such Reference; but not when sitting at the Rolls. 2 Bro. C. C. 88. The Court of Exchequer is both a Court of Law and Equity; therefore, if a question of mere Law arises in the course of the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, the Barons will decide upon it in that suit, without referring it to another jurisdiction. 3 Comm. 452, 3, and n.

REFERENCE TO WORDS. The King granted to A. and D., and their heirs, all those messuages, &c. late in the tenure of J. S., situate, &c. in the city of W. and in the suburbs thereof, and out of the city, within the jurisdiction and liberties thereof, belonging to the late priory of, &c. which messuage, &c. in the city and suburbs, belonging to the late priory, were of the clear yearly value of 40*l.* Resolved, that the words (all those messuages, &c.) make a necessary Reference, by reason of the word (those), as well to the vill, as to the tenure of J. S.; so if the one or the other fails, the general grant is void: for (those) is not satisfied till the sentence be ended. Doddington's case. See 18 Vin. Abr. 272.

REFERENDARY, Referendarius.] An officer abroad, of the same nature as Masters of Request were to the King among us: The Referendaries being those who exhibit the petitions of the people to the King, and acquaint the Judges with his commands. And there was such an officer in the time of the English Saxons here. Spelman.

REFORMATION OF RELIGION; The change from the Catholic to the Protestant Religion, and the destruction of the power of the Pope in these kingdoms; which commenced in the reign of Hen. VIII., and was established, after some interruption, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; and finally sanctioned at the Revolution, on the abdication of James II.

REFUNDING. A. an attorney being ill, takes B. for his clerk, and receives 120*l.*, and by articles agrees with the father of B. to return 60*l.* of the money if he died within a year. A. died within three weeks. The executor of A. was decreed to pay back 100 guineas. Vern. 466. See title Attorney.

A. was indebted to B. by mortgage in 400*l.* principal monies, and died. B. died, leaving J. S. executor. On a bill in Chancery, for payment of debts of A. out of lands charged with the same, the Master reported 700*l.* due on the mortgage, and the executor received the whole 700*l.*; but afterwards it appeared that 353*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.* had been paid to B. the testator, by A. in his lifetime; whereupon the trustees and cestui que trust, an infant, brought a bill to be relieved against this over-payment; the executor (defendant) pleaded all the former proceedings; and also that he, before any notice of the over-payment, as executor of B., had paid away the 700*l.* in the debts of B. The Master of the Rolls decreed the executor to repay the surplus, and he to be at liberty to sue such creditors, as through mistake he had paid, to refund; and this decree was affirmed by Lord Chancellor Cowper, who compared it to the case of a judgment obtained by an executor, and after reversed in error; and to that of a decree which is afterwards reversed by appeal; though he said, that, in the last case of an appeal, if the defendant had delayed the appeal, and willingly stood by whilst the executor paid away money to the testator's creditors, it would be otherwise; for this would be drawing the executor into a snare. 1 P. Wms. 355. See title Executor.

A. for 600*l.* purchases B.'s interest and possibility in such an estate, to him and his heirs; the land is evicted. A. is not entitled to have his 600*l.* back; but his bill was dismissed. Finch. Rep. 288.

REFUSAL, Is where one hath by Law a right and power of having or doing something of advantage to him, and he declines it. An executor may refuse an executorship; but the Refusal ought to be before the Ordinary: If an executor be summoned to accept or refuse the executorship, and he doth not appear on the summons, and prove the will, the Court may grant administration, &c. which shall be good in Law till such executor hath proved the will; but no man can be compelled to take on him the executorship, unless he hath intermeddled with the estate. 1 Leon. 154: Cro. Eliz. 858. Where there are several executors, and they all refuse, none of them shall administer afterwards; but if there is a Refusal by one, and the other proves the will, the refusing executor may administer when he will, during the life of his co-executor. 1 Rep. 28. If there is but one executor, and he administer, he cannot refuse afterwards; and if once he refuse, he cannot administer afterwards: Thus, where a testator being possessed of lands, &c. for a term of years, devised the same to the Chief Justice Catline, and made him executor, and died; afterwards the executor wrote a letter to the Judge of the Prerogative Court, intimating, that he could not attend the executorship, and desiring him to grant administration to the next of kin to the deceased, which was done accordingly; and after this the executor entered on the lands, and granted the term to another; it was adjudged void, because the letter which he wrote was a sufficient Refusal; and he may not once refuse, and afterwards take upon him the executorship. Moor 272.

An executor, after a caveat entered against the will, took the usual oath of an executor, and afterwards refused to prove the will; and it was held, that having taken the oath of executor, the Court could not admit him to refuse afterwards, but ought to grant probate to him, notwithstanding the caveat, on another's contesting for the administration, &c. 1 Vent. 335. See tit. Executor.

There is a Refusal of a clerk presented to a church, for illiterature, &c; in which case, if a Bishop once refuses a clerk for insufficiency, he cannot accept of him afterwards, if a new clerk is presented. 5 Rep. 58: Cro. Eliz. 27. See title Parson.

In trover, a demand of the goods, and Refusal to deliver them, must be proved, &c. 10 Rep. 56. See title Trover.

REGALE EPISCOPORUM, The temporal rights and privileges of a Bishop. Brady.

REGALES, The King's servants or officers. Walsingham, anno 1291.

REGAL FISHES, Whales and sturgeons, some add porpuses. See stat. antiq. 1 Eliz. c. 5; and this Dictionary, titles King; Queen.

REGALIA, Jura omnia ad Fiscum spectantia; Spelman.] The Royal Rights of a King, which the Civilians reckon to be six; viz. Power of judicature; of life and death; of war and peace; masterless goods, as waifs, estrays, &c.; assessments; and minting of money. See title King.

The Crown, sceptre with the cross, sceptre with the dove, St. Edward's staff, four several swords, the globe, the orb with the cross, and other articles used at the Coronation of our Kings, are commonly called the Regalia. See the relation of the Coronation of King Charles II, in Baker's Chronicle.

Regalia is sometimes taken for the dignity and prerogative of the King; and these the feodal writers distinguish into the majora and minora Regalia: The former comprehending what relates to his power and dignity; the latter to his fiscal or pecuniary prerogatives. 1 Comm. 241. See title King V.

Regalia is also taken for those rights and privileges which the Church enjoys by the grants and other concessions of Kings, and sometimes for the patrimony of the Church; as Regalia Sancti Petri, &c. It signifies also those lands and hereditaments which have been given by Kings to the Church, viz. Cepimus in manum nostram baroniam & Regalia quæ archiepiscopus Eborum de nobis tenet. Prynn, lib. Angl. ii. 231. These, whilst in the possession of the Church, were subject to the same services as all other temporal inheritances; and after the death of the Bishop, they of right returned to the King, until he invested another with them; which, in the reign of William the Conqueror, and some of his immediate successors, was often neglected or delayed; and as often the Bishops complained thereof. This appears in Ordericus Vitalis, lib. 10, and other writers in those days. Neubrigensis, lib. 3. cap. 26, tells us they complained against Henry II. for the same cause.

REGALIA FACERE, To do homage or fealty when he is invested with the Regalia. Malmsbury, de Gestis Pontificum, p. 129, de Anselmo.

REGARD, Regardum; rewardum: Fr. regard; aspectus, respectus.] Signifies, generally, any care or diligent respect: yet it hath also a special acceptation, wherein it is only used in matters of the forest; either for the office of Regarder, or for the compass of the ground belonging to that office. Crom. Jur. 175, 199. Touching the former, see Manwood, part 1. 194, & 198. And touching the second signification, the compass of the Regarder's charge is the whole forest; that is, all the ground which is parcel of the forest, for there may be woods within the limits of the forest, that are no parcel thereof, and those are without the Regard. Manwood, part 2. c. 7. num. 4: And see stat. 20 Car. 2. c. 3. As to the Court of Regard, and the office of Regarder, see this Dictionary, title Forest.

REGARDANT, Fr. seeing, marking, vigilant.] As a Villein Regardant was called, Regardant to the Manor, because he had the charge to do all base services within the same, and to see the same freed of all things that might annoy it. This word is only applied to a villein, or nief, yet in old books it was sometimes attributed to services. 1 Inst. 120. A Villein Regardant, it seems, was rather so called, because annexed to the manor; regarding, or relating to it. See titles Villein; Tenure.

REGARDER, Regardator, Fr. regardeur, spectator.] The officer of the King's Forest, who is sworn to make the regard of it; and has been used in ancient time, to view and inquire of all offences of the forest, as well of vert as of venison; and of concealment of any offences or defaults of the foresters, and all other officers of the King's Forest, relating to the execution of their offices, &c. Cromp. Jurisd. 153: Manwood.

This officer was ordained in the beginning of the reign of Henry II. Regarders of the Forest must make their regard, before any General Sessions of the Forest, or Justice Seat, can be holden; when the Regarder is to go through the forest, and every bailiwick, to see and inquire inquire of the treſpaſſes therein; ad videndum, ad inquirendum, ad imbreviandum, ad certificandum, &c. Manw. part 1. p. 194. A Regarder may be made either by the King's letters patent; or by any of the Juſtices of the foreſt, at the general Eyre, or ſuch times as the regard is to be made, &c. Manw. See title Foreſt.

REGE INCONSULTO, A Writ iſſued from the King to the Judges, not to proceed in a cauſe which may prejudice the King, until he is adviſed.

James I. granted the office of Superſedeas in C. B. to one Mitchel, and thereupon Brownlow, Chief Prothonotary, brought an aſſiſe againſt him; and the defendant Mitchel obtained the King's writ to the Judges, reciting the grant of this office, commanding them not to proceed Rege inconſulto: And it was argued againſt the writ, that the Court might proceed, becauſe the writ doth not mention that the King had a title to the thing in demand, nor any prejudice which might happen to the King, if they ſhould proceed: The cauſe was compromiſed. Moor 844.

A Rege inconſulto may be awarded, not only for the party to the plea, but on ſuggeſtion of a ſtranger; on cauſe ſhewn that the King may be prejudiced by the proceeding, &c. Jenk. Cent. 97.

A Writ of Rege inconſulto does not lie, but when it appears plainly to the Court, that the party's title is in diſaffirmance of the King's title. Hardr. 179.

When the defendants will not pray in aid, this writ is in nature thereof, to inform the Court how it concerns the Crown, and to inhibit their proceedings. See 9 Rep. 16, a: Cro. Eliz. 417. Where the tenant or defendant does not pray in aid, but a writ de Domino Rege inconſulto is brought, and directed to the Judges, and it appears to the Court, that the cauſe is not available or ſufficient in Law, the Court ought to diſallow the writ, and proceed in the action; and if the cauſe appears to the Court to be juſt and lawful, and not brought for delay, then the Judges ought to ſurceaſe. See 2 Inſt. 269: And. 280: Mo. 421. And further, Vin. Abr. title Rege inconſulto.

REGENT; See titles King V. 2: Queen.

REGIO ASSENSU, A Writ whereby the King gives his Royal Aſſent to the election of a Biſhop. Reg. Orig. 294.

REGISTER, more correctly Regiſtrar; Regiſtrarius.] An officer who writes and keeps a Regiſtry. See Regiſtry.

Regiſter is the name of a book, wherein are entered moſt of the forms of writs, original and judicial, uſed at Common Law, called the Regiſter of Writs: Coke affirms, that this Regiſter is one of the moſt ancient books of the Common Law. Co. Litt. 159.

Blackſtone terms it, the moſt ancient and highly venerable collection of legal forms, upon which Fitzherbert's Natura Brevium is a comment; and in which every man who is injured will be ſure to find a method of relief, exactly adapted to his own caſe, deſcribed in the compaſs of a few lines, and yet without the omiſſion of any material circumſtance. 3 Comm. 183.

REGISTRY, Regiſtrum, from the old Fr. giſter, i.e. in lecto reponere.] Properly the ſame with Repoſitory: The office books, and rolls wherein the proceedings of the Chancery, or any Spiritual Court, are recorded, &c. are called by this name.

Registry, or Register of the Pariſh Church, Regiſtrum Eccleſiæ Parochialis.] That wherein baptiſms, marriages, and burials are regiſtered in each Pariſh every year; which was inſtituted by Lord Cromwell, anno 13 Henry VIII., while he was Vicar-general to that King.

Theſe Pariſh Regiſters are to be ſubſcribed by the Miniſter and Churchwardens; and the names of the perſons ſhall be tranſmitted yearly to the Biſhop, &c. See title Marriage.

Register, or Registry of Deeds. The regiſtering of Deeds and Incumbrances is a great ſecurity of titles to purchaſers of lands, and to mortgagees; and ſome laws have been made requiring the ſame. By ſtat. 2 Ann. c. 4, A Regiſtry is to be kept of all Deeds and Conveyances affecting lands, executed in the Weſt Riding of Yorkſhire; and a public office erected for that purpoſe; and the Regiſter is to be choſen by freeholders having 100*l. per annum,* &c. The ſtat. 6 Ann. c. 35, ordains, that a Memorial and Regiſtry of all Deeds, Conveyances, Wills, &c. which affect any lands or tenements, ſhall be made in the Eaſt Riding of the county of York; and the Regiſter is to be ſworn by the Juſtices in Quarter Seſſions, and every leaf of his book ſigned by two Juſtices.

By ſtat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 6, A Regiſtry ſhall be of all Deeds made in the North Riding of the county of York. Memorials of Wills muſt be regiſtered within ſix months after the death of the teſtator; the Regiſter neglecting his duty, or guilty of fraudulent practices, ſhall forfeit his office, and pay treble damages; and perſons counterfeiting any Memorial, &c. be liable to the common penalties of forgery.

By ſtat. 7 Ann. c. 20, A Memorial and Regiſtry is to be made of all Deeds and Conveyances, and of all Wills, whereby lands are affected, &c. in the county of Middleſex, in the like manner as in the Weſt and Eaſt Ridings of Yorkſhire.

Deputy of the Chief Clerk of the King's Bench, appointed a Regiſter for Middleſex, inſtead of the Chief Clerk. 25 Geo. 2. c. 4.

It is provided, by ſtat. 5 Ann. c. 18, and ſubſequent ſtatutes, that Bargains and Sales may be inrolled with the Regiſter, and ſhall be as valid as if inrolled according to ſtat. 27 H. 8. c. 16. See titles Bargain and Sale; Inrolment.

It is obſerved, by Blackſtone, that however plauſible theſe proviſions as to a Regiſtry may appear, in theory, to remedy the inconvenience ariſing from the want of notoriety attendant on modern Deeds, it has been doubted by very competent Judges, whether more diſputes have not ariſen in thoſe counties, by the inattentions and omiſſions of parties, than have been prevented by the uſe of Regiſters. 2 Comm. c. 20.

By theſe ſtatutes, Deeds, Conveyances, and Wills, ſhall be void againſt ſubſequent purchaſers or mortgagees, unleſs regiſtered before the Conveyances under which they claim: alſo no judgment, ſtatute, or recognizance, ſhall bind any lands in thoſe counties, but from the time a Memorial thereof ſhall be entered at the Regiſter's office; but the acts do not extend to Copyhold Eſtates, Leaſes at a Rack-rent, or to any Leaſes, not exceeding twenty-one years, where the poſſeſſion goes with the leaſe; nor to any Chambers in the Inns of Court.

An annuity was granted out of lands lying in Middleſex; A. B. who had notice of the grant, purchaſes the lands:

lands; the grantee shall have the annuity against A. B. though the grant of the annuity was not registered; for the statute was intended to give notice of incumbrances to purchasers, that they might not be defrauded; but if a man knows of an incumbrance, and will, notwithstanding, purchase, he is bound, though the incumbrance was not registered. 2 Strange 664. See 1 Vef. 64.

A mortgage of a lease was registered, but not the lease itself; this will not bar a subsequent purchaser. 2 Strange 1064. See further, title Notice.

REGISTRY OF PAPISTS' ESTATES: See this Dict. title Papists II. 4.

REGIUS PROFESSOR, A Reader of Lectures in the Universities, founded by the King: King Hen. VIII. was the founder of five Lectures in each University of Oxford and Cambridge, viz. of Divinity, Greek, Hebrew, Law, and Physic; the Readers of which are called in the University statutes Regii Professores.

REGNI POPULI, A name given to the people of Surry and Sussex, and on the sea-coasts of Hampshire. Blount.

REGNUM ECCLESIASTICUM. In some countries, formerly, the Clergy held there was a double supreme power, or two kingdoms in every kingdom; the one a Regnum Ecclesiasticum, absolute and independent, of any but the Pope, over ecclesiastical men and causes, exempt from the Secular Magistrate; the other a Regnum Seculare, of the King or Civil Magistrate, which had subordination and subjection to the ecclesiastical kingdom: but these usurpations were exterminated here by Henry VIII. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 324.

REGRATOR, Regratarius.] It originally signified one who bought provisions, in order to sell them again for gain: and such person was considered anciently, with great justice, as an enemy to the Community. It is now confined to persons buying and selling again in the same market, or within four miles thereof. See Spelm. v. Regratarius: and this Dictionary, title Forestaller.

REGULARS, Regulares.] Such as professed to live under some certain rule; as Monks, or Canons Regular, who ought always to be under some rule of obedience. See title Clergy.

REGULUS, SUBREGULUS, Words often mentioned in the Councils of the English Saxons. The first signifies Comes, the other Vicecomes. But in many places they signify the same dignitary; as in the old book in the archives of Worcester cathedral. Cowell. See Subregulus.

REHABERE FACIAS SEISINAM, Quando Vicecomes liberavit seisinam de majore parte, quam deberet.] A Writ judicial; of which there is another of the same name and nature. Reg. Judic. 13, 51, 54. It lay when the Sheriff in the Habere facias seisinam had delivered more than he ought.

REHABILITATION, Rehabilitatio.] A restoring to former ability: It was one of those exactions claimed by the Pope heretofore in England, by his bull or brief, for re-enabling a spiritual person to exercise his function, who had been disabled. See Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21; and titles Papists; Rome; Pope.

REIF, Sax. reafan; spoliare.] In old Law Latin signified robbery. Cowell.

REJOINDER, Rejunctio.] The answer or exception of a defendant in any action to the plaintiff's replication. It ought to be a sufficient answer to the replication, and follow and inforce the matter of the bar pleaded. 2 Lil. Abr. 433.

Defendant is not to rejoin on such words as are not contained in the declaration, or replication: and if defendant do in his Rejoinder depart from his plea pleaded in bar, the Rejoinder is not good, because this is uncertain, and to say and unsay, which the Law doth not allow. Mich. 22 Car. B. R.

It is observed, that in many cases, if the plaintiff in his replication alleges any new matter, the defendant may there make a new answer in the Rejoinder; though if the defendant pleads a general plea, he shall not commonly make that good afterwards, by a particular thing in his Rejoinder. 5 Hen. 7. 19: Raym. 22. See titles Departure; Pleading.

RELATION, Relatio.] Is, where, in consideration of Law, two different times or other things are accounted as one; and by some act done, the thing subsequent is said to take effect by Relation from the time preceding: as if one deliver a writing to another, to be delivered to a third person as the deed of him who made it, when such third person hath paid a sum of money; now, when the money is paid, and the writing delivered, this shall be taken as the deed of him who made and delivered it, at the time of its first delivery, to which it has Relation; (see titles Deed III. 7; Escrow;) and so things relating to a time long before, shall be as if they were done at that time. Terms de Ley: Shep. Epit. 837.

This device is most commonly to help acts in Law, and make a thing take effect: and shall relate to the same thing, the same intent, and between the same parties only; and it shall never do a wrong, or lay a charge upon a person that is no party. Co. Lit. 190: 1 Rep. 99: Plowd. 188: 2 Vent. 200.

When the execution of a thing is done, it hath Relation to the thing executory, and makes all but one act to record, although performed at several times. 1 Rep. 199. Judgment shall have Relation to the first day of the term, as if given on that very day, unless there is a memorandum to the contrary; as where there is a continuance till another day in the same term. 3 Salk. 212. A verdict was given in a cause for a plaintiff, and there was a motion in arrest of judgment within four days; the court took time to advise, and in four days afterwards the plaintiff died; it was adjudged, that the favour of the Court shall not prejudice the party, for the judgment ought to have been given after the first four days; and though it is given after the death of the party, it shall have Relation to the time when it ought to have been given. 1 Leon. 187.

Rule was had for judgment, and two days after the plaintiff died; yet the judgment was entered, because it shall have Relation to the day, when the rule was given, which was when the plaintiff was alive. Poph. 132. Judgment against an heir of the obligation of his ancestor, shall have Relation to the time of the writ first purchased; and from that time it will avoid all alienations made by the heir. Cro. Car. 102. If one be bail for a defendant, and before judgment he leases his lands; they shall be liable to the bail, and judgment by Relation. Poph. 132. See titles Judgment; Bail.

It was formerly holden, that where the defendant in a suit after the teste of the fieri facias, but before the Sheriff riff had executed it, fold the goods, and delivered them to the buyer; the Sheriff might take them in execution in the hands of the buyer; for when fuch execution is made, it fhould have Relation to the tefte of the Fi. Fa. 1 Leon. 304: But by ftat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 16, Writs of Execution fhall bind the property of the goods, only from the time of their delivery to the officer. See title Execution IV. 1.

Sale of goods of a bankrupt, by Commiffioners, fhall have Relation to the firft act of bankruptcy; and be good, notwithftanding the bankrupt fells them afterwards. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. See title Bankrupt.

If a man buys cattle in a market, which are ftolen, and felleth them out of the market, though the cattle are afterwards brought into the market, and the fecond bargain confirmed, and money paid, &c. this bargain will not be good; for it fhall have Relation to the beginning, which was unlawful. Dyer 99. See title Market.

Fines, being but common affurances, fhall be guided by the indentures precedent; and the execution thereof have Relation to the original act. Cro. Jac. 110. A bargain and fale was made to A. B. and before it was inrolled, the fame bargainor levied a fine to the bargainee, and afterwards, and within the fix months, the deed was inrolled; adjudged, that the bargainee was in by the fine, and not by the deed inrolled; becaufe, though the inrolment fhall have Relation to the delivery of the deed, that is only to protect the lands from all incumbrances to be made by the bargainor to others after the deed, and before the inrolment, but not to deveft any lawful eftate made by him before. 4 Rep. 70. After an indenture of bargain and fale is inrolled, according to the ftatute, it relates to the delivery; nothing paffes till inrolment, but then it relates. See titles Bargain and Sale; Fine of Lands.

If an infant or feme covert difagree to a feoffment to them made, when they are of age, or difcovert; it fhall relate as to this purpofe, to difcharge them of damages from the time. 3 Rep. 29: Co. Lit. 310. See Infant, &c.

Letters of adminiftration relate to the death of the inteftate, and not to the time when they were granted. Style 341. See title Executor. When the wife is endowed of lands by the heir, fhe fhall be in immediately from the hufband by Relation. 36 H. 6, 7. See Dower.

RELEASE,

RELAXATIO.] An inftrument whereby eftates, or other things, are extinguifhed, transferred, abridged, or enlarged. Weft. Symbol. part. 1. l. 2. § 509. And whereby a man quits and renounces, that which he before had. Com. Dig. title Releafe.

A RELEASE OF LAND, is claffed by Blackftone among the fecondary or derivative fort of Conveyances: and is by him defined to be, A Difcharge or Conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements, to another that hath fome former eftate, in poffeffion. See further this Dict. titles Conveyance; Deed; Leafe and Releafe.

The words generally ufed in fuch Releafes are, remifed, releafed, and for ever quit claimed. See poft. II.

I. Of Releafes, generally.

II. Of the Words and Ceremony required in a Releafe; and how far a Covenant, Agreement, or a Difpofition by Will, may operate as a Releafe.

III. What fhall be releafed, by a Releafe of all Claims and Demands.

IV. What fhall be releafed, by a Releafe of all Actions and Suits; and of all Right and Title in Land.

V. How far a Poffibility, or contingent Intereft, may be releafed.

I. THERE is a Releafe in Fact, and a Releafe in Law. Perkins' Grants 71. A Releafe in Fact, is that which the very words exprefly declare. A Releafe in Law, is that which doth acquit by way of confequence or intendment of Law. How thefe are available, and how not, fee Littleton at large, l. 3. c. 8. Cowell.

A Releafe is the giving or difcharging of a right of action which a man hath claimed, or may claim, againft another, or that which is his; or it is the conveyance of a man's intereft or right which he hath to a thing, to another who hath poffeffion thereof, or fome eftate therein. 4 New Abr.

According to Coke, Releafes are diftinguifhed into exprefs Releafes in Deed, and thofe arifing by operation of Law; and are made of lands and tenements, goods and chattels; or of actions real, perfonal, and mixt. 1 Inft. 264, a.

Releafes of Land, may enure or take effect in various ways: Either, Firft, by way of enlarging an eftate; (enlarger l'eftate;) where the poffeffion and inheritance are feparated for a particular time; and he who hath the reverfion or inheritance, releafes to the tenant in poffeffion all his right and intereft. Such Releafe is faid to enlarge his eftate; and to be equal to an entry and feoffment, and to amount to a grant and attornment. 1 Inft. 267, a. Thus, if there be tenant for life or years, remainder to another in fee, and he in remainder releases all his right to the particular tenant and his heirs; this gives him the estate in fee. Litt. § 465. But in this case the Releſſee muſt be in poſſeſſion of ſome eſtate, for the Releaſe to work upon; for if there be a Leſſee for years, and before he enters and is in poſſeſſion, the Leſſor releaſes to him all his right in the reverſion, ſuch Releaſe is void, for want of poſſeſſion in the Releſſee. Litt. § 459.

When it is ſaid, however, that a Releaſe, which enures by enlargement, cannot work without a poſſeſſion, it muſt be underſtood to mean, not that an actual eſtate in poſſeſſion is neceſſary, but that a veſted intereſt ſuffices for ſuch a Releaſe to operate upon. By comparing this with the operation of a Leaſe and Releaſe, (ſee that title,) it will be ſeen, that not only eſtates in poſſeſſion, but eſtates in remainder and reverſion, and all other incorporeal hereditaments, may be effectually granted and conveyed by Leaſe and Releaſe: but it is an inaccuracy to ſay, that the Releaſe, in theſe caſes, is in the actual poſſeſſion of the hereditaments: the right expreſſion is, that they are actually veſted in him, by virtue of the Leaſe of poſſeſſion and the ſtatute. 1 Inſt. 270, (a) n. 3.

To make Releaſes operate by enlargement; it is generally neceſſary, that the Releſſee, at the time the Releaſe is made, ſhould be in actual poſſeſſion of, or have a veſted intereſt in, the lands intended to be releaſed; that there ſhould be a privity between him and the Releſſor; and that the poſſeſſion of the Releſſee ſhould be notorious. To this latter circumſtance, however, the Statute of Uſes furniſhes an exception, exemplified in the operation of a Leaſe and Releaſe: where the Bargainee has a veſted intereſt, immediately after the execution of the bargain and ſale, without any entry, attornment, or other act of notoriety whatſoever: though, at Common Law, till entry or attornment, the Leſſee was not capable of a Releaſe. But, from the general principles above noticed, tenant by elegit or ſtatute-merchant is not capable of a Releaſe that is to operate by enlargement; while tenants in dower, or by the curteſy, are; as they have the notoriety of poſſeſſion and privity of eſtate with reſpect to the Releaſor. See 1 Inſt. 273, (a) in n.

Secondly; By way of paſſing an eſtate; (mitter l'eſtate;) as when one of two coparceners releaſeth all her right to the other, this paſſeth the fee-ſimple of the whole. 1 Inſt. 273.

In both theſe caſes there muſt be a privity of eſtate between the Releſſor and Releſſee; that is, one of their eſtates muſt be ſo related to the other, as to make but one and the ſame eſtate in Law. 1 Inſt. 272, 3: 2 Comm. c. 20.

3dly; By way of paſſing a right; (mitter le droit;) as if a man be diſſeiſed, and releaſeth to his diſſeiſor all his right; hereby the diſſeiſor acquires a new right, which changes the quality of his eſtate, and renders that lawful which before was tortious or wrongful. Litt. § 466.

Releaſes of this kind muſt be made either to the diſſeiſor, his feoffee, or his heir. In all theſe caſes, the poſſeſſion is in the Releſſee; the right in the Releſſor; and the uniting the right to the poſſeſſion, completes the title of the Releſſee: But the different degrees of title in the diſſeiſor, his feoffee, or his heir, give the Releaſes made to them different operations. They all agree in this reſpect, that no privity is required, or indeed can, from the nature of the caſe, exiſt between them and the Releſſor. 1 Inſt. 274, (a) in n.

At Common Law, lands could not be transferred from one to another, but by feoffment with livery of the ſeiſin. This produced a notoriety of the tranſmutation of the poſſeſſion. This notoriety was, in ſome meaſure, effected by a diſſeiſin; but that was only a tortious poſſeſſion, liable to be defeated by the diſſeiſee. Thus the diſſeiſor had the poſſeſſion, the diſſeiſee the right. To complete the title of the diſſeiſor, it was neceſſary he ſhould acquire the right: This could not be done by a feoffment, as that was a transfer of the poſſeſſion; but it was effected by a Releaſe, which, in this caſe, operated as an actual transfer of the right. 1 Inſt. 264, (a) in n.

Thus, in the caſe of a Releaſe, per mitter le droit, when made to the feoffee of the diſſeiſor; the feoffee is in by title, his eſtate cannot be deveſted or diſaffirmed, but by an act equal to that which created it: A Releaſe does not affect his poſſeſſion or title, but diſcharges it from the right of the Releſſor; ſo that, whether the whole fee is in the feoffee, or carved out into particular eſtates, it remains unaltered by the Releaſe, except as it is diſcharged by it from the right of the Releſſor. 1 Inſt. 275, (a) in n.—In the caſe of a Releaſe to the heir of the diſſeiſor, it is to be obſerved, that a diſſeiſor has a mere naked poſſeſſion, unſupported by any right; and that the diſſeiſee may reſtore his poſſeſſion, and put a total end to the poſſeſſion of the diſſeiſor by entry. But though the feoffee of the diſſeiſor comes in by title, ſtill the right of poſſeſſion remains in the diſſeiſee, and he may equally enter on the feoffee as on the diſſeiſor; ſo that a Releaſe, per mitter le droit, gives both to the diſſeiſor and his feoffee the right of poſſeſſion, and the right of property: But if the diſſeiſor dies, the entry of the diſſeiſee is taken away, and a preſumptive right of poſſeſſion is in the heir; ſo that the Releaſe of the diſſeiſee only paſſes the right of property. 1 Inſt. 277, (a) in n.

4thly; By way of extinguiſhment; as if my tenant for life makes a leaſe to A. for life, remainder to B. and his heirs, and I releaſe to A.: this extinguiſhes my right to the reverſion, and ſhall enure to the advantage of B.'s remainder as well as of A.'s particular eſtate. Litt. § 470. See title Extinguiſhment. Where the Releſſee cannot have the thing per mitter le droit, yet the Releaſe ſhall enure, by way of extinguiſhment, againſt all manner of perſons; as when the lord grants the ſeignory to his tenant, ſuch Releaſes abſolutely extinguiſh the rent, &c. although the Releſſee be only tenant for life. See 1 Inſt. 267, (a) in n.: 193, (b): 273, (b).

5thly; By way of entry and feoffment; as if there be two joint diſſeiſors, and the diſſeiſee releaſes to one of them, he ſhall be ſole ſeiſed, and ſhall keep out his former companion; which is the ſame in effect as if the diſſeiſee had entered, and thereby put an end to the diſſeiſin, and afterwards had enfeoffed one of the diſſeiſors in fee. 1 Inſt. 278. It has been already obſerved, that when a man has in himſelf the poſſeſſion of lands, he muſt, at the Common Law, convey the freehold by feoffment and livery; which makes a notoriety in the country: but if a man has only a right or a future intereſt, he may convey that right or intereſt by a mere Releaſe, to him that is in poſſeſſion of the land: for the occupancy of the Releſſee is conſidered as a matter of ſufficient notoriety already. 2 Comm. c. 20; and ſee 1 Inſt. 275, (b) in n.

A Releaſe is to be adapted to the nature of the caſe, and the purpoſes for which the Releaſe is intended; ſo

that

that if a man be disseised of lands, or dispossessed of goods, and release all actions, he may, notwithstanding, enter into his lands, or retake his goods, the right and property being still in him, though he has devested himself of his remedy. Hob. 163: 4 Co. 63.

So, where a man has divers means to come to his right, he may release one, and yet take advantage of the other; but if a man has not any means to come to his right but by way of action, there, by a Release of all actions, his right by judgment of Law is gone, because by his own act he has barred himself of all means to come at it. 8 Co. 152: Co. Lit. 286.

Heretofore, Releases were construed with much nicety and great strictness; and, being considered as the deed or grant of the party, were, according to the rule of Law, taken strongest against the Releasor: They now receive such interpretation as these grants and agreements do, and are favoured by the Judges as tending to repose and quietness. Dyer 56: Plowd. 289: Hetl. 15: 8 Co. 148.

Hence it hath been established as a general rule in the construction of Releases, that where there are general words only in a Release, they shall be taken most strongly against the Releasor; but where there is a particular recital in a deed, and then general words follow, the general words shall be qualified by the special words. 1 Mod. 99: 1 Ld. Raym. 235.

It is necessary, in all cases where a Release of lands is made, that the estate be turned to a right; as in a disseisin, &c. where there are two rights, a right of possession in the disseisor, and a right to the estate in the disseisee; now when the disseisee hath released to the disseisor, here the disseisor hath both the rights in him, viz. The right to the estate, and also to the possession: or else it is requisite that there be privity of estate between the Tenant in possession and the Releasor; for a Release will not operate without privity. 2 Lil. 435. A Release, made by one that at the time of the making thereof had no right, is void; and a Release made to one that at the time of making thereof hath nothing in the lands, is also void, because he ought to have a freehold, or possession, or privity. Noy's Max. 74.

He that makes a Release must have an estate in himself, out of which the estate may be derived to the Releessee; the Releessee is to have an estate in possession in deed, or in Law, in the land whereof the Release is made, as a foundation for the Release; there must be privity of estate between the Releassor and Releessee; and sufficient words in Law, not only to make the Release, but also to create and raise a new estate, or the Release will not be good. 1 Inst. 22. A Release to a man and his heirs will pass a fee-simple; and if made to a man, and the heirs of his body, by this the Releessee hath an estate-tail: But a Release of a man's right in fee-simple, is not sufficient to pass a fee simple. 1 Inst. 273.

A Release made by deed-poll, of right to lands, &c. needs no other execution than sealing and delivery; and will operate without consideration: But it is convenient to put a valuable consideration therein; lest it should be judged fraudulent by statute. Lit. § 445. Lil. Convey. 230, 248: Cro. Jac. 270. See title Consideration.

II. A RELEASE which operates by mitter l'estate is, where two persons come in by the same feudal contract, as joint-tenants or coparceners, and one of them releases to the other the benefit of it. In Releases which operate by this mode, the Releessee being supposed to be already seised of the inheritance, by virtue of the former feudal contract, and the Release only operating as a discharge from the right or pretension of another, seised under the same contract, words of inheritance, in the Release, are useless. So, in cases of Releases per mitter le droit, words of inheritance are not necessary; as the disseisor, to whom or to whose feoffee or heir that Release is made, (see ante I.) acquires the fee by the disseisin, and therefore cannot take it under the Release: But where the Release operates by enlargement, the Releessee having no such previous inheritance, and possession being either for life or in fee, (as originally granted,) the Release gives the estate to the Releessee for his life only, unless it is expressly made to him and his heirs. 1 Inst. 273, (b); 274, (a); in n.

Littleton says, that the proper words of a Release are remisisse, relaxasse, & quietum clamasse, which have all the same signification. Lord Coke adds, Renunciare, acquietare; and says, that there are other words which will amount to a Release; as, if the Lessor grants to the Lessee for life, that he shall be discharged of the rent; this is a good Release. Lit. § 445: 1 Inst. 264: Plowd. 140.

So, a pardon, by act of Parliament, of all debts and judgments, amounts to a Release of the debt; the word Pardon including a Release. 1 Sid. 261.

An express Release must regularly be in writing and by deed, according to the common rule, eodem modo oritur, eodem modo dissolvitur; so that a duty arising by record must be discharged by matter of as high a nature; so of a bond or other deed. Co. Lit. 264, b: 1 Rol. Rep. 43: 2 Leon. 76, 213: 2 Rol. Abr. 408: 2 Sand. 48: Moor 573. pl. 787.

But a promise by words may, before breach, be discharged or released, by word of mouth only. 1 Sid. 177: 2 Sid. 78: Cro. Jac. 483, 620: Vide Cro. Car. 383: 1 Mod. 262: 2 Mod. 259: 1 Sid. 293.

A Release of a right in chattels cannot be without deed. 1 Leon. 283.

A Covenant perpetual, as that the Covenantor will not sue beyond a certain limitation of time, is a Defeasance, or absolute Release; and this construction has been made to avoid circuity of action; for if in such case the party should, contrary to his covenant, sue, the other party would recover precisely the same damages which he sustained by the other's suing; but if the covenant be, that he will not sue till such a time, this does not amount to a Release, nor is it pleadable in bar as such, but the party hath remedy only on his covenant. Moor 23. pl. 80, 811: 1 Rol. Abr. 939: Bridg. 118: 2 Bulst. 95, 290: Hard. 113: 3 Lev. 41: 2 Salk. 573, 5: Carth. 210: 1 Ld. Raym. 419, 691: See Cro. Eliz. 352: 1 And. 307: 1 Rol. Abr. 939: Carth 63: Salk. 373: 1 Show. 46.

If two are jointly and severally bound in an obligation, and the obligee, by deed, covenants and agrees not to sue one of them; this is no Release, and he may notwithstanding sue the other. Cro. Car. 551: March 95: 2 Salk. 575.

But if two are jointly and severally bound, a Release to one discharges the other. 1 Ld. Raym. 420. See 2 Vent. 217: 1 Ld. Raym. 691: 1 Lev. 152: and further, this Dict. titles Bond; Covenant; Agreement.

It seems agreed, that a will, though sealed and delivered, cannot amount to a Release, because it is ambulatory and revocable during the testator's life; and by reason of the executor's consent, requisite to every disposition of a personal thing by will, and the injury that might accrue to the testator's creditors, were a will allowed to operate as a Release. Stil. 285: 1 Vent. 39.

Therefore, where in debt on an obligation, by the representative of a testator, a defendant pleaded, that the testator by his last will in writing released to the defendant; this was adjudged ill, and that no advantage could be taken by plea. 1 Sid. 421.

But it hath been held in equity, that though a will cannot enure as a Release, yet provided it were expressed to be the intention of the testator that the debt should be discharged, the will would operate accordingly; and that in such case it would be plainly an absolute discharge of the debt, though the testator had survived the legatee. 1 P. Wms. 85: 2 Vern. 521.

So, in another case, it was held, that a Release by will can only operate as a legacy, and must be assets to pay the testator's debts; and if a debt so released by will be afterwards received by the testator himself in his lifetime, the legacy is extinct; and such Release by will intimates no more than that the executors should not, after the testator's death, trouble or molest the debtor. 2 P. Wms. 332.

If a debt is mentioned to be devised to the debtor, without words of Release or discharge of the debt, and the debtor die before the testator; this will not operate as a Release, but will be considered as a lapsed legacy, and the debt will subsist. 2 Vern. 522.

A debt is only a right to recover the amount of the debt by way of action: and as an executor cannot maintain an action against himself, or against a co-executor, the testator, by appointing the debtor an executor of his will, discharges the action, and consequently discharges the debt. Still, however, when the creditor makes the debtor his executor, it is to be considered but as a specific bequest or legacy, devised to the debtor to pay the debt; and therefore, like other legacies, it is not to be paid or retained, till the debts are satisfied; and if there are not assets for the payment of the debts, the executor is answerable for it to the creditors. In this case, it is the same whether the executor accepts or refuses the executorship. On the other hand, if the debtor makes the creditor his executor, and the creditor accepts the executorship, if there are assets, he may retain his debt out of the assets, against the creditors in equal degree with himself; but if there are not assets, he may sue the heir, where the heir is bound. 1 Inst. 264. (b) in n. See this Dictionary, titles Executor; Legacy; Will.

In the case of Smith v. Stafford (Hob. 216), the husband promised the wife, before marriage, that he would leave her worth 100*l.* The marriage took effect, and the question was, whether the marriage was a Release of the promise. All the Judges but Hobart were of opinion, that as the action could not arise during the marriage, the marriage could not be a Release of it. The doctrine of this case was admitted in that of Gage v. Acton; which arose upon a bond executed by the husband to the wife, before marriage, with a condition making it void if she survived him, and he left her 1000*l.* Two of the Judges were of opinion, that the debt was only suspended, as it was on a contingency which could not, by any possibility, happen during the marriage. But Holt, Chief Justice, differed from them; he admitted, that a covenant or promise by the husband to the wife, to leave her so much in case she survives him, is good; because it is only a future debt on a contingency, which cannot happen during the marriage, and that is precedent to the debt: but that a bond debt was a present debt, and the condition was not precedent, but subsequent; that made it a present duty, and the marriage was consequently a Release of it. The case afterwards went into Chancery. The bond was taken there to be the agreement of the parties, and relief accordingly decreed. See 1 Salk. 325: 12 Mod. 290: 2 Vern. 481. A like decree was made in the case of Camel v. Buckle, 2 P. Wms. 243. See further, this Dictionary, title Baron and Feme.

III. Littleton says, that a Release of all Demands is the best Release to him to whom it is made; and Coke says, that the word Demand is the largest word in Law, except Claim; and that a Release of all Demands discharges all sorts of actions, rights and titles, conditions before or after breach, executions, appeals, rents of all kinds, covenants, annuities, contracts, recognizances, statutes, commons, &c. Litt. § 508: Co. Litt. 291.

But notwithstanding the large import of the word Demands, yet there are several instances where the generality of the word hath been restrained to the particular occasion for which the Release was made.

By a Release of all Demands, all actions real, personal, and mixed, and all actions of appeal, are extinct. Litt. § 509: 8 Co. 154.

So a Release of all Demands extends to inheritances, and takes away rights of entry, seizures, &c. Co. Litt. 291. But if the King releaseth all Demands, yet as to him the inheritance shall not be included. Bro. Prerogative, pl. 62: Bridg. 124.

By a Release of all Demands made to the tenant of the land, a common of pasture shall be extinct. Co. Litt. 291.

A Release of all Demands will bar a demand of a relief, because the relief is by reason of the seigniory to which it belongs. Cro. Jac. 170.

If A. being possessed of goods loses them, and they come to the hands of B. who being in possession, A by deed releases to B. all actions and demands personal which at any time before habuit vel habere potuit against B. for any cause, matter, or thing whatsoever; this shall bar A. of the property of the goods; so that B. has the absolute right in him by this Release. 2 Roll. Abr. 407.

By a Release of all Demands, all manner of executions are gone, for the recoveror cannot sue out a fieri facias, capias, or elegit, without a demand. Litt. § 508: 2 Rol. Abr. 407.

By a Release of all Demands to the conusor of a statute-merchant, before the day of payment, the conusee shall be barred of his action, because the duty is always in demand; yet if he releases all his right in the land, it is no bar. Co. Litt. 291: Bridgm. 124.

So, a bond conditioned to pay money at a day to come, is a debt and duty presently, and may be discharged by a Release of all actions and demands before the day of payment. Cro. Jac. 300.

 But

But in an action of debt for non-performance of an award made for payment of money at a day to come; there is no present debt, nor any duty before the day of payment is come, therefore it cannot be discharged before the day, by a Release of all actions and demands. Yelv. 214: Cro. Jac. 300.

So, if a man devises a legacy of 20*l.* to J. S. at the age of 23, though the legatee, after he attains the age of 21, and before the day of payment, may release it, yet by the word, Demands, it is not released, but there must be special words for the purpose. 10 Co. 51.

A Release of all Demands does not discharge a covenant not broken at the time; but a Release of all Covenants will release the Covenant. Cro. Jac. 173: 2 Roll. Abr. 407: Noy 123. For the difference when broken or not, see Dyer 217: Litt. Rep. 86: 3 Leon. 69: 5 Co. 71: Hoe's case: 10 Co. 51: Co. Litt. 292: 8 Co. 153: 1 And. 8, 64: and this Dictionary, title Covenant.

If a Lessee for life grants over his estate by indenture, reserving rent during the continuance of the estate, and afterwards releases to the assignee all demands; this shall discharge the rent, for he had the freehold of the rent in him at the time. 2 Roll. Abr. 408: Cro. Jac. 486: Bridgm. 123: 2 Roll. Rep. 20: Poph. 136.

So, if Lessee for years grants over by indenture all his estate, reserving a rent during the term, and afterwards releases to the assignee all demands, this shall release the rent; for though he cannot have an action to demand all the estate, yet this is an estate in him of the rent, and assignable over; and in an action of debt for any arrears after, he shall claim it as a duty accrued from the estate; and it shall not be said that the duty arises annually on taking the profits, but this had its commencement and creation by the reservation of the contract, which was before. 2 Roll. Abr. 408.

If there be Lessee for years rendering rent, and the Lessor grants over the reversion, and the Lessee attorns, and after the Lessee assigns over his estate, and after, the Assignee of the reversion releases all demands to the first Lessee, yet this shall not release the rent; for there is neither privity of the estate or contract between them after the assignment; but if the Release had been made to the Assignee, it had extinguished the rent. 2 Roll. Abr. 408: Moor 544: Cro. Eliz. 606.

If he who has a rent-charge in fee releases to the tenant of the land all demands from the beginning of the world till the making of the deed of Release; this shall discharge all the rent, as well that to come as what is past. 20 Ass. pl. 5: 2 Roll. Abr. 408.

It is said by Littleton and Coke, that by a Release of all demands a rent-service shall be released; but this it is said is to be intended of a rent-service in gross, as a seigniory. Litt. §510: Co. Litt. 291. Therefore, where in action of covenant on a lease for years, to pay the rent reserved, the defendant pleaded Release by the plaintiff of all demands, at a day before the rent in question became due; the plaintiff replied, that the Release was in performance of an award of all matters in controversy between the plaintiff and defendant; and on demurrer it was adjudged, that the rent was not discharged by this Release; as it became due by the perception of the profits, and was not like to a rent-charge, or a rent-parcel of a seigniory; and that this rent being incident to the reversion, and part thereof, was no more released than the reversion itself; and this construction should the rather prevail, as it was not the intention of the party to release this rent; but Twisden said, that in Releases and Deeds, when words are heaped up, the party who is to take advantage may take the strongest word, and the strongest sense, and that is the reason they are put in; and as to the intent, that must be gathered from the words, and men must take care what words they use: And he said, he could see no difference between this rent, and a rent in fee, both are rent-services, and neither demandable before they become due; otherwise than as in 40 Ed. 3. 47, it is said, there is a continual demand betwixt lord and tenant; and in this case there is a tenure between the Lessee and him in reversion; and the reason why the reversion is not touched by this Release is, because it can work only by way of extinguishment, and not by way of passing an interest; but it was adjudged against the Release. 1 Lev. 99, 100: 1 Sid. 141: 1 Keb. 499, 510: See 2 Salk. 578.

IV. A Release of all Actions discharges a bond to pay money on a day to come; for it is debitum in præsenti, quamvis sit solvendum in futuro; and it is a thing merely in action, and the right of action is in him who releases, though no action will lie when the Release is made. Co. Litt. 292. See title Bond.

But a Release of Actions does not discharge a rent before the day of payment, for it is neither debitum nor solvendum at the time of the Release; nor is it merely a thing in action, for it is grantable over. Co. Litt. 292.

So, if a man has an annuity for a term of years, for life, or in fee, and he, before it be in arrear, releases all Actions; this shall not release the annuity, for it is not merely in action, because it may be granted over. Co. Litt. 292: 1 Bulst. 178: Cro. Eliz. 897: Moor 113. But such Release shall release the arrears incurred before. 39 H. 6. 43: 2 Roll. Abr. 404.

By a Release of all manner of Actions, all Actions, as well criminal as real, personal, and mixed, are released. Co. Litt. 287.

A Release of Actions real is a good bar in actions mixed; as, Assise of novel disseisin, Waste, Quare impedit, Annuity; and so is a Release of Actions personal. Co. Litt. 284. But not after the grantee has made his election. 1 Jones 215.

In an appeal of robbery or felony, a Release of all Actions personal will not bar; because an appeal, in which the appellee is to have judgment of death, is higher than a personal action; but a Release of all manner of Actions, or of all Actions criminal, or of all Actions mortal, or of all Actions concerning the Pleas of the Crown, or of all Appeals, or of all Demands, will be a good bar of any such appeal. Co. Litt. 287.

And in appeal of maihem a Release of all Actions personal may be pleaded, because damages only are recovered. Co. Litt. 288.

A Release of all Actions is regularly no bar to an execution; for execution is no action, but begins when the action ends Co. Litt. 289: 8 Co. 153.

Also a Release of all Actions does not regularly release a Writ of Error; for it is no action, but a commission to the Justices to examine the record; but if therein the plaintiff may recover, or be restored to any thing, it may be released by the name of Action. 2 Inst. 40: Yelv. 209: Co. Litt. 288. But, by a Release of all Suits, a man is barred of a Writ of Error. Latch. 110. So, by a Release of all Suits, a man is barred of execution, because it cannot be had without application to the Court, and prayer of the party, which is his suit. Co. Litt. 291: 8 Co. 153.

A Release of all Actions is a good bar to a scire facias, though it be a judicial writ, for the defendant may plead to it, and it is in nature of a new original given by the statute. Co. Litt. 290: Comb. 455.

So, in replevin, a Release of all Actions is a good bar, for the avowant is defendant, though in some respects he is plaintiff. 2 Rol. Rep. 75.

So, if a man by wrong takes away my goods; if I release to him all Actions personal, yet by Law I may take the goods out of his possession. Co. Litt. 286: Skin. 57.

If a man releases all Actions, by this he shall release as well Actions which he hath as executor, as those in his own right. 39 Ed. 3. 26: 2 Roll. Abr. 404: 2 Ld. Raym. 1307. S. C. cited by Powel; and said by him to be clearly so, unless there was an Action of his own for the Release to work upon.

If a man releases all quarrels; a man's deed being taken most strongly against himself, it is as beneficial as all Actions, for by it all Actions real, personal, and mixed, are released; and all causes of Action, though no action then depending. Co. Litt. 292.

If a person release to another all his right which he hath in the land, without using any more words, as, To hold to him and his heirs, &c. the Releffee hath only an estate for life. Dyer 263. A Release made to a tenant in tail, or for life, of right to land, shall extend to him in remainder or reversion. 1 Inst. 267. By Release of all a man's right unto lands, all actions, entries, titles of dower, rents, &c. are discharged; though it bars not a right that shall descend afterwards: And a Release of all right in such land will not discharge a judgment not executed; because such judgment doth not vest any right: but only makes the land liable to execution. 8 Rep. 151: 3 Salk. 298.

It is said a Release of all one's title to lands, is a Release of all one's right. Lit. § 509: 1 Inst. 292. By a Release of all entries, or right of entry, which a man hath into lands, without more words, the Releasor is barred of all right or power of entry into those lands; and yet if a man have a double remedy, viz. a right of entry, and an action to recover, and then release all entries, by this he is not barred and excluded his action; nor doth a Release of Actions bar the right of entry. Plowd. 484: 1 Inst. 345.

If a disseisee releases to the disseisor all Actions; this is no Release of his right of entry; for when a man has several means to come at his right, he may release one, and yet take benefit of the other. Co. Litt. 28, b: 8 Co. 141.

V. To prevent maintenance, and the multiplying of contentions and suits, it was an established maxim of the Common Law, that no possibility, right, title, or any other thing that was not in possession, could be granted or assigned to strangers: A right in action could not be transferred even by act of Law; nor was it considered as transferred to the King by the general transferring words of an Act of Attainder. See 3 Rep. 2, b. But a right or title to the freehold or inheritance of lands might be released in five manners. 1. To the tenant of the freehold, in fact, or in Law, without any privity. 2. To him in Remainder. 3. To him in reversion. 4. To him who had right only, in respect of privity; as if the tenant were disseised, the lord, notwithstanding the disseisin, might release his services to him. 5. To him who had privity only, and not the right; as, if tenant in tail made a feoffment in fee, after this feoffment, no right remained in him; yet in respect of the privity only, the donor might release to him the rent and services. So, 6. If the terretenants, and the person entitled to the right or possibility, joined in a grant of the lands, it would pass them to the grantee, discharged from the right or possibility. See 10 Rep. 49, (b). But the law is now altered, in the above instances, in many respects. As to the assignment of things in action, see title Assignment. A contingent remainder in real estates can only be transferred by a fine and a common recovery, in which the remainder-man comes in upon the voucher. See titles Recovery; Remainder.

On the principles of the Common Law above stated, it was held, that an heir at law cannot release to his father's disseisor in the lifetime of the father; for the heirship of the heir is a contingent thing, for he may die in the lifetime of the father, or the father may alien the lands. Lit. § 446: Co. Lit. 265, a: 10 Co. 51: Bridgm. 76.

So, if the conusee of a statute released to the conusor all his right to the land, yet he might afterwards sue execution, for he had no right to the land, but only a possibility. 1 And. 133: Co. Lit. 265: 2 Roll. Abr. 405: Cro. Eliz. 552.

So, if a creditor release to his debtor all the right and title which he hath to his lands, and afterwards get judgment against him, he may extend a moiety of the same land; for he had no right to the land at the time of the Release, and the land is not bound but in respect to the person. 2 Mod. 281: 2 Lev. 215.

So, if a plaintiff releases all demands to the bail in the King's Bench, and afterwards judgment be given against the principal, execution may be sued against the bail; for that, at the time of the Release, there was only a possibility of the bail becoming chargeable. 5 Co. 70: Co. Lit. 265: Moor 469: Cro. Eliz. 579: Hut. 17: and see Moor 852.

So, if A. recovers in trespass against B. in B. R., and B. brings a writ of error, pending which A. releases to B. all executions, and afterwards the judgment is affirmed, and new damages given to A. for the delay, (on stat. 3 H. 7. c. 10,) this Release shall not bar A. to have execution of those damages, because he had not any right to have execution, nor to any duty when the Release was made. 2 Roll. Abr. 404: Cro. Jac. 337: 1 Roll. Rep. 11.

If the next presentation to a church be granted to A. and B. and living the incumbent, A. releases all his estate, title, and interest to B., this Release is void, it being of a chose in action; otherwise, had the Release been made after the avoidance, at which time the interest would have been vested in A. Cro. Eliz. 173, 600. Owen 85: 1 Leon. 167: 3 Leon. 256: Dyer 244: 10 Co. 48.

A city orphan cannot at Law release her orphanage part to her father, for she hath no right in her during the life of her father; but it hath been held in equity, that such Release

Release being for a valuable consideration, as on the marriage of a daughter, and a portion given her by the father, such Release may operate as an agreement to waive the orphanage, and hath accordingly been so decreed in equity. 1 P. Wms. 638: 2 P. Wms. 527: Preced. Chan. 545.

If there be a devise of a term for years to A. for life, remainder to B —— B. may release his right to A., and such Release shall extinguish his interest, though it was objected that B. had only a possibility at the time of the Release made. 10 Co. 47.

But it was held, that B. could not assign over his interest to a stranger in the lifetime of A., the same being only a chose in action, and a mere possibility; inasmuch as an estate for life is in supposition of Law a larger estate than for any number of years. 10 Co. 47: 4 Co. 66: 1 Sid. 188: Raym. 146.

Later resolutions, however, in Courts of Equity, have made a great alteration in this doctrine. 2 Vern. 563. See this Dict. title Assignment.

A duty uncertain at first, which, on a condition precedent, is to be made certain afterwards, is but a possibility which cannot be released. 5 Co. 702: 2 Mod. 281. As a nomine pœnæ waiting on a rent, which cannot be released till the rent is behind, as the non-payment of the rent makes the nomine pœnæ a duty. Yelv. 215: Brownl. 116. So, if a man covenant to pay 10*l.* on the birth of a child, the covenantor cannot be released of the 10*l.*; it resting merely in contingency whether such child ever will be born or not. Yelv. 192.

So, if an award be, that on a plaintiff's delivering to defendant, by a certain day, a load of hay, defendant shall pay him 10*l.*; in this case the 10*l.* cannot be released before the day, for it rests merely in possibility and contingency, whether the money shall ever be paid, for it becomes a duty on delivery of the hay only, and not before. Yelv. 215. See title Award.

In debt on bond against the defendant as administrator, &c. the defendant pleaded a Release; whereby the plaintiff, reciting that there were several controversies between the defendant and him, about a legacy and the right of administration, releases to the defendant all his right, title, interest, and demand of, in, and to the personal estate of the intestate; and, on demurrer, this was held to be no plea; and a difference was taken by Holt, between a Release of all Demands to the person of the obligor or administrator, and a Release of all Demands to the personal estate of the obligor or intestate; that the last will not discharge the bond, as the other may, because the bond does not give any right or demand upon the personal estate, &c. until judgment and execution sued Salk. 575: 2 Ld. Raym. 786.

If A. promises B. in consideration that he will sell to his son certain merchandise, at such a price, that if his son does not pay it at the feast of St. Michael next ensuing, he himself will pay it; and before Michaelmas, A. releases all actions and demands to him who made the promise, this shall not release the assumpsit: For till Michaelmas it cannot be known whether his son will have paid it or not, and, till default by him, the other is not bound to pay it; so it is a mere contingency till Michaelmas, which cannot be released. 2 *Rol. RELIEF, Relevamen; but in Domesday, Relevatio, relevium.] A certain sum of money which the tenant, holding by knights-service, grand serjeanty, or other tenure, (for which homage or legal service is due,) and being at full age at the death of his ancestor, paid unto his lord at his entrance. See Bracton, lib. 2. c. 36: Britton, c. 69: Grand Custumary of Normandy, c. 34.

Skene, de verbor. signif. verb. Relevium, saith, Relief is a French word, from the Latin relevare, to relieve, or take up that which is fallen; for it is given by the tenant or vassal, who is of perfect age, after the expiring of the wardship, to his superior lord, of whom he held his lands by knight-service, that is, by Ward and Relief: For, by payment thereof, he relieves, and, as it were, raiseth up again his lands, after they were fallen down into his superior's hands, by reason of wardship, &c.

Relief is otherwise thus explained, viz. A feudatory or beneficiary estate in lands was at first granted only for life; and after death of the vassal it returned to the chief lord, for which reason it was called Feudum caducum, viz. fallen to the lord by the death of the tenant; afterwards, these feudatory estates being turned into an inheritance, by the connivance and assent of the chief lord, when the possessor of such an estate died, it was called Hæreditas caduca, i. e. it was fallen to the chief lord; to whom the heir having paid a certain sum of money, he did then relevare hæreditatem caducam out of his hands; and the money thus paid was called a Relief.

This must be understood after the Conquest; for, in the time of the Saxons, there were no Reliefs, but heriots paid to the lord at the death of his tenant; which in those days were horses, arms, &c. and such tributes could not be exacted by the English immediately after the Conquest, for they were deprived of both by the Normans; and instead thereof, in many places, the payment of certain sums of money was substituted, which they called a Relief; and which continues to this day.

Relief reasonable, or, as it is sometimes called, lawful and ancient Relief, is such as is injoined by some law, or becomes due by custom, and doth not depend on the will of the lord. What that was, we may read in the Laws of William the Conqueror, c. 22. and of Henry I. c. 14; and, before that time, in the Laws of Canutus, c. 97; viz. The Relief of an Earl was eight war-horses, with their bridles and saddles, four loricas, four helmets, four shields, four pikes, four swords, four hunting horses, and a palfrey, with their bridles and saddles: the Relief of a Baron or Thane was four horses, two with furniture, and two without, two swords, four lances, four shields and an helmet, cum lorica, and fifty marks in gold. The Relief of a Vavasor was his father's horse, his helmet, shield, lance, and sword which he had at his death. The Relief of a Villein, or countryman, was his best beast, &c. Cowell. See title Tenures.

REMAINDER.

Remanentia.] An estate limited in lands, tenements or rents, to be enjoyed after the expiration of another particular estate. And a Remainder may be either for a certain term, or in fee-simple, or fee-tail. Broke, title Donee and Remainder, 245: Glanv. lib. 7. c. 1. The difference between a Remainder and Reversion, according to Spelman, is this, That by a Reversion, after the appointed term, the estate returns to the donor, or his heirs, as the proper fountain; whereas by Remainder it goes to some third person, or a stranger. Cowell.

Remainder is described to be a remnant of an estate in lands or tenements, expectant on a particular estate created together with the same, and at the same time; and is so expectant on the particular estate, that unless it can take effect when the particular estate determines, it is void. Co. Lit. 49. 143: 2 Co. 51: Moor 344: Vaugh. 269.

V. What Words are sufficient to create a Remainder; and herein, in what Cases the Heir shall take by Words of Purchase, or Words of Limitation, and the Effect thereof: And see this Dictionary, title Purchase.

I. An Estate in Remainder may be defined to be, an estate limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another estate is determined. As, if a man, seised in fee-simple, grant lands to A. for twenty years, and after the determination of the said term, then to B. and his heirs for for ever: Here A. is tenant for years, Remainder to B. in fee. In the first place, an estate for years is created or carved out of the fee, and given to A; and the residue or Remainder of it is given to B. But both these interests are in fact only one estate; the present term of years and the Remainder afterwards, when added together, being equal only to one estate in fee. Co. Lit. 143. They are indeed different parts, but they constitute only one whole: they are carved out of one and the same inheritance: they are both created, and may both subsist, together; the one in possession, the other in expectancy. So, if land be granted to A. for 20 years, and after the determination of the said term to B. for life; and, after the determination of B.'s estate for life, it be limited to C. and his heirs for ever: This makes A. tenant for years, with Remainder to B. for life, Remainder over to C. in fee. Now, here the estate of inheritance undergoes a division into three portions: there is first A.'s estate for years carved out of it; and after that B.'s estate for life; and then the whole that remains is limited to C. and his heirs. And here also the first estate, and both the Remainders, for life, and in fee, are one estate only; being nothing but parts or portions of one entire inheritance; and if there were a hundred Remainders, it would still be the same thing; upon a principle grounded in mathematical truth, that all the parts are equal, and no more than equal, to the whole. And hence, also, it is easy to collect, that no Remainder can be limited after the grant of an estate in fee-simple: because a fee-simple is the highest and largest estate that a Subject is capable of enjoying; and he that is tenant in fee hath in him the whole of the estate: a Remainder therefore, which is only a portion, or residuary part, of the estate, cannot be reserved after the whole is disposed of. Plowd. 29: Vaugh. 269. A particular estate, with all the Remainders expectant thereon, is only one fee-simple; as 40*l.* is part of 100*l.*, and 60*l.* is the Remainder of it: wherefore, after a fee-simple once vested, there can no more be a Remainder limited thereon, than after the whole 100*l.* is appropriated there can be any residue subsisting. 2 Comm. c. 11.

Thus much being premised, the Student will be the better enabled to comprehend the rules that are laid down by Law to be observed in the creation of Remainders; and the reasons upon which those rules are founded.

First, There must necessarily be some particular estate, precedent to the estate in Remainder. As, an estate for years to A. Remainder to B. for life; or, an estate for life to A. Remainder to B. in tail. This precedent estate is called the particular estate, as being only a small part, particula, of the inheritance; the residue or Remainder of which is granted over to another. The necessity of creating this preceding particular estate, in order to make a good Remainder, arises from this plain reason; that Remainder is a relative expression, and implies that some part of the thing is previously disposed of: for, where the whole is conveyed at once, there cannot possibly exist a Remainder; but the interest granted, whatever it be, will be an estate in possession. See Co. Lit. 49: Plowd. 25.

An estate created to commence at a distant period of time, without any intervening estate, is therefore properly no Remainder: it is the whole of the gift, and not a residuary part. And such future estates can only be made of chattel interests, which were considered in the light of mere contracts by the ancient Law, to be executed either now or hereafter, as the contracting parties should agree: But an estate of freehold must be created to commence immediately; for it is an ancient rule of the Common Law, that an estate of freehold cannot be created to commence in futuro; but it ought to take effect presently, either in possession or Remainder: 5 Rep. 94: Because, at Common Law, no freehold in lands could pass without livery of seisin; which must operate either immediately, or not at all. It would therefore be contradictory, if an estate, which is not to commence till hereafter, could be granted by a conveyance, which imports an immediate possession. Therefore, though a lease to A. for 7 years, to commence from next Michaelmas, is good; yet a conveyance to B. of lands, to hold to him and his heirs for ever, from the end of three years next ensuing, is void. So that, when it is intended to grant an estate of freehold, whereof the enjoyment shall be deferred till a future time, it is necessary to create a previous particular estate, which may subsist till that period of time is completed; and for the grantor to deliver immediate possession of the land, to the tenant of this particular estate; which is construed to be giving possession to him in Remainder, since his estate and that of the particular tenant are one and the same estate, in Law. As, where one leases to A. for three years, with Remainder to B. in fee, and makes livery of seisin to A.; here, by the livery, the freehold is immediately created, and vested in B. during the continuance of A.'s term of years. The whole estate passes at once from the grantor to the grantees, and the Remainder-man is seised of his Remainder at the same time that the termor is possessed of his term. The enjoyment of it must indeed be deferred till hereafter; but it is, to all intents and purposes, an estate commencing in præsenti, though to be occupied and enjoyed in futuro.

As no Remainder can be created, without such a precedent particular estate, therefore the particular estate is said to support the Remainder. But a lease at will is not held to be such a particular estate, as will support a Remainder over. 8 Rep. 75. For an estate at will is of a nature so slender and precarious, that it is not looked upon as a portion of the inheritance; and a portion must first be taken out of it, in order to constitute a Remainder. Besides, if it be a Freehold Remainder, livery of seisin must be given at the time of its creation; and the entry of the grantor, to do this, determines the estate at will in the very instant in which it is made. Dyer 18. Or, if the Remainder be a chattel interest, though perhaps the deed of creation might operate as a future contract, if the tenant for years be a party to it, yet it is void by way of Remainder: For it is a separate independent contract, distinct from the precedent estate at will; and every Remainder must be part of one and the same estate, out of which the preceding particular estate is taken. Raym. 151. And hence it is generally true, that if the particular estate is void in its creation, or by any means is defeated afterwards, the Remainder supported thereby shall be defeated also: as, where the particular estate is an estate for the life of a person not in esse; or an estate for life upon condition, on breach of which condition the grantor enters and avoids the estate; in either of these cases the Remainder over is void. Co. Lit. 298: 2 Roll. Ab. 415: 1 Jon. 58.

Secondly, The Remainder must commence, or pass out of the grantor, at the time of the creation of the particular estate. Lit. § 671: Plowd. 25. As, where there is an estate to A. for life, with Remainder to B. in fee: Here B.'s Remainder in fee passes from the grantor at the same time that seisin is delivered to A. of his life estate in possession. And it is this, which induces the necessity at Common Law of livery of seisin being made, on the particular estate, whenever a Freehold Remainder is created. For, if it be limited even on an estate for years, it is necessary that the lessee for years should have livery of seisin, in order to convey the freehold from and out of the grantor; otherwise the Remainder is void. Lit. § 60. Not that the livery is necessary to strengthen the estate for years; but, as livery of the land is requisite to convey the freehold, and yet cannot be given to him in Remainder, without infringing the possession of the lessee for years, therefore, the Law allows such livery, made to the tenant of the particular estate, to relate and enure to him in Remainder, as both are but one estate in Law. Co. Lit. 49

Thirdly, The Remainder must vest in the grantee during the continuance of the particular estate, or eo instanti that it determines. Plowd. 25: 1 Rep. 66. As, if A. be tenant for life, Remainder to B. in tail; here B.'s Remainder is vested in him, at the creation of the particular estate to A. for life: Or, if A. and B. be tenants for their joint lives, Remainder to the survivor in fee; here, though during their joint lives, the Remainder is vested in neither, yet, on the death of either of them, the Remainder vests instantly in the survivor: wherefore both these are good Remainders. But, if an estate be limited to A. for life, Remainder to the eldest son of B. in tail, and A. dies before B. hath any son; here the Remainder will be void, for it did not vest in any one during the continuance, nor at the determination, of the particular estate: and, even supposing that B. should afterwards have a son, he shall not take by this Remainder; for, as it did not vest at or before the end of the particular estate, it never can vest at all, but is gone for ever. 1 Rep. 138. And this depends upon the principle before laid down, that the precedent particular estate, and the Remainder, are one estate in Law; they must therefore subsist and be in esse at one and the same instant of time, either during the continuance of the first estate, or at the very instant when that determines, so that no other estate can possibly come between them. For there can be no intervening estate between the particular estate, and the Remainder supported thereby; 3 Rep. 21: the thing supported must fall to the ground, if once its support be severed from it. 2 Comm. c. 11.

If a man makes a lease to A. for life, and that after the death of A., and one day after, the land shall remain to B. for life, &c. this is a void Remainder, because not to take effect immediately on the determination of the first estate, and so during that time there would be an interruption of the livery, and no tenant of the freehold, either to do the services, or answer to the præcipes of strangers: Plowd. 25: Raym. 144: that the Law is nice to an instant. 1 Ld. Raym. 316.

It is upon these rules, but principally the last, that the doctrine of Contingent Remainders depends. For Remainders are either vested or contingent. Vested Remainders, whereby a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in futuro, are where the estate is invariably fixed, to remain to a determinate person, after the particular estate is spent. As, if A. be tenant for twenty years, Remainder to B. in fee; here B.'s is a vested Remainder, which nothing can defeat, or set aside. See post. II. and also post. V. as to the distinction between Remainders vested and executed.

II. CONTINGENT or Executory Remainders (whereby no present interest passes) are where the estate in Remainder is limited to take effect, either to a dubious and uncertain person; or upon a dubious and uncertain event; so that the particular estate may chance to be determined, and the Remainder never take effect. 3 Rep. 20.

Thus, if A. be tenant for life, with Remainder to B.'s eldest son (then unborn) in tail; this is a Contingent Remainder, for it is uncertain whether B. will have a son or no: but the instant that a son is born, the Remainder is no longer contingent, but vested. Though, if A. had died before the contingency happened, that is, before B.'s son was born, the Remainder would have been absolutely gone; for the particular estate was determined before the Remainder could vest. Nay, by the strict rule of Law, if A. were tenant for life, Remainder to his own eldest son in tail, and A. died without issue born, but leaving his wife enseint, or big with child, and after his death a posthumous son was born, this son could not take the land, by virtue of this Remainder; for the particular estate determined before there was any person in esse, in whom the Remainder could vest. Salk. 228: 4 Mod. 282. But, to remedy this hardship, it is enacted, by stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 16, That posthumous children shall be capable of taking in Remainder, in the same manner as if they had been born in their father's lifetime: that is, the Remainder is allowed to vest in them, while yet in their mother's womb.

The particular case on which this statute was passed, (as many statutes have arisen from circumstances of private hardship, or injustice,) was as follows:—A father had devised an estate to his son for life, with a Remainder to the first and other sons of the son in tail; the son died, leaving his wife pregnant, who was afterwards delivered of a son: The Courts of C. P. and K. B. held clearly, that the grandson, not being born at the expiration of the estate for life, was not entitled to take it: But the Lords, moved by the hardship of the case, reversed the judgment of the Courts below, contrary to the opinions of all the Judges. Reeve v. Long, 1 Salk. 227, & alibi. But the House of Commons, in reproof of what they considered as an assumption of legislative authority in the Lords, immediately brought in an act, which passed into the above statute. The statute only mentions marriage and other settlements; and it is probable that devises were designedly omitted to be expressed, from delicacy, and that the authority of the judgment of the Peers might not be too openly impeached. As the statute says, that the posthumous son, in this case, shall take the estate as if born before the death of the father, he is entitled to the intermediate profits from the death of the father; 3 Atk. 203; which is different from the case of a descent devested by the birth of a posthumous child. See title Descent; Rule I.

This species of Contingent Remainders, to a person not in being, must however be limited to some one, that may, may, by common possibility, or potentia propinqua, be in esse at or before the particular estate determines. 2 Rep. 51. As, if an estate be made to A. for life, Remainder to the heirs of B.: now, if A. dies before B. the Remainder is at an end; for during B.'s life he has no heir, nemo est hæres viventis: but if B. dies first, the Remainder then immediately vests in his heir, who will be entitled to the land, on the death of A. See post. This is a good Contingent Remainder, for the possibility of B.'s dying before A. is potentia propinqua, and therefore allowed in Law. Co. Lit. 378. But a Remainder to the right heirs of B. (if there be no such person as B. in esse,) is void. Hob. 33. For here there must two contingencies happen; first, that such a person as B. shall be born; and, secondly, that he shall also die during the continuance of the particular estate; which make it potentia remotissima, a most improbable possibility. A Remainder to a man's eldest son, who hath none, (we have seen,) is good; for, by common possibility, he may have one; but if it be limited in particular to his son John, or Richard, it is bad, if he have no son of that name; for it is too remote a possibility that he should not only have a son, but a son of a particular name. 5 Rep. 51. A limitation of a Remainder to a bastard, before it is born, is not good; for though the Law allows the possibility of having bastards, it presumes it to be a very remote and improbable contingency. Cro. Eliz. 509.

Next; with respect to a Contingent Remainder, where the person to whom it is limited is fixed and certain, but the event upon which it is to take effect is vague and uncertain.—Where land is given to A. for life, and in case B. survives him, then with Remainder to B. in fee: here B. is a certain person, but the Remainder to him is a Contingent Remainder, depending upon a dubious event, the uncertainty of his surviving A. During the joint lives of A. and B. it is contingent; and if B. dies first, it never can vest in his heirs, but is for ever gone; but if A. dies first, the Remainder to B. becomes vested. 2 Comm. c. 11.

Contingent Remainders of either kind, if they amount to a freehold, cannot be limited on an estate for years, or any other particular estate, less than a freehold. Thus, if land be granted to A. for ten years, with Remainder in fee to the right heirs of B.; this Remainder is void: but if granted to A. for life, with a like Remainder, it is good. 1 Rep. 130. For, unless the freehold passes out of the grantor at the time when the Remainder is created, such Freehold Remainder is void: it cannot pass out of him, without vesting somewhere; and in the case of a Contingent Remainder it must vest in the particular tenant, else it can vest no where: unless, therefore, the estate of such particular tenant be of a freehold nature, the freehold cannot vest in him, and consequently the Remainder is void. 2 Comm. c. 11.

A Contingent Remainder is defined, by Fearne, to be a Remainder limited so as to depend on an event or condition, which may never happen or be performed; or which may not happen or be performed, till after the determination of the preceding estate; for if the preceding estate (unless it be a mere trust estate) determine before such event or condition happens, the Remainder will never take effect. Under this definition, we may properly distinguish four sorts of Contingent Remainders, First, Where the Remainder depends entirely on a contingent determination of the preceding estate itself.—Secondly, Where the contingency on which the Remainder is to take effect is independent of the determination of the preceding estate.—Thirdly, Where the condition, upon which the Remainder is limited, is certain in event, but the determination of the particular estate may happen before it.—Fourthly, Where the person, to whom the Remainder is limited, is not yet ascertained, or not yet in being. Fearne 3, 4.

In the case of Dormer v. Fortescue; [reported in its various stages by the name of Dormer v. Fortescue: Dormer v. Parkhurst: Barrington d. Dormer v. Parkhurst: Smith v. Packhurst, or Parkhurst: Parkhurst v. Smith, &c. See Bro. P. C. titles Fine; Remainder;] an estate was limited (after several precedent estates) to the use of A. for 99 years, if he should so long live; and after his decease, or the sooner determination of the estate limited to him for 99 years, to the use of trustees, and their heirs, during his life, upon trust, to preserve the Contingent Remainders: and after the end or determination of that term, to the use of A.'s first and other sons successively in tail-male; Remainder to the heirs of the body of the original settler; Remainder to such settler's right heirs. All the preceding estates being determined, A. came into the possession of the lands limited to him for 99 years; and having a son, they joined in levying a fine, and suffering a common recovery, in which the son was vouched. If the trustees took a vested estate of freehold during the life of A., the recovery was void, there not being a good tenant to the præcipe, the father being only tenant for years; but if they took a contingent estate, the freehold was in the son, and of course there was a good tenant to the præcipe. Upon this point, the case was argued in the Court of K. B. and afterwards on appeal before the House of Lords, where all the Judges were ordered to attend. Lee, C. J. when the cause was heard in K. B., and Willes, C. J. in delivering the opinion of the Judges in the House of Lords, entered very fully into the distinction between contingent and vested Remainders. They seem to have laid down the following points:—That a Remainder is contingent, either where the person to whom it is limited is not in esse, or where the particular estate may determine before the Remainder can take place: but that in every case where the person to whom the Remainder is limited is in esse, and is actually capable, or entitled, to take, on the expiration or sooner determination of the particular estate, supposing that expiration or determination to take place at that moment, there the Remainder is vested. That the doubt arose, by not adverting to the distinction between the different nature of the contingency, in those cases where the Remainder is limited to a person in esse, but the title of the Remainder-man depends on a collateral or extraneous contingency, which may, or may not, take place during the continuance of the preceding estate; and those cases where the preceding estate may endure beyond the continuance of the estate in Remainder. Thus, if an estate is limited to A. for life, and, after the death of A. and J. S., to B. for life, or in tail, there, during the life of J. S., the title of B. depends on the contingency of J. S. dying in the lifetime of A. This being an event, which may, or may not, take place during the continuance of the preceding estate, B.'s estate is necessarily contingent. But then, supposing J. S. to die, still it remains an uncertainty whether B.'s estate will ever take place in possession: for, if the Remainder be limited to B. for life, there, if B. dies in A.'s life-time, A.'s estate would endure beyond the continuance of the estate limited in Remainder. The same would be the case if the Remainder over were limited to B. in tail, and B. was to die in A.'s life-time without issue. Yet, in both cases, it was agreed, that B. took not a contingent, but a vested Remainder. Hence they inferred, that it was not the possibility of the Remainder over never taking effect in possession, but the Remainder-man's not having a capacity or title to take, supposing the preceding estate at that instant to expire or determine, together with its being uncertain whether he ever will obtain that capacity or title, during the continuance of the preceding estate, that makes the Remainder contingent. Upon these grounds they determined, that the Trustees took a vested Remainder, and that the Recovery therefore was void.—The doctrine established in this case is laid down very precisely by Coke, 10 Rep. 85, where he, with great accuracy of expression, observes, that where it is dubious and uncertain whether the use or estate limited in future shall ever vest in interest, or not, then the use or estate is in contingency; because, upon a future contingent, it may either vest or never vest, as the contingent happens. See 1 Rep. 137, b: 1 Inst. 265, a. in n.: and post. V.

If an estate be limited, either at Common Law, or by way of use, to one for life, or in tail, Remainder to the right heirs of J. S. who is then dead; this is a good Remainder, and vests presently in the person who is heir at law to J. S. by purchase; see post. V. and though a daughter be then heir at law, and after a son is born, yet shall the daughter retain the land against him; for she being heir, and coming within the description at the time when the Remainder was limited, it then vested and settled in her, immediately, as a Remainder by purchase, and shall not, by any accident after, be defeated. 2 Rol. Abr. 415: 1 Co. 95, 103: Plow. 56.

But if J. S. be living at the time of the Remainder limited to his right heirs, this puts such Remainder in abeyance or contingency; that is, it is in no person, but in nubibus, till the contingency happens; for it is not in the feoffor, or donor, because he has limited it out of him, and all Remainders must pass out of him at the time of the limitation, though they do not presently vest in the person intended; and in the right heirs of J. S. it cannot be, because he cannot have heirs during life; so there is no person, in rerum natura, within the description, to take it; therefore it is, in the mean time, in abeyance, or expectancy, to vest or not vest, as the case happens; for if J. S. dies during the particular estate, then the Remainder presently takes place in his heirs; but if the particular estate determines, by death or otherwise, in the life of J. S. then such Remainder is become totally void, and can never vest; but the estate settles again in the feoffor, or donor, as if no such limitation in Remainder had been; and he becomes tenant to the præcipe, and is obliged to do the services; and though J. S. die soon after, yet his heir can have no benefit by it, not being capable of taking the Remainder when it fell. 1 Co. 135: Co. Lit. 378, a: 2 Co. 51: 2 Rol. Abr. 415: Plow. 28, 35: Poph. 74: Moor 730: 3 Co. 20: 10 Co. 50: Raym. 145: Pollex. 56. See Fearne 326—334, &c. where this doctrine of the Remainder being in abeyance, is considered as in some measure unintelligible; and another question depending thereon is stated thus: "A man [by settlement or will] makes a disposition of a Remainder, or future interest, which is to take no effect at all until a future event or contingency happens; it is admitted, that no interest passes by such a disposition, to any body, before the event referred to takes place. The question is, What becomes of the intermediate reversionary interest, from the time of the making such future disposition, until it takes effect? It was in the grantor, or testator, at the time of making such disposition, it is confessedly not included in it: The natural conclusion seems to be, that it remains where it was, viz. in the grantor, or the testator, and his heirs; for want of being departed with to any body else.—When the future disposition takes effect, then the reversionary or future interest passes, pursuant to the terms of it; but if such future disposition fails of effect, either by reason of the determination of the particular estate, failure of the contingency, or otherwise, what is there then to draw the estate, which was the intended subject of it, out of the grantor or his heirs, or the heirs of the testator? or who can derive title to an estate under a prospective disposition, which confessedly never takes any effect at all? Fearne 285, 6; 533.

But if there be no such J. S. at the time of the limitation, though he be after born, and dies, during the particular estate; yet his heirs shall never have the Remainder. So, if a Remainder be limited to A. son of B. in tail, &c. or to E. wife of D., where in truth there is no such A. or E., though B. has a son called A., or D. marries one E., yet they can never take the Remainder; because, if there be such persons as the words of the gift import, there the Remainder ought to vest in them presently, and they will never after be made capable of taking it; but if there be no such person then in esse, none who come within that description after, can lay claim to it, because the limitation was present to such persons; but a Remainder limited primogenito filio, or proximo hæredi masculo of A., or propinquioribus hæredibus de sanguine puerorum, or seniori puero of A., or to the right heirs of A., there being then such A. in esse, or to the wife A. shall marry; these are good Remainders, and vest when such persons come in esse as are within the description; because here appears no present regard for any person in particular; therefore, if they answer the description at any time before the particular estate determines, it is time enough; and so there is a diversity between a Remainder limited to one, by name in particular, and such Remainder limited by description or circumlocution, or between a general name and a special name. Co. Lit. 3: 1 Co. 66: 2 Co. 51: Hob. 33: Moor 104: Dyer 337: 2 Leon. 210: 1 Rol. Rep. 254.

A. makes a lease to B. for life of B., and after the death of A. to remain to B. and his heirs; this Remainder is contingent, and cannot vest presently, for if A. survives B. it is void; and because, otherwise, the operation of livery would be interrupted during the life of A.; for he cannot give himself any estate, his livery operating to pass estates from him, not to give any to him who had the whole before; therefore, during his life, the operation of the livery must cease, and by consequence no Remainder can take effect in virtue of that livery, which pro tempore being at an end, all that depended thereon ceases too, and can never after be revived; for the the livery must carry out all the estates at once from the feoffor; and if he comes again into the possession before they can all take effect, this breaks the force of the livery, and brings back again to him all that such livery had taken out from him, and then they never can take effect but by a new livery: This is the reason of the common case, that one cannot give lands to another to begin after his death, because, being to make livery presently, if that cannot operate presently, it can never operate at all; for it is a contradiction to give lands to one by a solemn livery, which is an act executed, and works presently; and yet, by words, to restrain that operation to a future time: But in the principal case, where A. dies first, there no interruption is of the livery, for B. had an estate for life by virtue thereof; and before that determines, the same livery which carried the Remainder in abeyance, for the uncertainty of its taking effect, does on A.'s death direct and settle, or bring down the Remainder to B. and his heirs. 10 Co. 85.

If a lease be made to A., B., and C., for their lives, and if B. survives C., then to remain to B. and his heirs; this Remainder is in abeyance, because, though the person be certain, yet since it depends on C.'s dying before him, till that be known the Remainder cannot vest. So if a lease be made to A. for life, and after the death of B. who is a stranger, to remain to C. in fee, or to A. in fee; these Remainders are in abeyance or contingency, and depend on B.'s dying before C. or A., for if he survives them, the Remainder cannot take effect. 3 Co. 20: 10 Co. 85: Co. Lit. 378.

If a lease were made to A. for life, Remainder to the Abbot of D. and his successors, though the Abbot were then dead, so as there were then no abbot at all, yet the Remainder should be good, if an abbot were made before the death of A. So, of a Remainder to a Mayor and Commonalty, Dean and Chapter, Prior and Convent, &c. though there be then no mayor, dean or prior. So, of a Remainder to the Bishop of D., Parson of D., or other sole Corporation, and his successors; these Remainders (not being limited to them by name specially, but to them generally, and so whoever comes within the description before the determination of the particular estate, is capable of taking by virtue thereof,) are good Remainders in abeyance, &c. But if there be no such corporations at the time of the limitation, then the Remainders are totally void; and none created after, though by the same name, can take these Remainders, not even if a patent be then passed to make such corporation. Co. Lit. 264: Hob. 33: 2 Co. 51: 10 Co. 30: Moor 104: 1 Rol. Rep. 254: 2 Bulst. 275.

Contingent Remainders may be defeated, by destroying or determining the particular estate upon which they depend, before the contingency happens whereby they become vested. 1 Rep. 66, 135. Therefore, when there is tenant for life, with divers Remainders in contingency, he may, not only by his death, but by alienation, surrender, or other methods, destroy and determine his own life-estate, before any of those Remainders vest; the consequence of which is, that he utterly defeats them all. As, if there be tenant for life, with Remainder to his eldest son unborn in tail, and the tenant for life, before any son is born, surrenders his life-estate, he by that means defeats the Remainder in tail to his son: for his son not being in esse, when the particular estate determined, the Remainder could not then vest; and, as it could not vest then, by the rules before laid down, it never can vest at all. In these cases, therefore, it is necessary to have trustees appointed to preserve the Contingent Remainders; in whom there is vested an estate in Remainder for the life of the tenant for life, to commence when his estate determines. If, therefore, his estate for life determines otherwise than by his death, the estate of the trustees, for the residue of his natural life, will then take effect, and become a particular estate in possession, sufficient to support the Remainders depending in contingency. See post. V. This method is said to have been invented by Sir Orlando Bridgman, Sir Geoffrey Palmer, and other eminent Counsel, who betook themselves to conveyancing during the time of the Civil Wars; in order thereby to secure, in family settlements, a provision for the future children of an intended marriage, who before were usually left at the mercy of the particular tenant for life: and when, after the Restoration, those gentlemen came to fill the first offices of the Law, they supported this invention, within reasonable and proper bounds, and introduced it into general use. 2 Comm. c. 11. See Moor 486: 2 Rol. Abr. 797. pl. 12: 2 Sid. 159: 2 Chan. Rep. 170.

III. When lands are given in undivided shares to two or more for particular estates, so as that, upon the determination of the particular estates in any of those shares, they remain over to the other grantees, and the Reversioner or Remainder-man is not let in, till the determination of all the particular estates, then the grantees take their original shares as tenants in common; and the Remainders limited to them, on the determination of the particular estates, are known by the appellation of Cross Remainders.—These Remainders may be raised both by deed and will; in deeds they can only be created by express words, but in wills they may be raised by implication. 1 Inst. 195, b. in n.

A. having issue five sons, his wife being ensient, devised two thirds of his lands to his four younger sons, and the child in ventre sa mere, if he were a son, and their heirs; and if they all died without issue male of their bodies, or any of them, that the lands revert to the right heirs of the devisor: By this devise, the younger sons were tenants in tail in possession, with Cross Remainders in tail to each other, and no part shall revert to the heir of the devisor, till all the younger sons be dead without issue male of their bodies. Dyer 303.

But where one having issue three sons, A., B., and D., devises one house to A. and his heirs, another to B. and his heirs, and a third to D. and his heirs; provided, that if all his said children die without issue, that then the messuages remain and be to his wife and her heirs: It was held by three Judges, that, on the death of one of the sons without issue, the wife might enter, and that here there were no Cross Remainders from one son to another, because, being devised to them severally by express limitation, there shall be no greater estate to them by implication. Gilbert v. Witty, Cro. Jac. 655: 2 Roll. Rep. 281: 1 Vent. 224: Raym. 455: Fitzg. 97: 2 Jon. 82: Carth. 173.

In the above case it was said, by Justice Doderidge, that Cross Remainders should never be raised, by implication, between more than two. This doctrine received some countenance from what was said by the Courts in the cases of Cole v. Levingstone, 1 Ventr. 224: Holmes v. Meynell, T. Raym. 452; and some other cases. See 4 Leon. 14. But it seems entirely exploded by the cases of Burden v. Burville, B. R. Pasch. 13 Geo. 3 Richmond (D) v. Cadogan (E), Chanc. May 1773: Wright v. Holford & al. Cowp. 31; and some other subsequent cases. It seems, however, to be admitted in these cases, that to raise Cross Remainders between more than two, stronger implication is required, than to raise them between two only. 1 Inst. 195, b in n

countenance

One seised of lands in fee, by will devises Black Acre to A. his daughter, and her heirs, and White Acre to his daughter B. and her heirs; and if she die before the age of sixteen years, living A., then A to have White Acre to her and her heirs; and if A die, having no issue, living B., then B. to have the part of A to her and her heirs; and if both die, having no issue, then to J S. and his heirs; the Testator dies; B attains her age of sixteen years, and then dies, without issue in the life of A; and it was held by three Justices, against Dyer; 1st, That the daughters had an estate-tail on the whole will, and not a fee determinable on a contingency subsequent; 2dly, That, by the words "if both die without issue," no Cross Remainders in tail were created by implication, but that on B's death without issue, after sixteen, J. S. should have her part presently without staying till the death of A. without issue. Dyer 330: 1 Bulst. 212: 1 Roll. Abr. 839: Vaugh. 267.

A. seised of lands in fee, by will devises all his lands in the county of, &c. to his two daughters B. and D. and their heirs, equally to be divided betwixt them; and in case they happen to die without issue, then to his nephew J. S. and the heirs male of his body, and dies; and it was adjudged, that on the death of B. one of the daughters of the other sister took her moiety as a Cross Remainder. Raym. 452: Sain. 17: 2 Jon. 172: 2 Show. 136: Pollex. 434; and see 2 Vern. 545: 3 Mod. 107.

Richard Holden seised in fee, and having issue a son and three grandchildren, by his will devised part of his estate to his wife for her life; and the reversion of such part, expectant on her death, and all other his freehold tenements, &c. he gave to his son Richard Holden for life, and after his death to his first and other sons successively in tail male, and for default of such issue, and after the determination of the said estates, he gave the premises to his grandson Richard Holden, and his granddaughter Elizabeth Holden, to be equally divided between them, and to the heirs of their respective bodies issuing; and for default of such issue, he gave the premises to his granddaughter Anne in fee; The testator died seised, Richard the son died without issue male, whereupon Elizabeth and the grandson entered, and Elizabeth died without issue generally; Anne Holden married John Jervis; and the question was, Whether there were Cross Remainders between Elizabeth and Richard the grandson, or whether the moiety of Elizabeth should go to Anne or to Richard? And it was resolved, that there were no Cross Remainders between them, because here are no express words, nor is there a necessary implication, without one of which Cross Remainders cannot be raised; that the words, and for default of such issue, being relative to what goes before, mean only, and for default of heirs of their respective bodies; and therefore it is no more than as if it had been a devise of one moiety to Richard and the heirs of his body, and of the other moiety to Elizabeth and the heirs of her body, and for default of heirs of their respective bodies, Remainder over; in which case there could be no doubt; and it was held, that this case differed from the case suprà, the word respective being in that case, and the first devisees were the testator's daughters, and the Remainder-man only a nephew; whereas, in the present case, Anne was as near to the testator as Richard. Comber v. Hill, 2 Kely 188: 2 Barn. K. B 367, 443: Browne v. Williams, Mich. 8 Geo. 2.

IV. As to estates of inheritance, there can be no doubt but that the grantor, having a perpetual and durable interest in the estate, may share and divide it, or grant as many Remainders over as he thinks proper. 4 New Abr 492.

But, as to personal goods and chattels, it was formerly held, that they, in their own nature, were incapable of any limitation over; being things transitory, and by many accidents subject to be lost, destroyed, or otherwise impaired, and the exigencies of trade requiring a frequent circulation thereof, in which they differ from lands and tenements which are permanent; therefore, what is called an estate in lands, is termed property in personal chattels: Wherefore it was held, that a grantor's devise of a personal thing to one, though but for an hour, or minute, was a gift for ever; and an absolute disposition of the entire property. Bro. Devise 13: Plowd. 521: Dyer 74: 8 Co 94.

Hence it was a long time before the Courts of Justice could be prevailed upon, to have any regard for a devise over, even of a chattel real, or a term for years, after an estate for life limited thereon, because the estate for life being, in the eye of the Law, of greater regard and consideration than an estate for years, they thought he, who had it devised to him for life, had therein included all that the devisor had a power to dispose of; but now such Remainders over are allowed under the name of Executory Devises, and are established both in Courts of Law and Equity, provided they tend not to a perpetuity, so as to make estates unalienable. 4 New Abr. 294. See this Dict. title Executory Devise.

Also, a distinction was formerly taken between a devise of a personal chattel to one for life, with a Remainder over, and of the use only; that, in the first case, the devisee for life had the absolute property; but not so in the second, for that the first devisee had not the property of the goods, but only a special interest in them, so that there still remained a property which might be limited over: But this distinction is now exploded, and the devisee in Remainder is allowed in Equity the like remedy in both cases. Plowd. 521: Cro. Car. 346: 1 Rol. Abr. 610: March 106: Owen 33: 1 Ch. Ca. 129: 2 Vern. 245: 1 P. Wms. 1, 500, 651: 2 Quin. c. 25, p. 398.

But a devise of a term for years, or personal chattel, to one, for a day, or an hour, is a devise of the whole term or interest, if the limitation over is void, and it appears at the same time that the whole was intended to be disposed of from the executors. 1 P. Wms. 666.

A. being possessed of a term for ninety-nine years, devised it to B. for life, and after to six others, successively, for their lives, if the term so long continue; and all the seven seven persons being dead, and the term continuing, it was adjudged, that it should revert to the executors of the testator, and that it did not vest in the survivor of the devisees, so as to transmit it to his representatives. 1 Salk. 231: 1 Ld. Raym. 325.

A farmer devised his stock (which consisted of corn, hay, cattle, &c.) to his wife for life, and after her death to the plaintiff. It was objected, that no Remainder can be limited over of such chattels as these, because the use of them is to spend and consume them; but the Master of the Rolls said the devise over was good, but added, if any of the cattle were worn out in using, the defendant was not to be answerable for them; and if any were sold as useless, the defendant was only to answer the value of them at the time of the sale; and an account was decreed to be taken accordingly. Abr. Eq. 361.

A. gives his sister, by will, 10*l.*, and directs, that such part of his personal estate, as his wife should leave of her substance, should go to the sister; whatever the wife has not employed in that way shall go over, and be accounted for. 1 P. Wms. 651.

But if a chattel real, money, goods, or other personal things, are devised to one, and the heirs of his body, or to one, and, if he dies without heirs of his body, Remainder over, by which the devisee has an estate-tail; this Remainder is totally void, and the Courts of Equity will not allow of a bill by the Remainder-man to compel security, &c., or to have the money, &c., after the death of the first devisee, but it shall go to his executors or administrators; for the first devise gives the absolute property of a personal estate, as the like devise of a real estate, before the statute De donis, gave the absolute fee, upon which no limitation could be made further; and as the heirs are the representatives to take the real estate, so are the executors to take the personal estate; and this is not within the statute De donis, but remains as at Common Law. 2 Vent. 349: 2 Vern. 600: 1 Salk. 156.

If A. devise, that his goods and furniture shall remain in his house, to be enjoyed, according to the limitations of his will, by those entitled to the house; the first, who would be tenant in tail of the house, becomes absolute owner of the goods. See further, title Executory Devise.

Not only lands and tenements, but also rents, commons, estovers, or any other interest or profits in esse, wherein the grantor hath the absolute property to him and his heirs, may be granted with Remainder over. Plowd. 379: 9 Co. 48, 97.

So, if one hath the office of park-keeper, forester, gaoler, sheriff, &c. to him and his heirs, he may grant those offices to one for life, Remainder to another for life, &c.; for omne majus continet in se minus; and as they are grantable over in fee, so may they be granted in succession to one for life, with Remainders over, &c. 9 Co. 48: 1 And. pl. 201.

It was formerly doubted, whether there could be a Remainder of a rent de novo; that is, whether a man, seised of lands in fee, could thereout grant a rent-charge to one for life or years, Remainder to another in fee, or in tail; and this doubt arose from the rent not having any existence before it was created, consequently, no reversion could be left to the grantor, out of which the Remainder was to arise. But it is now settled, that such grant in Remainder is good, the grantor having the absolute interest in the estate out of which it is to arise, and his intention gives it, being for the whole, out of which the lesser estates are carved. But if he grant such rent for life or years, to one, without going further, he cannot after grant the reversion thereof to another, because he has no reversion in him. 2 Rol. Abr. 415: 2 Co. 70, 76: 2 Vent. 240: 1 Lev. 144: 1 Sid. 285: 2 Salk. 577: 2 Lutw. 1225: Moor, pl. 100. See title Rent.

The King may grant an estate in an office, to commence in futuro, or on a contingency, for he hath no inheritance in the office, as to the execution of it, but in point of interest only to grant. And there is a diversity between offices in fee existing, and such as are granted only for life; which, being as a new thing created, may, as a rent de novo, be granted to commence in futuro. 2 Mod. 2[illegible]: 1 Ld. Raym. 52: Carth. 350: Salk. 465: Comb. [illegible].

If one be created Baron, Viscount, Earl, &c. by patent, and after, in the same patent, the same honour is granted to another in Remainder, yet this operates as a new grant, and not as a Remainder; for the King had no reversion of that honour in him, though he had still the same power of appointing one in succession to take it, as he had of granting it to the first. Show. Par. Ca. 5, 11.

V. The word Remainder is no term of art, nor is it necessary to create a Remainder. So that any words, sufficient to shew the intent of the party, will create a Remainder; because such estates take their denomination of Remainders, more from the nature and manner of their existence, after they are limited, than from any previous quality inherent in the word Remainder. To make them such, therefore, if a man gives land to A. for life, and that after his death the land shall revert, or descend, to B. for life, &c. this is a good Remainder, and may be pleaded as such. 1 Rol. Abr. 416: Plowd. 29: 1 Rol. Rep. 319: Dyer 125.

So, if lands are given to one, and the heirs male of his body, and to him, and the heirs female of his body; this limitation to the heirs female is a Remainder; because it is not to take place till the estate to the heirs male is spent. Co. Litt. 377, a.

So, if lands are given to a widow, and to the heirs of the body of her late husband, on her begotten. This is a Remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband; because it cannot take effect till after the widow's death, who has an estate for life. Co. Lit. 26, 200: 2 Mod. 210.

So, an estate limited to A. for life, or in tail, and after his decease, or for default of such issue, to B. and the heirs of his body, is good, though there be not the word Remainder. So, if a lease be made to A. for life, and that after his death B. shall have the profit; this is a good Remainder to B. Plowd. 159: Moor, pl. 54: Dyer 125: 1 Rol. Rep. 319: Cro. Eliz. 10, 742.

So, a lease to A. for life, and that after his death his children shall have it, is a good Remainder. 6 Co. 17, b: Raym. 83.

Nay, though an estate be limited expressly as a Remainder, yet, if it be not so in construction of Law, the word Remainder will have no force to make it such. As, if A. seised of lands in fee, he and B. levy a fine to D. in fee, who grants and renders to B in tail, rendering rent to A., and if B. died without issue, tenementa præd. integrè remanebunt to A. and his heirs; B. suffers a common recovery; A. distrains for his rent: This was adjudged a reversion, and as such the rent passed with it to A., and was chargeable on the land in whose hands soever it came, by virtue of the contract, which cannot be destroyed ftroyed by the recovery, though the reverfion is thereby barred. Cro. Eliz. 727, 768, 792: Moor, pl. 795: Co. Litt. 299; Raym. 142.

If a leafe be made to A. for eighty years, if he fo long live, and if he die within the term, then the land to go over to another for the refidue of the eighty years; this is a good Remainder, becaufe, though the term or intereft be determined, yet the land, and part of the years, ftill remain; thefe years may be made the meafure of the fucceeding intereft, as any other number of years may be. Cro. El. 216: 1 Leon. 218: 1 Co. 153: 3 Leon. 195: 2 Rol. Abr. 415: Plowd. 198: Moor 347, 520. pl. 441: 1 And. 259.

X. Y. feifed of lands in fee, by indenture, demifes them to A. for life, habendum to B., D., and E., his three fons for their lives, and the life of the furvivor of them fucceffively; after the death of A., it was adjudged in this cafe: Firft, That if the fons could take, it muft be by way of Remainder, they not being parties to the deed; and then it muft be as joint-tenants, which could not be by reafon of the word "fucceffively." Secondly, That they could not take in fucceffion, for the uncertainty whofe eftate or intereft was to commence firft. Hob. 313: Hut. 87.

A., by indenture, makes a leafe to B. for forty years, if A. fo long live, and after his death to D. (who was no party to the deed,) for one thoufand years; and then A. levies a fine, and dies, and five years pafs after his death, and then the plaintiff claiming under D. enters, &c.: This is no Remainder at all to D.; for, Firft, Prefently it cannot veft by reafon of the leffor's life interpofing, therefore no Remainder is vefted. Secondly, As a Contingent Remainder, it cannot be good; becaufe then it ought to have a particular eftate to fupport it, and ought to be in abeyance, or contingency, to veft or not veft when that determines: But here the firft leafe is no fuch particular eftate; becaufe that reaches not to the commencement of the Remainder, nor is the Remainder limited with any regard to the particular eftate; becaufe it is not to commence on the determination of that, but at a future time, viz. on the death of the leffor; and there is no contingency in the cafe, for it is to take effect, at all events, on the death of the leffor, be it before or after the end of the term; therefore, it can be no other than a future intereffe termini, to begin after the death of the party who grants it, which, being but for years, it may well do; becaufe it enures by way of contract; and though the grantee there was no party to the deed, and therefore, as objected, could take nothing, yet it appears, that judgment was given for the plaintiff; which proves, Firft, That the grantee had an intereft; Secondly, That this intereft was not barred by the fine, and five years non-claim after the death of the grantor, not being touched, devefted or turned to a right; Thirdly, That though the grantee was no party to the indenture, yet he might well take by virtue thereof; if he gets the indenture to make out his title; for the grantor cannot derogate from his own grant, or avoid his own act. Raym. 140.

We next come to confider the queftion, what fhall be words of limitation, and what words of purchafe.

In a grant of an eftate in fee-fimple to A., it is neceffary to give it to A. and his heirs: Of an eftate in fee-tail, to A. and the heirs of his body: But a grant to A. without any additional words, gives him only an eftate for life. Hence the word heirs, and the words heirs of the body in the fecond, are faid to be words of limitation; becaufe they limit or defcribe what intereft A. takes by the grant, viz. in one cafe a fee-fimple, in the other a fee-tail: And the heirs, in both inftances, take no intereft, any farther than as the anceftor may permit the eftate to defcend to them. But if a Remainder is granted, or an eftate devifed, to the heirs of A. where no eftate of freehold is at the fame time given to A., the heir of A. cannot take by defcent from A.; but he takes by purchafe under the grant, in the fame manner as if the eftate had been given to him by his proper name. Here the word heirs is called a word of purchafe. 2 Comm. c. 11. p. 172, in n.

Further to elucidate this contefted queftion, it may be proper to ftate the much-talked-of rule in Shelly's cafe, and Mr. Fearne's definition of the terms words of limitation, and words of purchafe.

The rule in Shelly's cafe is this:—When the anceftor, by any gift or conveyance, takes an eftate of freehold, and in the fame gift or conveyance an eftate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee, or in tail, always in fuch cafes the heirs are words of limitation, and not words of purchafe. 1 Co. 104. And the Remainder is faid to be executed in the anceftor, where there is no intermediate eftate; or vefted, where an eftate for life or in tail intervenes. 2 Comm. c. 11, in n. Otherwife, (continues Coke,) it is where an eftate for years is limited to the anceftor, the Remainder to another for life, the Remainder to the right heirs of the leffee for years, then his heirs are purchafers, &c. 1 Co. 104.

Mr. Fearne, after examining the terms ufed by Coke, in laying down the above rule, and vindicating them from the charge of inaccuracy, to which Mr. Douglas had confidered them liable, feems to have fully fettled the diftinction between words of limitation and words of purchafe, in the following manner:

When the words Heirs, &c. operate only to expand an eftate in the anceftor, fo as to let the heirs defcribed into its extent, and entitle them to take derivatively through or from him, as the root of fucceffion, or perfon in whom the eftate is confidered as commencing, they are properly words of limitation; but when they operate only to give the eftate, imported by them, to the heirs defcribed, originally, and as the perfons in whom that eftate is confidered as commencing, and not derivatively from or through the anceftor, they are properly words of purchafe. Lord Coke, in the rule above alluded to, very properly refers the word purchafe to the exprefs objects of limitation, viz. heirs, &c. And when fuch heirs, &c. originally acquire the eftate by thofe words, he ftyles them words of purchafe; otherwife, not. In general, words of purchafe are thofe, by which, taken abfolutely without reference to, or connexion with, any other words, the eftate firft attaches, or is confidered as commencing in the perfon defcribed by them; whilft words of limitation operate by reference to, or connexion with, other words, and extend or modify the eftate given by thofe other words. This is evidently the line of diftinction adopted by Lord Coke, and which pervades the terms of the rule in queftion; and is in fact admitted by all who do not deny the word heirs, in the common limitation to a man and his heirs for ever, to be words of limitation. But it is to be remarked, that when the words heirs male of the body, &c. operate as words of purchafe, that that is, when they do not attach in the ancestor, but vest in the person answering the description of such special heir, they appear to have a sort of equivocal or mixt effect: for though they give the estate to the special heir originally, and not through or from his ancestor, yet the estate which he so takes has such a reference to the ancestor, as to pursue the same course of succession, in the same extent of duration or continuance, through the same persons, as if it had attached in and descended from the ancestor. Fearne's Cont. Rem. 107—109, &c. edit. 1791.

If, then, an estate be given to A. for life, and after his death to the heirs of his body, this Remainder is executed in A., or it unites with his estate for life; and the effect is the same as if the estate had at once been given to A. and the heirs of his body; which expression limits an estate-tail to A., and the issue have no indefeasible interest conveyed to them, but can only take by descent from A. —So, also, if an estate be given to A. for life, with Remainder to B. for life, or in tail, Remainder to the heirs, or the heirs of the body of A.; in this case A. takes an estate for life, with a vested Remainder in fee, or in tail; and his heir, under this grant, can only take by descent at his death. Fearne 21. But in order that the estate for life, and the Remainder in tail or in fee, should thus unite and coalesce, and heirs be a word of limitation, the two estates must be created by the same instrument, and must be either both legal, or both trust estates. Doug. 490: 2 Term Rep. 444. The rule with regard to the execution or coalition of such estates seems now to be the same in equitable as in legal estates. 1 Bro. C. R. 206. And in all these cases where a person has an estate-tail, or a vested Remainder in tail, he can cut off the expectations or inheritance of his issue by a fine or a recovery. Doug. 233.

In order, therefore, to procure a certain provision for children, the method was invented of granting the estate to the father for life, and after his death to his first and other sons in tail; for the words son or daughter were held to be words of purchase; and the Remainder to them did not, like the Remainder to heirs, unite with the prior estate of freehold. But if the son was unborn, the Remainder was contingent, and might have been defeated by the alienation of the father, by feoffment, fine, or recovery; (though a conveyance of a greater estate than he has by bargain and sale, or by lease and release, is no forfeiture, and will not defeat a Contingent Remainder. 2 Leon. 60: 3 Mod. 151.) To prevent this alienation by tenant in tail, it was necessary to interpose trustees, to whom the estate is given upon such a determination of the life-estate, and in whom it rests till the contingent estate, if at all, comes into existence: and thus they are said to support and preserve the Contingent Remainders. This is called A Strict Settlement, and is the only mode (Executory Devises excepted) by which a certain and indefeasible provision can be secured to an unborn child. But, in the case of articles or covenants before marriage, for making a settlement upon the husband and wife, and their offspring, if there be a limitation to the parents for life, with a Remainder to the heirs of their bodies, the latter words are generally considered as words of purchase, and not of limitation: And a Court of Equity will decree the articles to be executed in strict settlement. See Fearne 124, and the examples there cited. It being the great object of such settlements to secure fortunes for the issue of the marriage, it would be useless to give the parents an estate-tail, of which they would almost immediately have the absolute disposal: And therefore the Courts of Equity will decree the estate to be settled upon the parent or parents for life; Remainder (i. e. upon the determination of such estate for life by forfeiture) to trustees, to support Contingent Remainders, for their lives; Remainder (after the decease of the parents) to the first and other sons successively in tail; with Remainder to all the daughters in tail, as tenants in common; with subsequent Remainders, or provisions, according to the occasions and intentions of the parties.

In these strict settlements, the estate is unalienable till the first son attains the age of twenty-one; who, if his father is dead, has then, as tenant in tail, full power over the estate; or, if his father is living, the son can then bar his own issue by a fine, independent of the father. Cruise 161. See title Fine. But the father, and the son at that age, can cut off all the subsequent limitations, and dispose of the estate in any manner they please, by joining in a common recovery. See title Recovery, and ante II. This is the origin of the vulgar error, that a tenant of an estate-tail must have the consent of his eldest son to enable him to cut off the intail; for that is necessary where the father has only a life-estate, and his eldest son has the Remainder in tail.

But there is no method whatever of securing an estate to the grandchildren of a person who is without children at the time of the settlement; for the Law will not admit of a perpetuity: which has been defined to be "any extension of an estate beyond a life in being, and twenty-one years after." 2 Bro. C. R. 30. See this Dict. title Executory Devise. Hence, where in a settlement the father has a power to appoint an estate to or amongst his children, he cannot afterwards give this to his children in strict settlement, or give any of his sons an estate for life, with a Remainder in tail to his eldest son: for if he could do this, a perpetuity would be created by the original settlement. 2 Term Rep. 241. See 2 Comm. c. 11, in n.
